Lately, Sheryl was wearing the casual clothes that Akira chose for her back in Kashua’s shop. They were pretty good clothes for their price and they fit really well for Sheryl as they made her beauty more prominent. Although in reality, it was Alpha who chose those clothes, Sheryl thought that Akira was the one who picked those clothes, so she was keeping them dearly.

Sheryl grabbed her clothes and stopped again, she then called Akira one more time.

“Akira.”

“Yes?”

Akira’s gaze once again shifted from his terminal to Sheryl. He was looking straight at Sheryl’s beautiful figure as she was only in her underwear.

Sheryl checked Akira’s reaction again but the result did not change from last time. It seemed that Akira did not feel anything in particular after looking at her figure.

Sheryl sigh became bigger than last time. She tried her best not to show her dissatisfaction she said to Akira.

“…About the relics that we sold back there though, should I immediately transfer the money to your bank account?”

“No, there’s no need to do that. You can transfer the money later when you have the time.”

“But, Akira, you need the money for stuff, right? I heard that the ammo used by the Hunters are pretty expensive. Are you sure you’re okay with that?”

“Don’t worry. I still have some reserve ammo back in my home, and as I said before, I should get the reward from the last request soon. So you can just send me the money and the data of the relics that you sold after you have sold a few more of them. Moreover, I might ask you to pay something for me, so when that happens, you can just subtract it from that money.”

“Alright.”

She then continued changing her clothes, and Akira returned back to his terminal.

Sheryl was trying to show off her body to Akira in the middle of changing her clothes. She was hoping that Akira would show at least a small interest in her body, but unfortunately, Akira did not show anything like that at all.

Sheryl had taken a bath together with Akira before, during that time too, he did not show any interest at all in her body as he casually went and enjoyed the bath. So judging from that, it was understandable that Sheryl's figure while she was changing her clothes or when she was only in her underwear did not affect him at all. Sheryl understood that very well, but even so, she could not help but feel disappointed.

She lightly sighed and continued changing her clothes.

[…I wonder if I'm actually not as attractive as I think I am. Judging from how others in the gang treat me, I should be quite attractive though… Is it because I'm just beautiful compared to the other girls from the slum city? But, Akira has been living in the slum city only until recently, so I guess it's because he has a strange taste of beauty then? Not to mention, the Hunters from just now also seemed to be reacting positively too. I really don't understand…]

On the outside, Sheryl's position was Akira's lover, and that position allowed her to maintain a lot of things such as the safety of her gang, her position as the boss of the gang, her connection to Shijima and Katsuragi. Sheryl was able to maintain all of them because of Akira's fighting prowess.

If Akira was her real lover, Sheryl would feel much safer. But in reality, she was not Akira's lover. At most, she was only his friend, or even maybe just an acquaintance with a particular connection to him. It was too weak as a guarantee for Akira to keep supporting her.

Sheryl already had zero confidence if she could live without Akira anymore. Since that time when Akira helped her and saved her, she was fully reliant on Akira both physically and mentally.

If Akira asked for her body, Sheryl would give her body happily. She would be delighted that Akira wished for her and she would feel relieved after giving her body to Akira. After all, as long as Akira was asking for her, he would likely keep his connection with Sheryl.

But unfortunately, Akira did not show any interest in her. Sheryl had asked Akira in the past for help in exchange for her body. But at that time, he only considered how far she could help him fighting monsters and buy him time, he did not see Sheryl as a member of the opposite sex at all.

Akira's personality was distorted in many ways. Sheryl herself knew that well, but even so, she believed that she was able to get closer to Akira compared to the first time they met.

If someone asked her if she liked Akira, her answer would be a yes. If someone asked her if she loved Akira, her answer would also be a resounding yes. But even before that, even without considering all these, Sheryl was already fully reliant on Akira. Even without taking account of her feelings or her love for him, Sheryl was already carrying a feeling that was close to blind faith toward him and she too knew of it. But Sheryl herself could not do anything about it, and that in itself could be because she also had a distorted personality.

Sheryl thought that as long as she kept getting along with Akira, Akira might one day get interested in her. But judging from his reaction until now, it did not seem Akira was interested in her at all.

[…Well, at least, he's not seeing me as a bait for the monsters anymore, right? He did buy me some clothes after all, so, I'm sure that he's also planning to get along with me too. Just calm down, I just need to slowly get closer to him.]

Sheryl finished changing her clothes, she then sat next to Akira. Akira just glanced at Sheryl when she sat next to him, he did not show any reaction in particular and immediately returned his gaze back to his terminal. Even when Sheryl leaned towards him, Akira did not show complaint at all, he kept his attention to his terminal.

As Sheryl leaned towards Akira, she glanced at him and thought.

[Even if I sit next to him, Akira does not show any signs of rejection at all. I'll just keep close to Akira until he feels that it's normal to have me around… Well, I guess I'll be too much of a bother if I sit on his lap and hug him, it seems that I wasn't as calm as I thought I was, huh.]

Sheryl remembered what she did in the past and smiled happily like the little girl she was.

__*__*__*__

Colbert and his friends returned back to Kurogin to receive the money after Kurogin finished appraising their relics.

The clerk gave a report on the result of the appraisal of the relics that they brought there.

"Since the relics were processed separately, I'll give the report separately too. Let's start with the relics that Colbert-sama brought here. Colbert-sama, unfortunately, the relics that you brought here are not in demand in this branch. The appraisal fee would be free. So what do you want to do with the relics? You might take them back or let us take care of them."

"I see, you can go ahead and dispose them."

"Certainly. We'll dispose of them at our discretion. Next is Revin-sama."

Revin looked at that clerk with hopeful eyes when that clerk called his name. That clerk was already used to having Hunters looking at him with that kind of gazes. So he was not bothered much by it as he continued.

"The result from the appraisal, subtracting the fee for the same, is 10,000 Aurum."

That clerk placed a tray with 10,000 Aurum in front of Revin. Seeing that, Revin disappointedly looked down. Colbert smiled bitterly and tried to cheer him up.

"Don't worry about it, you're just not lucky this time."

Revin did not say anything as he took the money on that tray.

The clerk withdrew the tray and continued.

“Then lastly, Hazawa-sama.”

After hearing about Revin’s result, Hazawa did not put much hope on the result. But he was flabbergasted when he heard what that clerk said after that.

“The result from the appraisal, subtracting the fee for the appraisal, it’s 1,500,000 Aurum.”

Colbert, Revin, and Hazawa froze up as the clerk placed a tray in front of them. There was indeed a bundle of money on top of that tray which totalled 1,500,000 Aurum. The trump card set that Hazawa bought for 10,000 Aurum was worth 1,500,000 Aurum in Kurogin, and that was after subtracting the appraisal fee.

Colbert enviously said to Hazawa.

“Whoah, you just hit a jackpot, not bad at all. Why did you pick that trump card set in the first place? Was there something in particular that made you choose that relic?”

Hazawa flusteredly replied.

“…N-Not really though. I really chose it randomly.”

“So basically, you just got lucky, huh… Alright then!! It’s decided!! You’re treating us today!!”

Colbert smiled at Hazawa as he tried to make Hazawa treat him. Hazawa just shook his head exasperatedly and replied happily.

“Alright alright, it’s all thanks to your plan after all.”

“That’s great!! Revin, let’s party today… Revin?”

Revin was still frozen up, he was so dumbfounded by what just happened. He then finally returned back to himself.

The moment that happened, he immediately said to the Kurogin's clerk.

"H-how in the world is that thing worth 1,500,000 Aurum!? It was just a set of trump cards, you know!?"

Revin thought that if that trump card set was worth 1,500,000 Aurum, then the relics that he brought there should be worth more than that. He was still not fully recovered from the shock as he shouted at the clerk, demanding an explanation that could convince him.

The clerk was also already used to handling customers who reacted like Revin, so he just replied calmly.

"It's the result of our trusted appraisers' hard work and skill. Our appraisers dedicate all their time to make sure that they would be able to correctly identify the price of the relics that our customers bring to our shop. If Revin-sama wants to know the details of the information about the relics that Hazawa-sama brought to our shop, you would need Hazawa-sama's permission and remit a small amount of money to pay for our appraisers' knowledge. So, do you still want to know?"

Revin looked at Hazawa with a pleading gaze. Hazawa sighed and asked the clerk.

"I don't mind, but how much would the price be?"

"It would be 300,000 Aurum in total. The information will be given directly from the person who was in charge of appraising that relic. We ask you not to record the explanation or leak it to a third party. Please keep in mind that if you try to share this information with someone else, we'll have to take appropriate measure."

Hazawa then said to Revin.

“I don’t mind giving you the permission, but pay for the info yourself, okay? I won’t be paying for your share of info too, alright?”

“C-can you please pay for me this once?”

“No, I need money for myself too. You pay for your share. That’s the same to you too, Colbert. I won’t be paying other than my own share.”

Revin tried to negotiate with Hazawa.

“…But like, you know, the money that I have with me right now is just.. right?”

“No.”

Hazawa was not that soft.

Colbert then smiled at Revin and said to him.

“If you don’t have enough money with you right now, I don’t mind paying it for you. But it’ll be added to your debt too. Well, at this point, it doesn’t change much even if you add 100,000 Aurum to your debt, right? So?”

“…Alright, I’ll take that offer.”

After hesitating, Revin finally decided to take Colbert’s offer. With this, Revin’s debt got increased although only by a little.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 138, The Basis of The appraisal

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Colbert, Revin, and Hazawa were guided to another room, not too long after that, a Kurogin employee came in with a transparent case.

The trump card set that Hazawa just sold was kept inside that case, the case itself looked so secure to the point that the trump card set seemed like an expensive article.

That employee placed that case above the table and started explaining the details of the appraisal to Colbert, Revin and Hazawa.

“So then, please let me explain the details of the appraisal process. We’ve brought the relic in question here to help with the explanation, but please bear in mind that the ownership of this relic is already on us. So please don’t touch the case.”

The employee was sitting face to face against the other three Hunters. Colbert was the one who was the most relaxed among all of them, so he replied to that employee in place of his friends.

“Alright, go ahead.”

Revin was listening very closely so as not to miss even a word from that explanation, while Hazawa was listening out of pure interest.

There were many Hunters who pawned their relics in Kurogin only to complain later. So the people who work for Kurogin were already used to facing those kinds of Hunters. Even if Revin was staring at him, or even glaring at him, that employee was able to keep his calm as he calmly explained.

“We have a lot of indicators that we use to decide the value of a relic. There are 2 big reasons why we value this trump highly. First is that the Engazan convention is close, and secondly, this trump card set is a still-sealed old-world relic. We used these 2 factors to decide the price of this trump card set.”

That employee continued his explanation, Colbert and his friends were listening closely to it without saying anything.

The Engazan city in the Eastern district held a huge-scale gambling event regularly. A lot of people were swayed by the dream of winning the jackpot and decide to join that event to test their luck and skill.

People who dreamt for riches, people who got their dreams granted and became rich in one night, people who failed and lost all of their possessions; Engazan was a city filled with dreams, even if some of them were nightmares.

Colbert suddenly asked a question to that employee.

“Ahh, so basically, they’ll use this trump card set for that gambling event, huh? That’s also the reason why you need a still-sealed set of trump cards, right? But I still don’t see how it’s valued at 1,500,000 Aurum, isn’t that just too high no matter how you think about it?”

That employee nodded and said.

“That’s indeed true if it’s only used for gambling with the corporation-issued currencies. But in Engazan gambling event, there are even important individuals and organizations partaking. In the past, some of them even made 100,000,000 Chrome as bet and the big companies even put their relics as bets too.”

It was common for big companies to fight over old-world relics. But fighting over it using force would warrant them to spend more money on the war than what they could get from the relics they were fighting over, while on the other hand, it was not like they could give up just because of that either. So in that situation, in order to reach a conclusion that both sides could accept, they often fought over the ownership of the relics through gambling.

“But the bigger the bets, the bigger the organization or the people who are partaking in the game, the harder it is to guarantee the fairness of the game. For example, when 5 big companies try to win over the ownership of a certain relic through a game of poker, there is no company in the world that can provide us with the trump card to use in that game. After all, those goliaths are the companies that hold power in the eastern district. It’s fully understandable that they might scrap their hard-earned trust that they’ve built for years just to produce a single special trump card in order to win that gamble. Of course, there’s no end to it if you start questioning other companies, but as long as that possibility is not zero, it’s hard for them to trust each other. That is, of course, if the trump card used in that poker game is only from the current era’s companies.”

Hazawa nodded deeply, it seemed that he was fully convinced by that explanation.

“I see, so that’s why they need a trump card from the old-world, huh. It’s true that even the 5 biggest companies in the eastern district can’t reproduce the same old-world trump card. I see how it’s highly valued now. But then, does that mean this trump card might be used for such gamble?”

“If asked whether it’s possible or not, the answer is yes, it might be used for such a gamble. It’s really something grand if you think about it.”

Hazawa just asked a question that came up in his mind out of imagination, and then that employee replied back with an answer that filled Hazawa’s mind with more imagination.

Although Hazawa was fully convinced by that explanation, that was not the case for Revin.

“Wait for a sec, if it might be used for that kind of gamble, doesn’t that make 1,500,000 Aurum pretty low?”

The employee answered Revin’s question.

“That is indeed true if this trump card is good enough to be used for that level of a gamble. Which in that case, it might even worth a few billion Aurum or maybe a few Chrome.”

“Then-“

“But to ascertain it, we would need more investigations. We need to make sure if it’s really an old-world relic, if it’s really still sealed. We need to check if there’s any problem with the article by comparing it in case someone excavated the same article in the past. Only after that long time-consuming and money-consuming process, and after it has been confirmed that it’s good enough to be used for gamble between big companies and big people, only then, it’ll be used for such a level of gambling. You asked us to do the investigation as fast as possible, as such, we can’t do a full investigation. We’ve appraised the article in a short time per your request, and from that short investigation, we find that it might have the quality to be used in Engazan gambling events. The 1,500,000 Aurum is basically the price of that possibility.”

Revin nodded deeply.

“I see…”

That employee then moved on to end his explanation.

“Are there any other questions? If not, I will end the explanation here. After we close this session, we will not accept any more questions regarding this subject. In case if you want to inquire again later, you’ll need approval from Viola-sama as well as pay the information fee. So, if there's no more question, is it okay to end the session here?"

Colbert, Revin and Hazawa looked at each other to confirm what the others were thinking. Since it seemed that none of them had any more questions, the employee thought that it should be okay to end the session, so he then lightly bowed and said.

"Very well then, let me finish my explanation here. Thank you very much for using our service."

Colbert, Revin and Hazawa left that building. Colbert then said to Hazawa and Revin.

"Alright then, let's hit the pub."

Revin was fidgeting there, he then said.

"Sorry, but I have something to do. See you around."

Revin only said that and quickly left Hazawa and Colbert.

Colbert saw Revin take off and mumbled.

"…That guy… I bet he's going to the slum again to look for expensive relics…"

Hazawa sighed exasperatedly, he could understand Revin's feeling as he spoke.

"I bet you're right. But it's not like you can easily find that kind of relic again. And even if he does, he doesn't have the money to buy it nor to get it appraised in Kurogin. I wonder what he's planning to do about that."

"No idea. You'll need extra money to be a member of Kurogin too. And you'll only get the free monthly quota after bringing enough relics to Kurogin. I'm sure that he'll call us when he realizes that. Well, let's just leave him be and go for a drink."

It was not like they had the duty to tell Revin the problems that he might have to face later, so instead, they chose to enjoy the sudden influx of cash that they got that day and headed to the entertainment district. Revin left on his own volition, and so, Hazawa did not give Revin a treat.

__*__*__*__

Over the last few days, in order to help Sheryl's gang, Akira always went to visit her base during the day. Akira basically had two roles there, first of all, was a bodyguard for Sheryl when she was selling relics, and secondly to help the gang to open stands somewhere inside the gang's territory.

The people who bought Sheryl's relics were those who had enough economical power to do so, and of course, a fighting power suitable for their economical power. Basically, they were Hunters like Revin and his friends. If they tried to use force to break into Sheryl's base, it would be hard for the gang to fight them back.

They were basically people who regularly fought monsters out in the wasteland, although the gang had more people and Sheryl could arm her gang with rifles, there was a limit on how far they could fight back. These Hunters might look down on the gang, thinking that the gang posed no threat at all against them, and use their position to threaten back. And of course, if it really ended up in a fight, Sheryl's gang would have zero chance to win it.

Because of that, when Sheryl was dealing with potential buyers, she asked Akira to hide behind one of the sheets in that room just in case anything bad happened.

Akira was just another small kid like Sheryl. But he was using an augmented suit and carrying heavy weapons that normal people would not be able to carry without an enhanced strength, so people would not just mindlessly pick a fight against him. There were indeed some difficult customers, but when Akira came out, they would obediently withdraw.

The reason why Akira was not showing himself was simply because Sheryl told him to do that. It was to make an impression that even if it seemed that Sheryl was all alone there, a heavily armed Hunter might be hiding somewhere, it was to make that kind of illusion just in case if Akira was not really present. It was an important precaution since it was not like Akira could be there all the time.

The small stands opened by her gang were basically serving as a filter to get suitable customers for the main shop in Sheryl's base as well as a source of spare money. They were looking for customers who seemed to carry enough money and would not cause harm to Sheryl before telling them about the main shop.

There were also multiple stands, so Akira could not guard all of them all the time. Because of that, when trouble came up, they would contact Sheryl and she would go there with Akira.

Each stand was manned by at least 2 people and one of them would be armed as a guard for the stand. Most who lived inside the gang's territory knew that Akira was supporting Sheryl's gang, but not many of them knew Akira's face. The armed kid was basically standing guard there in place of Akira, which for that one stand that Colbert and his friends visited, that would be Tiol.

The people who came to the stands were not only people from the slum, there were Hunters too. And among them, there were bad Hunters. When Sheryl's men could not handle them, they had no other choice but to ask for Akira's help.

Sheryl was also not always dealing with customers and it was not like there were always problems happening in one of the stands. She herself sometimes had her own job to do in her private room, so it was not like she was always with Akira either. Akira basically had nothing to do when Sheryl was doing something in her private room.

Sheryl was working on her desk, she had a lot of jobs to do, distributing jobs for the gang's members, compiling all the relics for her shop, and many other jobs too.

Akira was sitting on the sofa while working on his information terminal, he was just silently operating his terminal without saying anything, or at least, that was how it looked from Sheryl's point of view. He sometimes made a confused face as he was focused only on his information terminal.

Sheryl glanced at Akira and threw a question.

"Akira, what are you doing there? It seems that you're so focused on it."

"Ahh, it's just game…"

"Is that so? Is that game really that fun?"

"It is… Well, at least, I think it's an interesting game."

Sheryl thought that there was something strange about how Akira worded it out.

She then made some guesses from what she could see.

There were many games that could be played on an information terminal. The theme was also various. Some of them were games that you could not really tell a girl. Since Akira was a boy, Sheryl thought that it was understandable for him to be interested in that kind of game and she could not help but get suspicious of him.

She wondered if it was the right choice to ask Akira. If it was really that kind of game, it might help her understand Akira's preference. It might give her a good reference to get him interested in her. So she decided to casually ask Akira.

"What kind of game is that?"

"Hm? It's a relic hunting game. You basically control a Hunter character to safely carry old-world relics back home."

"I-I see…"

After hearing Akira’s answer, Sheryl realized how wrong her guess was which made her blush and fidget around, she tried to smile to hide her embarrassment.

Someone suddenly knocked on the door. Sheryl’s face returned back to normal, and then she raised her voice a little to hide what just happened there.

“Come in.”

Erio opened the door.

“Sorry, there’s a problem in one of the stands. So if Akira-san can come with me for a bit…”

If something happened, they did not have any other choice but to ask for Akira’s help. Sheryl herself knew that very well. But it would be bad if they asked for Akira’s help for every little thing. As the boss of the gang, Sheryl wanted to make sure that her men did not have the wrong impression of Akira.

Sheryl then said to Erio.

“Can you not do something about it? You and some of your men have rifles with you, right?”

“That would be impossible. Just because we have some weapons that don’t mean that we’re as strong as Akira-san. It’s not like we call for Akira-san for every little thing, it’s exactly because we can’t handle the situation ourselves that we ask for Akira-san’s help.”

Judging from the way Erio reacted, Sheryl knew that he was not lying.

Sheryl thought that she needed to keep Akira’s impression as someone who was reliable but his help was not cheap. After all, in reality, her gang did not pay anything to Akira, they were just simply taking advantage of his kindness.

It would not be a problem if her gang members felt thankful and indebted to Akira's help when they realized it. But in reality, some of her gang members would look down on him instead.

In the end, the gang did not pay anything to Akira. So since Akira's help was something that they could get any time without paying anything, it would affect their impression of Akira sooner or later even if they only asked for Akira's help for trivial things. After all, humans could get used to anything, both for the better and for the worse.

Although it was something in the past, Sheryl thought that it was a good thing when Sebla tried to kill Akira. Sebla was one of her gang members, in Higaraka Residence Ruin, he looked down on Akira and betrayed the gang. He then went against Akira and Akira killed him without showing any hesitation. What happened back there served as a good example to remind the rest of her gang members.

It should be able to hold back Sheryl's men from looking down at Akira or getting too used to Akira's kindness. But that effect would not last forever.

So for the sake of Akira, of herself, and for her gang, Sheryl had to keep Akira's image in the gang.

Sheryl then said to Akira and Erio.

"It can't be helped then. Akira, I'm sorry to bother you again, but can you help me?"

"Sure."

Akira put his information terminal on the table and picked up his equipment.

He picked up his rifles that he left on the corner of the room. His AAH assault rifle, A2D assault rifle, CWH anti-material rifle, DVTS minigun, and A4WM automatic grenade launcher. With all of those rifles on him, he really stuck out like a sore thumb within the slum city. Akira did not have the imposing aura of a strong person, that was why giving that impression through his equipment was quicker and safer.

Even before Akira had the idea to scare his opponent with his equipment, he already killed 4 thugs and 2 former Hunters. If they were still alive now, they would have told anyone that it was a bad idea to cause a ruckus in Sheryl's gang's territory.

In order to send Akira off, Sheryl stood up and walked towards him. There she glanced at Akira's information terminal that he left on the table.

After Akira finished his preparation, he noticed Sheryl was looking at his information terminal. He then remembered that Sheryl asked him about what kind of game he was playing, so he casually said to Sheryl.

"If you're interested, you can go ahead and try it."

"Eh? Ah, yes, thank you."

Sheryl actually was not that interested in the game, but since Akira said so, she replied with gratitude.

After Akira left the room, Sheryl returned back to her desk. From there, she could see Akira's information terminal lying on the table.

Sheryl thought that Akira might ask about her impression of the game later, so she decided to try the game.

The game that Akira was playing was a game of a Hunter hunting old-world relics. The player controlled a Hunter in a simplified top-down view of a ruin to look for relics.

Sheryl saw a chibi form of a Hunter on the display of that information terminal, she noticed that it looked like Akira. Even the name displayed on that Hunter character was 'Akira' and its equipment were similar to Akira's.

[…The character really looks like Akira, even the name is Akira too. Well, Akira was the one playing this game, after all, I bet he set it so that it looks like him.]

Since Sheryl did not get any instruction on how to play the game, she decided to just give it a try for now. The character that looked like Akira inside the game moved around, encountered a monster, and immediately got killed.

Sheryl tried the game a few more rounds and eventually more or less understood the rules of the game.

"…Alright then, now that I know how to play this game and understand the rules of this game, I can get to play it for real now."

The game was basically a top-down simulation game where the player controlled a Hunter inside an old-world ruin. The main goal was for the character to look for relics, gather expensive relics, and return back alive.

Sheryl renewed her resolve and restarted the game. But again, although she understood how to control the character and the rules of the game, her character immediately got killed again.

Sheryl then frowned.

[Isn't this game a little too hard? Or is it like this level of difficulty is normal?]

The time in the game stopped when Sheryl did not move the character. Thanks to that, she could take her time thinking of her next move. But even so, the Hunter that she controlled quickly got killed again attacked by either monsters or the other Hunters.

Since it was only a game, the character that looked like Akira could try again as many times as Sheryl wanted. But of course, in reality, you got only one chance.

[Thank goodness this is only a game… Or at least that's what I want to say, but this thing is still ticking me off.]

If Akira got killed, Sheryl and her gang would lose their support and the gang might as well get disbanded. Although it was only in the game, for ‘Akira’ to not be able to return back alive even after multiple tries made her upset.

Sheryl got a little obstinate since it felt like the game was saying that the Hunter supporting her gang was so weak.

[I can understand now why Akira got so invested in this game… I’ll definitely clear this game.]

Sheryl then used all of her skill and brainpower to try clearing that game.

Erio guided Akira to the stand where there was trouble. On their way there, Akira asked Alpha a question about the game that he was playing until just now.

“Alpha, as I thought, isn’t the difficulty of that game too high?”

But Alpha just smiled and refuted his claim.

“Oh my, but its difficulty level is already lowered compared to the original, you know? If I convert your skill, your ability to shoot, and your equipment to numbers, that’s basically the status that you’ll get. Not to mention, you have all the time to think about your next move and your movements will not be affected by your mental condition, from that point of view, the character in the game is relatively better than the real you.”

“Well, that’s true, but still…”

Akira understood Alpha’s reasoning, but it did not erase his displeasure.

Alpha smiled at Akira and tried to cheer him up.

“You’re the one who said that you want to know your skill from another point of view, remember? So, just accept the result and focus more on getting better. Although it’s a simplified game of real ruin exploration, it’s still good training for you to see the overall situation when you’re in a ruin. So just focus on working hard.”

“I know, it’s just that it’s not that fun when I keep getting myself killed without making any progress.”

Akira then sighed.

The game that he was playing had a character based on him and a stage that was made based on a real ruin. Although it had other modifications too, it was still pretty much close to a real situation. It looked like just a game from the outside, but it actually was an advanced simulation.

The character inside the game was based on him and he was the one controlling it, so it was more or less Akira himself.

The biggest difference between that character and the real Akira was that the real Akira had Alpha’s support. The Akira in the simulation was exploring the dangerous ruin with the current Akira’s real ability.

The simulator was showing how the real Akira would perform including the price that he must pay when he made a mistake or one wrong step, which was basically death, just like many other Hunters who met their ends inside the dangerous old-world ruin.

Akira was still not able to finish even a stage of that game. Alpha already explained to him that she reduced the difficulty of that game so that he should be able to clear it. So basically, the real Akira was pulling the Akira in the game down.

Akira sounded a bit dejected as he said.

“As I thought, I’m still really weak. Even back then in the Seranthal building, Shiori and Carol got suspicious of me just from seeing my movements when I lost your support. So I guess it must have been obvious.”

But then Alpha tried to cheer him up.

“Of course you can’t become strong after just one night. Don’t worry. You’re at least stronger compared to the past you. It’s just that there’s always a bigger fish, so likewise, there’s always more dangerous ruins out there. But don’t worry, one day, you’ll be able to grow strong enough. After all, I’m the one training you.”

Alpha was smiling confidently as she said that.

Akira saw that smile and lightly smiled back, erasing the dark feeling welling inside him.

“You’re right, I’ll be counting on you.”

“Just leave it to me.”

Alpha smiled satisfied seeing that Akira completely cheered up.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 139, The New Guy and His Doubt

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira arrived at the stall where there was a problem. Over there, Revin was quarrelling with a young boy.

And that young boy was trying to get Revin to leave.

“As I said, I can’t take you to the main shop! So just give up, will you!? It’s not like I can do anything about it no matter how much you ask me! It’s the decision from the boss!”

Revin raised his voice as he said to that boy.

“I told you that I’ve gone there once before!! I’m someone who has permission to go there!! So just take me there!!”

“No means no! It would be really bad for me if I go against the Boss’ wish!! Can you at least understand that for me?!”

That young boy was given the duty to filter customers to be brought to the secret shop by Sheryl. But the current Hunter in front of him now was someone that he should not bring back to the base no matter how you look at it. His desperation, temperament and behaviour were obviously telling that boy not to bring that Hunter to the secret shop. Not to mention, he did not even try to buy the relics in the stand nor to pay the entrance fee, so he did not seem to have much money either.

If that boy brought Revin to the base and then if Revin caused some trouble back in the base, he would be held responsible for that. In the worst-case scenario, he might get kicked out of the gang. So when that boy thought of that possibility, he knew that he could not bring Revin back to the base no matter what.

But on the other hand, Revin would not back down. If he got violent there, he could beat the crap out of that young boy. That boy panicked, he knew that he was stuck between 2 hard places, the intimidation of the Hunter in front of him and the order from his boss.

Akira seemed to have remembered seeing that Hunter somewhere as he mumbled.

“What the heck is he doing?”

When that young boy noticed Akira, his face immediately turned teary, he was so happy to the point that he was about to cry. He then waved at Akira.

“O-over here!! Please help me!!”

Revin immediately noticed Akira and inadvertently said.

“Geh!? Why are you here!?”

Revin remembered Akira very well. He met Akira back in Yonozuka station ruin and Akira was the exact reason why he was in the current situation. Akira was also the one that Katsuragi would ask for to collect his debt when the time came.

Revin’s face puckered as Akira walked toward him.

[…Is he here to collect the debt?! No, that can’t be, right? I’m sure he’s not here to collect the debt!]

Akira then asked Revin.

“I was told that there was a problem here, so, here I am, what’s going on?”

At least Revin knew for sure now that Akira was not here to collect the debt. He was so relieved as he replied.

“Ah, it’s nothing.”

“Really? If it’s really nothing, can you just leave then?”

Even if Akira said that, it was not like Revin could just give up and leave. After all, if he got lucky, this might be his chance to pay all of his debts in one go.

“Uhmm, what’s your connection with these guys by the way?”

The young boy immediately answered.

“Isn’t it obvious, already? He’s one of us!!”

“No, that’s not exactly true though?”

But Akira immediately denied what that boy said. Revin saw how that young boy and Erio were so surprised by what Akira just said. So then he tried to put more pressure on Akira.

“If you’re not one of them, then this is none of your business, don’t butt in. Or are you here trying to be a good samaritan helping them?”

“I’m not one of them, but I have a relationship with their boss. So basically I’m here because their boss asked me to.”

Revin had a bad feeling when he heard Akira’s reply. He sounded scared as he asked Akira another question.

“…Don’t tell me that their boss is Katsuragi.”

“Nope, it’s Sheryl.”

“Fuuh, don’t scare me like that.”

“Hm? Does Katsuragi have something to do with this? I heard that Sheryl used Katsuragi’s connection to open the bank account for the shop… Or what was it again?”

Akira was trying to remember what Sheryl had said to him, while he was doing that, Revin’s face turned paler and paler.

Akira suddenly seemed to remember something and said to Revin.

“Ahhh, since you’re asking me if their boss is Katsuragi, that means this problem has something to do with Katsuragi, right? Can you give me a sec? I’ll check with Katsuragi.”

Revin flusteredly tried to stop Akira.

“No no no! Stop! I get it! I’ll leave! So don’t do anything, okay?! Just don’t! I’m leaving! Alright?! This problem here, ends here, okay?! Bye!”

After Revin desperately pleaded Akira to stop, he immediately ran away.

Akira saw that Revin had left and tilted his head as he mumbled.

“…What the heck was that?”

There was no one there who could answer Akira’s question.

After Revin distanced himself away from Akira, he let out a big sigh.

[…That was dangerous. If Katsuragi found out, this would definitely cause some problems later. It’s a good thing that now I know Katsuragi might have something to do with that stand… Now that I can’t get close to that place, what should I do…?]

Revin started to have a headache. In order to prevent his debt from growing any bigger, he could not just give up here.

[…It was just a trump card in the end. So I should be able to find a similar thing in another stand or shop, right? After all, that Sheryl was selling that trump card without knowing its true value. If I try to look around, I'm sure I'll find something similar somewhere. And if that story is true, then it doesn't have to be a trump, anything that can be used for gambling should work fine, right? I feel like I should be able to find something good enough somewhere…]

Revin picked himself up and planned to use the new information that he got from Kurogin to pay for his debt.

"…Alright then!"

He decided to look around the shops and stands in the slum for another hidden gem.

Not too long after that, a rumour was circulating about a certain man who was visiting stands and shops in the slum city, asking for peculiar things like a trump card set. It was a common happening when a rumour of an unexpectedly expensive relic was found, as just like usual, there were people who got lured by that rumour.

Sheryl was playing the game on Akira's information terminal inside her private room. At the moment, she failed all of her trials. When she started to think that it was not because she was not good enough but more because the game was too difficult, Erio returned.

Sheryl stopped playing the game and let them in. Erio and Tiol came in, Erio then gave Sheryl his report.

"The problem in the stand ended without any trouble. The guy who caused the problem seems to know Akira-san, although, I don't really understand the detail."

Sheryl, who just heard that it seemed there was trouble with Akira's acquaintance, looked at Erio with a serious expression and asked.

“I see, so it was Akira’s acquaintance, huh… Are you sure that there’s no problem at all?”

“Yeah. Although he knows Akira-san, it doesn’t seem like they are friends, I’m pretty sure it was solved just fine. For some reason, he just left after talking to Akira-san for a bit.”

“Well, that’s fine then.”

It did not seem like Erio was lying at all. So Sheryl could feel safe, at least for now. She actually wanted to ask Akira directly, just to be safe, but she immediately noticed that Akira was not present.

“Where’s Akira?”

“Akira-san just went back home after that. That’s why we closed the stand too. We can’t do anything if something were to happen without Akira-san around after all.”

“I see, so… Did Akira really return back home? He left his information terminal here though, did he forget about it?”

“No, he did remember, he said that it’s okay since he has other information terminals.”

“I see, well then. Thanks for the report, you can go ahead and take a rest.”

Sheryl smiled and thanked Erio and Tiol. Tiol blushed and got flustered for a bit, but his face immediately regained its seriousness as he asked.

“Boss, there’s something that I want to ask, is it okay?”

“What is it?”

“Uhmm, what is your relation with Akira?”

“What do you mean by that? We’re lovers. Didn’t we tell you that too when you joined the gang?”

Sheryl answered back casually as if to say that it was weird for Tiol to ask something so obvious.

Seeing that, Tiol hesitated from saying what he was about to say next. But his curiosity and a glimmer of hope inside him pushed him to speak up.

“…Is that really true?”

Sheryl’s mood suddenly worsened the moment she heard Tiol’s question.

Sheryl’s smile for her friend from the same gang who had gone through thick and thin together with her completely vanished from her face, in exchange, her smile turned dark and ominous. It was obvious that she was looking at Tiol with hostility.

She then asked with a cold and low voice.

“…What do you mean by that question?”

Tiol was taken aback by her sudden change that he could not immediately reply back, but that only caused Sheryl’s mood to get even worse. During that silence, Sheryl stared at Tiol with a gaze that the normal Sheryl would never give. She then gave a short order to Erio that was devoid of wish to resolve it peacefully.

“Erio, your rifle.”

It was a short and incomplete order, but Erio understood perfectly what Sheryl was talking about. She was telling him to aim his rifle at Tiol.

But even for Erio, he hesitated to do something like that to one of his friends who belonged to the same gang. Although it was true that Tiol’s question could be interpreted as picking a fight against Sheryl, he thought that it would be an overkill to aim his rifle at Tiol just because of that reason. So Erio panicked and tried to think of a way to defuse the situation.

Seeing that Erio did not immediately do what he was told to, Sheryl’s glare shifted from Tiol to Erio.

Erio got a goosebump from that, so he flusteredly tried to say something since he had a feeling that the situation would only get worse if he kept his mouth shut.

“Sheryl, just calm down, okay?! It’s not like Tiol was suspicious if you’re really Akira-san’s lover or anything like that! Isn’t that right, Tiol?! Try to word your question better next time as not to cause misunderstanding, okay?! See, Sheryl misunderstood because of that! So what exactly are you trying to ask here, Tiol?!”

Erio desperately tried to cover for Tiol who was still paralyzed from the pressure from Sheryl. At the same time, he was hopelessly trying to signal Tiol to agree with him even if it was not true. After all, if he did not do that, it might be his end.

Thanks to that, Tiol somehow was able to return back to himself and caught what Erio was trying to say there.

Tiol then started speaking slowly and carefully as if not to hit any red flags.

“Y-yeah, that’s right, it’s a misunderstanding. It’s not like I was suspecting that you and Akira are not lo- I mean, I thought that not only as lovers, I was wondering if you have some kind of special relationship with Akira, like maybe something from the past. I swear that was all I actually wanted to ask.”

Sheryl still had a bad mood as she inquired Tiol with a suspecting tone.

“It did not sound like that to me though.”

Tiol carefully checked Sheryl’s reaction as he replied in a panic.

“I-I’m really sorry for asking something that caused a misunderstanding like that. But like, you know, Akira seems to be a very strong Hunter, right? I heard from the other people in the stands that the person Akira dealt with when that problem happened in one of the stands was not a former Hunter, but a proper Hunter, someone who is still working as a Hunter even now. So, I just thought for someone as strong as Akira who can deal with someone like that so easily, I wonder why he would associate with us. I just thought that maybe he has some other reason other than because he's your love- I mean, on top of the fact that he's your lover. It's not like I'm suspecting that it wasn't true, I swear!!"

Tiol and Erio held their breaths, waiting for Sheryl's reaction. Sheryl did not say anything while still glaring at Erio and Tiol.

After a few seconds, Sheryl seemed to have regained some of her calm as she said.

"…I see, it's fine then if that's the case. Erio, you should teach Tiol stuff since it seems that he's new here and doesn't know much yet."

"O-okay."

"If that's all, you can leave now."

Erio and Tiol flusteredly exited the room. After Sheryl heard a clicking sound from closing the door, she then let out a big sigh.

Sheryl looked rather dejected as if she was lamenting her mistake and mumbled.

"…To think that I would lose my cool from something like that, I wonder what's wrong with me. I could've just smiled and cut it short. What I've done now might cause them to get even more suspicious… Just calm down, it's alright, I'm doing well. I can do this."

Sheryl repeatedly took a deep breath while reflecting on her reaction. She felt that she did not give the best reaction there and resolved herself to do better next time. She then thought about what could have caused her to react that extremely. She reminded herself to stay calm as she kept thinking about it. She removed any reason that she made simply out of anger at Tiol as she was evaluating her guesses.

After she arrived at a conclusion, she then said as if to tell herself.

“…I thought I had resolved myself, but it seems that it wasn’t enough, huh. I guess it’s a good thing that I was able to confirm it.”

Sheryl put a stop to her thought there and nodded deeply.

Although there were many rooms in Sheryl’s base, she was the only one with a private room. Those with high positions in the gang like the officers were sharing a room with the other officers that they were close with. The ones with the highest position in that gang after Sheryl was Erio and Alicia, both of them were officers and a couple, because of that, they were sharing the same room albeit it was a small room.

While the other gang members were living in the shared spaces inside the gang like in a big hall or in the hallways. It could be inferred how high their position in the gang was from where they slept when it got dark outside. From that point of view, Erio and Alicia’s position in the gang was pretty high.

As Sheryl’s gang continued to grow, there were more people than expected who wanted to join the gang. Or at least, it was more than Sheryl had anticipated. While on the other hand, it also served as proof that her gang was doing well as an organization inside the slum, it also showed how much influence her gang had in the slum.

Thanks to that, the children in the slum started to gather around Sheryl’s base. They got extra protection just from joining since those who wished to attack would think twice before crossing Sheryl’s gang. The slum children even had to pay if they wanted to stay in certain places where people were more likely to misidentify them as Sheryl’s gang members.

Tiol was a new member of the gang, he used his hard-earned money to buy his way into the gang. The only reason why he got special treatment compared to the other new members was simply because he brought in extra money and equipment for the gang.

Erio, Alicia and Tiol were inside Erio and Alicia’s room, Erio brought Tiol there.

Although Alicia was not exactly happy when she saw Erio bringing someone else into their room, she seemed to be okay with it after a short explanation from Erio.

Alicia said to Erio with a rather serious expression.

“…Alright, I’ll check on Sheryl later. But still…”

Alicia looked at Tiol, her gaze was saying that she was blaming him as she said in a slightly annoyed tone.

“…Did you really think that it would not anger Sheryl when you asked that question? Good grief, give me a break.”

Tiol looked really uncomfortable as he apologized.

“I’m sorry, I didn’t think she would get that angry.”

Erio then tried to calm Alicia down.

“W-well, let’s just end that here, alright? We are getting a lot of new members too, so it’s completely understandable.”

“Then, what are you planning to do if she did not let that slide just because he’s a new member? Back then, not only Tiol, but you almost get roped in too, right? So, do you really think that I’ll accept that excuse?”

“Look, like I said, we need to be extra careful from here and on to make sure that it would not happen again. Tiol is not the only new member of the gang. I’ll warn the people under me, so you should do the same too, Alicia. I don’t want you to get involved in something like that because of another new member who doesn’t know about it. I want to be together with you, so please make sure to do that.”

“…You’re right, I’ll do that.”

Seeing how Erio was worrying about her safety, Alicia finally calmed down.

Erio then said to Tiol.

“So then. If there’s still anything you want to ask us, this will be your chance. Both Alicia and I know Sheryl for quite some time now, so I’m sure we can give you answers to your questions about her. You can go ahead and ask us questions that might trigger Sheryl, it’s far better if you ask them to us rather than getting Sheryl angry later.”

So Tiol asked Erio a question with a serious face.

“I see. In that case, I want to know if Sheryl is really the boss of this gang.”

“Whoah, right from the bat, huh…”

Erio placed both of his hands on his head. Alicia looked at Tiol with a mix of amazement and resignation.

Although Tiol was surprised by their reaction, he still wanted to know the answer.

“Even if you say so, I think there are many other people here including me who are wondering about the same exact question, you know. I know that people have told me the boss in this gang is Sheryl. But just like me, there are other members who still have some questions about it. Like how did she get to be the boss of the gang? Or if the boss seat is just a decoration or that you can only sit there if you have enough power? Is she just using Akira? Or is it the other way around? Like maybe Akira is the real boss of the gang and Sheryl is just his proxy in public? Is it that Akira is simply in love with Sheryl and he’s actually an outsider who has nothing to do with this gang? And then there’s also that Katsuragi guy, is he actually giving us money and controlling us from the shadow or something? There are a lot of questions I want to ask and I’m not sure who I can trust.”

Erio and Alicia’s faces twitched, but their faces were also saying that it was understandable. It was not easy to gather information about that kind of thing. After all, the only one who knew the answer to those questions in that gang was Sheryl. Other people could only make guesses.

Tiol confirmed how Alicia and Erio reacted to that, he then asked another sensitive question.

“In the first place, that story about Akira going out with Sheryl, it’ll have a different impact if they are in love with each other or it is actually a one-sided love. It seems that Akira bought an expensive dress for the boss, but we don’t know for sure if he actually spent a lot of his money to get the boss happy or that expensive dress might actually not cost that much for Akira. Then there’s the fact that Akira rarely comes to the base. I know that being a Hunter is a busy job, but is it okay to always leave your lover that much? And even if they’re lovers, that doesn’t mean that Akira would do anything for her, right? So how far can we ask from him before it’s too much?”

Erio and Alicia looked at each other. They could understand why Tiol would ask something like that. But at the same time, it was a taboo to ask that question in the gang. Questioning Sheryl’s relation with Akira was equal to treason after all. So even if those questions were fully reasonable, it was not like Erio and Alicia could do anything about it. They could only trust what Sheryl told them even if it was not the real truth.

Erio then said to Tiol with a serious face.

“I can understand why you would ask those questions, but the answer to those questions are simple and easy. Don’t ask. That’s the answer. I’ll tell you later the reason why that’s the answer. So basically, it doesn’t matter if that answer is enough for you or not, if you want to keep staying in this gang, you’ll have to accept that answer, okay?”

“O-okay.”

Tiol was overwhelmed by the pressure and barely managed to reply back.

Alicia looked rather dejected as she said to Erio.

“…So basically we need to explain this to the other new members too, huh.”

“It can’t be helped. We’re the ones who know the most about it and it’s not like we can ask Sheryl to do that for us too.”

Alicia smiled and jokingly said.

“If only you’re as strong as Akira-san, we might be able to find a good solution to this problem though.”

Erio frowned.

“Don’t be stupid. Being a Hunter, going out to the wasteland, exploring old-world ruins, fighting monsters, and returning back alive with old-world relics like Akira-san… That’s just impossible for me. I’ll definitely die halfway. Even back then, I was only saved because I got lucky and Akira-san found me. Otherwise, I would’ve died eaten by that monster.”

“I know, sorry, I don’t want you to die either. So please don’t do anything dangerous, alright? I know that you get yourself better equipment, but make sure that it won’t go to your head, okay?”

“I know.”

Erio and Alicia stared at each other. Tiol, who was left outside the sleeping net, looked at them awkwardly. Alicia and Erio quickly noticed Tiol’s gaze, they flusteredly started to explain what they meant back there.

Erio and Alicia did not notice that Tiol had those questions not because he was interested in the strong Hunter supporting the gang.

Tiol actually wanted to know Sheryl’s relations with Akira. He wanted to know if they were really lovers. He wanted to know if there was a crack between them where he could slip in.

He thought, in secret, that Sheryl actually was not in love with Akira. After all, it did not matter who led the gang. It was more of who was strong enough to support the gang. If he could get strong enough to rival Akira, then Sheryl might abandon Akira and try to get closer to him instead.

Tiol actually liked Sheryl. It was love at the first sight. When Sheryl appeared in a dress that was specially made for her and smiled lovingly, it took his heart away.

He wished that the relation between Akira and Sheryl was nothing more than a relation out of profit. He was hoping to have a chance to be Sheryl's lover.

Although it was not too long ago, another member by the name of Sebla also had the same thought and he had to pay for that with his life. Tiol might end up meeting the same end. Or at least, he almost met the same end just a moment ago. Although, it was a whole different problem whether Tiol himself noticed that or not.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 140, Suitable Reward

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was waiting for Carol in the lower district of Kugamayama city.

Right after the reward from the request in Mihazono ruin was transferred to Akira's bank account, he called Carol, it was about how to divide the reward.

The money that was transferred to Akira's bank account was the reward portion for his team, and since Carol was working in his team, Akira needed to pay her share of the reward. Money was a sensitive thing after all. In order to avoid having to fight Carol, Akira had to properly discuss with her and pay her.

Akira actually wanted to finish the discussion on how to divide the reward through the call, but Carol wished to meet directly with him. So, they decided on a time and place to meet.

Akira was waiting for Carol in the shopping district near the wall. Most of the areas in the lower district were relatively safe, so people who lived there were mostly peaceful people who could not fight. Of course, there were some guards patrolling the area too, but in order not to arouse any unnecessary ruckus and to give a more peaceful feeling, they were dispatched in civilian attires. Other than those guards, the rest of the people there were peaceful people.

But because of that, Akira gathered a lot of attention there. He was donning an augmented suit and carrying AAH and A2D assault rifles. He was basically a Hunter who could jump into a fight any second. If he was carrying DVTS minigun and A4WM automatic grenade launchers too, the guards would definitely escort him out of the area.

Alpha smiled and said.

“You’re really sticking out, aren’t you?”

“It’s not my fault, it’s Carol’s fault for asking me to meet her in this place.”

Although Akira was gathering a lot of attention, it was only on a level when someone came to a place with an attire not suitable for the location. It was not like the people around him were looking at him scared since he was an armed Hunter, it was simply because they knew that the guards in that area would be able to deal with that level of a Hunter with no problem at all in case if anything happened. They knew that Akira would face real trouble if he started making trouble in that area.

Alpha looked at the people around Akira and compared them to him.

“I don’t really mind it, but if you don’t like sticking out, maybe you should think more carefully about your outlook. It might be a good idea to buy some casual clothes that you won’t use when you have Hunter work.”

“It’s not like I’m planning to go somewhere that needs me to look sleek, and it’s not like I want something like that either, I really don’t need it. It’s true that I’m sticking out here, but I just need to not let it bother me that much. Not to mention, good clothes are expensive, right? So there’s no need to go out of my way to buy them.”

“Well, that’s true. Shiori and Kanae are also always using their maid outfits. If you really are not bothered by it, there’s no need to try to match the people around you.”

Akira looked rather annoyed and said.

“…Do I really look similar to Kanae and Shiori right now?”

“If you’re talking about wearing an outlook that doesn’t match the place, then yes.”

“…I guess I’ll think about buying some casual clothes then.”

Alpha smiled as she saw Akira’s resolve waver.

Carol appeared a bit sooner than the appointment time. When she saw Akira, she waved at him and walked toward him. Carol was wearing a high-class looking dress that gave her a graceful look. It was the exact opposite of the design of her usual augmented suit. It properly hid most of her skin while still letting her beautiful figure be perceivable from the outside, people who were familiar with fashion could easily recognize that she was wearing an expensive dress.

Akira was a bit surprised seeing how Carol was wearing a dress that was the exact opposite of how she dressed when she was out in the old-world ruin. After all, he did not expect Carol to wear a dress like that at all.

While at the same time, Carol was also surprised when she saw Akira’s attire. Although she was smiling, there was a trace of displeasure in her smile. She sighed a bit and said.

“I really didn’t expect you to come in that attire when you’re about to have lunch with a girl, you know?”

Akira decided to just shelve his thoughts for now and casually replied.

“I’m a Hunter, who is here as a Hunter and we’re about to talk about Hunter stuff. So I don’t think I’m doing anything weird here.”

Carol watched Akira’s reaction closely, it did not seem like he was trying to hide his embarrassment.

“Ah, right, if I’m not mistaken, you’re still in the middle of learning how to properly escort a girl, right? It seems that you still have a lot to learn.”

“Did I really say that?”

“You did. I remember it very well even though it was just a silly talk. Now then, shall we go?”

Carol was actually planning to take Akira to a high-class restaurant not too far from where they met up. But it was not a suitable place to eat when you were using an augmented suit.

Although it was not like the restaurant would not accept them, it did not change the fact that Akira would look strange there. As Carol thought so, she also thought that she was glad she did not put in an early reservation, she smiled bitterly while hiding that smile from Akira.

They entered another restaurant together, sat on a table for 4 facing each other, and scanned the menu for what to order. Carol looked at Akira who was looking at the menu with a serious face and thought that it was cute. She then thought about how to start the discussion there, or more like, how to use this chance to get Akira fixated on her.

After they placed their orders, they chatted for a bit before the meals arrived. That was when Carol started talking about the reward.

“Well, the foods are here, so let’s start talking about the main reason why we’re here.”

“About the reward, right?”

“Yep. Let’s just omit the bargaining part and go to the main problem. Akira, how much are you planning to pay me?”

Carol smiled confidently and waited for Akira’s reply.

Akira seemed troubled, he instead asked Carol a question.

“How much do you think I should pay you?”

Carol replied confidently with her smile.

“Oh my, you do know that I omitted the bargaining part for your sake, right? Or is it that you prefer it the other way? I don’t mind accepting your challenge, but just so you know, I’m not an easy opponent.”

Akira hesitated as he said.

“Uhh, that’s not the problem here, to be honest, it’s more like I don’t know the right reward for Hunters, you see. That’s why I’m asking you, you’re familiar with this kind of thing, right?”

Even for Akira, he knew that it was a bad thing to reveal that he was bad with negotiation. While on the other hand, Akira understood that he did not have the knowledge to even pretend that he knew. So he was sure that Carol who was familiar with that kind of thing would see through him in no time even if he tried.

But from the other point of view, it could be said that Akira took his chance for something bigger. He knew what he did not know, so he was prepared to lose money in order to gain that knowledge.

Carol looked at Akira for a while, she then thought for a bit before starting to talk while carefully observing his reaction.

“As someone who is more experienced in negotiation about rewards, I’ll at least say this to you, your move now was a bad move. Even if you don’t know the right number, as long as both of us did not agree on a certain number beforehand, you ought to firmly state the number that you have in mind, it doesn’t matter even if it was a bad bluff or even if you ask for an unreasonable huge amount of money. Since you’re the one with the money here, you should’ve used that position to come out stronger against your opponent. After all, if the negotiation breaks down, the one who will not get paid is me. And if you do that to me, I would be really troubled. So if you do that, I might decide to make a compromise to avoid any trouble later. Of course, with the less money you pay me, you will get a bigger portion of the reward.”

Akira listened to Carol's explanation closely, he agreed with what Carol said.

"Hmm, you're right about that. So then, how much do you want me to pay you?"

Although that reply did not make Carol's smile waver from the outside, she actually felt troubled inside. It did not seem that Akira would try to bargain at all no matter how much Carol might ask. Even after she told him that he had the upper hand there, Akira did not seem trying to use it at all.

[To be honest, I'm not really interested in my portion of reward though. I was actually planning to accept a small amount of reward and get him indebted to me instead…]

Carol thought for a bit, she then decided to just say something to check Akira's reaction.

"The amount of reward that I want, huh. To be honest, I don't want to sell my skill cheaply and I have the confidence that I can convince other people to pay me a big reward. That's why I usually start the negotiation with relatively high reward money. Hypothetically speaking, if I tell you to give me all the reward, will you do that? You did tell me that you have no knowledge about how to negotiate for your reward, so what will you do if I'm using my skill to convince you to give me all the reward? To be honest, I'm pretty sure that I can do that."

Carol smiled confidently.

But then Akira just casually replied.

"Well, in that case, it can't be helped, I'll just give you all the reward."

Carol's smile finally wavered.

It was not like Akira was willing to give all the reward because he was in a situation where he had no other choice but to do that. He was willing to do that simply because he had listened to Carol’s explanation with his distorted sense of money.

Akira went to Mihazono ruin while bringing Carol with him in order to help Elena and Sara. Right from the start, his goal was not money.

Moreover, Akira was the one who hired Carol, so as the one who hired her, he unconsciously wanted to pay Carol the right amount of reward. Akira thought that Carol was a stronger Hunter than him and he roped her to a dangerous place for his own reason, so it was understandable that he had to pay a big amount of reward for her.

In the slum city, a one-sided negotiation where someone pointing his rifle at other people demanding everything that person had was a normal occurrence. Akira really did not want to be the one robbed, but he also did not want to be the one who did the robbing. Back then when he was the one on the other side, he wanted to at least be given a chance to negotiate, so he just wanted to remind himself that he was no longer in that situation any longer and there was no need for him to join the other side.

But with that being said, Akira did not know the right amount of money to pay Carol.

Of course, the suitable amount of money would differ from one person to another. Hunters risked their lives when they went out to the wasteland. And of course, they did not think that their own life was equal to the life of the other. That was why when it came to negotiation about reward, it tended to end up with a fight. It was not rare for Hunters to fight and kill each other right after they finished a job together.

Akira himself understood that very well. That was why he decided to ask someone who was knowledgeable about that thing. Which in this case, that would be Carol.

Carol realized that she had stopped smiling, but she immediately returned her face back to a smile. She was pretending as if it did not surprise her at all while checking on Akira. It did not seem that Akira said that because he had some kind of ulterior motive. He was only being honest.

[He got me good there. I was actually planning to start with a high price and then lowering it bit by bit during the negotiation while making sure that he would feel indebted to me, and then I should be able to use that to get closer to him, but in this case, if I ask for a big portion and he accepts it, he might use that as an excuse to cut his ties with me. This is not easy…]

One thing that Carol got wrong there was that Akira would not just give all the reward without fighting back if she really asked for all the reward. What he meant back then was that he was willing to give all the reward if she could give him a good reason to do so.

To be more precise, Akira was planning to fight back until the end. And if Carol was able to convince him after that, if she could make him agree that it was a suitable reward for her, then he would properly pay her that much. After all, that was the right thing to do if he agreed with that.

And to add one more detail to that, Akira actually underestimated his words because Alpha did not say anything. Alpha was always so noisy reminding Akira of anything, that was why he was sure Alpha would say something if he did something bad.

But the reason why Alpha did not say anything was because in case if Akira lost a lot of money there, she would use that as an excuse to encourage him to stop associating with other people. So after a lot of considerations, Alpha decided to just keep silent there.

After a lot of thinking, Carol decided to take the safe route. She at least needed to make sure that she did not leave any bad impression on Akira.

[…To be honest, I don’t want to do this, but… I guess I’ll have to imitate what Elena and Sara would do in this situation.]

Carol had decided on her plan and restarted the negotiation.

“It seems that you’ve worked with Elena and Sara multiple times before, right? When you did that, how did you distribute the reward? Who decided on how to divide the reward and what indicator was used?”

“Hm? Elena-san would be the one deciding and I guess we just divided the reward normally just like usual.”

To be honest, Carol wanted to know what was ‘just like usual’ for Akira. But since he only gave her that much information, she decided to make a suggestion based on how Elena divided the reward with Akira in the last request.

“In that case, then let’s divide the reward 50-50 and not talk about whether it’s the right number considering how much we fought back in Mihazono ruin, right? After all, it’s not like we have a prior agreement on how to divide the reward anyway. This way, we can divide the reward without causing more trouble or leaving any side displeased. When it comes to a suitable amount of reward, nothing is better than the amount of reward that both parties agree to. And since I want to get along with you in the future, let’s just divide it 50-50 between us, what do you think?”

“Sure.”

Akira stopped eating, took out his information terminal, and finalized the transfer to Carol’s bank account.

“There, I’ve transferred it, can you check it?”

“Okay.”

Carol also took out her information terminal and checked her bank account.

“Yep, I’ve received it. With this, the request from you is officially finished without any hitch. Thank you. Did I satisfy your expectation? I do want to hear the opinion of my employer, you know.”

Carol was smiling mischievously at Akira when she said that.

Akira was a bit bothered by that, but he decided to reply back honestly.

“Yeah, you did well. I do feel glad that I brought you with me. Thank you.”

Akira lightly bowed, Carol then replied in a good mood.

“You’re welcome. I’ll be looking forward to working with you again.”

Looking at how Akira reacted, Carol thought that at least she did not fail, it might even be okay to say that she succeeded. And then when she saw him enjoying his delicious-looking meal, she was able to confirm that it was the right choice picking a restaurant as a place to discuss with Akira.

[If we do the negotiation in a restaurant, he would not leave until he finishes his meal. But if we’ve done this in a cafe, I bet he would have left the moment we finished the negotiation.]

Carol’s guess was most probably correct. As long as she did not have anything interesting to talk about, Akira would just leave when his business with her was done. Unlike all the other customers that she had met up until now, Akira had no romantic feeling toward her at all.

Akira and Carol continued talking to each other while enjoying their meal. Akira was talking without thinking much about what he was saying, in contrast to that, behind her smile, Carol kept thinking about what kind of subject she could bring up that might interest Akira.

Carol talked about all kinds of things with Akira, she was paying close attention to how Akira reacted to different topics. They were mostly talking about Hunter stuff while touching ordinary daily stuff from time to time.

Akira was listening closely to a certain subject that he was super interested in, it was about how to sell old-world relics.

“Ohh, so sometimes you can even sell them with that price, huh. That’s amazing.”

“Yup. And with that rumour about a certain relic that you can buy with a few hundred thousand Aurum and can be sold for a few million Aurum circulating around, it seems that some Hunters and merchants were looking for the shop that sold that certain relic.”

“A toy old-world relic, huh… I wonder what kind of relic is that.”

“I wasn’t able to investigate much about that rumour, but it seems that it was sold to Kurogin. Kurogin paid a lot of money to buy that relic and that relic was previously bought for cheap from another shop. So judging from that information alone, although it’s a toy, it’s not a mechanical toy. I think it’s some kind of a toy with artistic value and it was brought to Kurogin still in a good shape, and there might be some collectors out there who are looking for that kind of old-world relic. After all, there are many people out there with certain hobbies who would pay a lot of money for something like that.”

Carol was talking with Akira about a certain relic deal that jumped into her information network. It was about a certain Hunter who scored a very good deal in the lower district of Kugamayama city. It was not a rare occurrence, but since Akira was also a Hunter, he might be interested in that kind of talk. That was why Carol decided to prepare some information about selling relics before she went to meet Akira.

Although it was not a rare thing, it was enough to get Akira’s interest. Carol smiled satisfied seeing that Akira showed an interest in that subject.

After listening to Carol’s story about reselling relics and the businesses around that subject, a question popped inside Akira’s head.

“Do those companies that specialize in buying and selling relics get that much profit?”

“That would depend on the skill of the owner. I heard that you can get quite a lot of profit if you have the necessary connection and money.”

“…Is that the case even if you open such a store in the slums? And even if it’s a secret shop?”

Carol was surprised by what she heard.

“Oh, are you interested in that? Hmmm, if you ask me, with your skill, it’s better if you keep working as a Hunter instead of opening a shop like that, you know?”

There were many people in the eastern district who worked as Hunters only in order to get the capital to start a business. It was indeed true that being a Hunter was a dangerous job, but it was a good way to raise a lot of money in a short time. Not to mention, if they left as high ranking Hunters, it would be easier for them to gather money for their business. And if their business went bankrupt, they could use their rank to borrow some money to restart their Hunter activities again.

Because of Carol's personal reason, and because of her distorted way of thinking, she wanted Akira to keep working as a Hunter instead of changing occupation to a businessman. After all, she wanted the money that she received from the other people who were using her service to be the money they got from risking their lives, not the money they got from running a business. She did not lie when she said that she rather had Akira continue working as a Hunter, but half of the reason that she said there was a lie.

Akira himself did not think that he had any talent in running a business, so he just shook his head and said.

"Nah, it's not about me, it's about someone that I know in the slum city who started running that kind of business just recently and I'm guarding that place right now. It seems that she spent quite a lot of money on the interior of that shop, so I was just wondering if you can get profit from opening that kind of shop in the middle of the slum."

"Ohh, I see. I heard that you've been living in the slum before, have you ever heard that kind of rumour when you were living there?"

"Of course I did, but I've never gotten involved in it."

"I see. In that case, I can teach you a lot of things. After all, I'm pretty knowledgeable about that kind of thing, you know?"

Carol smiled confidently and started talking in a good mood.

There were multiple shops inside Kugamayama city that handled buying and selling relics. Their scales and their specialization also varied greatly.

There were many kinds of shops even in the slum city, and most of those shops in the slum were doing secret business.

Opening a shop in the slum was not exactly an illegal thing. But it was also true that a lot of shops that were doing questionable business from the Hunter Office's point of view often had under-the-table deals to make sure they did not get rousted out.

To be honest, the Hunter Office did not like the shops that sold relics since they allowed Hunters to gather relics with money instead of from the old-world ruin. Hunters could buy relics from such shops and then sell those relics to the Hunter Office's exchange centre. This fact would definitely raise a question in the trustability of the Hunter ranking.

The Hunter ranking was an indicator of the strength of a Hunter, and that strength was basically based on Hunter's ability to gather relics from dangerous ruin. The reason why the Hunter Office gave special treatment for the high ranking Hunters was to support the Hunters who had the skill to reach that ranking.

Hunter Office gave special treatment to high-ranking Hunters. Many cities in the eastern district only allowed Hunters of a certain ranking or higher to get permission to go inside the inner wall. Moreover, there were several secret information about old-world ruins available for high ranking Hunters only. The companies also tended to offer their new equipment cheaply for high-ranking Hunters which doubled as a promotion for those companies.

Because of that, some Hunters chose to buy relics with their money and took them to the Hunter Office in order to get a higher ranking than their actual skills. There were Hunters who gathered money from trading relics and then used that money to buy relics to bring to the Hunter Office in order to raise their Hunter Ranks.

Although it was a rather rare thing, sometimes there were also Hunters who did not want to raise their Hunter Rank for a certain reason, these Hunters would sell their relics to the exchange centre and shops that did not have any connections with the Hunter Office.

This practice could be interpreted as buying and selling Hunter Rank. Thus, those shops with good reputations tend to limit the relic trading with the Hunters or do a full identity check in order to prevent the Hunter Office from blacklisting their businesses.

But then, if they asked those Hunters who used that method to raise their Ranks where they got those relics, most of them would reply that they got their relics in the slum.

While on the other hand, some companies that were running their business in a relatively unsafe area tend to hire former Hunters to bolster their fighting power. The higher the ranking of the Hunters they hired, the better their fighting power were and the more protection they offered. Those companies sometimes paid those Hunters not with money, but with relics. As for the Hunters' side, some of them decided that it was better to get paid with relics rather than with money, so sometimes they made being paid with relics as one of the requirements to employ them. But in the end, the relics that the companies used to pay those Hunters were mostly bought from the slum.

Merchants in the slum were able to gain an unthinkable amount of money considering where they were conducting their business because of those under-the-table dealings.

Akira was listening closely to Carol's explanation.

Carol was smiling happily seeing that Akira was interested in her explanation. At the same time, she also thought about the reason behind that interest.

[Akira hailed from the slum. If I have to make a guess, I bet he got lucky, found an expensive relic, and used the money that he got from there to become a Hunter. And then he grew so fast as a Hunter which would explain his lack of knowledge. So basically, Akira grew as a Hunter so fast that he did not have the chance to learn basic knowledge as a Hunter. Which means that he's a very talented person. No wonder Shikarabe got cautious of him… I bet the reason why he's showing so much interest in my explanation is simply because he's hungry for knowledge. I wonder if it's a backlash from living so long in the slum where he couldn't get much information… As for the reason why he shows almost no interest in the opposite sex… I guess he was so desperate just to survive that his mental development is not at that stage yet, huh?]

Although it was not exactly wrong, her guess was not exactly right either. From her experience seducing a lot of people, Carol was able to see through a small part of Akira's personality.

Carol tried to look casual as she asked Akira a question.

"By the way, Akira, do you have any worry at the moment?"

"Worry?"

"Yep. I'm more experienced than you in all kinds of things. So if you have any worries, I might be able to give you some advice."

Carol was smiling at Akira as if she was hiding something behind her smile.

"By the way, I have a particular worry lately. It's about a certain Hunter who prefers food over women, he hardly shows any reaction no matter what I do to seduce him, do you have any idea what I should do?"

Akira understood that Carol was teasing him, so he smiled back mischievously and said.

"Nah, I don't have any good idea at all. I guess your only choice is to wait until he grows a little older. Either that, or just give up on him and aim for someone else."

"That's no solution at all, you know. So then, what about you Akira? Don't worry, you can share anything, I'll at least give you some advice regardless if it's useful or not."

Carol was smiling teasingly as if she was planning to get payback at Akira when she said that.

Akira thought for a bit before replying.

“…Worry, huh. Let’s see… If I have to say anything, I’ll say my lack of strength and money, huh… Wait, is that included as a worry in the first place?”

“Oh my, I think you got quite a lot of money from the last request and I also think that you’re already pretty strong, is it still not enough?”

“Even if you say so, I need to buy ammo, I want to get better equipment, and I want to eat good food. I feel like it won’t be enough no matter how much money I have. While for my strength, since I had trouble fighting the monsters back in the Mihazono ruin, that alone means that I’m not strong enough yet. Well, I have no other choice but to work hard as a Hunter and there’s no easy solution to that, I at least know that much.”

To be more precise, Akira was relying too much on the easy and effective solution called Alpha’s support. As long as Akira knew that, the rest was for him to work hard.

Carol smiled confidently and said.

“In that case, I did invite you to work together with me back then in the Mihazono ruin, right? If you work with me, I’m sure you can get a better look at my fighting skill and negotiation skill, so, what do you think? If you work with me, I think I can teach you many things, you know. I think it’s faster than gathering the experience by yourself, yes?”

Unlike last time, Akira did not reply instantly this time, but in the end, he gave the same answer as last time.

“I’m sorry, but I’ll have to refuse.”

Carol was a bit surprised by that, she sounded so disappointed as she said.

“Oh my, I thought I’ve done well trying to get you to recognize my skill, but I guess it wasn’t good enough, huh?”

Akira hesitated as he replied.

“No, that’s not the problem here. Like I said back then, I don’t plan much and can be pretty random, I don’t think I have the suitable personality to work together with someone else…”

“I’m the one who’s asking you to work with me, you know. So I at least will adapt to your schedule. And if we can’t work well together even after that, we can just stop working together. So, is it still a no?”

“Even if you say so, it’s still a no, sorry.”

Akira thought that he made the mood bad there, but unexpectedly, Carol smiled and said.

“I see. Well, it can’t be helped then. It’s true that working together with the other Hunter whom you can’t really work together with often ends up with trouble. Not to mention, you might come to hate me too, so I’ll stop bugging you about that. But if you ever want to work together with me even if it’s only for a short time, I’m open anytime, okay? I know that you sometimes go to the ruin with Elena and Sara, right? You can invite me too the next time you do that and I’ll be more than happy to come along.”

Akira thought for a bit before replying.

“You’re right, well, I’ll call you again if the chance comes up.”

Carol smiled happily.

“I see, I’ll be looking forward to it then.”

“Yeah.”

Akira smiled back and gave that short reply.

Akira and Carol were talking about a lot of things even after they finished their meals and had ordered refills for their after-meal coffee multiple times. When Akira realized that he had spent way more time than he originally planned, he said his goodbye to Carol and left the restaurant.

After Akira left, Carol was still inside the restaurant for some time. She was smiling wryly and mumbled.

“Hmmm. Akira’s reaction there was not bad, but I wasn’t able to make any appointment when to meet next either. I guess I relied too much on my seduction skill lately that my speechcraft skill has gotten dull.”

Carol was not always using her body to seduce her customer, she sometimes used other skills too. One of them was to get friendly with her customer which included bringing subjects about some common interests, talking about each other’s worries, asking about each other’s opinions, listening closely to what her talking partner was asking and giving an answer that the other was expecting, and eventually getting so close to the point that the other person became reliant on her. Seducing was just one of the methods that she could use to reach that goal.

Carol sometimes also used that to lead her partner to a better state. She encouraged them to be more positive about their lives, to be more confident, to cheer them up, to get them to enjoy their lives more and support them. It could be said that those were the services that they got from paying the money they earned from risking their lives to Carol.

At the same time, all of those encouragements sometimes caused them to get ahead of themselves and made them challenge dangerous old-world ruins that were out of their league, but Carol was okay about that. There were many different ways for people to use their lives. So Carol had no wish to stop them from doing so. Although, she might try to stop them if she knew that it would be counter-effective.

“Seeing how he reacted, I don’t think Akira would accept my invitation if I invite him to go to the wasteland randomly, and it’s unlikely for him to invite me. What should I do…?”

Carol was thinking about what she could do next to seduce Akira, that was when a call reached her information terminal. Carol checked the caller and accepted the call.

“Viola, I’m outside right now. If it’s something sensitive, call me again later.”

“Don’t worry, it’s just that I have a small question for you, it’s nothing serious.”

Carol could feel that Viola was planning something bad behind her uppity voice.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 141, Reignition

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After he left Carol, Akira headed to Sheryl's base.

Akira seemed to be in a good mood, noticing which, Alpha asked him a question.

"You seem to be pretty happy, was it really that fun talking with Carol?"

But Akira reacted in a surprised manner, it seemed that he did not notice it himself or he just simply did not feel that way.

"Do I look really that happy right now?"

"Yup, I always kept my eyes on you, so I can easily tell."

"I see, well, it's true that it was fun. After all, I got to hear a lot of things about being a Hunter."

Alpha smiled gently after hearing Akira's honest answer.

"I see, that's good to hear. In that case, it might be a good idea for me to gather information around that subject to talk with you too."

Alpha said gently. On the surface, it was as if she was saying it was for Akira's sake, but behind it, she was only doing that for the sake of keeping him away from Carol.

Akira thought for a bit before replying.

"Hmmm. Well, to be honest, I learn more about common sense in the eastern district instead of knowledge about being a Hunter from you after all. I guess I want you to teach me about common sense first. After all, I don't even know where the Kugamayama city is located in the eastern district, so, you can teach me about being a Hunter later after that."

"Sure, got it."

Suddenly Akira extended his hand and grabbed the man next to him, that man had Akira's wallet in his hand. In one fluid move, Akira drove a kick with his enhanced strength to that man who was not using an augmented suit nor an armour. Although Akira held himself back, his kick still hurt. Enough so as to force the man to roll on the ground and writhe in pain.

Akira happily picked up his wallet and then walked toward that man. That man who was still gasping in pain, noticed Akira walking toward him and desperately reached for his pistol in his pocket. He aimed it at Akira as fast as he could, but due to the pain, he was too slow.

With a smirk, Akira kicked the pistol away from that man's hand. The pistol flew and slid on the ground. Meanwhile, it had that man's hand bent at a weird angle, it was obvious that the bone inside it was broken. That man screamed in pain.

Akira was in a good mood. Unlike back then when Alna caught him off guard and took his wallet, this time, he was able to properly protect his life-staking money. Alpha did not even need to help him at all, Akira was able to identify that man entirely with his own ability. He felt the satisfaction as if he had redeemed himself.

Thanks to that, even with all the sins the man had taken against Akira, the boy was in such a good mood. It could be said that he was being considerate to that man and only rendered him incapacitated. If Akira was in his usual mood, there was no mistaking it that man would have died by now. This was the back alley, it was not a strange thing to find one or two corpses lying here and there. His mood was the only thing that saved the man.

That man looked fearfully at Akira, who smiled at him in a good mood and said.

“You got really unlucky today trying to prey on me.”

Akira still sounded like he was in a good mood when he said that, but he immediately delivered another kick after he said that. That man shrieked, slammed to the ground, and rolled over.

For Akira, that was the end of the incident, it was done, it was finished, he got stronger, he was no longer careless anymore. After he could confirm that, he just turned around and walked back toward the main street.

But the voice behind him told Akira that it was not the end of the incident. That man, who was writhing on the ground in pain, suddenly shouted a curse.

“…Goddammit, I didn’t hear anything about this…”

Akira stopped, his smiling face turned cold in a snap.

Viola had an office hidden among the countless buildings in the Kugamayama city’s lower district. Colbert was there with Viola that day.

She was sitting on a sofa and said to Colbert in a good mood.

“Geez, you’re so cold, how about you come over here?”

Colbert was sitting not too far away from Viola and was able to clearly hear her invitation.

“No thanks.”

“Geez, you’re no fun.”

Colbert’s swift reply was more out of wariness rather than coldness toward Viola, but that did not ruin Viola’s mood at all, she was still smiling like usual.

Colbert looked at Viola, who seemed to be in an excellent mood, and told himself to be careful not to get involved in any troublesome stuff that she had in mind as he said to her.

“So then, why did you call me today? Is there anything you don’t like in the report that I gave you? Just so you know, I’m not going to return the reward.”

“Nope, it’s nothing about that at all. The report that you gave me was not bad. I just wanted to ask some stuff directly like what’s your impression of that shop.”

“I’m sure I wrote it in my report already, you didn’t read it?”

“I did. But even if it’s about the same subject, people usually give a different opinion when they’re asked directly compared to what they wrote in a simple report, you know. Even when you do negotiation, you would rather meet the other party directly even if it was something that you could’ve taken care of with text messages, right? That’s just how important the information that you can get just by talking directly. Or at least, for me, it’s that important, you do know that, right?”

Whatever the case, Viola was the one who hired him. Colbert made that as an excuse to give up there.

“…Alright, so then, what do you want me to tell you this time?”

“A lot of things, for the starter, what kind of girl is this Sheryl?”

Viola smiled bewitchingly at Colbert as they started going deeper into that subject.

That day, Colbert did not go to Sheryl's shop out of pure coincidence, he was hired by Viola to investigate Sheryl's shop. Although he hesitated at first to accept that request, since the reward offer was pretty generous, he eventually decided to accept it.

The only reason why Colbert tried to help out Levin was because he could do so while completing Viola's request, and in case if it got exposed that he got that request from Viola, he could use it as an excuse to evade. It might also help him to avoid getting roped into troublesome stuff later on, after all, either for better or for worse, Viola was famous for causing trouble. A lot of people would raise their guard when they noticed that Viola had made some moves and there was nothing bad with being extra careful.

Viola asked Colbert about a lot of things and Colbert answered all of her questions. Most of them were about the same thing that he had already written in his report, while the rest were about some stuff that he thought to be unnecessary to be written in his report.

Viola was listening closely to Colbert, who had known Viola for a long time, at this point, he knew for sure that she had something completely different in her mind behind her outer expression. She sometimes looked deeply interested when she actually did not care at all, sometimes she looked like she did not care at all when she was actually really interested, and sometimes it was neither. Viola only showed an expression that would help her get more information.

Colbert knew that Viola had manipulated information in order to indirectly control other people multiple times in the past. So he took great care and was being very careful as he was speaking to her, but even after that, he was still doubting himself–wondering if he was already dancing to Viola's tune.

"…That's basically the gist of it. The boss of that gang and the owner of that shop, that Sheryl girl is basically a pretty impressive girl. After all, it seems that she has Akira on her palms too, so it's not like her beauty is everything. This is only my guess, but I think that shop is doing well."

"You have a pretty good review on that shop."

“It’s just my opinion. If you’re questioning it, you can meet her and decide for yourself. In the first place, why are you interested in that shop? There are a lot of other similar shops in the slum city, right? Is it because Akira is involved?”

“Now that you mention it, did you see Akira there?”

“I didn’t get to see him when I went there. He might have been hiding somewhere. That room was surrounded with white sheets, he might have been hiding behind one of those sheets, though I can’t really say for sure.”

“I see, well, I have a lot of interest in that shop. Let’s just say that a lot of other shops are getting alerted by their new competitor. It’s nothing strange at all, right?”

“…Well, if you say so.”

Colbert could see Viola was hiding all kinds of stuff behind that excuse which she just gave. He could not tell if that was just his imagination or not since he might be mistaken, but he had no means to confirm it for sure.

“…If that’s all, I’ll head back home now. You can call me if you need anything else… One more thing though, I just want to make sure, it’s up to me what to do about the relics that I bought yesterday, right?”

“Yup. That’s one of the rewards from me, you can do anything you want with them. I’ll at least tell you this out of kindness, it might be a good idea to sell it, and don’t bring that to the Hunter Office’s exchange centre. If you get comfortable doing that, you’ll never be able to return back to being a normal Hunter.”

Colbert glared at Viola.

“Humph, it’s none of your business.”

“But of course, it’s completely up to you.”

Viola smiled when she said that. Colbert made a rather frustrated look as he left the room.

The door banged as Colbert slammed it on his way out. Viola looked at it and mumbled.

“Looking at how he acts, I don’t think he can return back to being a normal Hunter at this point. But well, that’s one way to live.”

Viola was the one who offered to pay Colbert with relics rather than with money in order to lure him to accept that request from her, taking advantage of his wish to never return back to being a regular Hunter.

A call reached Viola’s information terminal, she reached for her information terminal and said in a good mood.

“It’s me… Yep, yep, I’ve spread the rumour… Nope, my job is only to spread the information around to incite the fire and it is done when the fire has already started burning. Of course, I don’t mind going further, but it’ll cost you more, you know…? If you don’t want to pay me, then just wait. I did properly spread the rumour, so it’s only a matter of time… Yes, well, later then.”

Viola ended the call.

“I wonder what will happen from here and on, I can’t help but get excited.”

Viola smiled, imagining all kinds of possibilities.

***

The man who stole Akira’s wallet was folded over the ground. Akira was walking toward him with a grim expression. That man’s face was distorted not by the pain from his broken hand, but also by the fear of Akira who was coming at him.

He did think of running away, but the pain from his stomach and his hand, as well as the fear of getting killed by Akira, prevented him from making any sudden movements. It was impossible for him to make a run.

Akira stopped right in front of that man and asked him with a calm voice as if he was whispering.

“What do you mean by that?”

But that man begged for forgiveness instead of answering Akira’s question.

“P-please spare me!! I’m really sorry!!”

Akira prodded his rifle at that man and asked him once again.

“Answer. My. Question. What do you mean by what you said just now…? If you answer my question, I might give you some of my medicine… If you won’t talk even under threat of a gun, then I’ll be more than happy to grant you that wish.”

Akira’s mood had gotten considerably worse. Even if that man did not answer Akira’s question because he could not organize his mind from the terror of the rifle that Akira was pointing at him, Akira would probably not care about that and just kill that man.

That man desperately begged Akira to not kill him.

“O-of course!! I’ll tell you!! I’ll tell you everything!! So please don’t shoot!!”

Akira lowered his rifle, pulled out his medicine box, took out some pills, and forced them down that man’s throat. He did not care even when that man groaned. Then Akira grabbed that man’s broken hand and forcefully realigned it.

That man screamed in pain when Akira realigned his broken hand, his face was distorted in agony. But his surprised and pained face immediately changed. The medicine worked wonders, the pain from his stomach and his broken hand from Akira’s kick slowly but surely waned. Even his hand that was bent in an unnatural angle until just now, after Akira forcefully realigned it, that man was able to move it again albeit only slightly.

That man was confused and surprised that Akira really shared some of his medicine, but his confusion and surprise were blown away when he noticed Akira had already pointed his rifle at him again.

Akira really shared his medicine, just like he said. So, just like he said too, he might as well kill that man for real. That man opened his mouth in panic. If Akira thought that he had abandoned his promise, Akira could pull the trigger anytime, so before that, he tried his best to start speaking.

"…I bought that information. They said that there's a certain careless young Hunter who carries a lot of money but an easy target to pick… And that it would be fine even if I get caught since someone got caught in the past too, but when that pickpocket ran and hid behind another Hunter, that boy was scared and ran away… The rumour is basically saying that you're an easy target and that it'll be fine even if I get caught…"

Akira remembered that he got careless in the past and had his wallet picked by a young girl named Alna. Unfortunately, he was not able to get his money back. After all, Katsuya protected Alna.

At that time, their difference in power was just too big, although he was against the idea, Akira ended up backing off. If Alpha had not stopped him back then, it was almost certain that a fight would have broken out and Akira would have been killed in that fight.

Akira's mood immediately turned for the worst the moment he remembered that. His expression turned cold, although he was emotionless, a wave of dark and gut-wrenching anger could be felt welling out from him.

Looking at that, that man got super scared as he begged Akira to spare him.

"I-It's not me!! It's the information from the information broker!!"

Akira replied with a calm voice.

"How did you find me? Did you see a photo of my face or something?"

"…They told me some descriptions like the hairstyle and body build… And also they showed me a blurry picture too."

"You were able to find me only with that?"

"L-Like I said, I got the wrong person. I mistook you with that boy Hunter."

“Didn’t you say back there that you didn’t hear anything about this? You didn’t say that you mistook me for that easy prey, right?”

“T-that is…”

That man was lost for words. Akira fixed his gaze at that man without saying anything. That man could not bear the pressure and started to tremble as he begged Akira.

“I-I’m really sorry, I was tricked by that information broker, they gave me the wrong information. It’s my fault, I’m so stupid for getting tricked by that information broker. So please, have mercy on me.”

Akira stared down at that man with his rifle still pointing at him, and that man looked back at Akira with a puckered face.

Akira suddenly lowered his rifle. That man looked so relieved, but that was immediately proved to be premature.

Akira grabbed that man by his neck and pulled him up, he then smashed that man on the wall of the back alley. That man groaned in pain, but Akira did not stop there, he then said to that man with a cold and heartless tone without even looking at him.

“First of all, let me get this straight, you were not tricked by that information broker. I am indeed the fool who got my wallet easily stolen by a brat. I was that weakling who ran away when the Hunter who was protecting that brat confronted me. The info broker did not lie to you, that information is correct.”

Then Akira looked straight into that man’s eyes as if he was peering deep inside that man’s soul, that man’s face was filled with terror.

“But I have no plans to just end that incident there. I’m not done with her yet. I don’t care where you got that information from, but make sure to tell that information broker that it’s not the end of the story yet, got it?”

Although Akira grabbed hard on his neck, that man managed to nod. Akira then released his hand, that man coughed and fell over to the ground.

Akira swiftly turned around and started walking away again.

That man was coughing while trying to calm his breath. When he was dropped from Akira's grasp, he saw his pistol, which Akira kicked from his hand, lying there on the ground near him. That man slowly stood back up and reached for his pistol.

The moment his hand reached his pistol, a gunshot echoed and his pistol was blasted off from his hand. That man could not help but turn at the source of that gunshot and saw Akira there with his AAH assault rifle aimed at him. Akira was the one who shot his pistol.

That man screamed and ran as fast as he could into the depth of the back alley.

Akira silently lowered his rifle, he was now in a terrible mood. He had the same grim expression that he had when he was about to fight Katsuya.

Alpha flew and stood in front of Akira, she enlarged her image in Akira's vision.

"Akira, take a deep breath."

Akira took a deep breath just like Alpha told him to, he did that multiple times. After a few repetitions, he slowly calmed down.

Alpha smiled gently at Akira to calm him down and said.

"Are you good now?"

"…Yeah… Sorry."

"Don't mention it."

Alpha smiled as if it did not bother her at all. Akira seemed slightly dispirited as he let out a big sigh.

“To be honest, I thought I’ve already completely moved on from that, you know.”

For Akira, it was something that was already over. Or at least, that was what he thought. If nothing had happened, he would only have chuckled when he remembered about that. It was really something that was already over in his mind.

But it seemed that someone did not want to let him end it there, so in Akira’s mind, it changed from ‘already over’ to a ‘short pause’, and now it was back ‘on play’ again.

Alpha then worriedly said to Akira.

“I think it’s a good idea if you just head back home without visiting Sheryl’s base today. It would be bad if something were to happen when you’re in such a bad mood, you won’t be able to try to defuse the situation, right?”

“…No, I’ll at least visit her briefly. After all, I did promise her that I’ll come even if it’ll be rather late than usual… Moreover, there’s something I want to ask Sheryl.”

Akira’s face turned tense again as he thought of what to do to solve this situation.

***

Sheryl was working in her private room when someone suddenly knocked on the door.

“Come in.”

Alicia opened the door and said to Sheryl.

“Boss, Akira-san is here.”

Sheryl glanced at Alicia, who was alone. She then tilted her head and asked.

“Where is he?”

“He’s talking with Erio right now, he’ll be here in a minute. And also, there’s actually something that I need to tell you…”

Alicia hesitated and looked rather worried.

“…I’m not really sure what happened, but it seemed that Akira-san is in a very bad mood right now. So, be careful.”

Alicia asked Erio to hold Akira back for a bit so she could warn Sheryl about Akira’s mood. Sheryl noticed that as she frowned.

As Alicia left the room, Akira came in. When Sheryl saw Akira’s expression, she was barely able to maintain her expression from shrinking.

Even Sheryl could see clearly that Akira was obviously in a terrible mood. Akira knew his expression was leaking his emotions, so he tried his best to mend that. He tried his best to act casual but he completely failed in doing so.

[This indeed looks really bad… Thank goodness Alicia warned me beforehand.]

Sheryl was extremely nervous, but she still smiled at Akira, trying her best to hide her nervousness.

She sat face to face with Akira on a table, she could clearly feel the heavy mood in that place. She was wringing all her brainpower to think what was the right thing to do there.

Both for the sake of her position in the gang and her own feelings, Sheryl did not want Akira to hate her. Akira was the main supporter of the gang as well as the reason why she could keep her position as the boss in the gang. If Akira came to hate her, her position would crumble. Akira was also Sheryl’s psychological anchor, he was the place where she would lean to when she was mentally or spiritually exhausted. If Akira abandoned her, there was no doubt that she would break.

If it was the normal Akira, even if Sheryl made some slip-ups and said something that she should not, Akira would just let that slide. If Sheryl said something that caused a misunderstanding, she could explain everything until the misunderstanding was cleared up. If she said something that offended Akira, she could apologize for it. That way, it would not deal a fatal blow on her relationship with Akira, or at least, that was what she thought.

But the current Akira was not how he usually was, Sheryl could not afford to behave normally. She felt that if she made a slight mistake or if she said something that caused even a slight misunderstanding, it would deliver a fatal blow to her relationship with Akira. Sheryl proceeded extra carefully as not to trigger any landmines.

[…S-should I just keep my mouth shut like this? Is it a good idea to keep silent until Akira calms down a little? B-but, what if that angers him instead? Should I take the initiative and put my bet on the chance of cheering him up… While of course, being extra careful as not to make his mood even worse. But I have no idea what made him angry in the first place at all, so… But no…]

As Sheryl put all of her focus on thinking about what to do there, she started to forget about other smaller things. Her face also slowly turned tense.

Although Akira was normally a dense boy, he was able to easily notice that change in Sheryl's expression, it showed just how desperate she was.

Looking at Sheryl, who was getting more and more desperate, it somehow calmed Akira a little. He then said to her.

"Sheryl."

"Y-yes!?"

Sheryl flusteredly replied back, she did not expect Akira to talk to her so suddenly like that Akira tried his best to sound like his usual self.

“…Well, uhh, something happened today and I’m not in a good mood right now. I know that myself, but it’s not like I’m angry at you at all. And also, I’m trying my best here, but I’m sure that I might vent my anger on you, so I’ll apologize in advance. I’m sorry, if I really end up venting at you, please just forget about it and don’t let it bother you too much.”

After he said that, Akira lightly lowered his head.

Sheryl was a bit surprised by that, but she immediately regained her composure and smiled gently at Akira. She was somehow able to calm down and regain her clarity. She thought that it would be less likely for Akira to get angry at her if she was the one who was on the listening side, so she encouraged Akira to continue.

“I understand. I won’t force you, but if it helps you if you share it with someone, I can listen to you as much as you want.”

“…Sorry, thanks for the offer, but no.”

Sheryl looked at Akira and tried to make some guesses.

[…It seems that it’s something serious, I might be able to win some points if I can help him solve his problem… But looking at it, it’s more likely that I’ll be biting more than I can chew.]

Sheryl acted casually as if it did not bother her at all and said.

“Please don’t be, it’s my fault for saying something that I should not. I know that it’s not like I can help much, but if there’s anything that I can do, please do tell me.”

When Sheryl said that, Akira looked at her as if he just remembered something.

“Ah, that’s right, there’s something that I wanted to ask you.”

Akira took out his information terminal, clicked some buttons, and then placed it on the table so that Sheryl could see it too. Alna's picture was on that information panel, she was the pickpocket who stole his wallet.

"If you ever see this girl, I want you to inform me."

Sheryl peeked at the picture. Judging from her attire, that girl seemed to be someone from the slum city, but her figure was not that bad. She would be beautiful with a little bit of effort, or at least, that was what Sheryl thought when she saw that picture.

Akira did not show any interest even after he saw Sheryl naked, but now he was asking her to help him find another girl. Sheryl felt a bit dissatisfied by that. But she decided to put that for later and asked Akira.

"I just need to look for this girl, right? If you would tell us her name and her connection with you, we should be able to find her more easily."

"I don't know her name, and also, I don't want you guys to look for her. It's just that if any of you spot her, I want you guys to tell me."

"But like, you're looking for this girl, right? What do you plan to do to her after you find her?"

Since Akira did not say anything about his relationship with Alna, Sheryl got a little suspicious there.

If it was nothing bad, then she needed to be careful not to do anything rude when she brought Alna to Akira. On the other hand, if it was the opposite, she could use force to capture that girl and that might help her win some points from Akira.

But Sheryl needed to be extra careful on how she would deal with Alna, if Akira was looking for her since she helped Akira before, then it would only cause Akira's mood to get worse if they treated Alna badly.

But Akira's answer to Sheryl's question was short and clear.

"I'll kill her."

Akira's voice was so cold and heartless that it even surprised Sheryl.

Sheryl's smile froze in an instant.

Akira sighed to calm himself, he then said.

"…That girl stole my wallet, you see. So, since she stole the money that I gathered by risking my life, I'm planning to kill her if I find her again."

"I-I see."

"…And also, there's no need to kidnap her or use force. Although I'm not sure if they're just her friends or if they were just backing her up, she basically has some Hunters protecting her. And those Hunters are more or less as strong as me, or might be even stronger than me. I chased her when I noticed that she stole my wallet, but in the end, I couldn't get my money back because of those Hunters."

"…They're stronger than you?"

"Yeah, so there's no need to use force."

Akira casually admitted that those Hunters were stronger than him, and on top of it, Sheryl noticed that he had no plans to sacrifice the gang just to look for that girl. Although she felt happy about it, she also thought that they needed to get more useful to Akira. Showing that the gang was useful to Akira was an important milestone for the gang.

The only reason why Akira was helping the gang was simply because he was Sheryl's lover, there was no other reason. So if they could give Akira more reason to back the gang, it would definitely make the gang feel safer. After all, everyone in the gang was actually worried that they might be abandoned by Akira.

Sheryl replied with a serious face.

"I understand. I'll properly warn everyone. How should we inform you if we spot her? Even though you told us to inform you if we spot her, it's not like everyone in the gang has an information terminal. Of course, we want to help you as much as possible, but…”

“No, there’s no rush. You can just tell me when and where you guys spotted her. After all, she might have moved to another area by the time that information reaches me.”

Sheryl was a bit surprised by that, when Akira said that he will kill that girl, it sounded like he had a deep dark grudge on her, but from what he said just now, it sounded as if Akira did not really care that much even if they could not find that girl.

[I don’t really understand what’s on Akira’s mind, but it’s better if we do what he told us to. It might break into a fight, after all, if that’s the case, we can’t afford to get reckless… After all, unfortunately enough, we’re not ready for something like that.]

Sheryl was not that close to Akira yet, she made a forlorn expression when she realized it.

Akira noticed that slight change, misunderstood its meaning, and apologized.

“…Sorry, I did try my best to be careful, but I guess I still ended up venting it on you, huh? Sorry.”

Sheryl somehow managed to give her usual smile.

“Please don’t worry about it, everyone has their bad day. If it helps you out, you can vent as much as you want on me, I don’t mind it. But of course, as a reward, I’ll have you spoil me a lot later.”

“… Ahhh… Well… You can do whatever you want.”

Sheryl was smiling mischievously, which Akira replied with a wry smile.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 142, Shizuka’s worry

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Sheryl took an information terminal from her desk, it was the information terminal that Akira left there the other day.

“I’m returning this. It is a hard game, but it was interesting. Thank you very much.”

Sheryl gave her impression about the game and returned the information terminal back to Akira. It was indeed just a game, but it was also a relic hunting simulation based on Akira’s real skill, a training tool using a top-down simulation. Akira lent that to Sheryl since it seemed she was interested in it yesterday.

When he heard that Sheryl also thought that it was a difficult game, Akira made a troubled face and said.

“…Yeah, you’re right, it’s really a difficult game.”

Saying that the game was hard was similar to saying that Akira’s skill that was reflected onto the main character in the game was still way too underdeveloped. Although Akira himself understood that very well, it still hurt him a bit when he was reminded of it.

[It’s true that I still have a long way to go. I guess I have no other choice but to get better equipment, train myself up, and gather more experience, huh.]

Sheryl thought that it was simply a game. That was why she did not think much about it as she said to Akira.

“Yes, it was an interesting but difficult game. It took me some time before I could clear it.”

“Eh!?”

Akira was taken aback by what Sheryl said. Sheryl was also surprised by Akira’s reaction.

Akira was so dumbfounded that he could only react awkwardly.

“You… Cleared it?”

“Y-yes.”

Sheryl, who saw that, replied back awkwardly too. It was indeed a difficult game, but there was no reason for Akira to be that surprised, at least that was what she thought since she did not know anything more than that.

Akira opened the menu to check the previous play sessions of the game. He was so surprised that he was not able to nimbly navigate through the menus, so instead Alpha took over and quickly brought up the history menu.

Alpha scanned the history list and said.

“Yep, she did clear it, the score is turned to a plus.”

It was really surprising for Akira.

“…So it was really possible to clear it with that difficulty, huh?”

Alpha smiled and faked a pout.

“Oh my, did you really think that I would set it to a difficulty that you can’t clear?”

“W-well, I didn’t mean it like that.”

Akira flusteredly said that it was not true, but somewhere deep inside his heart, he really thought so, after all, it was really difficult.

But now that he knew it was possible to clear it in that difficulty, it made him wonder how to do it, and the person who could answer that question was right in front of him now.

Akira pushed the information terminal that he just received back to Sheryl.

“Sheryl, can you try to clear it again?”

“Sure.”

Sheryl found Akira’s sudden mood change to a more serious one rather weird, but then, she replied with a smile.

Sheryl sat on the sofa and played the game to clear it one more time, Akira sat next to her, he had his eyes fixed on the information terminal on Sheryl’s hand. Sheryl had once sat on Akira’s lap while facing in his direction, so Akira thought that she would not mind him getting that close and prioritized more on a position where he could comfortably look at the information terminal.

But Akira’s guess was wrong, Sheryl actually was a bit bothered by that. She continued playing the game while holding back her embarrassment and delight. For Sheryl, who thought that she overdid it the other day, Akira was too close this time. And it was not Sheryl who took the initiative, it was Akira, and that fact alone made her face glow with happiness.

[Close, way too close.]

In order so that he could get a good look on the monitor, Akira tried to line up his vision with Sheryl’s, so of course, Akira put his face close to Sheryl's. Since they did not cover anything from their neck up, they were close enough to feel each other's skin warmth.

If Sheryl said that Akira was making it more difficult to play the game, or even if Sheryl showed any sign that she was bothered, Akira would normally get some distance. She tried her best not to show it while continuing to play the game in silence as her cheeks went slightly reddish.

Fortunately, the game did not need Sheryl's continuous attention or any time-sensitive actions. So even if she was a bit in disarray, it did not affect her performance in the game, she just needed to be extra careful and take extra time before making any decisions. Following that, the Akira in the game started to slowly and carefully explore the old-world ruin.

The reason why the Akira in the game could make dangerous moves as if he could read the future was simply because Sheryl had cleared that game a few times, so she knew what would come afterwards. Of course, it was not something that she could overcome only by knowing that it was coming, but if she knew what she would face, it would help her overcome that danger.

Akira closely observed the movements of the Akira inside that game and asked Alpha a question.

"As I thought, even if you know that it's coming, it's still not easy."

Alpha mischievously smiled and replied.

"So in short, it means that even if you have the ability to read the future, it's still a difficult thing to return back alive from the dangerous old-world ruin."

Akira got dejected. He understood and completely agreed with what Alpha said, he also knew well that he should not feel prideful about his skill nor belittle whatever he faced. But still, it was discouraging to get reminded of that.

Now then, putting aside the real Akira, the Akira in the game did not find much trouble exploring the ruin. Eventually, he got some relics and left the ruin. The ammo and medicines that he used during the exploration, his wounds, the time that he took to explore the ruin, and the number of relics that he brought back, all of them were translated into his score. The black-coloured score points showed that he ended up with a positive score, and with that, Sheryl cleared the game.

Akira who saw that Sheryl cleared the game casually complimented her.

“That’s impressive!”

Sheryl blushed.

“Thank you very much.”

Sheryl glanced at Akira, it seemed that his mood had considerably turned for the better.

[It seems that Akira has been completely cheered up. Is he really that interested in this game? I guess I’ll put in some effort to investigate about this game later.]

Sheryl thought that she should look about that game in the network later. But sadly enough, that game was made by Alpha, so there was no information about that game that she could find in the network.

Sheryl was about to return back the information terminal to Akira, but Akira stopped her.

“I’m lending that to you, so you can use it for the time being.”

“Are you sure? It looks like an expensive information terminal though.”

“Yeah, you can use it as your usual information terminal. I’ve also changed its provider from the free provider, so you should be able to reach me even when the line is busy. Well, what can I say… You can just think of it as a reward for clearing that game… And also, if you have the time, you can play that game and aim for a higher score.”

“I understand, I’ll hold on to it dearly… If I can get a better score, can I get a better reward next time?”

“It depends on the score.”

Sheryl was joking when she said that and Akira replied while giving Sheryl a smile.

Akira then left Sheryl’s base. The sun was about to set, the slum city slowly but surely blanketed in darkness. But it was not like the slum city would be covered in total darkness once the sun was out. As people had created lights to help their lives, there would be some places that would radiate light. But even so, it did not change the fact that the slum city would get more dangerous once the night fell compared to when it was in the middle of the day. When the light that illuminated the world was gone, those who hid under the shadows would start to make their moves.

Akira was walking through the slum city at that moment when the world shifted from light to darkness.

He was walking while talking with Alpha.

“I wonder if I can explore the old-world ruin without your support if I can clear that game.”

The Akira in that game was the reflection of his real skill. So what he said was not exactly wrong.

Alpha smiled smugly and said.

“Of course, that is if you can easily clear that game. But in that case, you’ll have to make decisions in an instant, you have no way to know the position of your enemies beforehand, your life will be over if you make even a single mistake, basically, it would be a one-try only game with no chance of retry, you sure you want to give it a try?”

“No thanks.”

Akira's answer was swift and instantaneous. If that game's difficulty level was increased to be as close to reality as possible, that would be the kind of game that he would play. And of course, the real world would be even more difficult than that.

Alpha then continued with her smug smile.

"Just to let you know, I do all kinds of things to support you during your Hunter work. And that's including giving you instructions to make sure that you won't get killed, refining your movements by controlling your augmented suit, and many other things too."

Alpha was still smiling mischievously at Akira and he returned with a wry smile.

"Thank you for all your help."

"You're very welcome."

Alpha smiled satisfied after hearing the words that she was waiting for.

Akira suddenly grabbed the hand of the man next to him, and that man had Akira's wallet in his hand.

Akira's face twitched out of anger as he mumbled.

"…Again, huh?"

Akira took back his wallet and kicked that man, he made sure to hold back so as not to kill that man.

That man was also aiming for Akira after he got the information from the information broker. But the information that man gave to Akira was different compared to the last one.

This time the rumour said that Akira was a kind Hunter who let go of the girl who stole his wallet since she was just a little girl. So even if that man got caught, Akira would just forgive him if he apologized. That man trusted that information and went for Akira.

The reason why Akira backed off when that young girl stole his wallet was just because he had no other choice when the Hunters backing that girl confronted him. He lightly threatened that man and told him to tell the information broker what he just said there.

Akira kicked that man 3 times before he let that man go, so that man dragged himself in pain and somehow managed to leave that place.

This time, Akira did not share his medicine. When he kicked that man, he had no plans to kill that man but he did not care if that man died. If that man was unlucky, he would die before he could convey Akira's message to the information broker.

The reason why Akira let him go was because he did not try to shoot Akira when Akira caught him. Had he aimed his gun at Akira, Akira would have killed that man.

He was livid, but he was still able to think calmly. Akira did not lose his cool like last time, the fact that he was able to prevent his wallet from getting stolen twice with his own skill helped him to calm down.

Akira suddenly asked Alpha a question.

"Alpha, do I look like an easy target to them?"

"No idea, but at least, you don't seem like a veteran Hunter."

"Well, I know that too, but still…"

Akira seemed to be slightly dejected. Alpha then made some remarks about another thing unrelated to his outlook.

"Rather than your outlook, I think the main reason is the fact that an information broker is selling info about what happened back there. You're just a boy, the pickpocket was just a girl, 100,000 Aurum is a rather big sum of money for those in the slums. You were able to catch her, but, leaving the reason aside, you couldn't get your money back. If you look from that point of view, it's understandable that people easily misunderstand your real skill.

Since you are seen as just a mere child, the information about you would be quite cheap. Especially if the ones spreading it believe that you are incapable of retaliating. So, those that are seeking a target would most likely end up buying information about you."

"…What a pain in the neck!"

Not only the people who bought it from the information brokers but the fact was that this info must have spread across slum city as rumour by now. A lot of people would be preying on Akira from here and on out. At least, until the rumour died down naturally or something happened that overwrote it.

Akira exasperatedly sighed.

Shizuka closed her shop at a prefixed time every day. The private security company that she was in contract with also recommended her to do so. Although her shop was located in the lower district where it was relatively safe, once the night fell, the area would still become dangerous. Both for the sake of her own safety, as well as to lessen the work needed to be done by the private security company responsible for the area, it was important to close the shop during the night.

When Shizuka was about to close the door, Akira suddenly appeared.

"Is the shop already closed for today?"

Shizuka noticed Akira and threw him a smile.

"Hm? Don't worry, come in."

"…Is it really okay?"

Akira looked a bit apologetic, Shizuka smiled teasingly at Akira and said to him.

"Of course, it's important to hold dearly the candidate with the potential to become regulars of my shop."

“Thank you very much!”

Akira said his thanks and entered the shop, Shizuka then closed the door after he went in.

There was no one else inside the shop, only Akira and Shizuka. Putting Akira aside, it was a situation where it could be said that Shizuka was a bit too careless, but she decided to trust her intuition and thought that it should be alright. It was not like she would allow just anyone to enter her shop after she closed it.

Shizuka returned to the counter and started talking to Akira.

“Are you here for ammo again? Or are you planning to buy rifles today? Is it okay if I get my hopes up?”

“I actually have something I want to ask… Shizuka-san?”

Akira noticed that Shizuka was staring at him.

Shizuka fixed her gaze at Akira, she looked straight into his eyes as if she was trying to see through him. Akira was not that bothered by it, but he still found that a bit weird. He could not understand why she was doing that, so he awkwardly tried to say something.

“U-Uhmm…”

“Akira, did something happen?”

Before Akira could say anything, Shizuka suddenly asked Akira a question while still staring at him. With that question, it felt like Shizuka was able to see through him. Akira seemed to feel a bit troubled as if his bad side just got discovered by Shizuka. He then proceeded to try to avoid that subject for some reason that he himself did not understand.

“Well, it’s not really something bad… It’s just that someone tried to steal my wallet, ah, but I was able to prevent it. But yes, it still leaves a bad aftertaste.”

“…I see.”

Shizuka approached Akira and gently hugged him. Akira’s head was pressed against Shizuka’s chest and was buried in her bosom.

“…Shizuka-san?”

“Just let me do this.”

Akira was troubled by it, but once Shizuka told him so, he stopped fighting back and just let her hug him.

Shizuka seemed to be thinking about what to say to Akira while still hugging him. Her expression was saying that she found some words to say to Akira, then decided they were not the right words, and tried to look for something else to say.

After she gathered all of her experience until now and combined it with her intuition, she then proceeded to convey those words to Akira who was still hugged tightly.

“I’m sorry if I get this wrong, you’ve grown to be pretty strong as a Hunter, you now can do things that you couldn’t before, so I’m sure that you have things you’re worried about related to that… and I’m sure that you have a lot in your mind too about that matter. I’m sure you don’t need to worry about it if you decide to stop caring about it, but before you do that, you should at least share it with someone… You can share your worry with me, it might lighten your burden if you do so, you know?

Shizuka then put her hand on Akira’s head and lightly patted him.

Akira did not say anything as he let Shizuka hug him. When she said those words to Akira gently, his arms moved slightly to hug her back, but he stopped his arms midway. Right after that, Shizuka released Akira from her hug.

Akira took a step back, lightly bowed with a smile, and thanked Shizuka.

“Thank you very much, I think that helped me.”

Shizuka smiled at Akira, she seemed relieved.

“I’m glad to hear that, If you have anything you want to talk about, you can always talk to me. After all, although I look like this, I have more living experience than you, so I think I can give you some advice, and even if I can’t give you any advice, I can at least listen to your complaints.”

In reality, Akira did feel much better. Now that he had regained his calmness, Akira smiled and thought of something that was not really that important. It was true that Shizuka was a beautiful young girl, but of course, there was no way she was in the same age group as him, so Akira thought that ‘although I look like this’ line was not necessary there.

Shizuka noticed that thanks to her sharp intuition and that made her smile even more.

“You just thought that there is no need for me to say ‘although I look like this’, right?”

Akira did not say anything back, he just replied with a smile, which was a bit awkward.

Shizuka could somehow sense that the dark emotion that was welling deep from inside Akira had mostly vanished. Shizuka felt relieved after confirming that. But she did not show that in her face when she said to Akira.

“So then, you want to ask me something, right? What is it?”

Akira hesitated and sounded rather unsure.

“Ah, yes, right, I actually want to ask some questions about equipment, so I just thought if I can get your opinions… It would be a great help if you can give me an estimation of what is the best equipment that I can get with my current budget… Like an augmented suit, or rifle, or information terminal. It would be great if you can give me some recommendations, ah, but this time, I’m not thinking of getting new vehicles.”

“Sure, I don’t mind, so then, how much is your budget this time.”

Shizuka smiled at Akira as she asked him that question, Akira hesitated before answering back.

“…Uhm, it’s about 4 hundred million Aurum.”

Shizuka continued smiling at Akira without saying anything. Akira, who saw that, started trying to make excuses with an awkward smile.

“No, it’s not like what you think it is. It’s true that I did pretty reckless things. But I wasn’t alone, I was with Elena-san and Sara-san when that happened, so it’s not like I did some dangerous stuff out of my own volition, things happened and I had no other choice. So, uhmm, back then in Mihazono ruin, something unexpected happened, something that even Elena-san couldn’t predict, so under Elena-san’s order, we all tried our best, so…”

Shizuka was still smiling without saying anything when Akira desperately explained what happened.

The reward from the request that they had accomplished in the Mihazono ruin with the other Hunters was 5 hundred million Aurum. They then got extra money from the insurance company too as well as an extra reward as the reconnaissance team that went to Seranthal building ahead of the main team.

All requests that had something to do with the City Management had a ton of rewards. Then to top it off, Elena and Carol worked together during their negotiation with the City Management and Drankam. The information about the interior of the Seranthal building was also highly valued, and their success in rescuing Reina’s group added a big plus to their evaluation as well as to the amount of rewards they received.

So in total, they received 3 billion Aurum, which meant 5 hundred million Aurum for each person. Of course, there were expenses for their ammunition and other expendables too, but the City Management side also reimbursed them for that expense. Not all of them thought that it was worth all the trouble that they faced back in the Mihazono ruin, but at least, for Akira, that reward was big enough.

Shizuka was still smiling at Akira, who was desperately making excuses, but she then suddenly sighed and said to Akira with a smile.

“Don’t worry. I heard from Elena and Sara too. So I more or less know what happened and I’m not angry at you.”

“I-I see.”

Akira sighed in relief. Even for him, it was not an easy thing to try to explain to someone, whom he had promised not to do anything reckless, as to why he broke his promise and did something reckless.

Shizuka looked slightly apologetic as she gently smiled at Akira.

“I’m sorry for doing something weird there. But if you’ve done something that you actually don’t want me to know, then at least keep in mind that it was something substantial that you did. It’s good to be proud of some extraordinary feat that you’ve done, you know. But that doesn’t mean that it would be okay for you to do that again, okay? There’s a small line that divides between getting used to dangers and belittling dangers, alright?”

Akira gave a firm nod.

“I understand.”

Looking at that, Shizuka smiled satisfied. She then changed the mood and asked Akira a question.

“Putting that aside, I’m really happy that you came here to ask for my opinion, but are you sure you’re okay with spending that much money?”

Akira found that question a bit weird.

“Uhhh, is there something bad about spending that much money? I got quite a lot of money from that request in Mihazono ruin, so I thought that I should spend that much money for my equipment while I still have the chance…”

“That line of thinking is really good. It’s true that investing in your equipment is really important. But you can use it for something else too, like maybe to get better living quality for example. Like a better house or better clothing, or maybe use it for your own hobby. Since you got quite a lot of money this time, I think it’s a good idea to take a rest for a while, you know. There’s no need for you to rush yourself to get stronger, right?”

Akira thought for a bit.

“Getting better living quality, huh… To be honest, at the moment, I have no wish to spend my money on something like that though. Since I’ve been sleeping in the back alley of the slum city until recently, compared to that, my current daily life is like heaven though. So I have no complaints about my current living condition. I guess I won’t spend any of my money on that kind of thing until I find something lacking in my daily life.”

When Akira said that, Shizuka had a sad expression although only for a split second, she immediately hid that expression and replaced it with her usual smile.

“In that case, then there’s no problem. But still, 4 hundred million for equipment, huh. It seems that you’ve grown so much. It’s 4 hundred million Aurum, you know? Even I am surprised when you say that! Does it not make you feel anything?”

Akira smiled bitterly and replied.

“To be honest, that number is so big that it still doesn’t feel real to me yet. So I thought before it corrupts me or before I spend it on unnecessary things, I should spend it on my equipment first.”

“That’s a good idea. As a shop owner, I’m really happy with your plan.”

They then spent some time talking about what to buy. It was 4 hundred million Aurum, after all, Shizuka needed to make sure what kind of equipment Akira wanted to get before deciding on what to buy. The reason why Akira did not use his last 1 hundred million Aurum was because he was planning to use it to get a check-up in the hospital as well as for emergency saving. He did a lot of dangerous things this time, so it was just to be safe in case his medical bill cost him 60,000,000 again.

After Akira finished his consultation with Shizuka, she asked him a question.

“As I thought, it’s important to carefully think about it when you’re about to spend 4 hundred million Aurum. Not to mention that it’ll take some time before the ordered articles arrive. So, are you okay with that?”

“Of course. I’m also planning to stay inside the city until I get my new equipment.”

“Alright then. I’ll give my best to help you since you’re a prime candidate as a regular.”

Akira pouted for a bit, it was rather rare for him to make that face.

“Candidate, huh… I’m pretty sure I’ve contributed quite a lot to this shop’s sale though, is it still not enough?”

Shizuka smiled and replied with a serious expression.

“That’s not the problem.”

“Eh?”

“Being a regular means that you’ll come to this shop regularly. So you don’t count when you get injured or killed and can’t come regularly to this shop.”

Akira’s expression changed. Shizuka was basically telling him to always come back alive, to make sure not to get injured too much that he could not continue his work as a Hunter, and to put extra effort in doing so. Akira finally understood that. It was true that he always did dangerous stuff when he went out to the wasteland, if he could not make sure to come back alive anytime he went out, then there was no way he could be a regular to Shizuka's shop.

Shizuka smiled at Akira and said to him.

"So please make sure to properly be a regular to my shop, okay?"

Akira made his resolve and firmly replied.

"…Yes."

Shizuka smiled satisfied seeing Akira had made his resolve.

After Shizuka closed the shop and finished tidying up, she sat on the counter and sighed. Akira had already gone back home and there were no customers left inside the shop. The shop was dead silent, so her sighing echoed and could be heard clearly.

Shizuka was deep in thought about Akira.

"…To be honest, it's a not good thing to get too invested on a particular customer though."

Shizuka already knew that well, but she still mumbled there as if to confirm it. She then remembered about Akira and made a troubled look.

"So he caught someone who tried to steal his wallet huh… I wonder what he did to the person that he caught."

Rifles were freely traded in the lower district. The only difference between robbers and pickpocket was whether they pointed their guns at you when they took your belongings. The people that Akira caught were likely to be armed, so it would not be strange at all if Akira killed them.

Akira was no longer on the receiving end, if he wanted to, he could easily join the other side.

The question was once he got enough power to get back on those people who robbed him, could he fight back the temptation of getting his revenge on those people.

It was a difficult question. After all, the fastest way to make sure that he was no longer on the receiving end and to attain the sense of safety and superiority that came with it was to join the other side. Simply put, it was to be one of those people that he hated so much.

For those people who decided to join the other side, their end was mostly the same. They get used to abusing their power and it corrupts them. They then have to fight those who have the same level of power and try to replace their positions. They would need to fight those who were in front as well as those from behind, trying to stab them in the back. The one who survived after all the chaos would stand on the peak, on top of those people who looked at them in awe and fear, on top of the countless corpses.

When Akira said to Shizuka he planned to splurge his money for equipment, Shizuka thought that he was aiming for more power. But she was really glad that it was nothing but unnecessary worry.

Shizuka actually wanted Akira to have other options and for him not to unnecessarily make enemies. After all, in this world where there were already plenty of enemies, it was the secret to long survival.

But the one to decide was Akira, not her. She can hope but she can not force Akira. After all, she has no right to do so.

But even so, it should be fine for her to have hope. As Shizuka thought so, she then mumbled.

“…If it’s possible, I wish Akira can properly be a regular at my shop. As the owner of a shop and a Hunter who is properly earning money, I really wish we can get along for a long time… Even if he’s not earning that much.”

Shizuka once again noticed that she was too invested in Akira as she sighed.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 143, One more time

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was taking a dip in the bath inside his house while thinking about what happened that day, his consciousness was hazy thanks to the bath.

“…For some reason, I feel so tired today though I didn’t get into any fights.”

Akira was exhausted. It must have been because a lot of things happened that day, both good and bad. He let the warm water help him recover his physical fatigue.

Alpha was also in the same bath, just like usual. She looked at Akira as if she was thinking about something.

Akira noticed Alpha’s gaze.

“What?”

“As I thought, it has minimal effect unless you can touch it, huh?”

“What?”

“I’m talking about when Shizuka hugged you.”

Akira, who was leaning on the bathtub, slowly sunk deeper into the water. When his mouth and nose finally went underwater, he breathed in some water, which startled him as he immediately pushed his body back up and coughed.

Akira panicked for a bit since he was about to drown there.

“…W-what are you even talking about!?”

“Like I said, I’m talking about when Shizuka hugged you. To be honest, I think outlook wise, I’m better than Shizuka. But even so, it seems that it doesn’t affect you that much, so I guess it’s because you can’t touch me.”

Alpha did not seem to be teasing him. She was simply asking an honest and straightforward question to Akira, and that made Akira waver a bit.

“W-was I really fawning that much?”

“Well, different people will have a different opinion about it, I’ll leave it at that.”

Akira flustered for a bit since Alpha only gave a vague answer. Looking at that flustered Akira, Alpha did not show any sign of teasing as she started scolding him.

“Well, I guess I’ll give you a little warning. She thought of you as a small boy, which you are, but there’s a limit on how far this can go, right?”

“I-I know.”

Akira decided that he had to make sure not to leave any bad impression on Shizuka.

Alpha did not lie there. It was true that each person would have a different opinion on that matter. And even if Shizuka saw Akira’s expression at that time, it was unlikely for her to think that Akira was fawning over her, she would only think that Akira only felt relieved and nothing more.

But the actual reason why Alpha warned Akira was to check how he would react to that.

She was checking how far people could manipulate Akira's course of action, which could affect her own objective. In turn, she might need to come up with a special plan in such a scenario. At least for now, Alpha was able to confirm from Akira's reaction when he was hugged that she needed to be careful about that.

__*__*__*__

Alna was walking through the Kugamayama lower district in the middle of the day, she looked terrified. She kept looking around her surroundings as if someone was hunting her.

But in reality, no one was actually hunting her. But even so, Alna kept walking while keeping check of what was behind her, what laid on the next corner, what was hiding in the dark alley around her.

A sound suddenly came from behind her. Alna flinched, she looked back while trembling. A signboard just fell over behind her. It was not because someone was hiding behind it, it was simply because of the wind. Once she realized that, she sighed in relief and her expression softened.

But her expression immediately tensed up again. She still looked terrified as she mumbled.

"…Why is this happening to me?"

Alna kept on running without knowing if anyone was chasing her and without knowing where she could run to.

Last night, Nasha came to Alna's hideout, that was where it started.

Alna, who was already sleeping, immediately woke up when she heard someone knocking on her door. It was already deep into the night, it was not the time where people would usually visit others. So, she carefully checked outside the door and she saw Nasha standing there with a grim face.

Alna let Nasha come into her hideout. Nasha scanned her surroundings first before she stepped in, she looked around the room with a grim expression, she felt slightly relieved after she confirmed that there was no one else there, but the grim expression on her face did not change.

It was obvious that there was something big going on, Alna tried to calm Nasha down as she asked Nasha what was wrong.

“Nasha, what happened?”

“Alna, are you alone?”

“…Y-yes.”

“Is there anyone else other than me and you who knows about this hideout?”

“I don’t think so. I didn’t tell anyone about this place except you.”

Nasha looked at Alna with a serious expression and said to her.

“Calm down and listen closely. Once we’re done here, get away from this place as soon as possible. This time, hide somewhere where even I don’t know about, okay?”

“W-whoah there, what’s going on?”

Alna started to feel scared. Nasha placed both of her hands on Alna’s shoulders, her voice was trembling as she was about to tell a painful truth to her best friend.

“Akira is going to kill you, he told the gang to look for you.”

Alna froze.

Alna had heard from Nasha that Akira was the Hunter supporting Sheryl's gang. But it did not seem like Akira was looking for her, at least until now.

Akira would eventually forget about her with time. So after talking with Nasha, Alna was planning to join Sheryl's gang later once it grew bigger and got more members. And just to be safe, she was planning to fake her name too, that way, she might be able to sneak in into the gang without getting noticed by Akira.

Akira was not someone who would leech off from the gang, while the boss of the gang, Sheryl, even put some effort to teach the members of the gang how to write and read. Compared to the other gangs in the slum city, Sheryl's gang was a significantly better place for children from the slums. A lot of small children wished to join that gang, and if it grew so big to the point that it had a branch, it would be even safer for Alna to sneak in. Alna had her hopes up when she heard that plan from Nasha.

But now, here, her hope was crushed.

Alna asked Nasha while trembling.

"W-what? Why? Since when? Everything was calm until now, right?"

"I have no idea, they suddenly told us to keep our eyes for you. They gave us a picture of you and told us to report back if we spot the person in that picture. And it seems that they distributed that photo to everyone in the gang."

Nasha showed the picture that she received from the gang to Alna. Alna's face turned pale as if she just saw something that she could not believe, the person in that picture was really her.

"H-he even has my photo… But how? How did he get that? When did he take this photo?"

In reality, no one took a picture of her. That photo was produced straight from Akira's memory when he saw Alna. Its quality was not bad, as a matter of fact, the person in that picture could easily be identified as Alna.

Nasha tried to calm Alna down since it seemed that Alna was about to scream.

“Alna, calm down, calm down, alright? Just calm down!”

Alna looked at Nasha with teary eyes, she was about to break.

Nasha then slowly and calmly said to Alna in order to calm her further.

“Calm down, please, just calm down. There’s something important that I need to tell you and I want you to listen to me closely. I received that picture when Alicia, an officer in the gang, told me to keep my eyes if I spot the person in that picture. But then, she also said that there’s no need to get out of my way just to look for you. As in matter of fact, she told me not to do that, she said that it’s okay to just report where and when I spotted you later.”

“W-what do you mean? They’re looking for me, right?”

“I don’t know the details either, but from what I heard, you have a Hunter friend who is stronger than Akira. That’s why there’s no need to forcefully bring you in since it’s dangerous. Alna, do you have any idea who that Hunter is?”

Alna shook her head.

“I see, then it must be a misunderstanding. They might be talking about that Hunter who helped you back then. Who was it again… Katsuya, was it again?”

“…That’s right, Katsuya-san.”

When Alna said Katsuya’s name, it sounded as if she placed her hopes on him.

Nasha then continued.

“I think you have two choices here. First of all, you can try to run away as far as possible from here. Although the lower district is pretty big, we don’t know how far Akira would go to look for you. But I'm sure that he won't go as far as looking for you in another city, so you just need to run away at least that far."

It would be suicide to walk all the way to another city. If she really chose that option, Alna would need to make an arrangement for transportation. But doing that was not cheap, after all, the wasteland was filled with dangerous monsters. So not only for the transportation, she would need money to arrange for the escorts too.

"Your other choice would be to seek help from that Katsuya. If he's a kind person and if he's someone who won't let the person who he saved once get killed, even if it was only out of a whim, he might be willing to help you again. Akira himself said that Katsuya is stronger than him. So if that Katsuya told Akira not to mess with you, he might stop looking for you."

Nasha has never met Katsuya before, so she did not know what kind of person this Katsuya was. But she knew that Katsuya was kind enough to help out a total stranger, so she thought that if Alna desperately begged, he might decide to help her again.

"It might be even better to try both the ways out. Try and ask for that Katsuya's help, and if it doesn't seem like he'll help you, then make a plan to escape to another city."

Nasha gave Alna some hope. Thanks to that, Alna was able to calm down for a bit. But it did not fix her situation at all.

It was just that Alna had two possible ways out and both of them were unlikely to work. She might not have any means to run to another city, and Katsuya might refuse to help her again. Both choices did not give a guarantee that she would be saved.

Nasha pulled out a pistol and some money, she then handed them both to Alna.

"Use this, it might be not much, but it's better than nothing."

Alna was so surprised and flusteredly said.

“T-this pistol, isn’t it the gang’s property?! If you get caught…!?”

Nasha smiled at Alna as not to make her worry.

“Don’t worry, just use it. I’ll be fine, I can just tell them some lie.”

“B-but!?”

“It’ll be fine.”

Nasha hugged Alna and stopped her words midway, she then looked lonely at Alna and said.

“…I’m sorry. Although I call myself your best friend, this is all I can do for you. I did think of telling Sheryl about it and ask for her help, but it seems that won’t work too. She is scared of getting on Akira’s bad side, so I don’t think she’ll help out someone who Akira is planning to kill. As in matter of fact, I’m sure that if she knows I’m your close friend, she would do anything to make me leak your location.”

“T-then, you should come with me too.”

Nasha was still hugging Alna when she shook her head.

“No, I’m sure it won’t be much trouble if the gang lose one person worth of money and Katsuya might help you if you’re alone. So both the choices you have might not work if I’m with you, that’s why I can’t come with you.”

“…Nasha.”

“Moreover, things might change later and you might not need to run away, like Akira might get killed somewhere soon. He’s a Hunter after all, so it won’t be strange if he’s suddenly dead. Although, when that happens, it might be the end of the gang too. Whichever the case, if something like that were to happen, only people in the gang would know about it, so I’ll need to stay in the gang. And if that happens, I’ll try to let you know, but don’t get your hope too high.”

Nasha lightly smiled and hugged Alna tightly.

“This might be our last goodbye, I’m sorry but I have nothing else to say other than I hope you’ll be well.”

After she said that, Nasha released Alna from her hug, she then said to Alna with a serious face.

“Now then, I’ll head back now. After this, leave this place and hide somewhere that even I don’t know. Make sure to act carefully, always assume that they have interrogated me and I’ve told them everything that I know about you. I’ll do my best to resist, but I can’t promise you that I won’t leak anything.”

Nasha confirmed that Alna nodded with her teary eyes, she smiled at Alna to encourage her for one last time before she left.

After that, Alna packed her stuff with teary eyes and left her hideout just like what Nasha told her to. She had no plans where to go, she had no hideout that she never told Nasha about.

Alna walked in the middle of the night and picked a random back alley to catch some sleep.

When she woke up, the sun was already high up. She then remembered everything that happened last night, stood up and continued walking in fear.

“…Why is this happening?”

There was no one there who would answer her mumble.

Alna was wandering aimlessly in the lower district of Kugamayama city. Although she was not aiming for any place in particular, she unconsciously headed to a certain place. It was the place where she met Katsuya, she unconsciously headed there while hoping for a miracle to happen so that she could meet Katsuya one more time. As she walked through the alleyway, her expression was a mix of terror and resignation.

She then eventually got out of the alley and stepped into the main road, that was when she spotted Katsuya.

Alna was dumbfounded as if she could not believe what she saw. Katsuya noticed Alna, smiled at her and said.

“Ah, well, we meet again.”

Alna saw his smile and realized that it was not a dream. Right at the next moment, Alna started to cry, she was holding herself from crying from yesterday, and now the dam broke open.

Katsuya was flustered when Alna suddenly started crying, she clung to Katsuya while still crying.

“P-please help me…”

The miracle from the last time had happened once more. Her wish had come true. This meant that she had decided to abandon her other choice.

***

There was an abandoned warehouse near the slum city. Armed people gathered inside that abandoned warehouse.

All of them looked to be already experienced in handling their weapons and they looked like thugs. Looking at their equipment, they seemed to be your common Hunters. But the air around them was more like that of robbers. They were exuding an ominous aura saying that they had lost their sense of logic to the point that they were willing to not only hunt the monsters in the old-world ruin but also normal humans.

They were talking about their next plan inside that nameless warehouse.

“So what’s the plan here?”

“This will be it, everyone. We’ll do it tomorrow, I have no one else that I can ask to come nor do I have the plan to take more people in. After all, the more people we bring, the less our individual share would be.”

“I’ve secured the route to sell the relics that we’ll rob. I also have contact with a fencer too. After all, we can get relics with unknown origin as many as we can, but it would be bad if they started asking where we got them, right?”

A man suddenly complained about their prey this time.

“Are you sure it’s worth robbing? If we only get cheap relics, it won’t even be enough to pay for the drinks, you know?”

“Some information that I gathered say that some of the relics there could be resold for even 100 times its original price. We should be able to find good relics there. 10,000 Aurum relics might fetch us 1,000,000 Aurum, and 1,000,000 Aurum relics might fetch us 10,000,000 Aurum. That place is worth robbing.”

Another man who was still in doubt voiced his doubt.

“If you go even that far, it actually makes it sound a little bit fishy though. How’s the enemy?”

“They have about 10 armed children, and one of them is a Hunter.”

“Small children, huh… I heard that there have been many strong young Hunters lately, does it have anything to do with those children?”

“Ahh, it’s about that guy from Drankam, right? I heard that Katsuya guy defeated a bounty monster only with young Hunters, I’ve also heard that they did pretty good during that incident in Mihazono ruin.”

The guy who was doubting the plan said with a hoarse voice.

“Whoah there, it’s a bad idea trying to fight someone who can defeat the bounty monster, you know?”

“Drankam is trying to be a proper Hunter gang, they even have some connections with the Hunter Office. I’m sure they won’t be protecting a back alley shop in the middle of the slum city. I’m sure the shop that we’re aiming for has nothing to do with that gang.”

Another man intervened.

“I heard that the young Hunter protecting that gang is not that strong. I heard that when a thief stole his wallet, he could not fight back and just ran away when the Hunter protecting that thief intimidated him.”

“So basically he’s not that great of a Hunter, huh? If that’s really the case, then that shop might be not worth that much, no? Are you sure we can get any money from robbing that place?”

“If you’re worried about money, I have insurance. I heard that the shop would likely get popular in the near future. Someone made a request to crush them sooner than later and we can take some extra profits on the side too.”

Another man then awkwardly said.

“…I see, I’ve never heard about that info before, but… If it will really bring us money, I don’t have any complaints.”

The guy who led the group put some pressure on his words as he said.

“Then just shut up!”

“…Humpph!”

They were a group of people who were tied together because of money. As long as whatever they were going to do was going to bring them more money, they would not break up their alliance. It was not like they were acting completely separately from each other, all of them had enough skill to work together with each other as a team. With their level of skills, they should be able to safely hunt for old-world relics to some extent.

But even so, they chose to hunt for humans instead since they thought that it was an easier way to earn money. As long as they kept getting results confirming that their assumption was correct, they would keep doing the same thing. At least, until the day they were proved to be wrong.

***

That day, Akira spent his day in Sheryl's base again.

Sheryl did not open the shop every day. It was not because Akira could not come to her base every day, it was more because there were other ways of gathering money that they needed to develop. Not to mention, Akira also asked them to teach the gang members how to read and write, and sometimes, they had to help Katsuragi too.

Sheryl and her gang opened their stalls and their shop irregularly about 3 days a week. Since Akira came to the base early that day, they decided to open their shop that day.

Akira was waiting inside Sheryl's private room together with Sheryl. When someone came in telling that she had a customer, Sheryl would change into her dress and go to the shop together with Akira.

Every time she had a customer, Sheryl would change to her dress and welcome the customer, and then she would change back to her casual attire when she returned.

One of Sheryl's men came and said that she had a customer. So Sheryl started changing to her dress.

While in the middle of changing her clothes, Sheryl suddenly heard Akira throw a question at her.

"Isn't it better if you just keep wearing your dress rather than changing to it every time someone comes?"

Sheryl smiled and said.

"It's a matter of feeling. It's better this way, knowing that I have a special dress for it helps me focus."

"Is that so?"

"Don't you feel a bit relaxed too when you return home and take off your augmented suit? It's something like that but only reversed."

“…Well, you have a point there.”

Akira sounded as if he was trying to avoid that subject.

Alpha smiled at Akira teasingly.

“To be honest, you often think that it’s too much of a trouble to take it off so you often don’t take off your augmented suit even when you’re home though.”

“I know, I know, I’ll be more careful.”

“It’s important to have this kind of switch, you know. It might be a good idea if you learn that from Sheryl.”

“Yeah, yeah.”

Alpha looked at Akira, who reacted just like a small kid getting annoyed when he got scolded, and smiled.

Akira could feel that gentle smile from Alpha and felt a bit embarrassed. But he made sure to stiffen his expression so that would not leak out.

In the middle of changing her clothes, Sheryl could be seen using the undies that she received from Akira. Those were also old-world relics. She received those when Akira thought that they would not fetch him much, although they could get him quite a lot of money in reality.

Sheryl had gotten used to having Akira seeing her in her underwear, and it took even less time for Akira to get used to seeing Sheryl in that situation.

Sheryl put on her dress and thought.

[…I wonder if I should at least act more bashful to make Akira interested in me. But considering everything that happened until now, I don’t think that would have much effect though, not to mention that it seems I’m already gotten used to it too. I’m pretty sure Akira would see right through me even if I act bashful, good grief…]

Sheryl glanced at Akira. Although someone as beautiful as Sheryl was changing cloth next to him, Akira did not show any interest at all and it was highly unlikely that he was acting indifferent.

[…So basically, there's no need to fake anything, right? But I wonder what kind of situation he would show his embarrassed side. Now that I think about it, even back then when I straddled him, even though I think he's happy with that, I don't think he's embarrassed at all… Was it because I was the one who took the initiative? If Akira was the one who took the initiative, I wonder if he would react differently. That's right, for example, when I change my dress, what if Akira is the one undressing me one by one, I'm sure he'll have a different reaction…]

Sheryl imagined all kinds of scenes in her mind.

She imagined Akira undressing her layer by layer while slightly blushing, Akira's hand was trembling as he gently took off her dress. As her dress fell to the ground one by one, she blushed and sent an embarrassed gaze to Akira who was undressing her while trying to hold back her smile.

Sheryl unconsciously added more spice to her imagination. As her movements in the real world slowed down, her imagination grew wilder and wilder.

As Sheryl started to drown in her imagination, Akira suddenly called her.

"Sheryl!"

"Yes!?"

Sheryl was so flustered when Akira's voice pulled her back to reality. Akira found it a bit weird.

"…You're taking your time changing to your dress there, isn't it better if you hurry up for a bit. It would be bad if the customer arrives in the shop before you, right?"

"Y-You're right, I'm sorry, I'll hurry up."

Sheryl started to hurriedly change to her dress while still being flustered. Akira looked at her and tilted his head in confusion. This time, Sheryl was blushing for real, she was not acting.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 144, Uninvited Visitors

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Sheryl stood in the middle of the main room where she was selling relics with a puzzled face. Akira had already positioned himself by hiding behind the white sheet hanging from the ceiling. They were ready for the customer and it did not take long for those customers to arrive there.

The problem was the report that Tiol, who brought the customers there, gave. Sheryl frowned and said to Tiol.

“8 people? Wasn’t it supposed to be only 4?”

Tiol flinched from Sheryl’s gaze alone, but he managed to give her an explanation.

“There were only 4 people when they visited the stand. But when I was guiding them here, they met up with another 4 people, they said that those people were their friends. They then seemed to get rather excited and the other 4 asked to come along too, it was hard to refuse them and they seem to carry quite a lot of money, so I ended up bringing them all the way to the back alley… If you want to send them home, please ask Akira to do so. All of them are armed so I’m sure they won’t listen to me.”

Sheryl made a grim face while thinking of her available choices. Tiol was bedazzled by Sheryl, the dress that Sheryl was wearing to welcome the customer was beautiful enough to bedazzle him.

There was not that many occasion where Sheryl put on that dress. So being able to see her in that form was one of the special perks that Tiol received from his duty.

But Tiol killed his desire to strike a conversation with Sheryl. The reason she was able to have that wonderful high-class dress as well as the reason she maintained her beautiful hair and skin was none other than his love rival, Akira.

[…To be honest, even if I can become Sheryl's lover, I don't think I can give her that level of luxury… After all, she got that dress from Akira, and even if she breaks up with him, I'm pretty sure the whole gang will be disbanded. Since she's this beautiful, I'm sure there are a lot of people out there aiming for her too. I bet one day, a leader from a big gang would get his eyes on her and force her to be his lover or something. Once that happens, I bet I won't get that many chances to meet her anymore.]

At the moment, Tiol had zero chance to win Sheryl's heart. But that might not be the case in the future. If the gang grew bigger and bigger to the point that it was big enough to maintain itself without any support, then, the power relationship between Akira and Sheryl might get reversed.

Then, if something happened at that point, for example, let's say Akira fell in love with another girl which caused his relationship with Sheryl to sour, they might break up and Tiol thought Sheryl might start getting interested in another man.

[…For now, I have no other choice but to help the gang to grow big enough so that we won't need Akira's help anymore. And if Akira's relationship with Sheryl gets worse after that, then I should be able to get my chance. And if I help to develop the gang, Sheryl might start to like me… Although, I'm sure I'm not the only one who thinks so.]

Tiol's guess was correct, there were other people in the gang who thought like him. Most of them had no plans to get on Akira's bad side just to get Sheryl, but at the same time, most of them also hoped that they would eventually get some chance.

As Tiol thought about a lot of things in his mind, Sheryl finally reached her conclusion.

"8 people is too many. Just let 4 of them in. Let the first 4 come in then once they're done, let the last 4, who came along with them, come in after that. If they refuse to do so, then tell them that none of them is allowed to get in. If they still insist on coming in after that, Akira and I will tell them to go back ourselves."

Even with her ability to serve multiple customers, 8 people were still too many for her and for Akira to keep his eyes on, and that's doubly true when they were armed Hunters.

Lastly, Sheryl smiled worriedly at Tiol and said to him.

"Be careful, there's no need to get reckless."

"O-okay, I understand."

Tiol blushed and smiled, he felt relieved. Sheryl's mood was considerably worsened when he questioned her relationship with Akira the other day, but judging from that exchange just now, it seemed that it's alright now. Tiol seemed a bit happy as he left that room.

Sheryl smiled coldly and whispered.

"…He's so easy."

Sheryl thought if Akira caught her with that expression, there was no doubt that Akira would come to hate her. So she quickly returned her usual warm smile to her face.

Not too long after that, 4 people entered the room. Sheryl smiled in relief, it seemed that it did not turn into a fight. She then started serving the customers with her usual friendly smile. It was possible to extract someone else's personality and preference from their attire, equipment, gaze, and expression. Then, that information could be used to adapt on how to approach them.

Those 4 people were scanning the relics lining inside that room, all of them were so well armed that they could go out to the wasteland anytime. They were also carrying bags most of which were empty.

Sheryl felt something was wrong with those guys, but she decided to shelve that for now.

Those men were browsing the relics displayed in that room, but somehow, they did not seem that interested. One of them kept checking the exits and doors in that room, and another one seemed to be keeping his eyes on the sheets hanging from the ceiling.

Then Sheryl could feel from their expression a slight nervousness, it was like a calm before the storm. Something was going to happen, something really really bad. But she tried her best not to let that out in her face.

One of them walked to Sheryl with a big smile.

Sheryl had her usual graceful smile as she welcomed them.

"Welcome to our shop."

The smile of the man who was walking toward Sheryl grew bigger, it was not because she was smiling at him, it was because his plan was going really well.

Alpha suddenly gave Akira an instruction.

"Akira, get ready for a fight."

Although Akira was a bit surprised by that sudden order, he quickly swapped to battle state. At the same time, the man who was walking toward Sheryl slightly lowered his guard, Sheryl trusted her calculation and immediately started running toward Akira’s direction as fast as she could and dashed through the white sheets hanging from the ceiling.

That man was shocked and could not react for a while, but he immediately got a grip of himself, aimed his rifle with a grim face, and spread bullets haphazardly towards Sheryl’s direction without showing any hesitation.

Bullets pierced right through the first sheet, but lost most of its momentum and could not penetrate the second sheet. The accumulated momentum tore the sheet from the ceiling, it danced gracefully, pulled down by the gravity, bullets that had lost their momentum fell down and rolled over on the ground.

That man twitched and shouted.

“Anti-bullet sheet!? They’re not just simple interior sheets!?”

Originally, they were planning to take Sheryl hostage and take their time robbing the relics. But he was caught off guard and Sheryl was able to run away from him, which meant that Sheryl was able to quickly guess why they were here. So he immediately changed their plan from capturing Sheryl to killing her.

“Get the relics!! Tell the guys outside to meet up with us!!”

That guy shouted and gave an order to his men.

Akira caught Sheryl who dashed right to his direction with his right hand and hugged her close, he raised the CWH anti-material rifle on his left hand and pulled the trigger. There was no need to hit his target, his main aim was only to let them know that he was there. After that, he immediately brought Sheryl further into a door that was leading outside. It was an emergency exit prepared beforehand and the sheets were there to hide that emergency exit.

The man heard the gunshot coming from behind the sheet and turned in that direction in response. The anti-bullet sheet deflected the bullet from its original track and landed away from the man.

“As I thought, they have escorts hiding behind the sheets!!”

That man kicked a display covered by the anti-bullet sheet down and hid behind it to make sure that he would not get hit by the enemy’s bullets.

“The escort is behind the sheets!! Make sure to equip your defensive suits!!”

While he said that, that man pulled out a full-face helmet from his bag and put it on. They did not put that helmet at first so that Sheryl and his men lowered their guard, but now their situation had changed and they had to put them on.

Akira ran quickly while still carrying Sheryl, he was able to do that thanks to the augmented strength from his augmented suit. He made sure to run as fast as possible while not injuring Sheryl. Once he arrived in front of the door, he quickly opened it, pushed Sheryl out, and immediately shut the door.

Sheryl was dumbfounded when the door in front of her was closed with such force, she thought that Akira would run away together with her. Although she stood frozen for a few seconds, she immediately returned back to herself and started to move. The rest of the gang still did not know what just happened.

A gunshot echoed through the base, most of the gang members stopped what they were doing the moment they heard that gunshot. Sheryl shouted as hard as she could.

“It’s a shoot-out!!!”

With Akira protecting the gang, they thought that no one would dare to attack the base, but that day, their assumption was proven wrong.

At first, Akira evacuated Sheryl to a safe place, out from that room and away from the 4 men shooting from inside the room. With this, Sheryl’s safety was pretty much guaranteed, so he quickly moved to his next order of business, shooting back at those 4 men.

Akira lightly frowned.

“But still, I always thought that I’ll eventually open up a shop in the slum city big enough to warrant some robbers, but this is way faster than I thought.”

Alpha smiled and replied.

“You’re just unlucky.”

“I can’t agree more, as I thought, I already ran out of luck, huh?”

“But since they attacked when you’re here, I guess it means that Sheryl is really lucky. Thanks to that, she didn’t get killed this time.”

Akira smiled wryly.

“That might be true, Sheryl has good luck after all.”

“Yup, then let’s try to take advantage of that luck and clean up this mess as soon as possible.”

“You’re right, let’s do that.”

Akira had no idea if it was him being unlucky, or it was Sheryl being lucky, or maybe it was even both. In order to make sure that the people who attacked the base that day were unlucky, to push his bad luck to those people, Akira fired himself up to shoot back.

Alpha then asked Akira what he wanted to do with those people.

“So then, Akira, what’s your plan with them? The fastest solution would be to kill them. That way, there’s no need for you to hold back.”

Alpha was still smiling when she said such a heartless sentence. She did not show any hesitation in killing them, she had her usual smile while asking for Akira’s confirmation to end the life of those people.

Akira replied back with a calm expression.

“I don’t mind killing all of them, but if it’s possible, I want to paralyze them so I can ask them why they attacked us.”

“You do know that you’re being impossible, right?”

“That’s why I’m only saying that if it’s possible. I don’t want to die anyway, the longer we dilly-dally, the more dangerous this might become. We just need to try but there’s no need to be reckless. If it’s impossible to hold back and not to kill them even with your support, then I’ll just follow your instruction to kill them.”

Akira somehow sounded as if he was doubting the value of Alpha’s support, but Alpha smiled smugly and replied.

“Don’t be stupid. It’ll be alright as long as you have my support. It’s just that if you won’t take the easiest way, then you’ll have to put more effort yourself. So I just want to confirm that. If you’re okay with that, then I don’t mind either.”

“Alright then, let’s go.”

Akira smiled and ran back into the room. The conversation between Akira and Alpha happened through telepathy. Even if it was something they would need a few minutes to talk about, if it was through telepathy, they could finish that in split seconds. Moreover, when Akira switched to his battle state, he unconsciously activated his time compression. Thanks to that, Akira and Alpha could communicate almost instantly. A feat impossible if done verbally.

This was also a form of training for Akira to quickly process information inside his brain. After all, being in the middle of a fight needed him to process a huge amount of information. In the middle of that dangerous situation where stopping to think even for one second meant certain death, Akira needed to continuously identify all the dangers around him. It included filtering what information was important and what was not, he had to process all the information effectively before the enemy could get him first.

If Akira could not process all of the information fast enough, he would be testing his luck, whether he would get unlucky and die, or he would get lucky and live. At the moment, Alpha was compensating for his bad luck, but that was not enough to guarantee his safety.

But even so, the luck that brought that meeting between Akira and Alpha was the very thing that allowed him to survive until now.

Akira swapped his CWH anti-material rifle with his AAH assault rifle and quickly headed back to meet the enemies. The 4 men inside that room were shooting in random directions. The sheets were not invincible, they eventually ripped and danced in the air as they fell down, thus blocking their field of visions even more.

They hid behind the displays while shooting around randomly. Akira suddenly appeared in their field of vision, he was hiding behind an anti-bullet sheet and had come as close as possible to those 4 men. He jumped out from that cover to get even closer.

One of the 4 men was surprised by that sudden move, but he still somehow managed to shoot at Akira. But Akira was able to shoot at him faster, Akira already had his AAH assault rifle fixed at him. A bullet flew from the rifle's muzzle and hit that man's head, body, arm, and rifle.

But that man was mostly uninjured. Akira's normal bullet could not pierce the full-face helmet that man was using. It did not even leave a mark on that man, and since he was gripping his rifle strongly with the help of his augmented suit, he also did not lose his rifle. Akira's shots were only able to surprise him, nothing more.

That man smiled as he noticed that Akira did not have enough firepower to kill him. He then tried to aim his rifle at Akira, but Akira shot his arm and rifle again, thus making him miss his shots.

The shockwave from Akira's bullets threw that man off balance, it also prevented that man from fixing his aim at Akira. When that man realized that, Akira was already standing in front of him.

Akira's right leg was already off the floor, the next moment, he drove a painful kick enhanced with his augmented suit on that man's head. The helmet could not fully dampen the shockwave as it propagated to that man's head and knocked him unconscious in one blow.

That kick sent that man straight up, but he did not crush into the ceiling thanks to Akira who caught his leg before his face drove into the ceiling. Akira then pulled him back to the ground and quickly shifted his left hand from the leg to that man's collar.

The other 3 men in that room were so surprised that Akira knocked one of their friends so quickly, but that did not stop them from shooting at Akira. The moment Akira noticed the other men aiming at him, he immediately used the man that he was grabbing as his shield and made other men there hesitate.

Akira used that short opening to quickly close his distance. The other 3 men immediately dispersed to surround Akira from the front, left, and right. The men on Akira's left and right could not shoot at Akira since they might shoot their friends.

But that was not the case for the man in front of Akira, either because he was in panic seeing Akira moving toward him, or because he had consciously made that decision, he ignored the man that Akira was using as a shield and started shooting at Akira's direction. Bullets riddled the augmented suit and the full helmet of the man that Akira was using as his shield. The momentum shocked that body hard and the shockwave was transmitted all the way to Akira, the only reason that did not blow Akira back was because he was bracing against it with his augmented suit.

At the same time, Akira shot the man on his right. The man on Akira's right was not as well-armed as the man that he was using as a shield. The close range AAH bullet barrage knocked that man back before he fell down to the ground.

Akira then shifted his aim to the man in front of him and pulled the trigger. The man in front of him fell down to the ground while still pulling the trigger on his rifle.

Akira quickly shifted his focus toward the last man there. When Akira was about to pull the trigger, Akira saw what that man was doing and stopped. That man had both of his hands up with his rifle.

Akira thought for a bit before curtly saying.

“No.”

Akira let go of the man he was grabbing and delivered a kick to the last man there. It was a single kick that was enough to knock that man unconscious as he fell down like a puppet cut off from its threads.

After confirming that all the enemies there were either unconscious or dead, Akira let out a sigh.

“That’s 4 down, how many more was it again?”

Alpha smiled and calmly answered that question.

“There’s 4 more left, don’t drop your guard yet.”

“I know, should I take the initiative here?”

“Don’t worry, they’re coming here themselves, so let’s wait here to welcome them.”

Alpha suddenly stopped smiling, Akira who noticed that immediately heightened his senses.

“Alpha?”

“Akira, you need to swap your rifle.”

And with that, Akira changed his equipment.

The other 4 men were left waiting outside since Sheryl did not want to have them all inside at the same time. They were waiting next to the back entrance of Sheryl’s base. One of them, Zalmo, received a call from their friends and swiftly replied.

“…Alright then, we’ll head there now.”

Zalmo closed the call and sent a glance at the other 3 men. The other 3 men only replied with a nod and put on their helmet that they did not use from the beginning in order to lower Sheryl’s men’s guard.

Of course, Sheryl could not afford to let her guest wait outside without anyone to accompany them. The young boy, whom Sheryl stationed there to accompany them as well as to stand guard there, noticed that change and was about to ask those men a question.

“Wha-“

That young boy was about to ask what was wrong, but before he could finish it, Zalmo pulled out his rifle in one fluid move, aimed it at that young boy, and pulled the trigger.

The bullet ripped through that boy’s torso. The armour that boy was using was nothing more but fake armour, it had no defensive power against a real bullet. The bullet also destroyed the boy’s important communication device, he then fell down and died.

Zalmo did not show any feeling even after he killed someone, his expression did not change at all as he gave an order to the other 3 men.

“Let’s go!”

Zalmo kicked the door open and stormed into the base. Since they already knew beforehand the room that they were aiming for, they went through the base straight for that room. Just to be safe, they released some shots to the places where someone might be hiding on their way there. Bullets flew around inside the base, destroying walls and furniture.

Bullets flew right at Zalmo and his men from deep inside the base, although those bullets hit them, they did not have any effect on Zalmo and his men. The people who shot those bullets noticed that. Those men then aimed their rifles in the direction where those bullets came and released a barrage of shots. With that, the resistance from Sheryl’s men stopped.

The scream of Sheryl's men could be heard echoing inside the base. But for Zalmo and his men, it was nothing but meaningless noise.

Zalmo and his men arrived in front of the door of the room that they were aiming for without much trouble. Zalmo sent a glance to his men, telling them to break in, but right before they did that, a barrage of bullets pierced the wall and the door and rained on them.

On the other side of that door, Akira had A2D and AAH assault rifles on both of his hands aimed at the door. Thanks to his enhanced vision from Alpha's support, he was able to completely see what Zalmo and his men were doing. Akira used the power of his augmented suit to help him hold both of his rifles at the same time as he kept shooting at the door.

Once the door was shredded to pieces, Akira finally stopped. He could see Zalmo and his on the other side of the door, it seemed that they took the barrage pretty much head-on.

One of them was blown all the way to the other side of the wall. The bullets from Akira's barrage pierced through his augmented suit and created holes on that man's body, the blood-splatter from those holes dyed the wall red. When Akira stopped shooting, the force keeping that man on that wall was finally gone and that man fell to the ground. The blood flowing out from that man created a pool around his body.

The other 3 were still standing after Akira finished the barrage, but only one of them was still conscious, Zalmo. He looked at Akira and somehow smiled amusedly.

"Those were armour piercing bullets, right? It's not the type of bullet that you would use to fight other people, you know? Look at the result here, there are things that are okay and there are things that are not okay to do even when it comes to killing other people, you know? Or is it that you already don't have any sense of humanity left? You're so awful."

Akira followed Alpha's instruction to exchange the normal magazine for armour piercing magazine. It was a type of bullet designed to fight mechanical monsters, not fellow humans.

But Akira just looked back coldly at Zalmo and said.

“I don’t want to hear that from someone who used their friends as a shield.”

Among all the 3 people standing in front of Akira, Zalmo was the only one who was still alive. When Akira released that barrage, Zalmo grabbed the other two people next to him and pulled them to shield him. Their augmented suit and flesh were enough to protect him from Akira’s bullets. The bullets shred the other two men beyond recognition, but in exchange for that, Zalmo was uninjured.

Zalmo replied with a smirk.

“No no no, this is one of those important sacrifices thingy. If both of them did not shield me, all of us would have died by now. So it was an unavoidable sacrifice to escape the worst possibility. It’s better to have one person alive rather than having zero people alive, right? Do you get that now?”

The other two that Zalmo used as his shields were riddled with bullets, their augmented suits, helmets, and bodies, were shredded beyond recognition. Their limbs that were somehow still dangling by a few strands of muscles swayed left and right before eventually falling to the ground. Zalmo who noticed that just threw both of them to the ground. Their shredded bodies fell over and splashed the pool of blood below them.

Zalmo spotted the other 4 men that went in ahead already lying on the ground.

“So you defeated the other 4 alone, huh? That’s pretty amazing, not to mention that all of them seem to be still alive. That’s pretty merciful of you. I really hope you would have been that merciful to us too, you know. So why wouldn’t you be that kind to us?”

Akira replied with a grim face.

“It’s because even what happened just now was not enough to kill all of you. I don’t have any leeway to hold back against someone that strong.”

“Ohh, so it’s basically my fault for being too strong and I got them roped in my situation, huh. That’s really regrettable, I feel really bad for them.”

It was obvious that Zalmo was lying. He was trying to act unperturbed by what just happened as he assessed his situation.

[…All the men that went in first are alive, they’re not bleeding, there are some spots in their augmented suit indicating that they got shot, some of them have their helmets bent… CQC, huh. There’s a good chance that they’re knocked unconscious with gunshots too… So why did he use armour piercing ammo instead of normal ammo against us? Is it because he noticed that normal bullet has almost no effect on the men that we sent in ahead so he changed to ammo with better firepower?]

Zalmo tried to remember what Akira said to him and tried to match them with Akira’s expression when he said that.

[No, that’s not right. He noticed that he could defeat the men that we sent in ahead only with CQC and normal bullets, that’s why he spared them. But our hard armour is too durable for his normal ammo, that’s why he decided to change ammo… But why did he make that decision? Did he interrogate one of them before we came here? No, There was not much time gap between when they went in first until we arrived here, so that’s just impossible. Did the info about our surprise attack somehow get leaked out? No, that’s not right too. If that’s really the case, they would have made more preparations to fight us back and that doesn’t seem to be the case here… I really have no idea, this boy is really strange.]

Zalmo still looked relaxed while carefully watching for Akira’s movements. To Zalmo, Akira did not seem that strong, but it was true that he had already defeated 7 of his men, all alone by himself. But even so, that was not enough of a reason for Zalmo to get alerted, after all, it was not a hard thing to do.

Akira noticed that Zalmo did not show any emotion at all even after seeing all of his men down. It made Akira be much more careful of Zalmo. Both of them faced each other, ready to fight.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 145, Arrogance and Choices

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Zalmo slowly moved his hands to block the spot where Akira was aiming his rifles. He then smiled rather smugly and said.

“Those rifles are both empty, right? I bet you’ve used all the ammo in that barrage in order to kill us. But then, that was not enough to kill me. Although you’re aiming them at me, it’s nothing but a bluff to keep me away, right? I bet bullets won’t come out even if you pull the trigger.”

Akira’s expression did not change at all.

“I wonder now, I might have left some ammo inside.”

“Who would give such a vague answer? If they still have some ammo in, you could have just told me so. To be honest, my augmented suit is not strong enough to defend myself from armour piercing ammo, that’s why I used those two men as shields.”

“Then why did you throw them away?”

“Of course, it’s so that they won’t slow me down when I try to evade the bullets. They’re all already riddled with holes, there’s no meaning in using them as shields anymore. That's why it's better to keep my feet light, no?"

Zalmo slowly but surely walked toward Akira, who walked backwards with Zalmo's every step.

Zalmo smiled confidently.

"What's wrong? You won't shoot? You still have some ammo left, right? Or is that you're afraid you won't be able to hit me from this distance?"

Akira still had the same expression as he replied.

"I'm still looking for an opening. If you can predict when I pull the trigger, you'll be able to evade. I don't have much ammo left so I can't do indiscriminate shooting, I have to make sure to kill you with my shot."

Zalmo was still approaching Akira slowly and Akira was also walking backwards equally slowly. Both of them eventually reached the middle of the room.

This time it was Akira who threw a question to Zalmo.

"How about you? You're not going to use your rifle? You could've run away, hid somewhere, and readied your rifle when you still had your shields, no?"

"Actually, you destroyed my rifle during that barrage just now. There was some leftover destroyed rifle back then, right? If I had tried to run away back then, you would have reloaded a new magazine in your rifle and used it to shoot at me. There's nowhere for me to hide in the middle of the hallway, so that would have been a very bad decision."

"Shouldn't you keep it a secret about your broken rifle? If I thought that you would shoot back, I wouldn't immediately choose to chase you, right?"

"You could have noticed that only by looking at my destroyed rifle. It's easy to notice that on the ground after all. I know that you want to keep your distance from me, but just so you, that won't work."

The tension between them heightened. Both of them kept their eyes on each other as not to miss even the slightest move. The critical point was close.

Akira once again threw a question.

“You look pretty strong, honestly, I don’t want to die. If I tell you that I don’t mind letting you go, what are you going to do?”

“Well, I don’t want to die either, so I’ll thankfully take that offer. So, can you put down your rifle so I can feel safe leaving this place?”

“No.”

“They’re just empty rifles anyway, right? There won’t be much difference even if you put them down.”

“…Like I said, they’re not empty.”

Zalmo stopped pressing forward, so Akira also stopped walking backwards. Both of them understood that the fight would start soon.

Zalmo suddenly dashed toward Akira, he decided not to run to his left nor right, but straight at Akira. Akira fixed his aim at Zalmo, if his rifles were really not empty, Zalmo would not be able to evade his shots.

Akira pulled the trigger on both of his rifles, bullets flew straight out from both barrels. Back then during the barrage, Alpha stopped Akira mid-way to leave some bullets in the magazine when it looked like he had used up all of his ammo.

Akira was not bluffing, just like what Zalmo thought.

Zalmo fully predicted that both of Akira’s rifles still had some bullets left. When bullets flew out from their muzzles, Zalmo had accurately predicted their trajectories, he quickly raised both of his hands as if to block those bullets.

Then, at the next moment, a bright light flashed, the force field armour changed the kinetic energy of the bullets into photons.

Both of Zalmo’s arms were equipped with portable force field armour.

The smaller the force field armour area of effect, the shorter its duration, the stronger it became. Since Zalmo only deployed the force field armour on a small area just enough to block the incoming bullets, it was enough to completely kill the momentum of the incoming bullets.

The blinding flashing light from Zalmo’s force field armour made Akira flinch for a split second, but that was enough for Zalmo to close their distance as he released a kick aimed at Akira’s head. Akira was not using anything on his head, a clean hit of Zalmo’s kick would send his head flying.

Akira looked completely surprised by Zalmo’s force field armour, his expression showed his shock and he was unable to react for the time being. Zalmo noticed that and was sure that it was his victory.

[Got him!]

But Zalmo’s kick cleanly cut through the air, Akira was able to quickly duck as if his body was sucked in and evade Zalmo’s kick.

Akira was down low right in front of Zalmo, he then released a swift kick as if to sweep Zalmo’s leg off the ground. But Zalmo lightly jumped off and evaded Akira’s sweep, while at the same time, he brought down his other leg that was still dangling in front of him to Akira’s head. Akira quickly rolled back and stood up.

The short exchange ended there, Akira and Zalmo returned to their initial position. Akira had already thrown away his rifle in the middle of that short exchange, he was now unarmed. Akira lightly tightened his fist and readied his stance, in reaction to that, Zalmo stretched his hand and also readied his stance.

Zalmo then said to Akira mockingly.

“Geez, you’re no fun at all. You really shot someone who jumped straight at you thinking that you have no ammo left. Could you like, you know, get surprised even for a bit? I'm sure you didn't expect I was able to block them, right? Are you actually a machine or something?"

In contrast to Zalmo, Akira had a grim expression when he replied.

"Didn't I tell you that I have no leeway for something like that? Or did you already forget about it?"

Zalmo was still looking mockingly at Akira, but it quickly changed to a relaxed smile as if he was looking down at Akira.

"…Well, that doesn't really matter, it should take effect anytime soon."

Zalmo had an accelerator drug ready inside his body, it was set so that he could use accelerator drug anytime only by sending the command using his mind. It was a slow-reacting accelerator drug that had a strong effect. Once it was in effect, the drug would significantly boost his focus and perception, thus slowing down the passage of time from his point of view while keeping his disposition calm. Zalmo already activated the accelerator drug, the silly talk with Akira was only to buy some time until the drug took effect.

Zalmo could feel the drug had already taken effect for real, he lightly smirked and said.

"Die!"

With that signal, Akira and Zalmo stopped talking and restarted the fight.

Akira and Zalmo used the full force of their enhanced strength to fight each other, releasing a flurry of attacks with their arms and legs to the vital points of their respective opponent.

Zalmo had superb reaction time thanks to the accelerator drug while Akira had his time compression from his sheer willpower as well as Alpha's support to move his augmented suit. They were fighting at a speed that no normal human could follow.

A single clean hit was all it needed to kill their opponent, they were continuously throwing attacks at each other while evading the attacks coming at them. It was as if both of them had made prearrangement beforehand, both of them prioritized evading and did not even try to block the attacks. After all, it was hard to judge how powerful an attack with the enhanced strength of the augmented suit was. If they made a blunder trying to block an attack, it might easily tear their limbs, that was why they had no other choice but to evade.

Akira gritted his teeth, he looked like he was having a hard time.

[Too fast!! Although it already took all of me to match the movement of my augmented suit that Alpha is controlling, he is still able to properly react to it! He did say something taking effect though, is it an accelerator drug!? How long before his accelerator drug loses its effect!? Can I survive until then?!]

Thanks to Akira's time compression, he managed to follow the movement of his augmented suit. By following the movement of his augmented suit during a high-speed fight, he was able to significantly reduce the burden on his body.

But he could not maintain his time compression for long, prolonged use of time compression would assault his brain with information and render his brain fatigued. The moment that happened, his body would be paralyzed. Moreover, there was a limit on how fast he could move his body, the faster the movement, the bigger the burden on his body.

Akira's physical and psychical limits were coming close. The only thing that he could do in that situation was to do everything he could to end the fight before he hit his limit. But even so, after he exerted everything that he had, he was not able to get the upper hand, as a matter of fact, he was at the disadvantage there.

[Dammit!! Why is someone this strong aiming for this shop!? If he's this strong, he could have aimed for a better shop with better guards!! Is it because of my bad luck!? Goddammit, I'm really unlucky, right?!]

Akira continued fighting while cursing on the back of his mind.

Zalmo drove a straight kick on Akira's body. Akira saw it as a good chance, it would be hard for Zalmo to keep his distance close after releasing that kick.

If Akira could open some distance, he should be able to grab his AAH rifle and reload a new magazine. He might even be able to use his CWH anti-material rifle which needed him more time to take aim due to its weight.

Akira jumped backwards, Zalmo's kick did not hit anything and he lost his balance. Although it was only for a split second, he was not able to chase Akira.

Akira thought that he already had that fight in his bag. So he jumped back, opened a space between them, and tried to aim his CWH anti-material rifle at Zalmo. Akira saw Zalmo still with his balance off, but he noticed something and his eyes went wide.

Zalmo still had not recovered his balance, but he had his rifle that he said got destroyed aimed at Akira.

Akira's augmented suit moved on its own. He stopped trying to aim his CWH anti-material rifle and grabbed the anti-bullet sheet next to him. He then pulled it to block Zalmo's line of fire.

Zalmo released a barrage at Akira. Countless bullets pierced through the anti-bullet sheet and hit Akira's body. Thanks to the sheet killing most of the bullets' momentum, it did not damage Akira much, but it was enough to blow him back. Akira was smacked to the ground. Zalmo did not stop shooting, so Akira hurriedly hid behind a display nearest to him.

Akira complained while hiding himself from the bullets.

"Didn't you say your rifle got destroyed!?"

Zalmo recovered his balance and smirked.

"Ahh, sorry, my mistake."

Zalmo’s rifle was not destroyed yet, although it was damaged, it was still functional.

Zalmo shot randomly in Akira’s direction. The displays were covered with a defensive sheet, but they were not that durable. Akira rolled on the ground from one cover to another, avoiding Zalmo’s barrage.

Akira’s expression was grim, he understood that he was getting cornered.

“Alpha, can we do something about it? It would be bad if this continues. I’m hitting my limit soon.”

Akira was in a rather dire situation. He looked pretty desperate thinking of a way to get out of that situation, but in contrast to that, Alpha replied casually as if it was nothing to worry about.

“Is that so? In that case, how about we just go ahead and kill him?”

“…Eh?”

Akira was dumbfounded, he could not help but express his surprise.

“It might be a little bit dangerous, but hang on, okay?”

“A-alright.”

Akira still hadn’t fully shaken off his surprise, while Alpha was smiling just like usual.

Zalmo kept on shooting at Akira who was moving around, he looked like he was having an easy time there. But he found something suspicious, so he heightened his guard.

[That guy adapts perfectly again. I know he thought that he already won this fight when he jumped back from my kick. That expression was not a lie, he did not expect me to shoot back. There’s no mistaking it that he was lured into my trap… So how? Is it because he has a good reflex?]

Zalmo reloaded a new magazine. Right when he did that, Akira used his CWH anti-material rifle from behind a cover and hit Zalmo.

But Zalmo had expected that to happen, he raised one of his arms to block the bullet, Zalmo knew that Akira released a shot from the sound so he immediately activated his forcefield armour. The bullet hit his palm and a flash of blinding light filled the room.

He immediately shot back at Akira but Akira already relocated himself behind another cover. Zalmo then shouted.

“Do you really think that it’ll work with that rifle? Unfortunately, that wasn’t good enough.”

Zalmo smiled full of confidence, but deep inside, he was becoming warier of Akira.

Akira had moved according to Alpha’s instruction, but he still was not able to defeat Zalmo. He then asked Alpha with a grim face.

“Alpha, that one didn’t work.”

But Alpha was still smiling like usual, she did not seem perturbed at all.

“Don’t worry, I was able to gather a lot of data from that shot. The next one will end this fight. Akira, you’ll have to do something pretty dangerous, are you ready?”

“Ready when you are!”

The reason why Zalmo did not take cover like Akira was because he had confidence in the force field armour on both of his arms.

Zalmo did not doubt that he had the upper hand, but even so, he did not lower his guard at all. He kept shooting at the display shelves and the sheets hanging from the ceiling, looking for Akira.

[I don’t think I can hit him like this… Does he know where I’m aiming? It seems that those sheets are not only for blocking bullets but can also be used as information-gathering devices, huh. I thought that both of us can't use our information-gathering device to ascertain each other's location, but I guess that's not the case. But if that's true, then why won't he shoot from behind the sheet? Is it because that will reveal his location? Or is it that I'm overthinking this?]

Zalmo reloaded his rifle again, and just like last time, Akira jumped out from behind the cover.

It seemed that Akira really knew what Zalmo was doing. Zalmo thought so as he put up his arm to block the incoming bullets.

Since Zalmo had predicted that Akira would shoot, he was taken aback when he noticed that Akira was not aiming at him. Akira had his CWH anti-material rifle pointing, he was holding it with one hand as if he was holding a sword straight forward.

Then at the next moment, Akira's CWH anti-material rifle suddenly turned. A loud bang echoed quickly followed by a flash of light.

Since Akira shot his CWH anti-material rifle without the proper support, the kickback destroyed the bone on his right arm, his augmented suit immediately stopped working on his broken arm. At least, for the length of this battle, Akira would not be able to use his right arm anymore. He had lost one of his arms.

But in exchange for that, Akira's shot blew Zalmo's right arm off. The mechanical parts that were scattered on the ground were all the leftover from Zalmo's right arm.

Both of them had lost one arm now, Akira and Zalmo stood facing each other. Akira had his CWH anti-material rifle on his left arm aimed at Zalmo. Zalmo extended his left hand to block Akira's line of fire. Both of them seemed to be desperate as they locked gazes, the first one to move was Zalmo.

Zalmo laughed lightly and said.

“I have no idea where you learnt that from, but just so you know, that’s not how you use a rifle. You lost your arm from that shot, didn’t you? Well, you took one of my arms too, so I guess it’s even, huh. But still, I know that you did that to prevent me from predicting where you’ll shoot, but it’s pretty amazing for you to even think of trying to do that. Thanks to that, I had no other choice but to expand the area of my forcefield armour and reduce its power, but it’s still better than losing my head or having a hole in my body. But again, I didn’t expect you would hit your shot, you know? Not bad at all… That is, if that was your real skill.”

Zalmo smiled provokingly, Akira frowned and replied.

“What do you mean?”

Zalmo casually replied.

“You have someone else controlling your augmented suit, right?”

Akira’s face froze. Seeing that, Zalmo knew that he was correct, he then mockingly said to Akira.

“Hahah, I knew it! I had my suspicion since you can immediately adapt well to what happened even though you don’t look that strong, now I know exactly why! There’s no way a normal Hunter can execute that shot, haha, you overdid it there.”

Akira had a stern face, he then said as if he was putting up a brave front.

“…Even if that’s true, does that help you win this fight?”

“Once I know the trick, I can think of a way to fight back. For example, just like this.”

When he said that, Zalmo immediately jumped back. Akira was about to shoot at the running Zalmo, but he noticed that Zalmo dropped something that looked like a hand grenade, so Akira immediately moved away from it.

The hand grenade looking object immediately filled the area with smoke. Alpha then explained to Akira.

“Akira, it’s jamming smoke. It looks thin but it’s pretty strong.”

“I see, leaving that aside, that shot was not enough to kill him though, did you predict this too? Moreover, he discovered that I’m receiving your support and he said that he knows a way to cut it off, are you sure we’re going to be okay?”

“It’ll be fine. Since he used a jamming smoke, I can pretty much guess what he’s thinking. One thing that I can tell you is that he made a wrong guess. We just need to end him off after he does whatever he has in mind. The fight has basically been decided from what happened just now. The next move will really be the last. Get ready, he’s coming.”

Alpha warned Akira about Zalmo. He saw Zalmo running in his direction.

Akira aimed his CWH anti-material rifle with his left arm, Zalmo raised his left arm in order to block it.

Zalmo smiled, he thought that he had won the fight. Akira pulled the trigger and a gunshot echoed through the room. Everything was the same just like last time until that point, but unlike last time, there was no flash of light.

The bullet that flew out from Akira’s CWH anti-material rifle left a big hole on Zalmo’s body. Zalmo was so surprised by that sudden turn of events.

[…No way!? It was G3 level jamming smoke that’ll even block close-range communication, you know?! So how in the world he can still move his augmented suit…!?]

The jamming smoke that Zalmo used was not for blocking information-gathering devices, but it was to block the augmented suit’s remote controlling.

Zalmo thought that someone outside the room was controlling Akira’s augmented suit. It was impossible to calculate Akira’s movement using the small control device usually installed in augmented suits, but that was not the case for a powerful special control device that was usually installed in a room or in a vehicle.

There was an illusion with using an augmented suit, most people thought that anyone could fight veteran soldiers only by using an augmented suit. That was nothing more than a foolish assumption, but a lot of companies did a lot of research and development in order to get closer to that dream.

Zalmo thought that room was a room for that kind of experiment where some company pitted a slum child with that type of augmented suit against Zalmo's men. The relic shop was nothing more than just an excuse. If that small boy can repel Zalmo and his men, it would be a good advertisement for that company.

The rumour that there were relics in that shop worth reselling. The rumour of the powerful young Hunters that spread around lately. The fact that Akira did not seem that strong from the outside. All of these reasons caused Zalmo to make that guess.

In that case, if he could cut the connection to Akira's augmented suit, Akira would turn to just your normal slum boy, it would pose no problem to kill him. Zalmo thought so.

But that assumption was the very reason why Zalmo lost that fight. Before Akira pulled the trigger, Alpha slightly changed his aim. Although it was a slight aim change, it put Akira's left arm in immense burden and Zalmo could not react fast enough to that.

[It was all just acting then!? It was all to fool me!?]

Zalmo's guess was almost correct and that truth caused him to get even more surprised.

Zalmo could see Akira standing in front of him holding CWH anti-material rifle that was already aimed at his head. He knew that he had zero chance of evading that, but that did not fill his heart with fear. At the least, it made him feel a bit cornered. The person who was in front of him was way stronger than he expected judging from Akira's outlook. Zalmo needed to warn his friends about that, but unfortunately, his communication device was already destroyed.

[This boy might get in our way!! I have to tell my brothers about this!! The result of this investigation…]

Before Zalmo could finish his thought, Akira released a shot that tore Zalmo's head open. Zalmo's train of thought stopped in an instant as his headless cyborg body fell to the ground with a bang.

Alpha smiled and complemented Akira.

"Good job! That's the end, it's alright now."

Akira released the tension in him and sighed.

"T-that wasn't easy at all. Why is someone that strong aiming for this shop?"

"Well, you can't ask him now that he's dead. So let's just ask the people that you tried your best to leave alive. They might know something."

"Tried my best to leave them alive, huh…"

Akira looked at the people who were left alive through his hard work. The result of trying to spare them was that difficult battle.

"…I guess I was too arrogant, huh."

There were a few things that Akira could not just shake off from what just happened, he regretted the choice that he made.

Being unable to make any other choice but the easiest one was proof of weakness. Whether it was of a good deed or a bad deed, helping or robbing, the one who had the freedom to decide was the stronger one. The one who was helped, and the one who was robbed, they had no choice in that matter. Up until now, Akira was always on the receiving end, the one who had no choice.

Akira tried to be the one who made the decision, he tried to go to the other side, and just now he was shown the price of it.

Alpha tried to cheer Akira up with a smile and said.

“If you really think so, then you need to grow strong enough so that it would be out of leeway rather than arrogance, that way you’ll be able to make your choice when it really matters. To be honest, I think it’s okay to think that it was out of leeway for the 4 people that you spared, you know? For the other 4, unfortunately, that would be arrogance.”

Akira smiled wryly.

“I see, well, if you say so, then I guess it means I’ve grown stronger compared to before.”

Akira still did not have the option to make his own choice, he was still not strong enough to do so. But he was able to keep 4 men alive, it was better than having all 8 of them dead. He was at least able to get closer to another choice other than killing everyone in order to protect himself.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 146, Cleaning Up The Aftermath

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Sheryl, Akira, and some of Sheryl's gang members gathered inside a room in the gang's base, there were leftovers of battles scattered all around the places inside the room. After Akira killed the attackers, the gang finally calmed down.

Sheryl had a grave expression as she asked a question to her men.

"How are the casualties?"

Alicia also had the same grave expression.

"…5 people dead, many are injured. I'm not even sure whether Erio can be saved or not."

"…I see. Take the wounded to the clinic. If they ask you about the payment, just bring out mine and Katsuragi's name, they should give you decent care after that."

"…Okay."

Akira was taking care of his own wounds while he overheard Sheryl's conversation. He checked his medicine reserve and called Alicia. He then lightly threw a box of medicine that was still pretty much full.

Alicia looked at the medicine box in her hand and was surprised, she knew that it was one of those 2,000,000 Aurum per box medicine. She also knew that Akira was telling her to use that for Sheryl's men, but when she thought about how much it cost, she could not help but hesitate.

Akira thought for a bit while making a rather sad face before saying to Alicia.

"I'll just put it on Sheryl's tab. No one could have seen this coming, so don't worry, I'll give a big discount."

Sheryl smiled at Alicia as if to calm her down and said.

"It's okay to use everything, so hurry up, before it's too late."

Alicia looked at Akira and Sheryl and lightly bowed, then rushed out of the room.

Sheryl then bowed to Akira and thanked him.

"Thank you very much. It should be able to save a lot of souls… So, uhmm, how much is it? Although I'm not sure when I can pay it, I will definitely pay for it eventually."

"Just pay me with anything. I said that to make them think that it isn't free. After all, although I know that you guys don't have money, it would be troublesome if you guys start leeching off me."

"…I understand. I'll take up on your generous offer then."

Sheryl bowed deeply one more time to Akira.

Akira then continued tending on his wound. He swallowed several pills of medicine and straightened up his broken bone while the pain killer was still active. He then took off his augmented suit and applied the paste-type medicine on his skin that got peeled off due to the friction with his augmented suit. Although the pain killer was still active, he could feel pain when he was applying the paste on his exposed flesh, but he just gritted his teeth and continued tending his wounds.

He seemed to be already so used to it as he covered his wound with bandages before putting his augmented suit back on. Akira then lightly moved his arm to check his broken arm, but he felt something was not right.

“Hmmm, my arm doesn’t feel right though, is this because of that crazy thing that I did?”

But Alpha then said to Akira with a serious expression.

“I have bad news regarding that subject.”

“Eh…? Is there something wrong with my arm? I knew that it would be bad so I took a rather large amount of medicine though, wasn’t it good enough?”

“For your body, it will recover just fine after a short rest. I’m talking about the damage to your augmented suit. It was already in a bad shape before, but after that fight, its condition has considerably worsened. Some of its parts are broken, so to make sure that it’s still functional, I’ve changed some of its parts from nerve-transmitter type to movement sync type. But due to that, those particular parts can only move slower than usual.”

“My augmented suit is in such a bad shape?”

“Well, you got eaten by a monster, ran down a building’s wall, got shot, used its full power back in Seranthal building, and so many other things. It’s in a pretty rough shape right now.”

Akira thought and remembered everything that had happened. It was true that he had been using his augmented suit pretty crudely, so there was no surprise that it finally broke. He then asked Alpha.

“It’s not like I lost your support, right?”

“Yup, it’s because of the damage on your augmented suit, so it’s not like you lose my support.”

Akira seemed relieved, but Alpha then warned him.

“But it doesn’t change the fact that its ability has been significantly lowered. So you can’t do any crazy moves like that again until you get a new augmented suit.”

“It’s fine. I’m planning to stay inside the city until my new equipment arrives anyway, so I’ll just take it easy for the time being.”

Akira finished tending his wounds, put back his augmented suit, and took his rifles back to his shoulder. Although he was still not in his tip-top shape, he was ready to fight again, as a matter of fact, he had returned to his usual state of mind where he was ready to fight anytime. So now he shifted his focus to the men that he had been ignoring until now, the attackers that he had knocked unconscious before.

“Sorry for the wait, so, let’s hear your explanation now.”

They were stripped naked off all of their equipment and their hands were tied tightly with the anti-bullet sheet, all of them were already awake and they were looking at Akira with a grim face.

They already understood the situation that they were in, but they did not panic and they looked completely calm. Not too far from them, there were 4 corpses of their friends lying, killed by Akira. Those were kept there to scare the attackers that Akira spared. They thought that Akira might see some worth in sparing them since he did not kill them yet. As they thought so they believed that they had a chance for negotiation.

Other than the attackers, there were also Akira, Sheryl, and some of Sheryl’s men inside the room. Sheryl’s men were glaring at the attackers, but that did not scare them at all.

The one person that they needed to negotiate with was Akira, so there was no need to pay attention to other people, they at least knew that much. And since Akira was just a boy, they hoped that they could find some openings that they could take advantage of.

One of the attackers cautiously spoke to Akira.

“If we tell you everything, will you spare us?”

Akira replied casually, there was no intimidation in his voice.

“One thing for sure, I’ll kill you if you don’t. But don’t worry, I don’t like torturing people, so I’ll give you a swift death. After all, if you won’t tell me anything even if you’re dead, then you’re better off dead.”

There was no killing intent or a sense of threat from his voice, but the attackers understood very well that Akira was being serious.

“Alright, what do you want to know?”

“Right, for the starter, why did you attack this place?”

Akira and Sheryl tried to extract as much information as possible regarding the current incident. To put it simply, the reason why the attackers attacked Sheryl’s base was because they were in need of money. So they decided to attack a shop that seemed to have expensive goods but weak security, that kind of reasoning was common in the slum city. So after gathering information, they ended up choosing Sheryl’s base to rob.

Among the information that they gathered, it included the information about the Hunter that was protecting Sheryl’s base. It particularly said that the Hunter protecting Sheryl’s base was a weak Hunter who got his wallet stolen, and when the pickpocket’s friend scared him, that Hunter pulled back and ran away. It must have been the information that those men received from the same information broker who gave the same information to some pickpocket that Akira had been encountering lately.

The moment that subject surfaced, Akira’s mood immediately worsened. But he was somehow able to keep his calm. The attackers were really frightened when that happened, but Akira did not give a shit about that.

There was still one thing that Akira and Sheryl could not understand, it was how they knew that there were expensive articles in Sheryl's shop and who bought that article. Unfortunately, the one who told them that was already dead, to be more precise, Akira killed that guy.

That person was Zalmo. According to them, Zalmo joined their group before they knew it and he brought all kinds of information to the group, he was also the one who prepared the fencer to sell the relics that they would rob. Among the attackers that Akira spared, it seemed that none of them knew Zalmo well.

Akira found that weird, but since it was impossible for him to defeat Zalmo without killing him. Akira thought that it could not be helped and decided not to question the attackers that he spared further about that subject. He did not think that they were lying and Alpha agreed with him.

After listening to their explanations, Akira looked at those men pitifully and mumbled.

"What can I say… It's really important to get the correct information, huh."

Sheryl agreed with him as she said.

"That's right. As far as I can get from their explanation, it seems like they were tempted by rumour, or more like, tricked by fake information. I guess that's the gist of it, it's really troublesome."

According to those men, after gathering all kinds of information, they concluded that there was a few million Aurum worth of articles in Sheryl's shop, and the owner of that shop did not know that and the shop was guarded by a weak Hunter.

If that was true, it was only to be expected for strong people like Zalmo to try to rob that place. Akira could understand that reasoning.

Akira and Sheryl explained to them that they were mistaken, but they could not believe that because of Sheryl's dress. Sheryl dress was an expensive old-world relic that even got refitted, it was enough as proof to cement those men's misunderstanding. It made them think that Sheryl must be earning a lot of profit enough to get her that dress.

But when Akira and Sheryl told them that she only got that dress as a gift from Akira, her lover, rather than from the profit of running the shop, those men were so embarrassed that they hung their heads low. It was not rare for Hunters who were earning a healthy amount of money to buy their lovers expensive things out of their own money to express their pride in their abilities.

Those men finally understood that that the truth was the exact opposite of what they were expecting. Rather than a rich shop with a weak guard, it was a cheap shop with a strong guard. They hung their head low the moment they realized that. Seeing them acting like that, Akira and Sheryl looked exasperatedly at them.

Although Akira and Sheryl felt sorry for them, it did not change the fact that they attacked the shop. Akira then changed the mood and asked those men a question.

"That's all I have to ask. So then, regarding what we are going to do with you next, you can either pay us money or die, which one you want to pick? If you'd rather die, don't worry, I'll give you a quick death. As I said, I have no plans to torture any of you."

Those men looked at each other, one of them then scaredly asked Akira.

"…How much should we pay?"

"Oh, you're going to let us decide? Well, how about 10 billion Aurum each?"

The moment Akira said that, those men were dumbfounded. One of them flared up and shouted at Akira.

"Are you fucking kidding me?! There's no way we can pay that much money!!"

“Then how much can you pay us? Just to remind you, you guys did shoot at me fully intending to kill me so I’m being nice to you to let you off the hook only with that much money. If you can’t give me a good offer, I’ll just kill you here and that will be the end of it.”

Those men shivered to Akira’s declaration, there were already 4 unrecognizable dead bodies next to them showing just how serious Akira was. If they could not give a good offer, he would not hesitate to add them to those dead bodies. Another one of them shifted his gaze to Sheryl and begged.

“Hey, are you really okay with that? There’s no good thing that you can get from being greedy, you know? And it’s not like you can get any money if you kill us, right?”

That man thought that it should be easier to talk with Sheryl rather than with Akira.

But Sheryl just smiled and replied.

“I don’t really mind, you can go ahead and die.”

“Haah!?”

“If Akira decides so, I have no wish to stop him.”

“Y-You’re the boss in this gang, right? He’s just your guard, isn’t it?!”

“Yup, but, this and that are two different things. Not to mention that you guys killed some of my men too, so I have no reason to stop him.”

“…But the guy who killed your men is already dead over there, isn’t it? We didn’t kill any of your men.”

“That’s exactly why we’re willing to let you solve this incident with money.”

Sheryl told them to die with a smile on her face. She knew that Akira would not be satisfied with a small amount of money and she knew well that those men could not pay the amount of money that Akira demanded of them, that was why she told them to die.

Those men had run out of moves that they could make, one of them then said with a pale face.

“W-wait, you won’t get anything if you kill us, right? And you already killed enough people to scare us. So just think about it, it might be a good idea to let us live and get some profit out of that.”

Akira swiftly replied.

“I know, so, how much are you going to pay?”

That man hesitatingly replied back.

“…1,000,000 Aurum.”

After hearing that, Akira looked at Sheryl without saying anything, Sheryl reacted by shaking her head. So Akira replied to that man in place of her.

“Not good enough.”

“…1,500,000 Aurum then!!”

Akira looked at Sheryl again, and she shook her head again. Sheryl thought that Akira was trying to bring that price as high as possible, so she had no plans to nod.

Akira once again replied to that man.

“Still not good enough. And also, I don’t mind if you want to keep increasing your offer, but also tell me how you are going to pay for it. After all, it’s not like we can accept it if you’re planning to pay 10 million Aurum in a 100 years instalment, right?”

Those men immediately closed their mouths. If Akira demanded them to also tell him how they would pay for it, it really limited their options.

Since no one said anything, Akira then continued.

“Well, if you won’t say anything, I’ll assume that you chose death, okay? Or is it that you want to pay but you’re still thinking of how to pay it?”

“We-we’re still thinking.”

“But you’ll pay, right?”

“O-f course!”

Those men nodded, they knew that they would be dead otherwise.

“I see, in that case, wait for a bit.”

Akira opened his information terminal and made a call.

The person that Akira was calling picked up the call.

“Akira, huh. What is it? Is it something profitable?”

“It depends on your skill.”

“Oh, it’s profitable then. So, what is it?”

It was Katsuragi.

After listening to Akira’s explanation, Katsuragi exasperatedly said.

“…I see, I understand what’s going on, so basically those people need money, right? But why do I have to lend them money?”

“It’s not like there’s any need for you to lend them money, you do have some connections with some companies that handle this kind of thing, right?”

“Well, I do, but even if I introduce them to those companies, I don’t see how that can give me any profit. Are you telling me to get the referral bonus? My skill is in trading and not lending money, I specialize in trading Hunter equipment, so this has nothing to do with my skill, right?”

Katsuragi sounded a bit annoyed, but Akira casually replied.

“All of that money might be used to pay for the equipment from you.”

After a short pause, Katsuragi had thought of all kinds of ways to get profit out of that transaction. So then he carefully asked.

“…All of it?”

“Yeah, all of it.”

Akira’s answer was enough to convince Katsuragi, who replied back happily.

“If that’s the case, then this might be an interesting offer, it’s indeed a profitable subject related to my skill as a merchant. Alright then, I’ll handle the rest. So, what kind of equipment are you looking for? After all, I need to make sure what equipment you are going to buy from me. But still, you are finally interested in buying my goods, huh.”

“No, it’s not for me. It’s for Sheryl and her gang.”

“Sheryl’s gang?”

“Yeah. They need extra equipment, I want them to at least be able to defend themselves when I’m not around. As for the details, you can discuss it with Sheryl later.”

To be honest, Katsuragi wanted Akira to buy his stuff. A Hunter like Akira who was earning a healthy amount of money would definitely contribute greatly to the shop’s revenue. Judging by the fact that Akira bought a dozen of 2,000,000 Aurum per box medicines only for his consumable item, it was to be expected for Akira to pay way more for his equipment. Katsuragi squeezed his brain every day to somehow find a way to make Akira his patron.

But it did not change the fact that this deal would be big, so Katsuragi decided to prioritize the profit in front of him right now.

“Well, if it means that they’ll buy some of my goods, then I guess that’s fine too. I’ll head there now, so wait for a bit, okay?”

“Alright.”

Akira was about to close the call when one of the attackers who heard that conversation immediately spoke up.

“Wait there!! Are you going to sell us!?”

Akira still had not closed the call when he said to that man.

“You did say that you want to pay but you don’t know how to pay, so I’m just helping you here. You just pay me with that money then do your best to settle your debt with them.”

“Isn’t that the same as selling us?! Even I know how those Hunters who get caught in their debts end up!! Like hell I would accept that! I would rather choose death than take on that kind of debt!!”

That man was shouting on top of his lungs. He knew well about the end that was waiting for Hunters who had a huge amount of debt. When he imagined that end, he could not help but shout desperately.

A gunshot echoed in the room. That man, who was shouting just now, fell limp on the ground and stopped moving.

Akira shot that man, granting him his wish.

Katsuragi voice could be heard from Akira’s information terminal.

“…Whoah, Akira, what was that?”

“He said that he would rather die than take on debt so I killed him. I have no plans to force them to take that debt after all.”

Katsuragi clicked his tongue and annoyedly asked Akira.

“How many left?”

“3 people.”

“Don’t kill them. It’s more profitable to keep them alive. Killing them will only cut my profit you know. Good grief… I’ll convince them myself, so don’t kill them, alright?”

“Alright.”

Akira then closed the call. One down, 3 were still alive, and those three were looking at Akira while trembling in terror.

When Katsuragi arrived at Sheryl’s base, he quickly got on with his work. He came there bringing quite a lot of people.

Katsuragi was talking with Sheryl. They had a lot to talk about, the peace money, the equipment that Sheryl would buy with that money, the relics that got destroyed from the fight, the treatment for Sheryl’s men that were wounded, and still a lot more.

While on the other hand, Tomejima was talking with the attackers who were still alive about the loan. Tomejima was the guy from the moneylender company that Katsuragi brought. He felt a bit awkward when he saw Akira, but since Akira did not seem to mind him, Tomejima sighed in relief.

The people that Tomejima brought with him were taking photos of the traces from the battle and were cleaning up the dead bodies.

Akira was taking a break while looking at the people working in that room. That was when Colbert and Levin showed up. Colbert came there with Tomejima while Levin came with Katsuragi.

Levin was putting the dead bodies in the body bags when he glanced at Akira, he then frowned and said to Colbert.

“Akira did all of this, right?”

“That’s what I heard. Don’t stop your hands. We need to put the equipment in a different bag and properly gather the pieces of the cyborg guy.”

“I know.”

Levin started gathering the pieces just like he was told to. He picked up pieces of a destroyed arm, chips that were still enveloped in brain juice, and other pieces that he could find and shoved them inside the body bag. He then suddenly voiced out his impression of the person who caused the scene in front of him.

“…But still, it’s 8 armed Hunters against 1, you know. So is it really true that he did this all by himself?”

“That’s what I heard.”

“…If I can’t pay back my debt to Katsuragi, the very person who caused this will come to me to collect that debt, huh?”

Levin looked at the dead bodies inside the body bags with a conflicted face. Katsuragi said that in the worst-case scenario he would ask Akira to collect that debt. If he got unlucky, that might be as soon as tomorrow.

Colbert then made a suggestion to Levin.

“In that case, how about shifting all of that debt to the company that I’m working for? That way at least Akira would not come to collect your debt, you know?”

“…About that though, one good thing about Katsuragi is that he doesn’t put any interest. So I have no need to worry about the interest, you see.”

“Well, it’s your debt, so it’s up to you.”

Watching Levin, Colbert thought that it would still take some time until Levin paid all of his debt.

Akira was only waiting there, inside that room, he looked bored. He thought that it would not be right to head back home alone, so he decided to stay there. Although, to be honest, he wanted to just go back home and get a good rest. He then mumbled.

“…It’s not a good idea to head back home in this situation, isn’t it?”

Alpha replied to him.

“Personally speaking, I think it’s alright to go back home. After all, among all of them, you’re the one who must be the most tired. There’s no need to stay here just to accompany them. I’m sure it’s alright if you tell them that you’re tired after that fight. After all, it’s not like it’s a formal request where you got properly paid anyway, so I don’t see any reason why any of them would complain.”

“Is that so? But still…”

If it was the previous Akira, he would silently and apathetically head back home. But the present Akira was slowly but surely starting to change.

From Alpha’s point of view, it would be troublesome if Akira turned into a kind person. To put it simply, if he turned so kind to go as far as to cover a total stranger without showing any hesitation, it might cause big trouble for her goal.

Even just now, Akira was giving the money that he could have to Sheryl’s men for buying equipment. It was okay if he did that as an investment, but if he did that without expecting anything back, then there was a need for Alpha to warn him. So she casually asked him.

“Say Akira. About the money that you’re paying for the gang’s equipment, is it okay if I think of it as debt?”

“Hm? Yeah, sure.”

“Do you think that you can get some profit from lending that amount of money? Is that why you lent them money?”

“…Well, what can I say, Carol also did say that selling relics is actually pretty profitable, and judging from how Sheryl served the people who came here, it seems that the shop should do pretty well in the future. So I thought that there should be some profit that I can get back… By the way, why did you ask me that?”

Akira was only giving random excuses, it did not seem that he was expecting to get some profit from lending that money.

Alpha smiled teasingly and said.

“To be honest, if you ask for my opinion, I would rather have you prioritize your equipment for the sake of finishing my request as well as to compensate for your skill. But I have no plans to force you.”

“Even if you say so, I actually don’t want to buy any equipment from Katsuragi. I only did that since I know that he would not help me unless I did that. I already spent 4 hundred million Aurum on equipment in Shizuka’s shop, that should be good enough for now. Well, it should be fine, it’s not like I can stay here forever to guard this place anyway, so just think of it as a small amount of money that I need to pay to take care of that problem. Don’t worry, I will get something back from it if we’re lucky. Well, putting my luck aside, Sheryl’s luck at least doesn’t seem bad. So I guess it should be okay to expect something good from it, right?”

“Is that so? Well, if that’s the case, then I’m fine with it too.”

Alpha decided that she needed to be more careful and keep reminding Akira regarding this small change of heart and his growing kindness, but she did not show that in her face at all.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 147, Methods To Collect Debt

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Alpha suddenly turned towards the direction of the door into the room, Akira noticed that and followed suit, there he saw Carol and Viola coming in.

Other people also noticed Carol and Viola. Both of them scanned the room, talked to each other for a bit and separated off, Carol went to Akira while Viola went to Katsuragi. Carol walked all the way next to Akira and smiled at him.

“I’m happy to see you again! What a coincidence, Akira!”

“You’re right, so, why are you here?”

“I just thought of killing some time talking with you, are you busy right now?”

“Nah, I’m not busy.”

“That’s good to hear.”

Akira was sitting on top of one of the displays originally used for the relics. Carol casually sat next to him.

Carol was wearing a bodysuit for fighting, it had a more tame design compared to the old-world design augmented suit that she wore back in the Mihazono ruin. But even so, it still pronounced her body lines, so for those who were not used to it, she looked rather seductive.

The fastener on her bodysuit was lowered so her cleavage was visible. The other people who were working there could not help but peek at that cleavage, but Carol did not mind them at all.

Akira then warned Carol.

“I don’t mind you sitting there, just make sure not to break the display.”

“Geez, I’m not that heavy!”

“It’s just that I had a fight here so the display might be damaged.”

“I see, I’ll be careful, by the way, my weight is a secret. If you want to know no matter what, I recommend holding me up while I have nothing on my body.”

Carol was smiling teasingly while Akira replied with a wry smile.

“No thanks.”

“You’re no fun.”

Carol smiled but seemed slightly disappointed.

The room was painted here and there with blood, empty cartridges were also scattered all over the floor complete with scorch marks from the bullets too, it only showed how fierce the fight was. Carol looked one more time around the room, she then smiled as if the scene did not bother her at all and said.

“But still, it seems that you had a pretty hard fight here.”

Akira awkwardly replied.

“It’s not my fault.”

Carol was a bit surprised by Akira’s reaction, she thought that he was someone who was not bothered by something like that. Although she did not mean to blame him at all, her wordings there might have somehow triggered him. So in order to not worsen his mood even more, she tried to defend Akira.

“Well, it’s true that it’s the attackers’ fault and not yours.”

Akira turned his face to Carol and looked slightly weirded out. He then noticed that she misunderstood his words, so he shook his head and said.

“That’s not what I meant, the room was cleaner after the fights. It’s because those people who came with Katsuragi dragged the dead bodies around and spread the blood, and used the sheets to mop the blood in the corridor which made the fight seem gorier than it originally was. That’s why it’s not my fault that the room looks like this. But well, it’s not like I was being careful to keep this room clean when I fought them either.”

Carol nodded.

“Ohh, I see, these guys are pretty naughty.”

“Naughty?”

“Yep, it’s just a small stupid trick, but it’s enough to trick some people.”

Akira tilted his head in confusion, he still did not understand what Carol was referring to.

When Carol noticed that, she smiled mischievously and asked Akira.

“Hmm, your face is saying that you don’t understand. If you want to know, I can explain it to you, of course, that is if you don’t mind me adding my guess there.”

“Oh, please do.”

Akira was interested, so he nodded without much thinking.

He was waiting for Carol to start explaining, but she did not say anything, she was only staring at Akira while smiling. Akira, who found that weird, frowned, that was when she said.

“If I ask for an information fee… What would you do?”

“Information fee…?”

“Information is not free, you at least know that much, right?”

“…Well, yeah, I do.”

Akira only replied awkwardly, Carol who saw that enjoyed his reaction.

From others point of view, it might look like Carol was teasing Akira and enjoying his reaction. But Carol tried her best not to show her real intention out on her face as she was observing his reaction closely.

Carol was trying to judge Akira’s personality and his way of thinking from how he reacted to that, whether he took that seriously, or he took that as a joke, or if he just laughed it off, or if he replied back trying to be considerate to her.

If Akira seemed offended or angered or anything similar to that, she would immediately apologize and carefully start her explanation to make sure not to worsen his mood.

Akira seemed to be thinking for a bit. Carol kept her eyes on him while waiting for his reaction.

Akira hesitated for a bit but he then said.

“…Well, it’s not like I want to know it that much anyway, so I’m okay not knowing it.”

Carol smiled bitterly.

“I was just joking, you’re a pretty serious guy.”

“…I just don’t like that kind of joke.”

Akira’s reply was rather brusque. Carol understood Akira’s character a bit more, she then smiled and apologetically said.

“I’m sorry, please don’t be angry. But I’m really happy to know that you’re that interested in me. As an apology, I’ll properly explain it to you, so cheer up, okay?”

“…Alright.”

Akira reluctantly nodded, it must be because he was interested in that subject and he thought that Carol was only teasing him.

Carol was able to infer a lot of things from Akira’s reaction, she then thought to herself.

[Akira doesn’t seem to joke that much, huh, or maybe is it that he doesn’t like to joke around money. Judging from his reaction, it might be both. I need to be extra careful not to make bad jokes when I’m trying to seduce him.]

Carol did not show her thoughts on her face, she was still smiling like usual as she started her explanation.

Katsuragi was trying to sell the attackers regardless of whether they were dead or alive, and he did not care whether they would be dead or alive in the near future. He wanted more than the peace money, so he planned to have them pay for the ‘damages’.

As for the attackers that were still alive, they would be put on a huge debt and made to work for a long time to pay for that debt. But in the eastern district, their contract would be invalid if they were forced to sign the contract at gunpoint. After all, that kind of contract was not allowed by the biggest authority power in the eastern district, the Corporate Government.

The Corporate Government had declared in the past that they would not allow any kinds of activity that might bring harm or disrupt the order and the peace in the eastern district. Regardless of whether they really put that into action or not, it was properly written in the rule. Rather than for the sake of anyone else, it was for their very own sake.

The definition of criminal in the eastern district was simply those who were against the Corporate Government. The Corporate Government would not do much when Hunters kill each other outside the wall, but if merchants or scammers started doing something suspicious, they would not show any mercy. That kind of bias was normal in the eastern district.

So, forcing someone into a debt without a good reason would disrupt the economy, thus, such actions were seen as an act against the Corporate Government of the eastern district.

Because of that, Katsuragi and his men needed to show the attackers that they had enough reason to force the attackers into debt which included the peace money. After all, they could not demand trillion Aurum peace money just because they tried to kill Akira and Sheryl's men.

And if their reasoning was good enough, they could get help from the Corporate Government to seize the attacker's properties. They could also ask for help from the Hunter Office that was handling their bank account. They could even sell the bond to the Hunter Office if all of the above things were not enough to pay for the debt.

The reason why Katsuragi and his men were making the room messier than before was simply to give a good reason to get the attackers on that debt contract. They were trying to pull up the debt nominal by taking a record of how bad the damages were.

After listening closely to Carol's explanation, Akira looked around the room one more time.

"…I see, so in that case, the worse it looks here, the better the profit that they could get, huh."

“The attempted robbery that caused the current situation, the criminals over there, the peace money, the reimbursement for the damages, and any other excuses that they could use to gain more money. I bet they are trying to squeeze as much money as they can from those attackers, both from the alive ones and the dead ones.”

“But is that really going to work?”

“Maybe. Some of them are really experienced in this kind of thing after all.”

When Carol said that, she pointed her finger at Viola who was talking with Katsuragi and some other people.

“That girl is Viola, and she… well, what can I say… She’s an expert in under-the-table deals like human trafficking and ‘resolving disputes’. I’m here because I was simply following Viola since I’m her bodyguard at the moment, I bet she got the news of this incident from her personal information web. I myself only know it since I heard about the incident from her.”

“Oh, it’s not like she’s one of the people that Katsuragi called to come here?”

“I’m pretty sure she came here uninvited, and they know well that Viola is powerful enough so that they could not just shoo her off. I don’t know what they’re talking about, but I’m pretty sure it’s nothing good. I know it’s strange for me to say this since I’m her bodyguard, but she’s a bad girl. It might be better if you keep your distance from her, you know? And that’s doubly true since you’re bad with negotiation.”

Carol was talking while giggling as if she was joking with Akira. But Akira understood that she was being serious there.

“Well, if you say so, I’ll be careful with her.”

“Yup, you should do that.”

Carol smiled satisfied seeing Akira nod firmly.

She was indeed being honest when she warned Akira. One of the reasons why she said that to him was to make sure that Viola would not mess with him.

Carol was in the middle of trying to seduce Akira, so it would be troublesome for her if Viola tried to mess with him.

The discussion was still going on between Katsuragi, Tomejima, Sheryl and Viola. They had different expressions as they were talking to each other.

Tomejima looked like he knew he was talking to a difficult opponent as he desperately refused to back down.

“…No! You came so suddenly and now, you want to buy all the attackers? That’s just too suspicious!!”

Viola smiled at Tomejima, there was a trace of confidence and intimidation in her smile that was adorning her beautiful face.

“Oh my, I only said that I can increase the profit by 50%, you know. I’m just giving a better offer here, it’s so rude of you to call me suspicious.”

“You bought that debt bond for 60% of the face value back then, like hell I’ll let you take this one away from me too.”

“That value was the price that both parties agreed to, right? If you really want it that much, I don’t mind selling it to you with a discount, you know?”

“…T-that is…”

Tomejima reeled back. He was talking about the debt bond for Kadol who tried to kill Akira. In order to avoid getting targeted by Akira, he sold that troublesome bond to Viola. Now that Akira just defeated 8 armed Hunters alone, that bond had become more troublesome than before.

Viola smiled and said to Katsuragi.

“So, what do you think? If you sell them to me, it’ll bring you more profit, yes?”

Katsuragi sounded slightly hesitant as he said.

“Even if you tell me so, I have my connection that I need to keep. I was the one who asked Tomejima to come with me. So as a merchant, I can’t just turn my back on him now.”

Tomejima confirmed that he got a vote of confidence from Katsuragi, so he raised his voice and said.

“That’s it!! That’s right!!”

“But still, 50% more profit, huh…”

“Hey!?”

Katsuragi mumbled as if to contradict what he just said before, Tomejima who heard that could not help but exclaim.

Viola understood that both Tomejima and Katsuragi were not easy opponents to negotiate against, so she shifted her focus to Sheryl and asked for her approval.

“What about you? I want to hear your opinion as both the owner of this shop and the leader of the gang here. As the head of the gang, which one do you think will bring more profit? And I’m not talking about just monetary profit here, you know?”

Katsuragi and Tomejima turned to Sheryl too. Although Sheryl was listening to their conversation, she was looking in a completely different direction.

Sheryl kept her gaze in one single direction, she was staring at Akira who was talking with Carol. Seeing how Akira seemed to be having a good time talking with another girl whom she knew nothing about, Sheryl could not help but feel something welling up inside her as she tried her best to hold it down.

Sheryl understood that if she obeyed that feeling, she would be taking a step closer toward her own destruction. Insecurity, jealousy, displeasure, fear, sorrow, sadness, these kinds of things would disrupt her ability to make a sound decision. If she ended up making bad decisions because of that, it might become a reason for Akira to abandon her. She kept reminding herself of that possibility as she kept doing her best to maintain her calm.

Katsuragi noticed that Sheryl was looking at Akira.

“Ohh, I see, it might be a good idea to ask for Akira’s opinion too, right?”

Sheryl tried to keep her calm as she replied.

“…No, I believe Akira has left this matter to Katsuragi-san. Even if we ask him, he will just annoyedly tell us to do whatever we want with them. I will also follow whatever Katsuragi-san decides. As for the talk about profit, I think the best decision here is to follow whatever Katsuragi-san and Akira decide.”

Now that Katsuragi was given the right to take the final decision, it made him even unsure of what to do there.

“Is that so? If that’s the case, then what should I do now…”

Viola suddenly said as if she decided to give up.

“It can’t be helped then. I’ll let Tomejima take those who are still alive and I’ll take those who are dead. How about that? It’s not like Tomejima could get them to sign on a debt bond anyway, right? Well, he might be able to if he tries, but I believe his real skill is not in that matter. I don’t think it’s a bad offer though, so?”

Katsuragi turned to Tomejima, who did not seem to be fully happy with that offer, but he gently nodded.

Viola who caught that smiled and said.

“We have a deal then!”

“…Humph! The only way to get profit from dead people is only to seize their properties, so it’s not like it can give you that much profit, right? Are you sure you can get 50% more profit with that?”

Tomejima sounded as if he said that out of spite, Viola just smiled confidently at him and replied.

“Well, there are many ways other than that one. But they are my trade secret. Later I’ll give a report to Katsuragi-san outlining how I plan to do that together with the money minus the handling fee.”

Katsuragi, Tomejima and Sheryl looked at Viola with different expressions. Although each of them imagined different things, all of them equally thought that it was nothing good.

They finally finished their business. All the attackers, dead or alive, were carried away ignoring their freedom. Those who were still alive were given minimum equipment as Tomejima’s men took them away, while the dead ones were stuffed into body bags and carried away by Viola’s men. Sheryl’s men were gathering the bloodied sheets, it seemed that it would take a lot of work to clean up the bloodied room.

While Katsuragi and his men had left the place, Viola stayed behind and came to Akira.

Viola looked at Akira with interest as she said to him.

“We meet again.”

Akira replied casually.

“Yeah.”

Carol was surprised to hear that short exchange.

“Oh? Both of you know each other?”

Akira quickly explained to Carol before she misunderstood something.

“I met her once when Shikarabe hired me for a job, that was also when I met Tomejima. It’s not like we know each other, it’s just that we have met before, and that was just once.”

“…I see.”

Carol replied back swiftly with that short reply. She believed Akira’s words. She did not let that just slide and use that information to make all kinds of guesses. Even Akira was able to notice that.

Carol showed that reaction only by knowing that Akira had met Viola before in the past although it was only for once. With that, Akira put Viola on the list of people that were not his enemy but he needed to be careful with.

Carol then stood up and smiled at Akira.

“Well, since Viola is done here, I’ll leave too. Akira, see you again next time.”

“Yeah.”

Viola then casually asked Carol a question.

“It seemed that you were having a good time talking with him, what were you talking about?”

“Well, a lot of stuff. Ahh, by the way, I did tell Akira about you too, I told him that you’re a bad girl.”

“Oh my, that’s so rude.”

Viola smiled mischievously at Akira.

“I don’t know what Carol told you, but just so you know, she’s more or less as bad as me. There are many men who got ruined because of her, so you better be careful of her.”

“Sure, I will.”

Carol, who heard that, faintly smiled and intervened.

“Geez, how can you say that? Well, at least, it seems that Akira was able to quickly see how bad you are. Well then, see you again.”

Carol only said that before she left the building together with Viola.

That was when Alpha smiled at Akira and said to him.

“So basically, both of them are bad girls, huh.”

“Yup, that would be the right conclusion. Well, I did kill 5 people without feeling anything much though, so I guess I’m not that good of a person either, right?”

Akira sounded as if he was admonishing himself, but Alpha just smiled like usual as she replied.

“I don’t think that’s true.”

“…Is that so?”

Akira awkwardly replied back as if he was trying to hide his embarrassment.

After that, he returned to Sheryl’s private room together with Sheryl since she asked him to.

Even after they returned, Sheryl did not change back to her usual clothing. She seemed to be a little bit bummed out as she was only standing there not too far from the door.

Akira found that a little weird, but since he was tired, he decided to just ignore that for now. He put down his stuff, sat on the sofa, and let out a big sigh. He then noticed Sheryl came in front of him.

She slowly climbed on Akira and sat on his lap, she then coiled her arms around him and hugged him from the front just like in the past. But there was something different this time.

Sheryl was Akira's fake lover, she used that position to hug Akira in the past. That time, Sheryl was smiling, she looked delighted spending her time together with her lover although it was in name only.

But this time, Sheryl's expression looked a bit dark, she seemed to be feeling cornered.

Sheryl rested her head on Akira's shoulder and squeezed on him. It was not a hug to draw in someone that she loved, it was more of a hug to cling to someone.

Although Akira was not skilled enough to read what Sheryl was feeling inside, he at least knew that Sheryl was not her usual self, in the bad meaning. So Akira awkwardly spoke to her.

"Sheryl?"

"…I'm sorry. I think I'm still shocked, the fact that I almost got shot back then finally hit me after I calmed down. So please let me stay like this for a while… If you don't like it, I'll step away."

Even in the eastern district where the public order was bad, even for the slum city resident where fighting was common, people would still get shocked when they were about to get shot and killed. So it was not right to compare common people with those Hunters who were used to that kind of thing. Akira reminded himself of that fact and accepted Sheryl's excuse without questioning it much.

"Ahh, I see. Well, you can keep doing that until you calm down."

"…Thank you."

Sheryl's voice was darker than before as she tightened her hug.

She was not lying, it was true that she was still scared after she was about to get killed, but that was not the only reason. She was more scared of Akira suddenly abandoning her.

Sheryl knew very well that Akira was not a kind person and it was not like he loved her either. Akira was not interested in her body, he also did not expect to get some profit from Sheryl's gang, he was not a part of the gang either. The only reason, excuse, motivation for Akira to help her out was nothing more but something as vague as a whim.

Sheryl saw Akira talking with Carol. Even to her, Carol was a beautiful girl who was wearing such a seductive outfit. From her point of view, it seemed like Carol was trying to seduce Akira.

It was only to be expected for Akira to be in contact with all kinds of people other than Sheryl and her men. Sheryl was evading that common sense until now.

Someone might one day seduce Akira and become his lover, that day might be as soon as tomorrow. If that happened, Akira might as well stop supporting Sheryl. Seeing Carol talking to Akira, trying to seduce him, seeing a beautiful skilled female Hunter doing that, it really gave her a kick of reality. It reminded her of the possibility that she had been avoiding recognizing until now.

If only Akira was interested in Sheryl, regardless whether it was her body, her heart, her position, her money, her skill, anything, it might give her a sense of security. If Akira asked anything out of her, she would happily give everything to him.

But unfortunately, Akira was not interested in Sheryl at all.

Sheryl was feeling insecure whether the current situation would still hold until her plan came to fruition, i.e. until Akira had another reason to support her other than just a whim. And in order to run away from that insecurity, Sheryl was clinging to Akira.

Not too long after that, Sheryl's men came to give their reports. She was a bit annoyed that she got interrupted. The children who came to give their report winced back as they gave her the report of the current situation including the treatment of the wounded gang members.

“…So then, the guy from the clinic told us to tell the boss to come to the clinic. It seems that he has something to talk about, like about the fee and other stuff too.”

“You did tell him about me and Katsuragi-san, right?”

“We did. But we carried a lot of wounded people there and some of them are badly wounded. So I guess there’s something he wants to talk about regarding that. So please, don’t let them kick the wounded out after they got treated just enough for them to stay alive. Those guys will have to work after this to stay alive, so please do something about it.”

“…Alright, I’ll go now. I’ll do something about it.”

Those boys thanked Sheryl and bowed deeply to her before leaving the room.

Akira was also planning to have his body checked up soon anyway. So he thought that it might be a good idea to get his body checked up in a small clinic first before getting a full check-up in a hospital.

“A clinic, huh? Can I come too?”

Sheryl was a bit surprised, but she immediately replied happily.

“Of course! I was actually planning to ask you to accompany me.”

“Alright then, let’s go.”

Akira then headed to the clinic together with Sheryl.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 148, Selling Corpses

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira followed Sheryl to the clinic, which was located inside the slum city. Although it was located outside Sheryl's territory, it was not that far from the base.

It was located in a particular area inside the slum where there was an unwritten rule among the residents not to cause any trouble. After all, if the clinic got involved in a fight, it would bring trouble to all of them. Also, even if the clinic was fine, it might refuse to treat them if they caused trouble there. Although it was an unwritten rule, it was effective enough to make people around the area obey.

When Akira saw the exterior of the clinic, he frowned and asked.

"…Sheryl, is this really the place?"

"Yes, it's this building… I understand what you want to say, but this is the clinic."

"… I see."

The clinic looked suspicious from the outside. Rather than a clinic, it looked more like a laboratory, weird devices were sticking out of its roof as if to say that they were doing questionable experiments inside. The dangling signboard was so worn out, the letters written on it were almost unreadable. But, it still could be read ‘Yatsubayashi’s clinic’.

Akira and Sheryl entered that clinic, a guy in a white suit was tending Sheryl’s men. He might be tending their wounds, but judging by the glowing liquid that he was using, it looked more like he was experimenting on Sheryl’s men. That man noticed Akira and Sheryl, he immediately went to Sheryl, whom he had asked to come to the clinic, and said to her.

“You’re here, huh. It’s about the medicine that I use… Hm?”

That man looked at Akira and felt like he had seen Akira somewhere before. He then lightly smiled and said.

“Oh, it’s you. Long time no see.”

But Akira did not remember that guy at all.

“Did we ever meet before?”

“It’s me, Yatsubayashi. I tended on your wounds back in the Kuzusuhara city, remember?”

When Yatsubayashi said that, Akira immediately remembered him.

“…Ohhh, the guy from back then, huh.”

“Now you remember. I heard that you got badly injured right after I tended to your injuries though. Thanks to that, the City Management intervened and I couldn’t use the data that I gathered from tending your wounds, you know?”

“It’s not like I can do anything about it even if you tell me so”

It seemed that Akira’s contract with Kibayashi to erase all kinds of records from back then had affected Yatsubayashi too. But it was not like Akira could do anything about it even if Yatsubayashi told him so, and in reality, Akira himself was not bothered by that.

Sheryl lightly bowed to Yatsubayashi and said to him.

“Thank you for helping us, so I heard that there’s something you need to talk to me about…”

Yatsubayashi looked at Sheryl and Akira alternately, he then lightly nodded and said.

“Nah, it’s not a problem now. It seemed that the guys your men brought in had been treated with some expensive medicine. So I just thought that if you have enough money to buy that kind of stuff, I want you to properly pay for the treatment, but it seems that’s not the case.”

Yatsubayashi thought that it would not be strange for Akira to easily pay for those expensive medicines to win some points from Sheryl. After all, from his point of view, Sheryl was beautiful enough for Akira to aim for her. He then smiled and said.

“Putting that aside, do you want me to charge more for the treatment? The more you pay me, the better the treatment that these guys will get.”

Akira flatly replied.

“I have no reason to go that far.”

“I see, well, that’s to be expected.”

It seemed that Akira was not really that interested in Sheryl. Yatsubayashi thought so when he saw Akira react that way, so he decided to stop offering more treatment. He then shifted to Sheryl.

“Over there are the people that I’ve finished treating. 2 of them ended up dead, but that’s not my fault. If you want me to take care of the bodies too, then you’ll have to pay more. If not, then take them home. While for those who are still alive, they should be able to walk back home by themselves by tomorrow.”

“I understand, Akira, I’ll go and check on them.”

Sheryl lightly bowed and left. Sheryl’s men who had already finished getting their treatments noticed Sheryl although some of them were still half-dazed. Some of them were already recovered enough to move, it might be because their injuries were not that bad, or it might be because the strange green medicine was pretty effective.

Akira suddenly casually asked Yatsubayashi a question.

“How bad were the people that you couldn’t save?”

“Hm? They got shot in their body and their organs were in a mess. They were bleeding pretty badly too.”

“Was that really that bad? I thought that level of injury is only a light injury, right?”

Yatsubayashi lightly laughed.

“That’s indeed the case for Hunters. You can’t just compare the injuries between Hunters and normal people. Normal people would die with that level of injury, you see. As for those who are still alive, even after they are left with nothing but their heads, they are mostly cyborgs. While those who are still alive even after they get cut into two are only alive because they use a lot of medicines to forcefully keep their bodies functional. Those people with enhanced bodies basically have a completely different level of resilience compared to normal people. So if you compare these normal guys with Hunters, they would die, you know? You gotta be careful about this difference.”

“Now that you say so, that’s kind of true…”

Akira smiled bitterly, he just realized how badly skewed his perception was.

Yatsubayashi then changed the subject.

“Well, putting that aside, since you’re here, how about getting some treatment too?”

“Ah, that’s right, I wanted to have a check-up. As for my injuries, I already treated them with my own medicines, so I just want you to do a normal body check up and also check the nanomachine leftover accumulated inside my body.”

“Just a check-up, huh. Geez, just to let you know, it won’t be free.”

“I know.”

Akira took off his augmented suit and did a check-up there. Just like last time, Yatsubayashi used weird devices to check Akira’s body. When he was doing that, it seemed that something picked his interest as he said to Akira.

“Say, are you trying to be superhuman or something?”

Akira asked back confusedly.

“Superhuman? What are you even talking about?”

“You were putting your body under immense stress while consuming a lot of medicines, right? And that stress was so immense that it more or less negated the healing effect from the medicines that you consumed. Do you have any recollection of doing something like that?”

“Well, I did fight a lot while consuming medicines to compensate for the stress from my augmented suit though. Is it from that? Is there anything wrong with that?”

Yatsubayashi sighed.

“So you don’t even realize that you’re doing it, huh. You’re really crazy.”

“What are you even talking about?”

“Although not many people realize it, the people of the eastern district would improve a lot only with a small amount of training, you see. Of course, the effect differs between people and there’s a limit on how effective it is. But some people have an abnormal level of growth, these people basically can throw a tank without any extra help, these people are what you usually call superhuman. But even those people can’t get that level of strength purely from training. After all, their talent only increases their potential the more they train, not their real strength, that’s why they need to do something else other than just physical training to obtain that strength. And one of those methods is to put your body past its limit while consuming powerful medicine. They do that to compress the training intensity as much as possible.”

Akira searched through his memories, it was true that he did something similar numerous times in the past.

“Is that even effective?”

“I heard so, but well, rather than doing that, it’s far faster to just modify your body or to just use an augmented suit though. So, unless you’re obsessed with getting that level of strength only with your body, no one would try to do that.”

“But, that kind of thing is a talent that you are born with, right? So I bet most of the people can’t do that even if they try.”

Yatsubayashi seemed to be having fun talking about that subject, it might be a subject that he was interested in.

“Surprisingly enough, a lot of people actually have that kind of body, they just don’t realize it themselves. Some theories say that those superhumans might be the descendants of enhanced people from the old-world era. As the story goes, some people tried to be superhuman by using technologies in the old-world era, much like how they did it in the past. On the other case, some people get their bodies modified before they even realize it because of the nanomachine that they keep using. Either way, that strength propagated to their children and then their children used new technologies to achieve the same thing. And basically, everything accumulated together.”

The old-world technology was at a level where it could redefine what it meant to be a human. As a matter of fact, the current people of the eastern district were created through the old-world technology, so they were, in a sense, old-world relics.

Because of that, relics sometimes cost a lot of money. For example, the people who can connect to the old-world domain were prized highly. And that worth would not go down until they completely analyze the cause and extract the technology from it.

“I even heard that some people from the central district call the people from the eastern district as mutants or even biological weapons. Well, looking from that point of view, it could be said that everyone in the eastern district is a mutant, and since we call biological monsters as monsters because of similar reasons, I can’t say that is wrong.”

Akira slightly frowned. The free food distributed in the slum city were free because they were not safe, they were filled with stuff that might cause mutation and Akira had been eating such substances for a long time. His body might as well have been mutated, although it was just not enough to kill him straight away.

“A lot of veteran Hunters have abnormal strength. Although they are not superhuman, they get pretty close to being one from all of the training that they have gone through. Well, of course, a lot of them died before they could reach that point, or just decided to enhance their body with a particular technology that has been fully analyzed, or lose their potential to be a superhuman because of an unexplainable reason even now, that’s why there are not that many superhumans out there. Personally speaking, I don’t recommend trying to be one too.”

“I don’t want to be one either.”

“Yep, if you want to get stronger, my recommendation would be to modify your body. So, want to try it? Although you can’t use any insurance for this, I’ll give you a big discount so that it’ll cost more or less like a normal treatment, you know…”

Akira swiftly replied.

“No thanks.”

Yatsubayashi clicked his tongue and looked slightly disappointed.

“You don’t need to be that wary. It would be fine, of course, I already checked that it’s more or less safe.”

“I want a guarantee, not ‘more or less safe’.”

“Isn’t the possibility of getting killed an occupational hazard for a Hunter? It’s less risky than exploring old-world ruin. And considering that it’ll give you a superhuman strength if it succeeds, I would say that it’s a very low risk.”

“Still no.”

Yatsubayashi sighed.

“I wonder why people hate it so much, they often commented that the outlook of this clinic looks so suspicious. Why does no one other than me find this old-world vibe interesting.”

Akira remembered the outlook of the clinic. According to Yatsubayashi, it was based off on old-world design. Now that Yatsubayashi mentioned it, Akira could understand his point. But rather than giving the high-tech vibe from the old-world, it still gave off a suspicious impression. Akira thought that it was normal for other people to think so too.

After Yatsubayashi finished with the check-up, he told Akira the result.

“Your injuries will fully recover in no time as long as you don’t do anything crazy. But as I thought, the nanomachine count inside your body is too high. I’ll prescribe you a medicine to clean it off, so make sure to take it. You can buy the medicine in another place, but if you buy it from me, I can give you a better one, although I can’t guarantee its safety. If you decide to take my medicine, I’ll put the medicine cost together with your checkup cost. The check-up alone is 10,000 Aurum, if you want to buy the medicine too, the total will be 100,000 Aurum.”

“I’ll take your medicine.”

“Thanks for the business.”

Right after Akira paid for his check-up and medicine, Sheryl came. She then thanked Yatsubayashi one more time before leaving the clinic together with Akira.

After Akira and Sheryl left, Yatsubayashi mumbled.

“The record says that he’s been using a lot of expensive medicines, it means that he’s earning a lot of money and I am always in need of more money for my research. It seems that he’s Sheryl’s lover, I wonder if I can get a lot of money from him through Sheryl… I guess I’ll think about it.”

Yatsubayashi was a kind person, he had saved the lives of a lot of people who would have died otherwise. But that kindness did not come for free. The biggest reason why he opened a clinic in the slum city was because poor people would be desperate enough to try something risky. In the slum city, it was relatively easy for him to test pretty dangerous stuff that would have originally taken a lot of money and time. Not to mention, no one would complain if some of them got killed in the process.

The slum city was the perfect place for those researchers who believed that small sacrifices were unavoidable in order to save many people.

After Akira took Sheryl back to her base, he headed back home. In the middle of the way, he thought of something and asked Alpha.

“Say, Alpha, about that superhuman thing though, do you think I can be one?”

Alpha smiled and replied.

“Possibility-wise, yes. But the success rate is too small that it’s unrealistic to change your training schedule just because of that.”

Akira seemed a bit disappointed.

“I see, well, I did expect that though.”

“It’s not like there’s any need for you to throw a tank solely relying on your physical strength, right? If you want to do that, you can just do that with an augmented suit.”

“Well, you’re right about that, but is that even possible?”

“It depends on the quality of your augmented suit. Let’s just hope that Shizuka would find a good one.”

“You’re right.”

Akira headed back home while looking forward to his new augmented suit.

__*__*__*__

That night, a truck was parked near the border between the Kugamayama city’s lower district and the wasteland. Two girls were standing next to the back door of that truck, they were Carol and Viola.

Viola was wearing casual clothing not recommended for combat, in contrast to her, Carol was armed to teeth.

Carol was way more armed compared to when she met Akira that day. She was using an augmented suit and carrying a portable heavy weapon. It would not be strange if she went to explore an old-world ruin in that state, but there was no mistaking it that she did not need that much firepower in the area where she was right now. Of course, that was excluding the case if she expected something to happen that needed her to be that armed.

Carol was checking the area around her with her information-gathering device when she suddenly threw a question at Viola.

“They should be here soon, right?”

“Soon, but not yet.”

“My information-gathering device hasn’t picked anything yet though, are you sure they can reach this place before the meeting time? Just so you know, if they don’t come on time, I’ll leave. I have no idea who are you dealing with, and I have no plans to get involved in trouble with people who can’t come on time.”

Those who could not come at the meeting time could not be trusted to uphold the result of the negotiation. Thus, Carol thought that it would be dangerous to negotiate with them.

Viola had her business face up as she replied.

“I’ll wait until the last second. And if they don’t come, then they’re the ones who scrapped the deal, so it’s not my fault.”

Viola then smiled and continued.

“…By the way, putting that aside, is your next prey that Akira boy?”

Carol smiled smugly and replied.

“That’s so rude to call him a prey. Call it investing in a prospective customer.”

“Geez, you would even go for such a young boy, you really have no integrity at all. Or did you change your principle or something? Or is that you see something special in that boy?”

“Age has nothing to do with it. You saw for yourself how strong he is from that fight against those robbers, right? So I’m not talking about potency, he’s pretty good even right now.”

Judging from how Carol responded, Viola knew that Carol did not target Akira out of a whim. So she thought of a plan based on that and made a suggestion to Carol.

“If age has nothing to do with it, then how about you go for that popular Katsuya? He should be around the age of that Akira. From what I heard, he did pretty well during that battle in Mihazono ruin, and the City Management seems to be interested in that boy too. Even some skilled Hunters in Drankam decided to create an anti-faction since they’re scared of his power, it’s the main reason why the gang is broken into factions right now. There’s nothing to complain about his skill and it seems that he likes girls pretty much that even his team is called Katsuya’s harem team. I’m sure it’s an easy thing for you to slip in. It’s your favourite thing, right? Money that these Hunters earned with their talents.”

Viola knew well about what Carol liked. So she tried to test if Carol would be more interested in Katsuya than Akira.

But Carol’s reply was rather ambiguous.

“Ahh, that guy, huh. I just can’t get interested in that guy, you see…”

“Oh my, is it that you don’t have the confidence to capture him? Don’t tell me that your skill in capturing men has gotten rusty.”

Viola tried to provoke Carol for a bit, but Carol did not show any change.

“Of course I’m sure I can do that, but… What can I say…”

“…? What is it?”

“I actually had a job to go to Drankam’s facility, I heard about that boy from back then and I did check him out too. To be honest, I don’t want to get involved with him. About that harem squad too, I feel like they’re going to kill me if I try to seduce that Katsuya.”

Viola found that a bit weird and asked Carol.

“Leaving that Katsuya guy aside, I don’t think the people around him can do any harm to you though, that harem squad is nothing but small fries to you, isn’t it? So why you don’t just go ahead and crush them.”

“That is if they’re really nothing but small fries… But that’s not exactly true, they’re… Uhh, rather than strong, they’re more like cult members?”

“Cult?”

“Yep, cult. Well, it’s not like all of them are like that. But I’m sure it’ll only gather more and more members with time. Just like you said, it’s already big enough to break Drankam into factions. So at this rate, probably, it’ll take over the whole gang. I have no plans to get killed fighting a cult, you see."

Carol sounded like she really hated that idea. Although she was already used to facing death since she was also a Hunter, she at least wanted to have the leeway to choose how she would die, and she hated the idea of dying to a cult.

"Aren't you the one who usually is more interested in that kind of thing? Messing with that kind of stuff is completely under your area of expertise, right?"

"I'll think about it."

Viola was smiling when she said that, even Carol could not tell what she was thinking.

Carol checked the time, it was already 1 minute past the meeting time. She still did not get anything from her information-gathering device. She then mumbled.

"As I thought, they didn't come, so it was pointless, huh…?"

Suddenly a signal was detected in her information-gathering device. Although that surprised her, she still reacted quickly to it, she immediately covered Viola and aimed her rifle in the direction where the signal came.

In the direction where she was aiming, a guy was standing, where there was no one just a moment ago.

That guy's head was made of metal, it was obvious from the first glance that he was a cyborg. He was using a black robe so it would be hard to spot him in the middle of the night. That man slowly walked toward Carol and Viola. His strong looking arm was carrying a single case.

That man must be the one who had the appointment to meet Viola. Although Carol hesitated, she eventually lowered her rifle.

Even when Carol was aiming her rifle at that man, he walked normally toward Viola as if it did not bother him at all.

Carol already lowered her rifle, but she still had her guard up as she cautiously said to that man.

“To be honest, if it could be helped, I would like for you not to sneak up on us though?”

“Sorry, we just don’t want to stick out. I was hoping you can understand that since we picked this place and time to meet. Moreover, I did remove my camouflage not too close to you, so I hope you can forgive us with that.”

In reality, that man was actually there even before Carol and Viola arrived. But he kept himself hidden under his robe.

That man stopped in front of Viola, placed the case he was carrying on the ground, and showed the money inside it. That case was filled with bills up to its brim.

That guy then said to Viola.

“Go ahead and confirm it, how about the goods?”

Viola pointed toward the back of the truck and said.

“It’s inside, you can go ahead and check it too. Don’t worry, it’s open.”

That guy left the case on the ground and went inside the truck to check the goods. There were five body bags inside the truck, they were the body bags of the robbers that attacked Sheryl’s base. That guy opened the body bags one by one and checked the bodies inside them.

While outside, Viola was checking the money inside the case. Carol tilted her head and looked at her, confused.

“…Is it really that profitable selling dead bodies?”

“Well, I can’t say for sure.”

“Don’t give me that, you’re the one who came up with the deal, aren’t you?”

“This is my first time too, you see. I have no idea why they want those dead bodies.”

Carol could not tell whether Viola was being serious or that she was just playing fool. Considering both possibilities and the fact that she needed to still get along with Viola, she decided not to ask any further.

Viola might really not know or she was telling Carol not to ask her. But she then continued.

“I can’t even tell if this negotiation is with him alone or he’s just a representative of a bigger group. I don’t know what they are going to do with the corpses, and I have no plans to find out either… Or at least that’s what I want to say, but seeing how he can easily break through your guard, I don’t want to ask now. If it was a common camouflage, you should have been able to spot him, right?”

“Well, yeah, we’re not in a thick colourless mist and the information-gathering device that I’m using is not cheap that it can’t detect common optical camouflage. Although it depends on the distance, even if he’s just standing still, as long as he’s breathing or as long as his heart is still beating, it’ll still trigger my information-gathering device. I was using such a powerful information-gathering device while watching the surroundings. I know that he was using camouflage and he is a cyborg, but it’s still surprising that I couldn’t detect him.”

The guy stepped out from the truck and said to Viola after he closed the door.

“I already checked it, there’s no problem. How about yours?”

“I have no problem too.”

“We have a deal then.”

“I don’t know if there’s next time, but if we’re going to do business again, just transfer the money, okay? It’s not easy for a frail girl like me to carry around this heavy case filled with money, you know?”

“Honestly speaking, I did this since I don’t want to leave a suspicious record in your bank account. I can still transfer the money if you want.”

“No, it’s fine.”

“I see, I’ll take my leave then. Just to be safe, let me remind you that it’s better if you don’t try to tail me.”

“Of course. As I promised, we’ll stay here for a while after we finish the deal. And also, you can just take the truck with you.”

The guy went to the driver’s seat and drove away, he was heading to the wasteland instead of to the city. The truck, together with that guy and the bodies inside it, disappeared into the darkness of the night.

Viola and Carol just stood there without saying anything while watching the truck leave. Once the truck had completely vanished from their views, Viola let out a big sigh. Although she was smiling and looked relaxed from the outside, she was actually pretty nervous during that exchange.

Carol also looked slightly relieved.

“It’s not like I want to dictate to you what to do and what not to do about your deals, but you won’t be able to stay alive for long if you keep making deals like this.”

Viola, who had regained her composure, smiled amusedly and replied.

“I don’t want you to tell me that when you’re working as a Hunter yourself. Although right now I’m the one who agreed to make that deal in this place and time, it’s still safer than exploring old-world ruin as a Hunter, you know?”

“Well, that’s true.”

Viola was indeed correct, Carol smiled wryly and gave that short reply.

After they waited there for a while, they returned back to the city in the car that Viola called.

The cyborg guy, who drove the truck with the dead bodies inside, drove away for a bit and stopped not too far away from the city.

He stepped down from the driver seat and went to the backside of the truck. He then dumped some of the body bags while they were still opened. He dumped 4 of the 5 body bags as if they were just trash.

As for the last one, he carefully picked that body bag and carried it outside. It was Zalmo’s body bag. That cyborg was treating Zalmo’s body differently.

When that man stepped out of the truck, someone called him.

“It’s me… Yeah, I’ve picked up our brother… Yeah, it’s no problem, I’ll leave the rest to you.”

It was a call through the communication device installed in that guy’s body, thus his conversation did not make any sound at all from the outside.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 149, Training Erio and Other Children

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira spent his day in Sheryl's private room again.

They decided to stop selling relics for the time being. The room that they used to sell relics was in ruins after the fight, so they were in no situation to sell relics anyway. Not to mention, many of the relics were destroyed during the fight, it might take some time before they reopened the shop.

Akira had been visiting the base regularly lately, but it was originally in order to guard the shop. And now that the shop was closed, he actually had no real reason to come to the base.

But even so, that day, Akira was in Sheryl's private room, he was there to calm her down. Sheryl was still traumatized after the shoot out inside her base.

Akira was alone in Sheryl's room, Sheryl herself was in another room, teaching some of the members how to read and write.

But it was not like he was not doing anything, Alpha was teaching him stuff and he sometimes played that game from before, which also served as training too.

Someone knocked on the door.

“Come in.”

The door opened, it was Alicia and Erio.

“If you’re looking for Sheryl, she’s not here. I think she’s teaching in the other room.”

Erio and Alicia looked at each other, their expressions were saying that they had made their resolve. After that, Erio firmly said to Akira.

“No, we have something we want to ask you.”

“Me? What is it?”

Erio then said to Akira with a serious face.

“Can you please train us?”

After talking about the details, it seemed that Erio wanted Akira to train them so that if another fight happened in the base just like last time, they could at least put up some resistance.

Erio and Alicia believed that training others would be an easy thing for someone as strong as Akira.

But of course, that was not exactly the case for Akira. Right when he thought about refusing it thinking that it was too much of work for him, Alpha suddenly interjected.

“I won’t force you, but if you’re okay either way, it might be a good idea to accept it, you know?”

Akira assumed that Alpha would be against it, so it was strange for Alpha to say that.

“…I don’t mind if you say so, but why?”

“If these guys can protect themselves, there won’t be any need for you to be here anymore.”

Although it was very unlikely, it was a precautionary step. In case Akira decided to come there regularly because he’s worried about Sheryl.

If Sheryl’s gang got stronger, it would reduce the burden on Akira. If they learned how to fight, Akira might be able to find a use for them. And with them under control, it would reduce the possibility of them affecting his decision like Sara and Elena, and he would not always need to accompany them to hunt for relics. That way, Alpha thought if something were to happen, it would be easier for Akira to just abandon them when needed.

“Moreover, it’ll be good training for you too. You did something similar before, remember?”

Akira remembered the time when he was in Higaraka residence ruin and replied.

“Are you sure it’ll be okay? It’s not like something bad will happen again like last time, right…?”

“It’ll be alright. We’ll not go that far away from the city anyway. Not to mention, your skill will get rusty if you keep spending your time inside like this. Considering that fight not too long ago, it might be a good idea to get you used to fighting other people.”

“I might sound a bit arrogant, but will fighting these guys really help me train in fighting against humans?”

“I’ll do something about that, so don’t worry. It’ll need a little bit of preparation for that though.”

“Well, if you say so, then okay.”

“It seems that it’s decided then.”

Akira listened to Alpha’s explanation for what he needed to prepare before replying to Erio.

“Alright. But I’ll need to prepare a few things first, is that okay?”

Erio was surprised, but he immediately thanked Akira.

“Really!? T-thank you!!”

“Thank you very much!”

Alicia also thanked Akira before she looked at Erio and smiled happily.

Akira who saw that found it a little weird.

“I’ll go out for a bit then. If Sheryl returns back, just tell her that I have some business with Katsuragi, and do tell her about the training too. You can tell me how many people will join the training later.”

“Of course!!”

Alicia replied happily.

Akira tilted his head, he still could not understand why Alicia and Erio were so happy. But he decided to just forget about it and left the room.

Erio and Alicia were left behind inside the room as they hugged each other.

Akira was a Hunter who was able to win against 8 armed people all by himself, he then even went and sold those robbers that he spared, and he did not hesitate when he killed the guy who did not want to get sold. This time, Erio and Alicia were able to get their request accepted without angering such a Hunter. It was great news for both Alicia and Erio.

Akira was indeed strong. If they could learn some of his fighting skills, Erio and the other children might become as strong as Akira.

Of course, there was also the difference between their equipment. But even back then when Akira did not have his powerful equipment yet, he was strong enough to be able to return back alive even after he dragged a dead gang member of a prominent gang in the slum city to that gang’s base. So even if they had different equipment, Erio thought that they might, to some extent, get as strong as Akira.

Erio and Alicia were still hugging each other as Erio said to her.

“… I… I’ll work hard and get stronger so that I can protect you myself.”

Alicia smiled happily.

“Erio, thank you.”

Erio was almost killed in the previous shootout. Back then, he had better equipment than the other children as he and the other children in the fighting squad tried to fight back the robbers. But the result was terrible, he got injured pretty badly. The robbers were able to neutralize them without much trouble. The reason why Erio did not get killed immediately like some of his friends was simply because of luck.

Fortunately, Akira gave Alicia an expensive medicine and she used some of that medicine for Erio, Erio’s life was spared thanks to that. In the end, Sheryl lost 8 people. If Alicia did not prioritize her lover, she might have been able to save one more life. Alicia did feel guilty about it, but she did not regret her choice.

When Erio was about to die and thought that there was no way he would be saved, he thought of Alicia in his fading consciousness. When his consciousness finally returned back, he found Alicia crying really badly while hugging him, that was when he made his decision.

Alicia understood that Erio made his decision not because he was close to getting killed, but it was because he did not want her to go through something similar again. She felt happy about that and made her resolve just like Erio did.

Both of them forgot where they were hugging each other out of happiness to the point that Sheryl, who had returned back to that room, was weirded out by them.

Akira went to Katsuragi's trailer and was talking with him.

Katsuragi was a bit surprised when Akira put in his order.

"I get what you want to buy. It's not exactly what I'm usually selling, but well, I don't really mind. It's not like we're strangers anyway."

"I'll be counting on you. As for the payment, just put it on Sheryl's tab."

Katsuragi sounded a bit dissatisfied when he heard that.

"Wait for a sec, that money is not for something like this, isn't it?"

"They're training equipment for Sheryl's gang."

"Even if you say so…"

Katsuragi seemed to have some objections. Akira then asked him a question.

"By the way, how much money do you think you'll get from those robbers?"

"Alright, I'll put it on Sheryl's tab, I'll tell them to hurry up with the delivery too, it was a good deal after all."

Katsuragi did not miss a beat when he said that, it seemed that he actually did not want to tell Akira the number. Akira question might have sounded like a threat to Katsuragi.

Akira then exasperatedly said.

"…I don't really care how much profit you get from selling those robbers, but make sure to earn the same amount of money from selling equipment, alright?"

"But of course, I'm a merchant first and foremost, you see. I won't do anything as despicable as tricking you and keeping some of the money from selling the robbers for myself. Plus, after that one incident there, I feel like Sheryl would finally become a proper customer for my shop. Trust is number one for merchants, so don't worry… I won't do something as nasty as tricking your lover. I don't want you to chase me to the end of the world after all."

Depending on how you interpreted it, it also meant that he would do that if Akira stopped supporting Sheryl. Akira looked suspiciously at Katsuragi.

Katsuragi decided to change the subject as not to worsen Akira's mood any further.

"By the way, I really hope you would start bringing relics to me, you know? So what's going on lately with that?"

"I'm in the middle of renewing my equipment with the money that I got from my last request. I'll be looking for relics again after I get my new equipment."

Katsuragi annoyedly said.

"That's why I'm telling you to buy that from me."

But Akira replied back casually.

"In that case, get good equipment for Sheryl's gang. If you get something good enough to make me want to change shop, I might as well think about it."

Akira thought that although he would consider it, there was a good chance that he would not change shop. Katsuragi also noticed that it was highly unlikely for Akira to change shop unless something big happened.

"I really wonder if you'll properly bring relics that you'll get next to me."

"It depends on what kind of relics that I'll get next time. Just hope that it would be something that would sell better in your shop."

"Make sure to bring them to me, yeah? Don't do anything cheap like selling them in Sheryl's place first and only bringing them to me if they don't sell well.”

“As long as it’s faster and I can get better money by selling them to you, I won’t do something like that.”

Katsuragi sighed.

“…Haaah, you were just a strong boy not too long ago, but you’ve been turning more and more like a real Hunter lately.”

“Thanks for the compliment!”

In contrast to Katsuragi, Akira seemed a bit happy.

Erio and some other children from Sheryl’s gang were waiting for Akira not too far from slum city. That day they were planning to go for training with Akira. Erio plus the other 8 children were waiting nervously for Akira.

One of the boys asked.

“Say, what are we exactly going to do for today’s training?”

The other children looked at Erio, who said.

“I have no idea either.”

That boy looked a bit surprised at Erio’s reply.

“You don’t know? But you’re the one who asked Akira-san to train us, right? Why don’t you know?”

“Shut up! There’s nothing I can do about it, I really don’t know. I was indeed the one who asked Akira-san, but it’s not like we talked about the details. I only heard from the boss later that Akira-san wants us to wait for him here.”

Another boy asked Erio another question.

“I heard that you and Alicia went to ask Akira-san directly. You guys did that without asking for permission from the boss, right? Is boss okay with this?”

“It’s alright. Akira-san is okay with it, and since it was Alicia and me who asked Akira-san, I’m sure Sheryl won’t get that angry. After all, both I and Alicia are pretty close to her. So it should be alright… maybe.”

Erio sounded a bit unsure there, so the boy could not help but panic a bit.

“Maybe?! This better be alright, okay? I don’t want to be dumped in the middle of the wasteland, you know?!!”

Erio got a little bit worked up as he replied.

“Oh shut up! If you don’t want the boss to get angry, then you better take this training seriously!! If you don’t take the training seriously although I and Alicia went out of our way to ask Akira-san, this time for sure Sheryl and Akira-san would get angry at you!”

“Y-you’re right.”

Erio got a bit worked up because of his nervousness and lashed out, which caused the young boy to wince back.

Erio did realize it himself that he was a bit more strung up than usual. He had made his resolve in all kinds of meaning, so it was understandable that he was not in his usual state.

When Alicia and Erio explained the situation to Sheryl, she seemed to be thinking about something with a serious face. Erio thought it was great that Akira accepted their request without any trouble, but if that was not the case, they would have been in deep trouble.

Erio had no idea what was Sheryl thought about the training. But at least for the time being, Sheryl was smiling like usual, and he hoped that it was a good smile.

Akira came with his vehicle right before the meeting time, he was also dragging a cart behind his vehicle. He then pointed at the cart.

“Get on.”

Erio seemed scared as he asked Akira.

“W-where are we going?”

Akira came with a vehicle, so it must be somewhere quite far away. It might be the Higaraka residence city, or it might be a big opening somewhere in the wasteland. When they thought so, Erio and the other children got a little nervous. It might be not that much of a danger for a Hunter like Akira, but it was a matter of life and death for the other children.

But Akira only gave a vague answer to Erio’s question.

“Well, it’s just somewhere around.”

It seemed that Akira wanted them to quickly get on the cart, so the children immediately started climbing onto the cart although they were still nervous. No matter where they were going, they had no other choice but to get on.

Akira stopped his vehicle not too far away from the city. The area was filled with stones, rubbles, crumbled down walls, and wreckages. He then stepped off the vehicle followed by Erio and the other children.

Akira pulled out a big heavy box from his luggage and put it down in front of Erio and the other children who were lining up in front of him. The box was filled with rifles for training and something that looked like goggles. Akira bought all of these from Katsuragi.

He then said to them.

“Put all of your rifles that you have right now in the box and take a goggle and a rifle each. 1 person will get 1 rifle and 2 magazines, the goggles might be a bit too big but make sure to use them too. I’ll tell you the details later.”

The children did as they were told. One of the boys noticed that the magazine he took was empty, so he reached for another magazine, but it was also empty. He realized that all of those magazines were empty.

He then cautiously asked Akira.

“Uhmm… The magazines are empty…”

“Yeah, it’s supposed to be empty. Don’t worry about it, just take 2 of them each.”

Since Akira said so, the other children obediently did so although they found it weird.

After they finished their preparations and lined up, Akira wearing the same goggle and rifle stood in front of them and started explaining.

“The training is simple, you guys just need to fight me. These rifles are modified AAH rifles and the magazines are empty, so it should be no problem. If you pull the trigger, it’ll calculate a trajectory line as if you really shot a bullet, then you’ll be able to see whether your shot hit or not. You can try pointing it at each other and pull the trigger.”

They looked a bit troubled but they did try to point their empty rifles at each other and pulled the trigger. Then the children that got shot according to the calculation were blanketed in red, and those who were got shot had their goggles that were originally transparent also filled in red. Erio and the other children were surprised and raised their voices.

Akira then continued his explanation.

“Once you get shot, quickly leave this place. Once I get killed, or if all of you get killed, we’ll return to our starting position and restart again… After that… Well, let’s give it a go first.”

After he said that, Akira repositioned himself away from Erio and the other children, so they flusteredly asked him.

“That’s it?! How about the strategy and other things too?”

“You’ll find out soon enough.”

Akira then left and vanished behind a wreckage.

Erio and the other children looked confusedly at each other when suddenly something came up on their display. It said that the training would start in 10 seconds, it was written in big letters.

Although they were surprised by that, the countdown did not slow down at all.

Akira was hiding behind a wreckage, Alpha was standing next to him just like usual.

Alpha was wearing an old-world battle suit. It had an extreme design for those people who were not used to that kind of design, it had a lot of openings that showed Alpha’s skin which would make anyone question its usefulness. If we focused on the colourful and complicated combination of materials that made that bodysuit, it looked like a very revealing swimsuit. The belt-like decoration was put in a certain place as if its main function was to make some of Alpha’s body part look more pronounced. It could be said that it was intentionally designed to gather people’s attention, or to be more sensual than being naked.

Of course, Akira had gotten too used to it that he did not feel anything, but something caught his attention as he asked Alpha a question.

“By the way, Alpha, you use that kind of suit since you want to stand out in case if someone can actually see you, right? So like, is there any need for you to do that right now?”

Alpha smiled and said.

“Oh, about that, I haven’t been doing that lately. It was basically to realign my wavelength with you, it’s also to narrow down the connection, so no one should be able to see me unless they have a similar wavelength with you. That’s why you’re the only one who can see me right now, you know?”

After hearing that answer, Akira curiously asked.

“…Then why are you still using that kind of suit?”

“No reason in particular.”

“Then change to something else.”

“No!”

Alpha was smiling as if she was teasing Akira. Akira looked at her with a troubled face, but she just ignored that and said.

“I’ll think about it if you’re so used to it to the point that you won’t lose your focus in the middle of the fight no matter how your opponent looks. Even a short pause could be fatal, you see. It’s indeed just training, but it’s still a fight, so focus on the fight and don’t let your guard down. Just imagine what would you do if a beautiful naked humanoid weapon suddenly attacks you while you’re in the middle of exploring an old-world ruin. Do you really think that it would change its appearance just because you ask it to? Or you’ll just continue fighting while still getting bothered by its appearance?”

Akira made a conflicted face, Alpha’s argument did not sound fully convincing. It was true that it was important for him to be able to keep functioning like usual no matter what he was facing. It was true that when he met Alpha, he was dumbfounded in the middle of the dangerous ruin where he could have gotten killed multiple times while he was dumbfounded. But if he was asked if Alpha’s argument was correct, he could not honestly say yes.

Akira sighed as he changed his focus. After all, he knew that he could not win in the argument no matter what, so he decided to ask something else that was bugging him.

“I did prepare all of those stuff following your instruction, but as I thought, I don’t feel like fighting these guys will provide me much training though. I’m indeed using a weaker mode for my augmented suit and it’s slowing me down a bit. I know I might sound arrogant by saying this, but I'm pretty sure I can quickly defeat them without much trouble, will this really give me some training?"

Akira was a trained Hunter, so he had the confidence to win against Erio and the other children no matter how many times they tried.

Alpha smiled and said.

"This is where you'll see how great my support is."

"No, I think I can win even without your support."

Akira looked confused, Alpha shook her head and smiled smugly.

"That's not what I meant."

At the next moment, Akira heard a bullet land right next to him. He was flabbergasted since he kept his eyes on his surroundings and did not find any enemies in the positions where he might get shot.

Akira immediately crouched and repositioned himself while checking his surroundings one more time.

"Gunshot?! Real bullet?! But from where?"

"It's alright, it's not a real bullet and that sound was also not real. I produced that sound by calculating where the bullet would land to make this training feel more real."

After hearing Alpha's explanation, Akira glanced at where the sound came from. He could not see the scorch mark that should have been there if it was a real bullet. It was indeed as Alpha explained, that sound came from Akira's augmented reality due to Alpha.

Akira sighed in relief after confirming Alpha's explanation, but his expression immediately turned grim.

“I see, thank goodness… Wait, no! Where did it come from!? How did I get surrounded!? My information-gathering device didn’t pick up anything though!?”

“If you’re talking about that, there was actually a faint signal, you know? Although, since you don’t have my support, it’s really hard to notice that signal. Moreover, if they hide in locations where it’s hard for your information-gathering device to reach them, it would be even harder for you to detect them.”

When Alpha was giving that explanation to Akira, another bullet flew by next to him and landed not too far from him, making a banging sound. Akira was sticking close to the ground while moving and looking for enemies, he spotted a boy aiming for him from behind a wreckage.

Akira immediately aimed his rifle at that boy, but before he could pull the trigger, that boy quickly took cover behind the wreckage.

Akira himself understood that his shot did not hit.

“He noticed me!? Did he evade that!? How? His response time is just too fast no matter how you look at it!!”

Alpha smiled amusedly.

“That’s because I told them beforehand to quickly hide after they take a shot.”

Akira frowned and looked at Alpha, he finally understood why she said that it would not be an easy win for him. So basically, his situation was reversed compared to the usual.

“So, as you can see, they’re the ones who have my support.”

Akira was fighting without Alpha’s support while his opponents had her support.

“Enjoy the training!”

Alpha only said that and smiled mischievously at Akira.

Akira thought that he was already surrounded, so he decided to quickly reposition himself.

[Alpha is supporting Erio and the other children, so basically they know my location all the time. I bet they also can see the trajectory line of the bullet in their goggles. I guess I have no other choice but to keep moving while taking cover at the same time. If I stop even for a bit, it'll be game over for me.]

Suddenly a barrage of bullets came from Akira's flank as if to confirm his guess. Judging from the sound, the barrage landed close to him. It seemed that the opponents were aiming properly at him.

Akira scanned through all the positions around him where someone could shoot at him, checked for any signals in his information-gathering device, and checked the area where he found signals. He kept moving to avoid getting shot, due to that, anyone who tried to shoot at him, whether it was only a haphazard barrage or an accurate aiming, would need to stay out from hiding longer to take a good aim at him. He also made sure not to move too much on a straight line so that they could not get a good aim on him.

Akira shifted his gaze from the wreckage to the young boy jumping out from behind it. He quickly aimed his rifle at that young boy and pulled the trigger more or less at the same time as the other boy.

Judging from the sound, the bullet landed behind Akira. Akira was able to evade that shot, but he did not know if his shot got a hit or not. Since it was not like he shot a real bullet, it would not be obvious if his shot really hit. He could not tell if that boy was lying down on the ground because he got shot or because he tried to hide.

He quickly changed his direction to that boy. If his shot did not hit, he wanted to use that chance to close the distance with the enemy, whose position he knew. He needed to finish that boy for good this time.

Akira moved to a position where he could get a good shot at the boy from before. When he peeked out, he could see that boy lying flat on the ground, he thought that it meant his shot hit him as he ran past that boy.

Right at the next moment, Akira could feel someone's presence from behind him. Akira spun around and readied his rifle, that boy from before was already standing back up and aiming at Akira, he was only faking death.

Akira pulled the trigger even quicker than that boy. That boy was surprised as he flusteredly laid back on the ground again. He confirmed that his goggle was filled with red colour as he did what they had agreed to beforehand.

Akira protested to Alpha.

"Alpha!! Is that really okay?!"

"Of course! No one said that they can't lie on the ground unless they get shot, right? It's too naive of you to think that the enemies won't fake death. If this was a real fight, there's also a chance that you only temporarily knocked them unconscious. So don't take your chance and make sure to shoot their head at least once."

"Alright, alright!"

Akira agreed with what Alpha said, but it still rubbed him the wrong way.

Two boys suddenly jumped out behind Akira, not giving him any chance to relax. Akira quickly reacted to it as he made a 180-degree turn and jumped sideways while at the same time returning shots at those 2 boys. But that action threw Akira off balance.

Akira cut through the air and landed on one leg, that was when 4 other boys appeared and aimed at him.

Akira knew that he was in a pinch, his brain automatically kicked to high gear as it boosted his consciousness. Inside that slowed down world, Akira fixed his posture to evade the bullets coming from those boys and made a full circle spin with his right hand still pulling down on the trigger.

He was able to evade the shots coming from 4 different directions while shooting back at the same time. He confirmed that his shots did hit, so he sighed in relief as he landed with his left hand on the ground, preventing him from falling over.

But the moment his left hand touched the ground, his vision suddenly turned red. Someone had shot him, it was a properly aimed shot. Although it caught him off guard, Akira immediately lied down on the ground.

Akira's vision turned back to normal. He could see Alpha pointing somewhere. Akira traced where she was pointing and saw Erio aiming at him. Erio was the one who shot him.

Alpha looked at Akira and smiled.

"It's my win, you still have a long way to go."

"…How much of that was your plan?"

"Of course, everything from the start to the end, all of it."

"…I see."

Akira pouted a bit when he said that.

He then stood up. Alpha pointed to where he was just before. Akira looked in that direction and frowned.

Akira could see his corpse lying there. Of course, it was nothing more than an image reproduced by Alpha. Akira's corpse had holes on its head, neck, body and limbs as it was bleeding very badly. Some of its body parts were drowned in blood or just simply shredded to pieces. It was the result if they were using real bullets.

During his training in the past, Akira had seen what would happen if he could not fight back a monster, and at that time, the place ended up being filled with the images of his corpse.

Akira mumbled.

“It has been quite a while since the last time I saw this. So basically this is what would happen if it was real bullets, huh?”

Although, to be more precise, in order for that to happen, they would need to use a pretty powerful bullet since his augmented suit also provided a level of protection for Akira, excluding his head. So it was still pretty accurate to say that a normal bullet would kill Akira like that if he got hit on his head.

Alpha smiled teasingly at Akira and said.

“So there you have it. Aren’t you glad that it wasn’t real bullets?”

“I can’t agree more.”

Akira smiled bitterly as he said that.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 150, Shijima's Disaster

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After they finished a round, Akira and the other children grouped up. They lined up in front of Akira, who looked a bit dejected as he said to them.

"So that's basically the gist of it, anyone has any questions? If not, then let's do another round."

Erio and his friends asked all kinds of questions, Akira answered them one by one while listening to Alpha's explanation too.

"We can see all kinds of things in the goggles, what is with that?"

"The training system is taking care of most of the things in the background. It's mostly focused on adjusting your movement as a group, but it also gives individual orders through your goggles. If you follow those orders accurately, you can learn how to fight. Next!"

"How do you know our locations? And how does it decide when one of us gets shot?"

"It's connected to the information-gathering device in my vehicle and it does calculations based on the data from your goggles and the aiming device of your rifle. Next!”

“The trajectory line from the muzzle sometimes vanished suddenly, what should I do when that happens?”

“Reload a new magazine. It’s properly counting the ammo inside your magazine, if your magazine is empty, the trajectory line would vanish. It’s so that you can learn to protect each other when you reload a new magazine. At the moment, it’s set so that you can still shoot for a while even after your magazine is empty, but I’ll have to change that soon. Next!”

“I can always see the location of the other people in my goggles, is this really effective as a training?”

“It’s only available to you guys, but not for me. I also don’t get that trajectory line nor the specific order from the training system. I’m basically fighting you guys while you guys know my exact position at all times. So use that advantage to corner me, or to sneak on me. Basically, follow the orders shown by the training system and learn how to fight from that. Although it’s impossible to know your opponents’ location anytime during a real fight, you can actually set a situation where you can do something similar to that. For example, if you install expensive information-gathering devices in all places inside the base and install a security system to support it, you should be able to get a similar situation. Next!”

There was no more question, so Akira decided to stop the Q.A session there.

“No more questions, huh? Then let’s do another round.”

But Erio flusteredly stopped Akira.

“Wait for a sec! So basically we’re the only ones who know your location all the time? And that’s not the case for Akira-san?”

No one was asking questions since they were shocked when they heard that from Akira. Akira then casually replied.

“Yeah, I don’t get anything like that.”

“R-really?”

“This won’t be much of a training if I don’t at least have that much handicap. Not to mention, we have different equipment too. Unlike you guys, I have my augmented suit and my information-gathering device. So without that handicap, it would be a one-way fight and that would not help anyone.”

Erio and the other children were dumbfounded. They thought that Akira could also see through rubbles and wreckages like them, they thought that Akira was also receiving instructions from the training system like them. But that was not the case, they had that many advantages, but even so, they were only barely able to win in an 8 vs 1 fight.

Without that much handicap, they would not be able to give any meaningful fight to Akira. Their difference in strength left those children in shock.

Seeing that no one asked anything more, Akira urged them to move on.

“So, no more questions? Let’s restart the training then.”

They finally snapped back to reality, then one of the children sheepishly asked Akira.

“…Uhmm, I can’t read the instructions, so what should I do?”

“…Just follow the indicators in the map and try to make a guess from there.”

Akira completely forgot the possibility that some of them could not read. It made him feel a bit conflicted remembering that he also could not read until recently.

They then had a few rounds after that, both sides fought desperately in each round.

Akira's victory ratio was 50%. Most of the rounds ended up either with Akira shooting down all of his opponents or Erio's side using one of the boys as a decoy to shoot Akira. Alpha adjusted the training to be like that. Akira suddenly asked Alpha a question while hiding behind a cover.

"But still, I didn't expect them to get this strong just by following your instructions. Although, unlike in my case, I bet they don't always move following your orders."

"You're right. After all, back in the Kuzusuhara ruin, there was a time when you took an action against my instruction, right?"

Akira remembered that blunder back in Kuzusuhara ruin and smiled wryly.

"I'm really sorry about that."

Alpha lightly giggled.

"Well, I do all kinds of adjustment in the background though. For example, when I give them an instruction to go right, they would need to read that instruction, understand the instruction and check if it's safe first before actually following that instruction. So if they take 10 seconds to go through this process, I'll adjust it to show that instruction 10 seconds earlier before it's actually needed. That way they'll move much more efficiently."

"…You're even doing something like that, huh. How did you know that it'll take 10 seconds?"

"Through a lot of different methods. For example, I measure the lag between when I send an instruction into their goggle until they actually execute that order. I also do other adjustments depending on the psychological state of the receiver, how nervous or tired they are, or if they're in a dangerous situation, or how difficult the order is."

Akira nodded in amazement.

"I see, that's really a lot of things to consider and adjust… Well, your support did help a slum city kid who recklessly went to Kuzusuhara ruin to look for relics to return alive, and that boy is now doing pretty well as a Hunter. So I guess it's only to be expected for you to be able to do that much, huh?"

"Yup, that's true. Aren't you glad that you got to meet me?"

"Yeah, I'm really grateful to you. I'll return back the favour by completing your request, so wait patiently until I can do that, okay?"

Although Akira sounded like he was being cynical, he did not lie. He really felt thankful to Alpha and he was planning to complete her request no matter how long it would take him.

Alpha could see through him and smiled satisfied.

"Yup, I'll be counting on you."

"By the way, how strong are they now since they have your support?"

"Remember back then when you saved Elena and Sara in Kuzusuhara ruin? They're basically slightly weaker than you from that time. Although, that's only true during this training."

"…All of them as a whole?"

"Nope, each one of them."

"…No wonder why I'm having a hard time here."

After all, he was fighting enemies who were as strong as him from that time, and not to mention, it was in an 8 vs. 1 fight. Although Akira smiled bitterly, he also felt slightly happy since the fact that he could fight them well meant that he had grown pretty strong.

Erio and the other children kept their distance from Akira as they were trying to surround him. The fight had not started yet. Previously, right after the fight started, Akira would immediately focus on those who had not moved much and take them out first before taking out the rest of the enemy.

Since that had happened several times, they decided to only start the fight after Erio and the other children had finished repositioning themselves.

Instructions were sent to the goggles, Erio read the instructions shown in his goggles.

"'Starting from this fight, if you shoot from a bad position, we will void your shot considering the kickback from shooting from a bad posture', huh? Then how should I carry my rifle?"

Erio looked at his rifle. The trajectory line from its muzzle had vanished. Right when he was confused about what to do, his goggles shown an image of someone carrying a rifle. So he imitated that image.

"…Like this?"

Erio used both of his hands to grip tightly on his rifle, right on the next moment, the trajectory line extended out from its muzzle. He then tried to carry his rifle with one hand again, and just like last time, the trajectory line vanished again.

"So basically I need to properly carry it with my both hands, huh? But I remember Akira shot with only one arm and in a very bad posture though… Ahh, I see. It's because he has his augmented suit so that he can properly stabilize the kickback with only one arm, huh?"

After that, the goggles also showed all kinds of other shooting postures which Erio tried. Since the trajectory line only came out when he took the correct posture, it helped him to learn how to correctly carry his rifle.

Erio looked at the other children, it seemed that they were also trying to imitate the postures shown in their goggles. Looking at that, he thought that they looked completely like a group of amateurs. The other children must have thought so too when they looked at each other.

"…It seems that we still have a long way to go, huh."

Erio had made his decision to train himself so that he can be strong enough to protect his lover, Alicia. Back then when he won against Akira for the first time, he thought that it might be not as difficult as he thought it would be, but right after that Akira won 4 times in a row.

Erio fully recognized his weakness and admitted that he had a long way to go. He let out a sigh as he felt really pathetic, he then remembered about his lover and resolved himself once again. He had already made his decision, things like this would not break him.

The battle started, Erio ran as fast as he could.

Right about the time when Akira and the other children were training in the wasteland. Somewhere in the lower district of Kugamayama city, Shijima put both of his hands on his head in frustration.

Shijima was the boss of one of many gangs in the slum city and his gang once had an incident with Akira. A guy from his gang by the name of Wataba once went to Sheryl's base and threatened Akira to give up Sheryl's base.

Wataba was killed in Sheryl's base by Akira. Then Akira dragged his corpse all the way back to the gang's base. They were in a situation where they were just one step away from a fight.

At that time, Akira said that with his current strength, Shijima and his men might be able to kill him, but Shijima himself would die too. So in the end, they were able to reach a deal where Shijima could still uphold his reputation by making Akira pay him some money.

Not too long after that, there was no further problem at all. Shijima originally planned to take over Sheryl's gang if Akira died due to the dangerous nature of his job as a Hunter, but Akira was able to survive and was doing fine. So Shijima did not make any big moves. The most that he could do was only visiting Sheryl's base from time to time to check if Akira was still alive.

Then one day, a certain Hunter caused trouble inside the gang's territory. That Hunter was causing a ruckus since he was being chased by someone.

Gangs in slum city like Shijimas' were also functioning as guards in the area. So if someone armed caused trouble in their territories, it was crucial for them to deal with that person with force. If they ignored something like that, it would not only damage the protection money income that they were receiving, in the worst-case scenario, it might cause other gangs to look down on them and attack them.

Normally, Shijima would demand compensation money from these troublemakers and let them go. He was willing to negotiate if it was needed, but he rather not if he was given the choice. It was important to let people know that they had the ability to take care of these trouble makers. So if those Hunters paid him with money, then that would be enough.

Shijima usually checked the identity of the Hunter before dealing with that Hunter. That was when the real problem arose, that Hunter was Akira.

Shijima was being careful of Akira. It was not because of Akira's strength, but it was more because of his unstable personality. After all, he once came to Shijima's base fully expecting a fight. For people who did not want to die, someone who did not hesitate to challenge anyone even if he or she was weaker, like Akira, was someone that they needed to be careful with.

But for the sake of the reputation of the gang, he could not afford to just let Akira go. While on the other hand, it was not worth trying to provoke him since it was almost certain that he would fight back. Shijima just did not know what to do with this single Hunter.

That was when another information reached Shijima; Akira was a careless person who let his wallet get stolen and he was a coward who ran away when another young Hunter threatened him. It was a piece of information that destroyed Shijima's image of Akira.

After hearing that, Shijima was even more confused than before. It was either his mistake for being careful of Akira, or it was because Akira's behaviour changed after he was about to get killed somewhere in the wasteland, or maybe the information that he received was simply wrong information. Shijima could not decide which one was the correct guess.

So in the end, Shijima asked Viola to investigate more about Akira. He knew well about how bad Viola was, but he had also heard how skilled she was. He also heard that he would not have any trouble with her as long as he did not antagonize her. Viola was able to finish that request in a short time.

Then, right now, the reason why Shijima was so frustrated was because he was listening to the result of that request from Viola herself.

Shijima shouted at Viola who he was talking with through his information terminal.

“Goddammit!! Are you kidding me!? What the heck is going on? Explain everything to me!! All I asked is to get some pickpocket to aim for him to poke for his reaction!! So how in the world did it turn into sending an armed group to Sheryl’s base!?”

In contrast to Shijima, Viola replied calmly.

“Good grief, calm down for a bit, will you? Although the situation went out of control, it was enough to give a good result for our main objective to check for his response, right? Not to mention, you did say you’re not fully satisfied with only doing that, right? So we might as well consider ourselves lucky here.”

It was Viola’s job to spread information to the information brokers all over the slum city that Akira was an easy target for pickpockets. The original request for that came from Shijima, he did that to check how Akira reacted to pickpockets.

But Viola’s calm answer only caused Shijima to get angrier.

“Lucky, you say?! Then how in the world did that attack get connected to me!? You’re the one who provoked them, right?! I have nothing to do with them!!”

“Geez, can you stop accusing me? I have nothing to do with those robbers too. I just spread that information like you asked me to. Then those robbers chose to attack Sheryl’s base using that wrong information as the basis of their decision. I spread that information because you made a request to me. Just think about what would happen if Akira discovered that. Akira might misunderstand and think that those robbers attacked Sheryl’s base because of you. I’m just reminding you of that possibility here. It’s true that you’re aiming for Sheryl’s base, right? And it’s true that you want Akira dead too, right? You have no connection to the robbers and it was not like you paid them to attack Sheryl’s base either. I’m just telling you here that I can’t say for sure if Akira would believe that, you know?”

Shijima’s face turned grim, it was because he understood Viola’s point. More than that, he also knew that there was a good chance Viola had done something to make Akira misunderstand the situation. So in short, if Viola wanted to, she could have manipulated Akira and Shijima to fight each other.

Shijima already knew Akira’s strength since he heard about that from Viola herself.

Akira once completed a request in Kuzusuhara ruin that earned him more than 10 million Aurum. He also successfully hunted a bounty monster. He then went to Mihazono ruin’s Seranthal building which even the City Management judged to be a dangerous place and returned back with 50 million Aurum. And not too long ago, he killed 8 armed Hunters all by himself. Viola had gathered all of those proofs of Akira’s strength before sending them to Shijima.

Akira was already too strong for Shijima to handle. The current Akira was strong enough to decimate Shijima’s gang while having some leeway. Messing with the current Akira would be very risky.

Shijima’s expression was more of desperation than anger, his voice also reflected the same thing.

“…S-so, what do you want?”

But Viola just smiled and casually replied with something unexpected.

“Oh my, I didn’t demand anything from you though? We’re only talking here since I want to give you my report for your request plus some extra service based on my policy to hold my customers dear. So, was it useful information? Normally, you would need to pay to get information like that, you know? Or is that you prefer not to know anything? Was it something that I shouldn’t have done? I’m sorry if it was, I’ll make sure not to do that again next time.”

Shijima was about to retort, but he closed his mouth and gritted his teeth, trying to hold back his anger. He then tried to calm down as he said.

“…Thanks for the information. As a gratitude, is there anything that we can do to help you?”

“Oh my, it would be such a waste if you would even go that far. In that case, I might as well ask you one thing.”

Shijima could hear Viola’s happy voice coming from his information terminal as that bad girl explained her evil plan. Although if it was from her voice alone, Viola had a very appealing voice. But that did not help in this case, Shijima only accepted her request because he did not have much choice.

“So then, until next time.”

“…Yeah, I’ll be counting on you.”

Shijima closed the call and immediately yelled as hard as he could.

“Goddammit!!”

Shijima’s voice echoed through the base.

***

Akira did not exactly plan the training duration, but since it seemed that Erio and the other children were getting tired, he decided to stop the training.

Erio and the other children received notification in their goggles and heard Akira's voice telling them to stop the training there. They were all really tired as they sighed in relief at the signal saying that they could finally relax. They used their rifle as a walking staff to help them drag their feet back to where Akira parked his vehicle.

Before Akira returned back to his vehicle, he looked around and said in disappointment.

"…I died quite a lot this time."

Akira could see countless corpses of himself scattered around the ground. Only he and Alpha could see those corpses, they were the results of his blunders during the training. He would have ended up as one of those corpses if this wasn't just a training.

Akira's face looked pretty dejected by the fact of how pathetic he was, so Alpha tried to cheer him up.

"Well, that's just how it is. Considering that the other party had my support, I think this result is not bad at all."

"…I see… Wait, is that so?"

"Yep!"

Although Akira sounded like he was still questioning it, Alpha replied with a confirmation. She answered back so firmly that he did not have much choice but to accept it.

Alpha then smiled smugly and said.

"Or is it that you have something to complain about since my support cornered you this much?"

Akira replied back swiftly.

“No, I have no complaint.”

“Thought so.”

Alpha smiled satisfied.

Akira then decided to move on.

“You’re right, your support always helps me a lot. Thank you. let’s head back now.”

On his way back to his vehicle, Akira remembered something and asked Alpha.

“…By the way, I think it worked well as a training for me, but how about for Erio and the other children? How is their fighting skill? Did they get better?”

“Well, although it didn’t work out that perfectly, they did receive some training from me. So they’re at least stronger than yesterday. Training-wise, I think it was more effective than if they’re doing their own training. Let’s keep on doing this training so that Sheryl’s gang would get more fighting power, that way they would not bother you that much.”

Akira then remembered Erio and the other children who were so tired after the fight that they looked like they would faint anytime.

“…To be honest, I’m not sure if they would come for another training though.”

“When that happens, we can just ask for Sheryl’s help. I’m sure that she won’t say no.”

“…Well, that’s true, but still…”

It was not a bad idea for Sheryl’s gang, so it was very likely that Sheryl would say yes to that. Moreover, Erio and the other children could not say no if it was an order from Sheryl. After all, if they did, Sheryl would kick them out from the gang.

Akira felt a bit sorry for Erio and the other children.

After they finished their training, all of them returned to Sheryl's base. In contrast to Akira who seemed still full of vigour, Erio and the other children looked so tired as if they were forced to do long-hour labour work. Seeing that, Sheryl's men could not help but feel scared.

Sheryl told them to take a rest before she headed to her private room together with Akira.

Akira gave a small explanation to Sheryl about the training and said.

"…Well, so that's the gist of it. I'm thinking of doing this training regularly. The equipment that we used for the training is paid with the money from back then when we had that deal with Katsuragi. I think it's a good idea to use that money for something like this. If you ask me how is it useful to me, it also serves as a training for me."

Sheryl smiled happily and said to Akira.

"Thank you very much, I'm sure Erio and the other children would be happy too."

Akira questioned for a second whether Sheryl said that because she knew that was true for sure, or because she only guessed that it was true, or because she only said that as not to worsen his mood, or because she knew it was beneficial for her gang to say so.

Akira looked at Sheryl more intently than usual. She was smiling at him, to Akira, it did not seem that she was only acting, and even if it was, he did not have the skill to notice that.

Sheryl realized what Akira was trying to do there, so she confusedly asked him.

"What's wrong?"

"No, it's nothing."

Akira decided not to let that bother him too much. It was up to Sheryl and her gang whether to continue the training or not, it was not something for him to worry about.

Sheryl observed Akira's reaction carefully. She understood that he had something in his mind but he decided to just stop thinking about that.

Just to be safe, she reevaluated what she just did there.

[…I'm sure I didn't say anything that might offend Akira. It should be alright… Is it better if I ask him what he is thinking about? No, Akira said that it's nothing, so it might be better not to ask him..]

Sheryl still had her usual smile on her face as she thought about a lot of things in the back of her mind on how to make sure not to offend Akira, make him like her, and make him keep supporting the gang.

Sheryl then said to Akira.

"There's something else that I want to talk about, I got a call from Shijima. He said that he wants to meet me and Akira. What should we do?"

"Shijima? Who's that?"

"He's the boss of another gang. He's the boss of a gang that you once visited.

"Ohh, that one? If it's about gang business, you alone should be enough, right?"

"No, he specifically asked to meet you sometime soon."

"Why?"

"It's just my guess, he might want to check if we're okay after that shoot out in the base. I believe he wants to confirm that we're not trying to hide if you or I are wounded or killed."

Akira agreed with Sheryl's guess.

“Ahh, so it’s about that, huh.”

If he refused without a good reason, Shijima might think that Sheryl’s gang had lost Akira’s support and that would definitely cause more troubles later. If it was possible, Akira wanted to avoid any trouble until his new equipment arrived. Unlike last time, Shijima would not look down on Akira and think that Akira was just a common young Hunter, so this time for sure he must be properly prepared for him. When Akira concluded as such and thought of having to fight the force that Shijima prepared, he exasperatedly said.

“…I’m tired today, so how about tomorrow?”

“Very well, I’ll tell him so.”

Sheryl thought that Akira said so simply because he was tired. She did not think that Akira also thought about the possibility of fighting Shijima’s gang. It seemed that there was still a gulf between his and Sheryl’s way of thinking.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 151, Viola’s Plan

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Tiol was walking through the slum city in the middle of the night. When he arrived at his destination, he readied his rifle and stormed through a broken door. The flashlight equipped on his rifle provided vision in that pitch-black room as he checked all 4 corners of that room. But he found no one, he clicked his tongue and took out his information terminal, immediately made a call with a grim face.

“Hey! She’s not here either! All the information that I got from you are false, aren’t they?! Are you sure that information that she’s living here is correct?”

A woman’s voice came out from Tiol’s terminal. Unlike Tiol who sounded desperate, that woman’s voice was the exact opposite.

“Well, she should have been there at least a week ago. Freshness is important for information, it’s normal to encounter something like this out of old information.”

Tiol’s face twitched with anger, he then shouted at his terminal.

“It’s normal to encounter something like this?! Are you kidding me? You do know the situation that I’m in, right?”

Not being concerned about Tiol’s anger, that woman replied with a light threat.

“I’m not kidding here. In the first place, are you taking this seriously? You didn’t pay anything and demanded me for information, then to top it off you still complain to me? Don’t get ahead of yourself! In all honesty, I don’t really care even if you die.”

That was enough to immediately shut Tiol down. He sounded scared and desperate at the same time as he said.

“I-I’m sorry… But I did explain to you my situation, right? I’m in a really bad situation, I was the one who brought those attackers to the base, you know!? In the worst-case scenario, I might get kicked out of the gang! So if I can find and drag that pickpocket who Akira is looking for, I might be forgiven. Otherwise, this is really really bad!! Dammit! Why did this happen to me…”

Tiol was pulling his hair out. But then the woman gently said to him as if to cheer him up.

“Just keep following my instructions from here and on. If you do, I’ll give you some good info.”

He replied as if he was begging that woman.

“Please, I’m relying on you, this is my only hope.”

“Well then, for now, just look around the room. You might be able to find some clues about where she’s living now.”

“Alright.”

Tiol started searching the inside of the room just as he was told to. He did not notice that he was actually being used.

***

Akira and Sheryl went to Shijima's base since Shijima said he wanted to meet Akira.

Sheryl was wearing her refitted old-world dress while Akira was in his augmented suit and was fully armed. They looked much different compared to when they came there for the first time.

The guards who saw Sheryl and Akira approaching the base could not help but feel nervous. Both of them showed that they had the money and the power. That guard was originally still looking down on Sheryl and her gang, but seeing them now, he could not afford to look down on them anymore.

That man kept his guard up as he said.

"Akira and Sheryl, right? Boss is waiting inside, I'll take you to him. But I'll need you to leave your weapons with us."

Akira swiftly replied.

"No."

That man frowned and tried to intimidate Akira.

"We're not kidding here."

Akira did not wince back at all, he just casually replied.

"Neither am I. I keep getting attacked lately, so I'm being more careful than usual at the moment. Sorry."

That man scanned Akira's equipment once more. AAH and A2D assault rifles were dangling on his waist, while on his back, he was carrying CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun. He obviously did not come in peace.

That man could not help but to make a grim face when he imagined the damage that would result if the gang fought Akira.

“…Good grief, you came here with all of those weapons, are you planning to fight us or something?”

“No, I have no intention to fight any of you. Although, it’s completely out of my control if something were to happen that might cause a fight.”

That man gave up trying to convince Akira and shifted to Sheryl.

“Are you really okay with this?”

Sheryl seemed a bit troubled as she replied.

“Since Akira said no, it’s not like I can do anything to change his mind. And he is here to protect me too. So if you say that we can’t pass unless we give up our weapons, then it can’t be helped, we have no other choice but to leave.”

The man clicked his tongue.

“…Wait here for a bit.”

He then went into the base, gave his report, and returned back to Sheryl and Akira.

“Boss said that it’s okay. Follow me, and don’t try anything funny.”

Judging from that guard’s face, it seemed that they actually did not want to let Akira and Sheryl into the base.

Akira and Sheryl were guided to a big guest room, Shijima welcomed them with a suspicious smile.

“Thanks for coming, come and sit.”

Sheryl went and took a seat on the sofa, while Akira stood near Sheryl and scanned the room, registering everyone inside the room in his mind. He could see there were some people behind Shijima and they were all armed.

Shijima noticed what Akira was doing there and said to him.

“Don’t worry, it’s just to be safe. And since you’re armed too, I won’t accept any complaint, okay?”

“…It’s fine.”

Akira saw some familiar faces among them, it was Carol and Viola. Carol was fully armed too, she smiled at Akira and lightly waved at him, while Viola was sitting casually next to Shijima.

Sheryl saw that small exchange between Akira and Carol. She tried her best to hold the emotion that was welling up inside her as she barely kept her calm and her usual smile.

Sheryl then asked Shijima a question.

“So then, what kind of business do you want to talk about today?”

“Well, first things first, I heard that some people attacked your place. I’m glad that both of you are okay.”

“Thank you for your concern… We lost some people too, so I can’t really say that we’re totally fine. But thanks to Akira, I believe that the damage was kept to a minimum.”

“Selling relics is really profitable after all, so it’s no surprise that some people would target you. And also, it seems that more and more people are gathering around your territory. If your gang that is maintaining order in that area is gone, it would cause trouble for us too. So I’m glad that you’re fine.”

Shijima and Sheryl sounded like they were talking about mundane stuff from the outside, but behind that, they were actually probing each other’s real intentions. They were trying to probe for reactions when they brought up different subjects and then they would guess each other’s intention judging from the reactions they got.

Akira thought that if it was only mundane stuff like that, they could just talk about it through a call. He did not think too deep as he was listening to their conversation, but after Alpha explained what was going on between those two, he lightly nodded.

“…I bet they’re trying to do something like that at the moment.”

“…So gang bosses need to be able to even do something like that, huh?”

“Both of them are maintaining the outside and the inside of the gang with power after all, so it’s important for them to be careful. Especially for Sheryl since her gang got attacked. Although she has you supporting the gang, there’s a need for her to take care of the aftermath. As for Shijima, I bet he thought that Sheryl’s gang was nothing but a small weak neighbouring gang. But then that gang has started selling relics and earning enough money to even get targeted by robbers. And if you have money, you can hire people and get good weapons. So in this case, it would mean that the gang that Shijima thought of as nothing suddenly transformed into a well-growing and expanding gang. So it’s understandable for him to get information on that gang.”

“…Being a boss for a gang sounds like a lot of work.”

Akira mumbled as if it had nothing to do with him when most of Shijima’s and Sheryl’s worries were mainly caused by him. It seemed that Akira simply did not know about that at the moment.

Sheryl and Shijima spent some time talking about mundane stuff while probing each other’s intention, that was when Viola suddenly interjected.

“It’s all good and fine if both of you want to build up your friendship. But it might be a good idea to get into the main subject soon.”

Shijima frowned and made a grim face, he looked at Viola without saying anything as if he was reproaching her. Sheryl seemed a bit confused while she was checking Viola and Shijima. In that situation, Viola was just smiling confidently there.

Viola still looked rather relaxed when she continued.

“If it’s hard for you to bring it up, I can explain it in your place, you know?”

Shijima took a small pause, it seemed that he had to make his resolve before replying.

“…Alright, go ahead, please.”

Sheryl, who saw that, thought.

[…Shijima is intimidated by that woman? Are they acquaintance or something? I don’t really know what’s going on here, but what exactly do they want to talk about?]

Sheryl raised her wariness as she shifted her focus to Viola. Viola reacted with a smile that somehow broke Sheryl’s poker face. Sheryl could not help but to make an uneasy expression.

Viola’s smile was covertly expressing a provocation toward someone inexperienced. So Sheryl stiffened her expression as to not break her poker face any further.

Viola shifted her gaze to Akira, she smiled at him and said.

“To be honest, it’s actually something related to Akira.”

Akira frowned.

“Me?”

“Yep, you. You’ve been targeted by pickpocket lately, right? I’m sure you’ve been dealing with a lot of those pickpockets who bought a particular piece of information from some information broker.”

Akira’s expression immediately changed, he looked slightly annoyed.

“…So? What about that?”

“About the source of that info, it’s actually us. We’re sorry.”

Since Viola just laid it out straight at him like that, Akira needed a bit of time before he processed it. But the moment he fully understood what she said, he instinctively replied in a low voice which reflected his real feeling.

"…Oh."

Akira's mood suddenly turned for the worse. His face turned expressionless and was filled with hostility, his casual standing posture also slightly shifted so that he could reach for his rifles and jump into action anytime. It was rather amazing that both of his hands that were lowered had not reached for his rifles yet, while at the same time, it was also visible that he was holding himself back from reaching for his rifles.

Everyone else in the room immediately tensed up. Shijima's men immediately changed their posture so that they were ready to fight anytime, but no one was reaching for their weapons yet. If any of them had grabbed their rifles and aimed at Akira, there was no question that Akira would not hesitate to open fire. Bullets would have filled the room before anyone could try to calm the situation down. Shijima signalled his men to calm down.

Viola was still smiling like usual. Although she was also equally surprised by that unexpected reaction from Akira, she was able to hide the shiver that ran down her spine. She then casually said.

"I want to continue my explanation if you're okay with it."

Akira replied with a calm but cold voice.

"…I would be thankful if you can refrain from saying anything that might cause a misunderstanding. Even if you can properly explain everything if I listen to you until the end of your explanation, I can't guarantee that I'll calmly listen to your explanation until the end."

Akira was stating that he had no confidence he could listen calmly until the end. After hearing that statement, Viola continued while trying to keep her face from wincing.

“Alright. In that case, let’s start with the overview. It ended up pretty badly purely by coincidence, we did not mean you any harm when we did that. We do feel sorry for what happened, so please calm down and listen to our explanation. It all started when you caused a ruckus in Shijima’s territory with your gun out, so from there…”

Viola explained what was going on to Akira. Back then when Akira pulled out his rifle as he was chasing Alna, they were actually in Shijima’s territory. So Shijima wanted to know more about the Hunter who caused that ruckus. Then he found out that Akira pulled back when he was confronted by a young Hunter, and that was the biggest reason why incomplete information about Akira spread around. Because of that, the piece of information that misevaluated Akira spread among the information brokers which eventually gave the final push for those robbers that attacked Sheryl’s base.

Viola and Shijima admitted their fault and explained that they had nothing to do with those robbers. They did not say anything to those robbers who attacked Sheryl’s gang. They gave their detailed explanations slowly to make sure that Akira understood everything.

Akira listened to Viola’s explanation without saying anything. But there was no sign of change in his mood even after he finished listening to the explanation.

Viola smiled at Akira and continued.

“So basically that’s everything. I did my best to not cause any misunderstanding, to say it clearly, we have no wish to be hostile with you. So, do we understand each other here?”

Akira did not say anything back. Everyone in the room started to tense up. There was no questioning that if someone made a suspicious move there, they would immediately break into a fight. Although all of them had different thoughts running on their mind, that was one thing which everyone agreed on.

Viola tried to hide the cold sweat running down her skin as she shifted her gaze from Akira to Sheryl. She then smiled gently at Sheryl and said.

“Since it’s also related to your gang, if it’s okay, can you let us know your opinion too?”

“…My opinion?”

“Yes. You lost some of your men during the attack. So I want to know your opinion as the boss of the gang. It would be great if you can understand that we have nothing to do with those robbers, but if you can’t believe us, then we understand that too. Which in that case, I want to discuss the incident with you, to be honest, we want to resolve this peacefully. Of course, I’m okay with it if you want to discuss it with Akira first.”

Sheryl frowned. She needed extra courage to talk with Akira in his current mood. She also had no idea how far he believed Viola’s explanation. She did not know how much it would worsen his mood if she defended Viola. In the worst-case scenario, Akira might think that she was defending an enemy and it might cause him to abandon her. Even if she said that she did not know what to do, that in itself might be a bad decision. After all, Akira might think that it should have been an obvious decision and there was no need to think about it any further.

Sheryl did think of not believing everything that Viola said, but she immediately ruled out that choice. After all, if she did that, that would mean that Akira’s bad reputation pushed the robbers to attack Sheryl’s gang. So in short, Akira was dragged into more trouble because he was involved with Sheryl’s gang. And that would be enough of a reason for him to abandon her. So of course, Sheryl could not afford to do that.

Viola was pushing Sheryl to make her decision even though both of them were equally bad decisions for her. And most likely, even if Sheryl chose to not say anything, Viola might have a plan to use that for her own benefit too.

[…That woman called me here together with Akira in order to talk about this subject in front of Akira. If I have to make a guess, it’s in order to hold

Akira back. Both of them had no plans to check if we're okay right from the start… But in the first place, why would they bring this up? Is it to reduce the damage if Akira finds out about it later? Or is it to check how much I can affect Akira's decision? Or is it for something else? I-I really have no idea at all, I don't understand what this woman is thinking.]

Thinking about it only caused Sheryl to become more suspicious, and that suspicion gave birth to nervousness. Sheryl's poker face was slowly crumbling. Viola was smiling, as usual, it seemed that no matter which answer Sheryl gave, she would be able to make good use of it.

Akira's mood was pretty bad. He was ready to take action if anyone made a suspicious move. Although he understood that his stance only made the situation tenser and more dangerous, he was not able to try to calm himself down.

That was when Alpha smiled and casually said to him.

"Akira, you got a call from Shizuka."

"…From Shizuka-san?"

"If you want to answer it, at least say something first. If you try to pull out your information terminal in this state, they might misunderstand and think that you are trying to reach for your rifle."

Akira's expression did not change and his voice was still as calm and cold as before when he suddenly said to everyone.

"…I got a call from a friend, is it okay if I answer it?"

Normally, people would scorn him and tell him to just ignore the call since they were in the middle of an important discussion, but in order to improve the mood there, everyone agreed not to tell that to Akira. So Viola replied as the representative of everyone else in the room.

"Sure, go ahead."

Akira slowly reached for his information terminal and answered the call.

“…It’s Akira.”

“Hello, it’s Shizuka. There’s something I want to ask you, is it a good time… Or at least that’s what I want to say, should I just call again some other time?”

“…No, it’s fine.”

“Is that so? If you’re busy, I can just call again later, you know? It sounds like you’re in a rather bad mood over there. If I called you at a bad time, I’m really sorry.”

“…No… I’m sorry, can you please keep the call open and wait for a bit?”

“Hm? Sure.”

Akira pulled his information terminal away from his ear, he then took a deep breath and did that several times in front of everyone. After he forced himself to calm down to some degree and his expression was mostly returned back to normal, he then continued his call with Shizuka.

“Thank you for waiting. Do I sound better now? Or do I still sound pretty bad?”

Shizuka gently replied to that question.

“It’s okay, you sound like the usual you now.”

Akira actually had not fully returned to his usual self. Shizuka only said that since she thought that it would calm him down. And in reality, it did calm Akira down. Akira then apologetically said to her.

“I’m really sorry, it’s just that something bad happened and it really annoyed me. Like, you know, there are a lot of things that I have to deal with when I’m working as a Hunter.”

“Don’t worry, I know how hard it is being a Hunter.”

Akira was relieved, it seemed that Shizuka did not mind. With that, his mood had mostly returned to normal.

Shizuka then returned back to the real reason why she called him.

“Well, let’s return to the main subject then. You asked me to help you choose your new equipment, remember? I actually came up with some suggestions and so I want to check them with you. I’ll send the data to you so take your time and check all of them… Or at least that’s what I want to say but… Some of them are only available for a limited time, you see.”

“For a limited time, huh?”

“Yep. After all, your budget is 400 million Aurum and expensive equipment are usually available for only a limited time, you see. Moreover, some of the merchants who are worried about their revenue might be willing to give a big discount if you pay for their goods soon. As in matter of fact, some of them are only available for the next 2 hours, that’s why I hurried up and called you.”

“I see, thank you very much.”

“Likewise, thank you very much for entrusting our shop with such a big deal.”

But then Shizuka’s business-like voice immediately changed to a very gentle one.

“…I don’t know what just happened to you, but as I said before, I can at least listen to your worry, okay?”

“…Okay.”

Akira sounded a bit happy when he said that.

“Well then, see you next time.”

Shizuka sounded relieved as she ended the call with that remark.

Akira then put back his information terminal and realized that everyone in the room was looking at him.

Although they had different expressions, it was more than obvious that everyone was looking at him. He found that weird, but he then remembered that he was in the middle of a discussion with Viola.

“Ah, right, we were in the middle of a discussion, right? I have no plans to cause an unnecessary fight either. But if there’s something else that you want to talk about regarding the gang, like maybe the peace money, then you can just talk it out with Sheryl. I don’t want to have anything to do with the war between gangs. As long as Sheryl doesn’t ask me to get involved, I have no plans to get involved. You okay with that too right, Sheryl?”

Sheryl flusteredly said.

“Eh? Y-yes. I’m okay if you say so, Akira.”

“So there you have it.”

Akira looked at everyone and casually said so.

Akira’s bad mood was completely erased. As a matter of fact, he sounded rather happy as if everything that happened until now was nothing but an illusion. The mood in the room had completely relaxed.

Except for one person, Shijima still had a stern expression plastered on his face. He remembered what his men reported to him when Akira came to his base for the first time. Akira dragged the corpse of one of Shijima’s men, Wataba, all the way to Shijima’s base, and Akira was the one who killed Wataba.

Shijima then heard the full report of what had happened from one of his men. It seemed that the moment Akira killed Wataba, Wataba said something about threatening Akira’s acquaintance. According to that report, when Wataba was about to mention a name, Akira did not hesitate at all and quickly shot him.

[…From what I heard, that person is the owner of a weapon shop. And judging from the conversation just now, it seemed that it's about buying some equipment. So in short, there's a good chance that call was with that shop owner, and that alone was enough to fix his mood. I bet that Akira likes that person and thinks dearly of that person. So, is that person the same person who Wataba was about to mention…? In the first place, why did Akira kill Wataba? Is it really because Wataba threatened him? But if that's really the case, he should have killed Wataba way sooner, right…? Don't tell me that he killed Wataba because he was about to mention that person's name?! Did he really kill Wataba just to stop Wataba from mentioning that person's name!? Just so that other people won't know about that person!? Is that really all the reason!?]

Shijima's face puckered in. That was right when Viola opened her mouth.

"Akira, who was-"

Shijima could imagine Viola asking Akira who that was since Akira seemed to be enjoying talking to that person. And if it was okay with him, Viola also wanted to know that person's name. So Shijima could not help but instinctively interject her.

"Viola!! Akira said so too, so let's just proceed with the discussion!! You've already decided what to do to apologize for causing so much trouble to Akira, right? So let's proceed with that!"

Viola was both surprised and confused since Shijima suddenly cut in while half-shouting, Viola did not expect that at all. Shijima looked intensely at her. She understood that Shijima was trying to tell her not to ask any unnecessary questions.

Viola tried to change the mood as she smiled at Akira and Sheryl, and said.

"Ahh, you're right. First of all, I'll exaggerate the information about you killing those robbers and spread that information around. That way, no one would look down on you and Sheryl's gang."

Sheryl smiled and replied.

“Thank you for that offer. A lot of my men are worried about it, so I’m sure they’ll be happy to hear it.”

“To be honest, that would only help Sheryl’s gang. So for our apology to Akira, we’ll help you take care of that pickpocket whom you’re searching for.”

Akira thought that it was rather strange for Viola to bring that up.

“Take care?”

“Yes, you asked Sheryl’s men to look for that pickpocket, right? I’m sure that we have a wider net to look and kill that pickpocket compared to if you’re working alone. Although, of course, we can’t help you much if that pickpocket runs to the inner wall or to a different city.”

Akira thought for a bit before replying.

“No, that won’t be necessary.”

Viola did not expect that at all.

“Oh my, what’s wrong? If you want to kill that pickpocket yourself, we can secure that pickpocket alive, you know?”

“That’s not what I meant. If you do that, then if something troublesome were to happen later, you have an excuse to blame that on me. That’s why you don’t need to do it.”

Viola thought for a sec.

“…But you won’t tell me not to do it, right?”

“Even if I tell you to do it or not to do it, either way, that will be enough reason to blame it on me, right? So as I said, I won’t tell you anything.”

Viola took a few more seconds to think before opening her mouth again.

“I see. In that case, we’ll just do what we want to do. Even if we spread that information around, as long as that pickpocket is still alive and still roaming around somewhere, it might cause some contradiction with the information that we’re about to spread. So we need to make sure at least that pickpocket is not around the area. You don’t mind if we do that, right?”

“I’m in no position to tell you what to do and what not to do. So you decide by yourself on what to do.”

“Alright.”

Shijima sounded a bit arrogant as he said to Sheryl.

“That’s all that we want to talk about with you today. If you have nothing else to say, you can leave now. It’s rather troublesome to have someone as heavily armed as you inside my base when you’re not a part of my gang. So now that a bigger problem than that is over, it would be great if you can leave quickly.”

“Very well. We’ll take our leave then.”

Sheryl stood up from the sofa and lightly bowed at Shijima.

Shijima did not say anything as he just signalled one of his men to escort Akira and Sheryl out of the base. Akira and Sheryl followed that man and left the room.

As Viola confirmed that Akira and Sheryl left the room and closed the door. She immediately looked at Shijima and confusedly asked him.

“So then, what was that just now? I bet you have a reason why you cut me back there, right?”

Shijima lightly sighed before saying anything.

“It’s just to be safe. Just think of it as me saving you there. I don’t mind telling you, but you’ll owe me one for that.”

Viola thought for a bit since owing a favour to someone meant a lot for her. But for the current Viola, that did not outweigh her curiosity, she wanted to know why Shijima did that.

“Sure then, I owe you one favour. So, why was that?”

“Very well then.”

Shijima looked at his men without saying anything and his men immediately left the room.

Viola then looked at Carol.

“Haah! It can’t be helped then, don’t blame if you get killed when I’m not around, okay?”

Although Carol did not like that idea, she also left the room while half-jokingly said that to Viola.

***

Akira escorted Sheryl back to the slum city.

Sheryl’s dress was rather conspicuous there. She was still somewhere not too far from the base and was already gathering a lot of attention from the people around.

She was not trying to hide her expensive dress under a coat or anything, she walked confidently through the slum city. It was also to let people know that Akira was still alive. It could be said both of them were children of the slum who reached success. People looked at them with amazement, envy and jealousy as both of them walked through the slum city.

Sheryl glanced at Akira who was walking next to her and thought.

[…Who was Akira talking to back then? Is it someone that he cares that much? Even a short exchange with that person is enough to cheer him up. Who is exactly that person? And what is Akira’s relation with that person?

It must be someone dear to him that Akira would even answer her call in that situation.]

She could just ask Akira, but she did not want to.

And even if she did, Akira might just give her a random answer. Something like, it was his acquaintance and nothing more. As Sheryl thought so, even if she pressed for an answer, it would only worsen Akira's mood and he might only tell her not to ask him that question.

In the end, Sheryl could not ask Akira anything since she was scared of the difference between herself and that person.

[…I still have a long way to go.]

Although Akira was there within her reach, to Sheryl, his existence was someone far away from her.

***

Even after hearing the explanation from Shijima, Viola was smiling amusedly.

"That was a rather interesting story. It was worth owing you a favour."

Shijima looked both alert and exasperated as he said.

"I don't care what you are going to do with that information, but just don't drag me into your mess. I have no plans to be overly antagonistic against that boy."

Viola's smile towards Shijima was also saying that she found it rather unfortunate.

"Oh my, I can say the same too, you know. I have no plans to be overly antagonistic against that boy too."

Shijima understood that although both of them said the same thing, there was a subtle difference in their meanings. He looked at Viola as if to silently warn her not to get him involved. He then sighed and changed the subject.

“…So then, what’s your plan with this Alna?”

“Of course, I’ll look for that pickpocket and kill her. That’s our plan right from the start, right? Akira also did say that it’s okay for us to do it as long as we don’t mention anything about him, right?”

“To me, it sounded more like ‘don’t do anything unnecessary’ though.”

“Is that so? I guess that’s a matter of interpretation. I don’t mind if you want to stay away from it since you interpret it that way, but I’ll decide what I’ll do according to my own interpretation. But if after all is done and Akira comes after you, who did not move a finger to do anything, believing you’re mocking him, don’t come crying to me, okay…? So, what are you going to do?”

Viola smiled smugly, in contrast to that, Shijima looked rather troubled.

“…Alright alright, I’ll send some of my men to help you. Although, to be honest, I really don’t want to help you with your plan. I heard that you cheaply bought a debt bond of a Hunter that Akira has his eyes on. If you can use this chance to make peace with Akira, the worth of that debt bond will return back to normal and you’ll be able to sell it to get extra profit, right?”

Viola smiled rather annoyedly.

“Oh, you know? Keep it a secret, okay?”

Judging from her expression, Shijima knew for sure that Viola had other reasons in her mind, but he decided not to ask any further since he did not want to get dragged into her mess. So to make sure that he had nothing to do with it, Shijima changed the subject.

“By the way, I heard that Sheryl is Akira’s lover, do you think that’s true?”

“It might as well be, or at least, according to the information that I gathered, it seems that it’s true. I heard he did buy her an expensive dress and took a bath together with her, he’s basically taking care of her. Well, with that being said, there are many kinds of relationships that you can simply express with the word lover. Some of them are dating out of love to each other, some of them are dating because it’s beneficial to both of them. Some relationships are one-sided while others are just straight predatory. Like I said, there are many types of relationship that you can express with the word lover, so I don’t think there’s any problem with that.”

“Well, that’s true when we’re talking about possibilities. But I’m talking about Akira’s real intention here, Sheryl is… What can I say, she might be just a decoy, you see. Although he seems to be extremely angry with that pickpocket who stole his wallet, he didn’t seem that angry about those robbers that attacked Sheryl’s base. Back then, even when he had his lover next to him, he didn’t show any worry in that situation. I believe that it’s not an exaggeration to say that Akira doesn’t care much about Sheryl. But even so, he did buy her an expensive dress and protected her gang from robbers. From this point of view, it can be said that Akira thinks dearly of Sheryl. So if you think about these two contradicting things…”

“He might be just protecting Sheryl to make her a decoy, huh. Being a Hunter means that you might earn some grudges from other people, and everyone would love to get a good Hunter under their thumb. There might be people who would take his lover hostage to threaten him too. So Akira’s real lover might actually be that person whom he was talking to back then, that’s what you want to say, right?”

“Yeah, that’s my guess.”

Shijima thought that if Sheryl was only a decoy, he might be able to use the gap in that relationship. But Viola casually replied.

“I don’t think there’s anything you need to worry about though. The most important thing is how you’ll treat Sheryl. Even if Sheryl is really just a decoy, if you do anything bad to her, I’m sure Akira would do something to make sure that you won’t think of her as a decoy. As long as you don’t do anything to make him your enemy and don’t even think of taking Sheryl hostage, I’m sure that it’ll not affect you that much.”

“…You’re right about that.”

Shijima agreed with what Viola said and stopped thinking any further about that subject. He had no wish to be hostile against Akira. But Viola just would not let that subject go.

Viola smiled as if she just thought of something good, but her expression was immediately replaced with her usual mysterious smile.

“Let’s cut the silly talk here and talk about how are we going to get that Alna.”

“Alright.”

Viola and Shijima stayed for a while inside that room to talk about the details of their plan.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 152, Those Who Sow Conflicts

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was training Erio and the other children again that day.

They did the training session about 2-3 times per week depending on Akira's schedule. They would take a break if Akira was tired, or busy, or not in the mood, or just simply if he did not want to do it. While on the other hand, if Akira wanted to do it, they would do it all day. It was Sheryl's idea to treat Akira like that.

Sheryl was planning to eventually reopen the relic shop and it was obvious that she would be opening the shop even if Akira was not around. Once Akira started doing his Hunter job again, he would not be able to frequent the base as much as he does now.

Because of that, Sheryl needed her gang to be able to protect itself when she reopened the shop. She could get all the equipment that she needed from Katsuragi, but that was not the case for the human resource. She needed people who could fight properly.

The training was voluntary. But in order to encourage people to take it, Sheryl would always happily praise those who took it. Because of that, the number of people joining the training kept increasing. At the moment, there were already more people who wanted to join the training than the number of available equipment.

During the training, they would take turns doing mock battles, while those who could not join the mock battle because of the limited equipment would take a rest. Thanks to that, they were able to keep training for a longer time and they no longer had to stop the training because they were too tired.

But that did not change the fact that all of them returned dead tired back to the base. The power difference between them and Akira was simply overwhelmingly hopeless. Although they tried their best and squeezed all of their power, they still got totally annihilated by Akira. It was a rather intense training for Erio and the other children. It really surprised and reminded them of Akira's strength as they were desperately struggling to get stronger.

Akira was having a hard time in his training too. He had Alpha criticizing him while he was fighting against the group that Alpha was commanding. The training ground was already filled with images of his corpses.

In order to make up for their fighting power, the bullets from the training rifles were assumed to have enough firepower to break through Akira's augmented suit. Because of that, most of the images of his corpses were very gory. His current goal was to make his death count drop to zero during the training. If he was able to achieve that, it would mean that his fighting skill has been considerably increased to the point that he had no problem fighting amateurs without Alpha's support.

Akira moved quickly from one cover to another. He was able to see through enemies' attacks and evaded them, and before they could hide behind a cover, he quickly aimed his rifle at one of them and released a few shots. Once he got a confirmation from the system that his shots hit, he quickly ran at that boy, stopped for a bit and warned that boy that he just got shot.

"Make sure to lay down when you've confirmed that you got shot. Your friends can make a guess of where I am from their already dead friends and it's a part of the training too. If you keep standing even after you get shot, others will mistake this area as a safe area and you'll be sabotaging their training, you know?"

"I-I'm sorry."

The boy whom Akira just warned flusteredly laid down on the ground, he then glanced upward and saw Akira leaving him. He mumbled while still looking completely surprised.

"…He can even tell if his shot hit or not from that distance, huh."

It was true that the goggles would be dyed in red when they got shot, but that was only the goggles of the one who got shot. There was no notice sent to the other people when someone got shot. But even so, Akira came to that boy and said to him as if Akira was 100% sure. In reality, that boy had indeed received a notice that he got shot, so it really surprised him.

Not too long after that, a notice showed up in that boy's goggles saying that the mock battle was finished. That boy made a stern face and mumbled.

"Everyone is down already, huh. Isn't that a bit too fast? That Akira is just too strong. And the boss told us to get strong enough to fill in his shoes, huh… That's just absurd… Well, it's boss' order, so it's not like I have any other choice though."

That boy smiled wryly as he pushed himself back up. It seemed that Sheryl's praises still had some effect on their fighting spirit even in that place.

After Akira did a few rounds, he noticed something was bothering him.

"Alpha, it might be just my imagination, but don't you think that I've been winning a lot lately? I've been winning for a few consecutive rounds now…"

"It's not just your imagination, you're really getting better."

"But it's not like I suddenly got better in this, right?"

“It’s true that your fighting skill has been slowly but surely getting better, but it doesn’t make you super strong all of a sudden. So the reason for your consecutive wins, in this case, would be because they are lacking in their fighting skill.”

“Lacking in their fighting skill? But they’ve been training just like me, right? So I bet it should not have that much of an effect on my winning rate. Well, if the reason is because they are tired, I can understand that. But they’ve been taking a rest in turns now, so it should be better than before. Alpha, have you been pulling your punches on me?”

“Nope, as a matter of fact, I’ve been giving them more effective commands than before.”

Akira tilted his head, he looked genuinely confused.

“I see, so why then?”

“Since they’re starting to get used to fighting, I’ve been reducing my support to them other than the instructions. They lose their ability to see through the walls and covers if they get too far from you, or sometimes I stop showing them the bullet trajectory line. So other than my instructions, their fighting power is getting closer and closer to their real fighting power. And that’s why the difference between you and their fighting skill is getting more apparent.”

Although Akira accepted that explanation as to why he had been winning a lot lately, he also felt a bit sad hearing it. It was training, so it would be meaningless if he was just overwhelmingly annihilating the other side. It might be still training for him to keep his guard up even when fighting weak opponents, but he thought that he did not have the time to be taking that kind of training.

“Can you return them back to their original state?”

“If I continue giving them those kinds of support, their fighting skill would rely heavily on my support. Once their equipment and my supports start getting in the way of the training, I would need to limit their usage. In the worst-case scenario, they might get even less useful than complete amateurs outside the training session. So considering the long term benefit, I need to lower my support and that's the reason why they can't even hold a proper fight against you right now."

Akira smiled bitterly.

"That does hurt since I've been relying on your support."

But Alpha smiled smugly and said.

"It's fine for you since I'm always around. Not to mention that you've been doing training like this where you don't rely on my support at all. In the first place, you almost got killed several times in the wasteland even with my support. So I honestly don't think you have the leeway to say that, you know? You can say something like that way later after you get even better at fighting."

"That's true. I need to get stronger first. But seriously, what are we going to do about this? It won't be much of a training for me if I keep one-sidedly beating them up."

If this situation continued, Akira did not think that he might lose at all. He already had several overwhelming victories. So if they kept at it just like that, it would not be much of a training both for both the parties.

Alpha seemed to be thinking for a bit before she smiled amusedly and said.

"It can't be helped then, in that case, how about we put some handicap on you."

Akira's vision suddenly changed. He could no longer see too far ahead and the sound around him was moderately damped, the sensitivity of his information terminal also significantly dropped.

Akira looked a bit surprised.

"Alpha, is this… The effect from the colourless mist?"

“Yes. I’m trying to imitate the effect when you’re in the middle of a colourless mist. It’s just an imitation, so don’t worry, it’s not like you’re really inside a colourless mist.”

Akira seemed relieved, it was just simply a handicap to reduce his winning chance and it was not like he was really inside a colourless mist. He then smiled bitterly and scanned his surroundings, he checked all the places that he had already checked in turns.

“Well then, let’s get back on your training and give it your best. This way, your winning chance should be reduced, and if it doesn’t change much, I’ll increase the thickness of the colourless mist until it reduces your winning chance… Though, it seems that I don’t need to do that.”

Right at the next moment, Akira’s goggles were dyed in red. He got shot.

Alpha smiled and pointed his finger to Akira’s side. Akira followed the direction that Alpha was pointing at and saw a boy who shot him just now standing there looking completely surprised. That boy did not expect to be able to hit Akira with his shot.

Akira sighed and looked down on the ground, that shot just now increased the number of the corpse images in that place by one. He smiled bitterly at the image of his dead corpse lying by his feet.

After that, thanks to his handicap, Akira’s winning rate was indeed lowered.

Akira and the other children would group up after 10 rounds for a quick Q&A session, and if there was no question, they would immediately move on to the next round. But that was not the case this time.

“Uhmm, I feel like your movements have gotten worse suddenly, did something happen?”

Akira answered carefully to make sure that he did not offend anyone there.

“I’ve been winning a lot lately so I did a little adjustment, there’s no need to worry about it.”

All the children thought of the same thing, they were questioning what kind of adjustment was Akira talking about. But since Akira told them not to worry about it, they could not ask that question to him. Not to mention, Akira himself did not look that happy since he had been losing a lot lately. It would be not wise to ask that question to Akira right now, so they just kept their mouth shut.

They then continued the training. The other children who were taking a rest near the wreckages not too far from them were watching the ongoing mock battle, that was when one of them mumbled.

“But still, I wonder just how much stamina Akira-san has. He looks just fine when we’re already dead tired like this.”

Another boy there answered that question.

“I bet it’s because of his augmented suit. It must be nice, I want one too. Boss said that she’s taking care of the equipment with Katsuragi-san’s help. I wonder if she’ll buy us some.”

Erio, who was also there, shook his head and said.

“Nah, I doubt that would happen. I heard that it’s really expensive. So at least, I’m sure it’s impossible to buy one for everyone, moreover…”

Erio remembered when Akira saved his life back in the wasteland. At that time, Akira was able to shoot while carrying a heavy rucksack filled with relics even though he was not using an augmented suit. Akira was able to fight even when he was carrying something that heavy, so Erio thought that it was not simply because of his augmented suit. But when he was about to say that, Erio also remembered that Akira told him not to say anything unnecessary.

The other children found it weird that Erio stopped midway.

“Moreover what?”

“…Moreover, even if she buys us several augmented suits, it would be still far away from Akira-san’s advanced augmented suit. After all, an augmented suit like that would cost a lot.”

“You’re right about that. But we should still be able to get a decent augmented suit if it’s only one, right…? Ahhh, but in that case, you’ll be the one using it, huh. You’re the boss’ bodyguard after all. It must be nice, I’m really jealous.”

That boy looked enviously at Erio.

“For someone who tried to punch Akira, you’re doing pretty well. You and Alicia are even assigned as the officers in the gang after all.”

Erio’s face twitched.

“Stop it! Don’t remind me of that. Just so you know, I really regret doing something that stupid.”

“Talking about doing something stupid… That would be Tiol, huh. Not only did he question Boss’ relationship with Akira and got the boss angry at him, he even brought in those robbers the other day. Now that I think about it, I feel like I don’t see him around lately… Did he run away somewhere?”

“No, Alicia is still assigning him jobs, so he should be still in the gang.”

“I feel like it’s really only a matter of time though. If he doesn’t run away, as long as he doesn’t do anything big to make up for it, those mistakes would still weigh him down. For example… That’s right, maybe like capturing that pickpocket.”

Erio thought for a bit before shaking his head.

“Nah, that won’t happen. Akira-san did say that the pickpocket has a Hunter stronger than him covering for her, remember? So, if he does that, in the worst-case scenario, that Hunter might be coming for him this time. Just think what would happen if that Hunter came to our base. So I’m sure it would only anger the boss if he does that. That’s exactly why the boss also said that if we spot that pickpocket, we just need to report it later and there's no need to do anything more than that, remember?"

"Now that you mention it, you have a point there. That guy really has nowhere to go, huh."

The mock battle ended while they were having a silly talk. Erio stood up, looked at the other children who were resting there, and said to them.

"Alright then! It's our turn next! Let's go!!"

The tired children looked at Erio who still sounded energetic although he should also be more or less as tired as them.

"You sound pretty energetic, why are you that motivated?"

"I have to get stronger for Alicia's sake. I have no time to be lazing around."

"This guy just went and said it with a straight face. So this is the power of people with a lover, huh. Good grief!"

"Humph, you can go ahead and say anything you want."

Erio lightly laughed. The other children also laughed at that and some of them half-jokingly said.

"Good grief! Ahhh! I want a girlfriend too. I want someone like our boss. Just like Akira-san's girlfriend."

"You won't get someone like our boss unless you're as strong as Akira-san, you know?"

"Geez, that would be impossible."

They were joking with each other while taking turns doing mock battles. They continued the training after that, sometimes they got totally annihilated by Akira and sometimes they were barely able to win some rounds.

__*__*__*__

Tiol was lurking in the slum city with a stern face. He was trying to hide, but anyone could spot him just fine with little effort. He was so nervous to the point that he was obviously looking suspicious.

[…Dammit!! She’s not here either! Is the information saying that she’s around here really true? I bet it’s just another random information with almost zero accuracy.]

Tiol was looking around the slum city focused on the area near Alna’s secret hideout since he was told that there was a good chance he could find her around that area. But he just could not find her at all.

[Should I ask her again? But I’m sure it’ll only worsen her mood if I ask her too many times. That information is my lifeline so she’ll still help me. But at this rate, if this continues and I still can’t find that pickpocket…]

Tiol looked obviously unsure what to do and that confusion slowed down his decision-making skill, that was when he spotted the person he was looking for.

[…There she is!!]

Tiol tried to act as naturally as possible as he hid behind a cover before he took another look at that person to make sure that he did not get the wrong person. The person he was looking for was with Katsuya and his group.

Katsuya, Yumina, Airi and Alna were walking through the slum city.

Alna was using a Hunter coat with a hood to cover herself so that Akira would not find her. That Hunter coat was originally Drankam’s coat, Katsuya lent it to her. She looked apologetic as she glanced at Katsuya’s back from behind the coat’s hood.

“Thank you very much for accompanying me, but are you sure you’re okay with this? I’m sure you’re busy with your own stuff too, so…”

They were heading to Alna’s hideout. Alna had multiple hideouts spread across the slum city. She had left some of her own belongings and a small amount of money in her hideouts. That day, they were retrieving Alna’s belongings in one of her hideouts.

Katsuya showed his kind side as he smiled and said.

“Don’t worry about it. It’s too dangerous to let you go alone, moreover, I have something to do in the slum city too.”

“As I thought, you actually have something else to do…”

“It’s fine. Although I said it’s something that I need to do, it’s just an easy job to look for a certain relic shop rumoured to be somewhere in the slum city. It also doubles as a break from my usual Hunter jobs. Basically, I just need to walk around and look for that shop, so there’s nothing to worry. Not to mention, you might be able to meet your friend, right?”

“Yes, but it’s not like we had promised to see each other, so it would be a pure coincidence if we do meet her. But if we meet her, I’ll tell her that I got some help from Katsuya-san, I’m sure that’ll lessen her worry. She’s been worrying about me up to the very end after all. So if it’s possible, I want to let her know that I’m okay.”

“I see, she must be a kind person.”

“Yes, I’m really proud to be able to call her my friend… And I always only bring her trouble.”

Alna sounded sad and had a look as if she was admonishing herself when she said that. So Katsuya smiled at her and tried to cheer her up.

“In that case, you need to make sure to return that favour one day. Don’t worry, it’ll be fine. And about that Akira who is chasing you, well, it might take some time, but I’ll do something about it.”

“Katsuya…”

Alna stared happily at Katsuya with teary eyes, Katsuya just blushed and smiled back at her.

Yumina and Airi sighed simultaneously. They were thinking the exact same thing, Katsuya did it again.

Katsuya tended to accept the request coming from girls and help them. Because of that, the number of girls who fell in love with him just kept increasing. More often than not, Yumina and Airi had to help him solve those problems. And since both of them were in love with Katsuya, it was not like they could say no when he asked them. They would always just give up and exasperatedly help Katsuya.

Both Yumina and Airi noticed their sighing and looked at each other. Both of them understood what the other person was thinking about and smiled bitterly at each other.

Tiol took out his information terminal and made a call.

"…Yes, that's correct. I found Alna, well, it is most likely her."

The one that he was calling replied with a rather confused voice.

"Most likely? Make sure to confirm it first, will you?"

"Don't be crazy. She's hiding her face under a coat. And if I go there and try to confirm it in front of her, there's no mistaking it that the other guys would notice me too. Those guys, I heard from Akira that they're stronger than him, you know? So there's no way I can do anything against those guys. Not to mention, they went into Alna's hideout too. But her appearance fits the description you gave, so that should be her."

"Geez, it can't be helped then. Just keep following Alna like that. We already set the information terminal, which we gave you, to continuously broadcast its location to us. So don't mess with that setting, okay?"

"Okay… By the way, if I have the chance, is it okay if I just go and kill that Alna."

Tiol thought if he killed Alna and reported it back to Sheryl and Akira, it might compensate for his mistake in bringing those robbers to the base.

“Sure, I’m okay with that, but won’t that be impossible for you?”

Viola sounded more like she was mocking him than challenging him, Tiol then clicked his tongue and cut the call there.

After Katsuya and his group finished retrieving Alna’s belongings, they then roamed around the slum city, looking for that particular relic shop just like they originally planned. A certain rumour was spreading in the slum city about a particular relic shop that was selling relics that could be sold at a high price in another place, that rumour had also reached Hunters inside Drankam.

Lately, Katsuya’s group had been doing jobs that were far away and were not gathering old-world relics themselves. They had been mostly doing escorts for inter-city transports or guarding certain facilities. Those jobs were more for the sake of building trust with the people that were employing them, and they were pretty effective in order to increase their Hunter Rank too. Guarding inter-city transport was a relatively easy job if they were strong enough since they were able to check the danger beforehand. But there were many occasions where those transports were carrying important cargos. So they could not employ just any Hunters since those Hunters might rob the cargos instead.

It needed trust, it was good for their track record, and it was easy to make sure that they could safely complete that request. Katsuya found that kind of job really pleasant. But being a Hunter was synonymous with exploring old-world ruin and gathering old-world relics. Although he still had to go to the old-world ruin because of the request that was assigned by the gang, it was only helping the forward base in Kuzusuhara ruin, so it had nothing to do with gathering relics.

Basically, he didn’t get that much chance to work with old-world relics lately, so in order to make up for that, he thought of looking for the rumoured relic shop. He then went to ask others to help him and it turned out into a pseudo-date.

“By the way, Alna, do you have any guess where that shop might be? You’ve been living around this area until now, right?”

“I’m sorry, I did know there was that kind of shop in the slum city, but I don’t know where it might be. Old-world relics are expensive after all, so it’s not a place for me who doesn’t have money. Of course, it’s a different story if you can find someone who has some relation with the people who manage territory. Moreover, most of them don’t accept first-time customers, I heard that you’ll need someone to introduce you to the place before you can get in. So I think it would be meaningless even if you know the location of that shop.”

“…I thought that I will be able to find it if I just walk around the slum city, but it seems that it’s not that easy, huh. I wonder what should we do so we can get accepted into that shop.”

Seeing Katsuya unsure about what to do next, Alna desperately searched through her memory for something, anything that might help him no matter what it was. It might be because she was rather desperate that she then said without much thinking.

“I heard that sometimes you can get recommended to that kind of shop from another shop if you have a good relationship with that shop and pay some money. And that shop doesn’t have to be a big shop, it might be just a mere stand… So you can try being a good customer in some certain establishments… Or so I heard…”

Alna’s voice was getting smaller and smaller before eventually vanishing. Because of that, Katsuya could not completely catch what she just said.

“Eh? What shop?”

Alna blushed and said.

“…Uhmm, brothels. Most of the brothels in the slum city receive support from the gang overseeing the territories where they are doing their business and it’s not rare for them to introduce their customers to relic shops… Since their customers are often Hunters who return back from gathering relics, they also often get paid with relics… So using that connection… B-but it has nothing to do with you, right?”

Katsuya blushed and flusteredly replied.

“O-Of course!”

Yumina smiled menacingly at Katsuya and said to him.

“If you say you do, I’ll deliver you a good punch, you know.”

Yumina was being serious, so Katsuya flusteredly said.

“Of course!! I have nothing to do with that!! Mizuha-san also warns me not to go to that kind of place, you know!!”

“Does that mean… That you’ve gone there before Mizuha-san warned you?”

“N-No, I didn’t mean it that way…”

Katsuya was wincing back from Yumina’s intimidating aura, Airi suddenly interjected with a stern face.

“Katsuya.”

“No, Airi, it’s a misunderstanding…”

“We’re being followed.”

Katsuya’s face immediately returned to its seriousness.

“…Since when?”

“At least for the last 30 minutes.”

Yumina also had a serious look as she asked Airi.

“Are you sure you’re not mistaking it?”

“I highly doubt anyone would be going in the same direction as us for 30 minutes unless they’re tailing us.”

Katsuya, Airi and Yumina immediately raised their guards.

The one who was following them was Tiol. Airi actually noticed him long back, but she was letting it slide for some time to make sure he was really tailing them. But Tiol thought that it was simply because they had not noticed him yet.

They then slowly approached Tiol while covering Alna. Tiol finally realized that they noticed him, but it was too late, Katsuya was already close to him.

Tiol was completely scared in front of the people who were way above him both in skill and equipment. He could not muster the courage to run away and stood frozen right where he was.

Katsuya exuded an intimidating aura while staring at that Tiol.

“What is it? Why are you tailing us?”

“W-what are you talking about?”

Tiol looked completely scared as he tried to dodge the question, Katsuya put some more pressure as he lightly threatened Tiol.

“Sorry but I already gathered some information beforehand. If you won’t tell me anything unless I hurt you first, I don’t mind doing that, you know?”

Tiol immediately confessed.

“A-alright! I’ll tell you everything!! I was asked to follow you!! I’m really sorry! Please just let me go!”

“By who?”

“T-there, that man over there.”

Tiol pointed behind Katsuya as he said that. In truth, he was actually just pointing in a random direction to divert their attention. He was planning to run away the moment they looked away.

Katsuya’s group looked back to confirm it. Tiol was about to use that chance to slip away, but he suddenly stopped. There were four men standing in the direction he pointed and all of them were looking in his direction.

Those 4 people were Kadol and three other men from Shijima’s gang.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 153, Training Opponent

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Kadol was comparing Alna, who was standing next to Katsuya, with the picture displayed on his information terminal.

“There’s no mistaking it. That’s her. It’s the one with the coat.”

The other men looked at Alna and tensed up.

“So that’s her, huh… Then who are the others? Her friends?”

“No idea. And I honestly don’t care. Our target is that girl. If it’s possible, we need to capture her alive, if not, we’re allowed to kill her. Let’s go.”

Seeing Kadol and his men approaching them, Katsuya’s group started to feel nervous. Kadol and his men had a scary look, at least, it was not a face that one would show to the children from the slum. The people around the area could feel that a fight where someone would die was about to commence, so they moved away from the area.

Kadol came close enough to strike a conversation with Katsuya, he then stopped and pointed at Alna.

“Give us that girl!”

Katsuya moved in front of Alna and stood face to face with Kadol.

“Who are you? And is it true that you’re the one who told that boy to follow us?”

“Just shut up and give us that girl.”

Katsuya could feel Alna trembling behind him, he then shouted back at Kadol as if to counter their intimidation.

“I refuse!!”

Normal people would back down from that pressure, but that was not the case for Kadol and his men. Instead, their expressions tensed up, they reached for their rifles and readied themselves for a fight. Their rifles were still pointing downward, it was obvious that they were willing to fight there if negotiation was out of the question.

Katsuya, Airi and Yumina were also already reaching for their rifles, they were ready to fight anytime. Actually, they also wanted to avoid having to fight if it was possible. And considering how much damage it would cause if they really fought each other there, they were able to barely stop themselves from immediately opening fire.

Kadol had a grim face, his voice was filled with killing intent.

“I’ll say it one more time. Give us that girl. We only have business with that girl and not with any of you. We’re being serious here. If you don’t want to die, leave that girl here and be gone.”

Katsuya repeated once again with a face saying that he had made his resolve.

“…I refuse!”

Kadol and his men reeled back from the pressure coming from Katsuya, it was obvious that he was not your common young boy.

“…Kadol, what’s the plan now? Are we really going to kill them? They’re not normal children, you know?”

Kadol glared at that man who was being meek.

“I know, goddammit!”

Not too long ago, Kadol caused trouble because of his short temper with a certain young boy by the name of Akira. And the result of that was his current sorry state. Not only did he owe a huge debt, one large enough that it would not be strange if he got sold anytime, but he also felt that he was always being hunted by a Hunter who could kill him anytime.

Because of that, he would never look down on his opponents anymore even if they were only children. Kadol remembered that bad memory as he watched Katsuya and his group. Appearance-wise, they looked stronger than Akira and judging by their reaction just now, that might be really the case. Or at least, he did not have any evidence to deny that possibility.

He had no wish to fight someone who was as strong as Akira. Kadol and all of his friends there agreed on that point. But they also had reasons why they could not just back down there.

Kadol and his friends were told by Viola and Shijima to bring them Alna, and if that was impossible, they were even allowed to kill her.

Viola then told him that if he could do that, she would help to convince Akira not to keep hunting him and that she would consider most of his debt paid. While at the same time, she also gave some hints about what would happen to him if he could not do that. Either he would get sold somewhere or given to Akira, whichever the case, nothing good would happen to him if he failed.

That was the same for Shijima’s men too. They were discovered to have been stealing money from the gang or selling inside information to outsiders. Shijima told them that he would forgive them if they could capture Alna, Shijima also properly let them know what he would do to them if they failed.

Kadol and his men there were all desperate. That was why, even if they were facing strong opponents, they could not just back off. But if it was possible, they did not want to fight, and that naive thinking was reflected in their behaviours.

Airi saw that as a good chance, so she then interjected.

“Some people think that the slum city is not that much different from the wasteland, but that’s not true. If you kill someone in the open road, it’ll cause a ruckus. The gang that governs over the territory will get its eyes on you and they might demand peace money for causing trouble in their territory… It’s better if you just forget about that 100,000 Aurum and go back to where you come from.”

Kadol still had his guard up as he replied back.

“I don’t know what kind of misunderstanding you have in your head right now, but it seems that you don’t understand what’s going on here.”

Airi believed that Kadol and his men must have thought that she was someone who had a connection with the slum city gang. And if that was the case, then it would be one more reason for them to not fight Katsuya’s group. She then raised her voice and tried to warn Kadol and his men that it was not worth the trouble as she tried to convince them to withdraw.

“It’s you who don’t understand what’s going on here. I have some connections with the slum gangs. This would not end well, in the worst-case scenario, they might hunt you down to kill you. I don’t know how strong you are, but there’s no mistaking that it’ll cause some damage in the area if we fight here. In our case, we can just avoid coming here again, so it’ll be all on you. You’ll be the one in trouble if we fight. So it’ll be better if you just withdraw.”

Kadol lightly shook his head.

“That’s not what I’m talking about. We at least already know that much. What you just said doesn’t worry me at all. Unfortunately for you, we already had a talk with the gang who owns this area beforehand.”

Even Airi who was mostly expressionless raised her eyebrows. It was quite surprising for her.

“…That must be a lie. There’s no way you would do something like that just because of that 100,000 Aurum.”

Kadol frowned.

“What the heck is this 100,000 Aurum you’re talking about?”

Airi looked equally confused.

“Alna stole 100,000 Aurum from a certain Hunter… No, I mean, it was a misunderstanding. And you’re basically here because that Hunter is aiming for her life and that’s why you demand us to give her to you, right?”

Kadol immediately raised his voice.

“I knew it, you’re mistaking something here. 100,000 Aurum? That’s so stupid. Do you really think we would do something like this just for the sake of that paltry amount of money?”

Alna was shocked when she heard that.

“T-then, why are you looking for me?”

“Hell if I know. I was just told to bring you in.”

A notification suddenly reached Kadol’s information terminal. When he checked it, he was both troubled and surprised. He looked really troubled as he frowned and said to Katsuya, it was obvious from his face that he was equally confused as Katsuya’s group.

“20,000,000 Aurum. If you give me that girl, I’ll give you 20,000,000 Aurum. What do you think?”

Katsuya could not help but gasp.

“…Hah?”

“You didn’t hear it? It’s 20,000,000 Aurum. If you hand over that girl, I’ll give you 20,000,000 Aurum. I don’t think there’s any need to think about it, give her to us now.”

Kadol extended one of his arms towards Katsuya’s group who were still dumbfounded. Alna quickly returned back to herself and grabbed strongly on Katsuya’s back while trembling. It was a good amount of money just to hand over her after all.

Katsuya could feel Alna who was clinging to him, he instinctively raised his voice.

“Do you really think I would fall for that!?”

“I’m being serious here. Are you questioning it? Well, that’s understandable though.”

Kadol understood Katsuya’s feelings. After all, even he himself could not believe what he just said. But that was what was really written in that message from Viola. He did not question it as he only did what he was told to.

“I’ll give you some deposit first. Tell me your bank account, I’ll immediately transfer the money. Or is it that you prefer cash?”

Kadol was waving, urging Katsuya to hand over Alna as he made his offer, that was enough to make Alna tremble even more.

Katsuya could feel Alna shivering behind his back while there were Kadol and his men who urged him to hand her over to them in front of him. Katsuya, who was stuck in between the person that he had to protect and his enemies replied, or more like, yelled.

“I refuse! I won’t give Alna to you!!”

Kadol’s expression was filled with shock and confusion.

“Y-You? Are you right on your head!? It’s 20,000,000 Aurum, you know!? Are you seriously throwing away 20,000,000 Aurum for that girl!?”

“It’s not about money!! I’ve promised her that I’ll protect her!!”

Kadol and his men who already relaxed, thinking that there was no need to fight, reeled back from the pressure coming from Katsuya’s declaration. Katsuya then put more pressure on his voice and yelled.

“Go away now!!”

Kadol and his men inadvertently took a step back. Although it was involuntary, once they made a move, it was difficult to change the flow now. They could not help but take another step back although they slightly hesitated.

It would end there if Kadol and his men continued and just left that place. When everyone there thought so, a gunshot suddenly echoed.

When Katsuya’s group was talking with Kadol’s group, Tiol slowly slipped away from that place and hid in one of the alleys. Although he could not hear what they were talking about, he could still see them. So he was keeping his eyes on them while hiding.

“W-what should I do? Should I look for a chance to run away? No, that won’t work!”

It seemed that they were still in the middle of some kind of negotiation. If a fight broke there, he might get roped in that fight. That was why Tiol kept his distance as much as possible. He did not leave since he thought that it would be a wasted chance now that he found Alna. He did not want to lose his chance to erase his past mistakes.

A call suddenly reached Tiol who still did not know what to do. He could hear a woman’s voice coming out from his information terminal.

“What’s your situation over there? Can you tell me what’s going on?”

Tiol told that woman what was going on there, then that woman replied with a cold voice.

“I see, I guess this will be the end of our connection.”

“W-what?! Why!?”

“Well, you can’t make up for your mistakes, right? So basically you won’t be able to stay in Sheryl’s gang any longer which means that you won’t be able to give me any insider information, right? Then there’s no benefit of keeping this relation.”

“W-wait for a sec!!”

“Nope, I won’t wait. You don’t have the power to bring in Alna alive nor to kill her, right? I don’t know whether Sheryl would kick you out of the gang or Akira would kill you, either way, you’re as good as dead now. Well, in the unlikely chance that you get lucky, just call me again. So, until next time.”

The call ended there. With this, Tiol also lost his support. He was filled with shock and anger. In that messy state of mind, he remembered a sentence from that call.

“In the unlikely chance if he got lucky.” Those words ran on a repeat inside his mind as he looked at what was in front of him.

Katsuya and Kadol were arguing about Alna. Tiol had no power against any of them. It did not matter who won, even if Kadol won and took Alna away, it was unlikely for him to be able to find Alna again and he would lose his chance to make up for his mistakes by bringing Alna to Akira. But even if he could not bring Alna, it might still help him somehow if he killed her. Of course, that would be impossible normally, but at the moment, Kadol and Katsuya were focused on each other. It was his only chance, there would not be any next time. As Tiol thought so, he believed that his best chance was to kill Alna there, in that place.

Tiol nervously, silently and desperately aimed his gun at Alna and pulled the trigger.

His first shot did not hit anyone. But it was enough to trigger the fight.

Airi quickly aimed her rifle at the source of that gunshot and released a barrage. At the same time, Katsuya and Yumina moved to cover Alna and readied their rifles. Kadol and his men reacted by opening fire at them, Katsuya and his group were dealing with that too. The area was filled with flying bullets within a split second.

__*__*__*__

Akira continued doing mock battles with Erio and the other children. But Alpha suddenly told him to stop the training.

“What’s wrong?”

“The radar picked up something.”

“Monsters?”

“No, it’s a vehicle. It seems that it noticed us and now is heading this way. At least get your rifle ready.”

“Roger that.”

Akira and the other children returned back to Akira’s vehicle. When Akira took off the DVTS minigun from his vehicle, Erio and the other children seemed a bit panicked. Erio, who was relatively calm compared to the other children, asked Akira who seemed to be preparing for a fight.

“Uhmmm, is there anything wrong?”

“It’s just to be safe since it seems that a vehicle is heading this way. If you’re worried, you may hide somewhere.”

“H-Hide? Is it going to be dangerous?”

“It’s just that I don’t really trust those people that I meet in the wasteland by pure coincidence. You still remember the trouble that we had when we were in Higaraka residence ruin, right? That’s exactly why.”

“I-I see!”

After Erio told the other children what was going on, they moved to nearby wreckage to hide. Akira, who already finished arming himself, was left alone standing near the vehicle.

Akira checked the vehicle that was coming closer. It was obvious that they were heading straight to him, it was not out of a coincidence. When Akira focused his vision on that vehicle, Alpha enhanced his vision which allowed him to clearly see its passengers.

One of the passengers recognised Akira and lightly waved at him. Although the vehicle was still a bit away from him, that girl was clearly looking at Akira.

Akira lowered his guard and looked slightly annoyed. Reina's group was in that vehicle, and the girl waving at him was Kanae.

That vehicle stopped not too far in front of Akira, Reina and her maids then stepped off from the vehicle. Shiori and Kanae were wearing maid outfits, just like usual, but Reina was donning a new augmented suit.

Kanae smiled happily at Akira and said to him.

"Young boy!! Long time no see!!"

"…You're right."

In contrast to Kanae's energetic voice, Akira replied rather apathetically. Kanae looked slightly disappointed as she continued.

"You don't sound that happy. That's not good enough, no no no."

"Hell if I care!"

Akira's gaze shifted from Kanae to Shiori.

"So, what is it?"

Shiori properly started with an opening.

“It has been quite a while since the last time we saw each other, I’m glad that you’re doing fine. We spotted you on our way back to the city, so we thought at least we can say hello.”

“…That’s it?”

“Yes, we don’t have any other particular business. If I have to add something, it’s because someone really wanted to see you and we did not have any reason to refuse it.”

Akira glanced at Kanae, looked completely convinced with a mix of a little sympathy, and said.

“Ahhh… I see.”

“Thank you for your understanding.”

Shiori lightly bowed and confirmed Akira’s guess.

Akira guessed that Reina and Shiori were simply dragged along by Kanae. But that was not exactly true, indeed it was Kanae who spotted Akira’s vehicle and suggested visiting him, but the biggest reason why they did that was because Reina gave her permission. If Reina seemed to have any objections to it even in the slightest, or if she actually did not really care, Shiori would not have replied in such a concise manner.

Reina seemed a little nervous as she stood in front of Akira.

“Uhmmm… Long time no see, what are you doing in this place?”

“Just a training with some people that I know…”

Akira then explained what he was doing there to Reina and Shiori while Erio and the other children were watching them from afar.

Erio and the other children thought that there was no danger at all as they came out from hiding. But they did not have the courage to get any closer when they saw two of them were in maid outfit and the remaining one, assumed to be the master of those maids, was a beautiful girl with expensive-looking equipment. It was obvious that they were living in two completely different worlds, that fact intimidated them and they did not have the courage to come any closer.

But even so, they were still curious about what Akira and the others were talking about. Erio and the other children were talking to each other about their impression of Reina, Shiori and Kanae.

“Are they Akira-san’s acquaintances? What can I say… They’re really something.”

“Those are what you call maids, right? I wonder if they’re from the inner wall. So why does Akira know them?”

“It might be from a bodyguard job or something since he’s a Hunter. But still, they don’t look like common people. They have this high-class aura around them, unlike those girls from the gang.”

“So basically, Hunters who are doing well get to know those kinds of people, huh? I bet if we can earn as much money as Akira-san, we’ll get to know people like them too.”

All of them agreed that the Hunter supporting their gang was indeed a great Hunter, but past that, all of them had different impressions of Akira. Some of them felt hopeless after knowing how large the gap between them was. Some of them got a little more motivated thinking that if they continued training, they might get as strong as Akira one day. Some of them did not let it bother them that much even after knowing that they were basically living in two different worlds. People would have a different opinion, hope and impression even when they looked at the same thing. And the stronger their feeling to move forward, the faster they would reach the position they admired.

Kanae understood the situation after hearing Akira’s explanation, she then smiled mischievously as a question came up in her mind.

“Ohhh, so you’re doing that kind of training, huh? But with your current skill, I don’t think this training has any use to you though? No matter how many of them, if they're only amateurs with rifles, I don't think it can pose any trouble for you."

Depending on how Akira took it, it might sound like a provocation to him, but he did not get bothered at all as he just casually replied.

"Well, about that, you see, I made some adjustments to compensate for that, so it's okay."

From what Akira said, Kanae tried to gauge if it was just him being humble, or if he was simply too dense, or if that was the truth. If that was the truth, that would mean that he was not that strong, or that adjustment that he mentioned was really effective, or it might be even both. Kanae once guessed the reason behind Akira's real strength and lost interest in him. But after a certain rumour reached her, she got interested in him again.

"I see. In that case, how about letting Milady try a round in that training?"

Reina did not expect that at all.

"W-what? Me?"

"Yup. Akira said that it's good enough for his training. So it might be a good chance to see how good you are after you got the new equipment and went through your training with us. Not to mention, if Milady keeps training only with us, you'll get used to our movement and might get bored too. So, since we're here already, how about giving it a try?"

Reina flusteredly looked at Akira and Shiori. At least, at the moment, none of them looked against it.

Akira then lightly warned her.

"I don't really mind, but just to let you know, I can't guarantee your safety."

Shiori immediately asked a question with a serious face.

"Is it something dangerous? From what I can understand, you are using empty magazines with no bullets and the hits are only decided based on trajectory line calculation, right?”

“I don’t think that it’s dangerous. But it’s not like I gave all of their magazines a check. Moreover, we’re in the middle of the wasteland, monsters might appear in the middle of the training. So I won’t take any responsibility for safety. After all, it’s not like I’m doing a request from you or anything, so I don’t want to get blamed if something were to happen later.”

Before Shiori could say anything, Reina immediately interjected.

“I’ll do it!”

Shiori seemed to be against it, so Reina begged her.

“Shiori, please, I want to give it a try.”

Shiori smiled as if she had given up.

“…Very well.”

“Then, it’s been decided.”

Kanae smiled amusedly that things were going as she planned.

Akira told Erio and the other children what was going on, so they immediately started preparing. Although they were surprised by that sudden mock battle, they seemed to be looking forward to it. Just to be safe, Shiori checked all the training equipment and gave them a full body check, some of the children just let Shiori do that although they were embarrassed and were blushing.

Once the preparation was done, they took their position. Other than Reina taking Akira’s place, there were no other changes. But just to be safe, close combat was prohibited. After all, if Reina punched or threw Erio or the other children, that would definitely kill them.

Reina gathered her focus and waited for the start signal.

“…Akira’s winning rate in this mock battle is about 50%. I wonder how I will perform. If I can get a better winning rate than him, even if it’s thanks to my equipment, it should be enough of a reason to recognize that I’ve gotten stronger. Alright then! Let’s do this!!”

Reina fired up herself for this chance to check how strong she was. But once the mock battle started, she immediately realized something weird. Reina kept winning. Considering her talent as a Hunter and her new equipment that Shiori had especially prepared for her, that result was to be expected. But even so, it was way too easy that she started to question her strength instead.

[Is that all? Or is it because my new equipment is too good? No, even if that’s true, I should not get too prideful. That’s what I’ve decided after all… But, does Akira really have a hard time in this level of mock battle?]

Although Reina felt it was strange, she did not lower her guard and took the training seriously.

Akira, Shiori and Kanae were watching the mock battle from not too far away. They were able to get a birds-eye view of the mock battle from above a crumbled building. They were looking at the individual positions shown in Akira’s information terminal and through the camera installed on the goggles.

Seeing how Reina kept getting overwhelming victories, Kanae brusquely complained to Akira.

“…Seriously now, is that all they got? With just this much, they won’t provide you much training, you know.”

“Like I said, I put some extra adjustments to take care of that.”

“If that’s the case, can you turn on this adjustment that you’re talking about?”

“Alright.”

Akira operated his information terminal while talking to Alpha.

“Alpha, can you give some support to Erio and the other children?”

“Sure. I don’t like it either when Kanae says you’re having a hard time fighting that level of opponents, is it okay if I set my support level a bit high?”

“I leave that decision to you, but don’t make them too strong that I won’t be able to win against them even if I try.”

“Then in that case, how far are you willing to go to defeat them when they have my support?”

Akira’s face twitched but it immediately returned back to normal.

“…It’s a training, so I won’t do anything reckless.”

“Very well.”

Alpha smiled, she understood Akira was basically saying there was no need to use medicine while breaking his own body unless it was a real fight. She then made some adjustments as Akira asked her to.

Reina frowned, she noticed that Erio and the other children were moving a bit differently now.

[…I feel like they’re moving differently all of a sudden, or is it just my imagination?]

Reina kept carefully repositioning herself, checking her information terminal, and setting up ambushes. Normal people would not even be able to react to Reina’s ambush. But Erio and the other children looked less and less surprised. Then finally, during a certain round, one of them suddenly jumped out from behind a wreckage as if that boy was lying in ambush for Reina.

[No, this is because they know my position!!]

A notification appeared on the goggles that Reina was wearing, she borrowed that from Akira. After she read the message in that goggles, she smiled wryly as she understood very well what was going on. The message said that her position was broadcasted to everyone every 10 seconds.

[I see, so this is the adjustment that Akira was talking about. But this is nothing!!]

Reina got even fired up for the training. She then continued the mock battle, won that round, and happily challenged the next round.

But that did continue for long, every time Reina won, a new message appeared on her goggles. The handicap given to her was getting bigger and bigger.

Her position that was originally broadcasted in a fixed interval changed so that it was broadcasted constantly. Her opponents had to take a proper aim to hit her before, but now, they could even just use one hand to hold their rifles to register a hit. Up until now, a hit would be enough to register a kill, but now she needed multiple hits and that number kept increasing. Her opponents started to get more bullets per magazine to the point that it was virtually unlimited. Moreover, her opponents' bullets started to pierce through wreckages and rubbles.

Reina used her expensive and advanced equipment to the best that she could as she fought desperately, thus showing a fight that was worthy of those equipment. But just as expected, she got shot and lost. After her winning chance dropped way lower than 50%, some of the handicaps were removed and she finally got a victory after a long streak of losing. After that, her handicap got readjusted every time she lost or won until her winning chance was stable around 50 per cent.

Reina smiled bitterly and mumbled.

"So this is what he meant when he said that he only had 50% winning chance."

But then she smiled as if she just decided to forget about it and said.

“But well, I still can give a good fight with all of these handicaps, I think it should be enough as proof that I’ve gotten stronger. It might be all thanks to my new equipment. If I had these equipment back in the Seranthal building, I would have been able to fight better… I understand it very well now, it’s all because of my stupid pride.”

Reina realised that her resolve to get stronger from back then was the correct decision and smiled.

It was the right time to end the training. Since Akira did not tell her to rest, she kept on doing the mock battles, but as expected, she overdid it. As Reina thought so, she decided to return back to Akira and Shiori.

When she returned back to Shiori, Reina was dumbfounded seeing Akira engaged in a fight with Kanae.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 154, A Weirdo's Way of Thinking

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

When Reina was desperately fighting the mock battles, Kanae peeked at Akira's information terminal to see the details of the adjustment and lightly smiled.

"Akira-boy, isn't that too much?"

"Is that so? But I think she's doing pretty well, you know"

"That's because of the equipment that Ane-san especially prepared for her. What about you? Can you win with those handicaps?"

"…It's not about winning or losing, it's about whether it's a good training or not."

Akira did not think that he had a good winning chance with all those handicaps, he would have to perform some reckless moves in order to win. But for some reason, he did not feel like saying that, so he just came up with a different excuse.

Kanae lightly laughed, she did not expect Akira would give such a childish reply.

“Well, that’s true. But if you use that level of difficulty as the base indicator, you’ll need to do some reckless stuff to be able to win. And once you get used to doing something like that, you might also do some reckless stuff out of reaction during a real fight. Personally speaking, I recommend doing an easier training where you can more or less maintain a 100% winning rate.”

Akira looked surprised. He never expected that someone who looked so reckless as Kanae would say something that prioritized safety.

“What?”

“Nothing.”

Akira looked away from Kanae, Shiori seemed to be moderately amused by that exchange.

“…Well, that doesn’t really matter. By the way, Akira-boy, are you free? Want to have a light spar with me?”

“No.”

“Now, now, don’t say that. This is also a training, something like an equal exchange.”

“Equal exchange?”

“Yes, you can’t do mock battles when Milady is doing mock battles, it can even be said that Milady is taking your chance to do training. So to compensate for that, you can have a CQC training with me. I bet even if you can have shooting training with them, you can’t do CQC training with them, right? I’ll be sure to properly train you, you can get training for free when you would normally need money to get this kind of training, you know. So, what do you think? This is a good chance for you, you know?”

Kanae’s argument sounded reasonable and unreasonable at the same time that it threw Akira off for a loop. It was true that Akira did not get much chance to have CQC training. While his training with Alpha using his augmented suit was basically him fighting an incorporeal body, so there was a limit on how far it could go. Indeed it was a good chance for him to get more experience without having to go through a real CQC fight, now, if only his training opponent was not Kanae.

After thinking for a bit, Akira then carefully asked a question.

“So basically, you’ll help me train, right? Since it’s training for me, I’ll have you follow my wish regarding the training. For example, I might ask you to go easy on me. And also no aiming for my head even if it’s just a feint. If you’re okay with that, then sure, I don’t mind either.”

“Of course!! I’m really glad I asked! Let’s start right away!”

Kanae excitedly jumped off from the observation point.

Shiori did not expect that answer from Akira.

“Akira-sama, are you sure?”

“Well, it seems that she’s being serious about teaching me, and it’s true that it’s important to have a training opponent against whom I don’t need to hold back at all.”

They could easily kill someone if they were not careful when they were having a CQC fight with their augmented suits. But fighting without an augmented suit was also dangerous. So it was true that it was important to have a training opponent that Akira could fight using his augmented suit without holding back too much.

“Just to be safe, if something were to happen, I’ll help you.”

“Ah, right. I’ll be counting on you if something happens.”

Akira lightly bowed to Shiori.

Akira and Kanae readied themselves while facing each other, Kanae was smiling in excitement.

“I’ll hold back just like you asked me to, but you can go ahead and seriously aim to kill me. Come now, I’m ready when you are!”

Akira took a deep breath to calm his nerves. Although it was only training, it did not change the fact that his opponent was stronger than him. He could not afford to be careless.

“Akira, how much support do you want?

“It’s training, I don’t plan to do anything reckless, so don’t give me any support unless you really have to. Like if it’s getting dangerous or in case of emergencies.”

“Okay, give your best there.”

“Yeah.”

Akira slowly closed the distance to Kanae.

Kanae originally planned to gauge Akira’s strength using training as a pretext, but her plan immediately went awry. After all, she was obviously way too strong for Akira.

Akira got his feet swept clean off the ground, got grabbed and slammed into the ground, or received straight punches and kicks that stopped him on his track. While on the other hand, Kanae could easily deflect, block, and evade Akira’s attacks before countering back. His strength was nothing worth noting.

Kanae looked excited at the beginning, but it did not take long before she looked disappointed. She was so disappointed in Akira that she looked rather bored while being his training partner.

[…This is really disappointing. Is this his full strength? It doesn’t seem like he’s holding back either. Back then when I heard a slum boy fought and defeated 8 attackers all alone when they tried to rob a relic shop in the slum city, I thought that it might be him. But I guess this means it’s someone else, huh?]

The children who were taking a break there were surprised and felt a bit hopeless seeing how Akira kept getting beaten by Kanae. There was no reason for Akira to pretend to be weak. Judging from his reaction and how the other children reacted to that, Kanae realised that Akira's real skill only amounted to that much and felt greatly dispirited by it.

When she saw Reina return back, Kanae decided to stop the training.

"Akira boy, Milady has returned too, so let's stop here."

Akira was trying to even out his breathing as he said.

"Thank you very much."

"You're welcome. Well, you're not that bad, so it depends on how much you train yourself in the future."

Kanae returned back to Shiori who was welcoming Reina back and confusedly asked Shiori a question.

"Ane-san, did you really have a hard time fighting against him? If that's true, that's a little bit… You know…"

Shiori did not seem bothered by that at all and casually said.

"You may say whatever you want."

Kanae looked closely and carefully at Shiori, but Shiori hardly showed any reaction at all.

"What is it? It seems that Milady also had her fill, so let's return the equipment back and head back home."

"Ane-san, you don't believe that was Akira-boy's real strength, right? And you have an idea what to do to make him fight seriously, right?"

Shiori seemed slightly annoyed, Kanae did not let that go as she smiled amusedly.

“So, what should I do to get him to fight me seriously?”

“I have no plans to get dragged to your mess.”

“Geez, it’s fine, isn’t it? It’s thanks to me who spotted Akira-boy’s vehicle and suggested to come here that Milady got a good training here, so isn’t it fine to help me for a bit? Not to mention, Milady is having a hard time finding a training partner since she got kicked out of Katsuya’s faction. Coming here was beneficial to Milady, you know.”

“It’s our job to be useful to Milady in the first place.”

“That’s not exactly true for me though? I’m here as Milady’s bodyguard and just helping out with the training while I’m on it. I don’t mind stopping anytime, you know?”

Shiori sighed. It was difficult for her to say no when Kanae brought up Reina’s training. But she honestly did not want to just help Kanae out. So she decided to pick another option.

“In that case, I’ll go and discuss it with Akira. So give me 1,000,000 Aurum.”

“Y-You’re going to make me pay?”

“Of course, we’re helping each other when it’s out of our job description, right? I don’t mind if you want to stop here.”

“Ahhh, alright, I’ll be leaving it to you then.”

Judging from Shiori’s character, it was unlikely that she would keep that money for herself. And more than that, Kanae was interested in Akira’s real strength. So after a short consideration, she decided that she did not mind paying that much money.

“We have a deal then, I’ll deduct it from your wage. You won’t get your money back even if I fail, okay?”

“Ehhh? That’s unfair!”

Shiori just left complaining Kanae behind to have a talk with Akira. Although it was originally a half-joke to make Kanae forget about it, not that they had a deal, she only had one job now. She smiled at Akira and made a request to him.

“Akira-sama, can you please do another round with Kanae? Consider it as a request for Akira-sama.”

Akira frowned.

“One more time? I believe that we did enough just now though?”

“No, this is a little bit different. It’s not Kanae helping you train, it’s more of Akira-sama helping Kanae train. The reward will be 500,000 Aurum. It’ll be paid in full upfront. The request will be completed once Akira-sama works hard enough to earn that 500,000 Aurum. That will be all, will you accept it?”

Akira slightly frowned since he felt like Shiori was able to see through him. He then started considering whether to take that request or not. That was when Shiori suddenly said.

“If I may, it might be not good for Akira-sama to wrap up the training with Akira-sama’s complete defeat.”

As Shiori said so, she glanced in Erio’s direction. Akira followed suit and looked at Erio and the other children. It was true that he looked rather pathetic there. For some reason, after seeing how they looked at him, Akira thought that some of them might think that they have a chance to win if they try to challenge him in CQC.

After Shiori gave that slight nudge on Akira, she then continued.

“If I may add my personal opinion, I believe that Milady started to work hard since she’s aiming to be as strong as Akira-sama who was able to fight side by side with the other Hunters. If I may, I wish that Milady’s goal would stay somewhere high.”

Akira glanced at Reina. Reina seemed rather conflicted and slightly disappointed.

“She’s already using pretty expensive equipment there, combat power-wise, I think she’s already above me though?”

“Is that so? At the least, I don’t believe so. Moreover, strength is not only about pure firepower, it’s not decided solely based on the quality of equipments.”

At first, Akira took some time to think about it, he then made an expression as if he just gave up.

“Alright. But I’ll be the one to decide when the request ends and I won’t take any objection, okay?”

“Very well, thank you very much.”

Shiori lightly bowed and paid 500,000 Aurum to Akira. That was just to be safe in case Akira wanted to get cash instead of a bank transfer. Akira received that, returned back to his vehicle, took out some medicines from his rucksack, and swallowed them.

“Akira, are you sure you’re okay taking that request?”

“Well, I do want to test your support too, not to mention that I don’t want Erio and the other children to misunderstand something here. Moreover…”

“Moreover?”

“Moreover, I don’t like the fact that I kept getting beaten up one-sidedly.”

Akira said so as he smiled smugly, Alpha smiled back confidently at him.

“That’s true, so then, how much level of recklessness is okay?”

“At least enough to be suitable for that reward. It’s a request after all.”

“Very well. Not to mention, it seems you’re willing to go as far as to take some medicines beforehand, let’s change the setting of your augmented suit a bit. If she already has her guard down, we can use that to defeat her quickly and show her your strength.”

Akira smiled seeing that it seemed Alpha was raring to go too.

Akira and Kanae were facing each other again. Akira had a serious face just like last time, but that was not the case for Kanae, she seemed half-convinced and was still suspicious.

“I’m ready when you are. Also, it’s my training this time, so it would be great if you can give your full power.”

“Honestly speaking, I wasn’t holding back my punch at all though.”

“I guess that doesn’t really matter now. Come now, I don’t mind if you want to aim for my head, you know.”

“Roger that.”

Just like last time, Akira slowly closed the distance. Looking at that, Kanae thought that her guess was indeed correct. Her expression slightly turned disappointed for a split second, right at that moment, Akira used the full power of his augmented suit to propel his body forward and closed the distance in one quick and fluid motion.

That sudden move as if Akira was completely a different person caught Kanae completely off guard and slowed her reaction. But that did not pose trouble due to her fighting skill. She saw Akira trying to dive straight at her as she moved to block that incoming attack.

Right at that moment, she immediately shifted her posture and blocked a powerful kick aimed at her torso.

[…That right straight was a feint!? Not to mention that both his gaze and attack were seriously aimed at me!? Isn’t he too good at making a feint!?]

After receiving that kick, Kanae immediately shifted to counter that attack as her leg drew a sharp arc from under her maid outfit. But Akira took a step back and leaned back, Kanae's leg just cut clearly through the air.

[…He did not get thrown off balance even when I countered with that strong kick! And that reaction time!! He immediately moved away to evade my attack right after his kick!! Or more like, he didn't even look at my kick, did he?!]

Kanae used the momentum from her kick to shift her posture and changed the trajectory of her kick. But Akira immediately ducked and evaded that too. Now that Kanae had her both legs off the ground, Akira zoomed in to throw an attack.

[…Still too naive!!]

Normally, now that Kanae was flying in the air, she should not be able to evade that attack. But both of Kanae's legs were armed with forcefield armour.

She activated the force field armour on her left leg to forcefully change her posture and evaded Akira's attack, and she did not stop there, she used the projected force field that was only there for a split second as a platform to fix her posture in the air.

But as if Akira completely expected that, Kanae suddenly received a powerful kick on her torso. She was slammed hard into the ground and found herself lying face-up on the ground.

Not too far away from Kanae, who was lying on the ground, Akira was trying to calm down his breathing. The exchange only lasted for a few seconds, if one of them looked away even for a bit, it would have ended in an instant. But even so, it left a big impression on everyone who saw that. Reina, Erio and the other children were completely shocked since they could not process what just happened.

Shiori looked half-shocked since she was half-expecting that would happen.

Kanae pushed herself up. She was smiling widely that it was creepy. Akira frowned as he saw her smile.

“No damage even after she received that powerful kick, huh?”

“That must be because of her equipment.”

“That’s kinda true.”

Akira then shook that off and said to Kanae.

“That’s it, that will be the end.”

Kanae’s smile was filled with excitement for more as she replied.

“…What are you talking about? We’re just getting started here. You’re surprisingly strong when you’re serious, it’s indeed amazing, but it would be troublesome if you think that was enough to defeat me.”

“No, this is the end.”

Kanae interpreted that as Akira looking down on her, so then she said while smiling amusedly.

“Don’t worry, I’ll crush that misconception in no time.”

“That’s not what I meant, this is the end of my request.”

Kanae seemed genuinely confused about what Akira was talking about.

“The request only lasts until I put in enough work to earn the 500,000 Aurum reward. And that one now was worth at least that much. The request is finished, it’s done. So I have no plans to go along with you.”

Although Kanae was confused, she was able to understand what he meant, she obviously looked displeased.

“Ehhh!! You would just back off after putting my heart on fire like this? That’s just so unfair, you know!”

“I didn’t get my medicine and energy pack for free, you know!”

“I know, I’ll pay the extra money! How about that?”

“Still no! My augmented suit is in a rather bad state, you see. If I go along with your training, there’s no mistaking it that it’ll break! To be honest, I’m planning to use it as carefully as possible until my new augmented suit arrives. That’s why I can’t go along with your request. If you keep forcing me, I’ll run away while emptying the extended magazine of my DVTS minigun at you, you know.”

After Akira said something that completely killed Kanae’s chance of convincing him, she looked utterly disappointed and finally gave up.

“Alright, haaahh… I just don’t get it. But that one exchange cost 500,000 Aurum, huh. Isn’t that too expensive?”

“Honestly speaking, I think I didn’t charge enough since I had to fight someone who’s doing fine even after taking that kick square on.”

Before fighting Kanae, Akira returned the setting of his augmented suit from follow-type to read-type. He then gathered his focus to compress his time perception, and raised the output power of his augmented suit to its limit with the help of Alpha’s support, and he even took some medicines beforehand to brace for the burden that would be put on his body. After all these preparations, he was finally able to get a strike in, but that did not hurt his opponent at all. So Akira believed that it was at least worth that much.

Kanae recognized Akira’s skill, but that caused another question to surface up.

“But still, if you’re that strong, it would have been great if you had put that much effort in our first battle. Is it that you can’t get serious unless it’s a request?”

“I was being serious back then too, you know? It’s just that since it’s training, so I thought there’s no need for me to get reckless. That was enough training for me too. While the last fight was a request for training, so I only did what I needed to do. As I said before, I didn't get my medicine and energy pack for free."

Kanae seemed to be thinking for a bit before she made a serious face and said.

"Akira-boy, are you actually hiding your real strength while trying to be a superhuman?"

Akira frowned.

"I have no plans to be anything like that. Someone else also asked me the exact same thing not too long ago, so let me say it again, that's not true. I have no plans to be strong enough to be able to throw a tank with my pure strength."

"…I see"

Kanae somehow looked amused. There was a trace of favourability toward Akira in her gaze, but it was much closer to a favourability toward a rival or someone who was of the same type as her. Akira thought that smile was similar to Neria's, it was a smile of someone who would try to seduce the opponent that she wanted to kill, Akira could not help but to make an annoyed face at that.

After that, Reina's group thanked Akira and left. Akira looked tired as he said.

"Alpha, I somehow feel tired. Is it okay if we finish the training here today?"

"Sure, do you want to head straight back home? Or do you want to let Erio and the other children continue the training themselves?"

"Hmmm, let's see… I guess I'll let them continue the training themselves, huh. It's their precious opportunity to train, so I would feel bad if I send them all back just because I don't feel like doing it."

“Alright. In that case, let’s break them into two groups and set them to fight each other, then I’ll have you observe their fight and take notes. It’s important to be able to do that kind of analysis too, you see.”

Erio and the other children continued the training by themselves for some time after that. Akira did not join them at all, and when the time was right, they decided to wrap up the training.

That was the first training session where they finished before Erio and the other children got too tired to do anything.

__*__*__*__

After they left Akira, Reina, Shiori and Kanae headed back to the city. Kanae sounded rather happy as she said while driving the vehicle.

“Well well well, although it was rather unfortunate, I’m glad that we visited Akira-boy. It served as a good training for Milady and I got to see how strong that Akira-boy is. To be honest, I didn’t expect him to be that strong. That explains why Ane-san had a hard time fighting him. So then, Milady, how was the training? To be honest, I stopped watching midway, you see.”

Reina somehow looked displeased. At least, she looked displeased enough that it was obvious that it was not because Kanae said she stopped watching midway.

“It was hard, I feel like I got a good gauge of my current strength at the moment. Though it’s all thanks to my equipment.”

“It’s also important to properly gauge your fighting ability when you have your equipment. Even that Akira-boy also said that you’ll need both equipment and training to be strong. And if he had to pick one, he did say that he would pick equipment.”

“You’re right. Although they were special equipment used only for training, it’s true that I was having a hard time because of how superior their equipment was. I feel like I was defeated by a group of amateurs with overwhelmingly superior equipment. Well, that also applies to me too to some extent though. I'm okay with the equipment since Shiori prepared them for me, so what's left for me is only training, huh. I still need a lot of training before I can get as strong as Akira. Shiori, Kanae, I'll be relying on both of you."

Reina sounded as if she finally made her resolve to move forward, so Shiori happily replied.

"Please leave it to us. It's our job to be useful to Milady."

But in contrast to that, Kanae said while making a grim face.

"Milady, it's all good if you want to be as strong as Akira-boy, but it's impossible for Milady to get as strong as Akira-boy, you know. He's someone who you should not aspire to be."

"…What do you mean?"

Reina was confused. Kanae then answered her question with a serious tone.

"He's not right in the head in all kinds of meaning. Akira-boy's augmented suit is not an advanced augmented suit like Milady is using right now. Its capability is relatively low and its user burden compensator is also relatively bad. That's why their power output is lowered for the sake of the safety of its user. But, although it's only my guess, I believe that Akira-boy modified that limiter or maybe even completely took it off. So it should have been putting his body under immense stress. And well, normal people would die if they do that. Akira-boy's move suddenly changed as if he was completely a different person after he accepted that request from Ane-san, remember? Oh, did you even see that fight?"

"I did, he suddenly became surprisingly strong…"

"That's the difference when he was willing to put that burden on his body, you see. The reason why he took medicine beforehand was because he would die if he didn't do that."

"I-is it really that bad? It didn't seem that bad though…"

“In that case, would you like to give it a try? You should be able to try it if we change the setting on your augmented suit.”

Kanae said that so casually, but Shiori immediately interjected as if she was scolding Kanae.

“Kanae, stop talking nonsense. Milady, it’s really dangerous, so don’t even think about it no matter what.”

Reina frowned, she understood the danger of doing something like that from how Shiori sounded there. Kanae lightly giggled and said.

“To be honest, I think it’s a good idea to at least try it once though. But as I explained before, it’s basically awful.”

“If it’s really that dangerous, I can understand why I should not fight using that method.”

Reina seemed to fully understand the importance of that subject. But Kanae shook her head and said.

“That’s not what I meant, as in matter of fact, that’s not the biggest issue.”

“Eh? Shiori also stopped me though, but that was not the real issue?”

“Even Ane-san also has a similar trump card too. It’s not a bad thing to keep something like that in case of emergency. The problem is how Akira-boy is using that method without any hesitation even though he doesn’t have a cyborg body. That way of thinking and common sense is simply abnormal.”

“A-abnormal…?”

“Although Akira-boy’s augmented suit is a new augmented suit compared to the one that he used when he fought Ane-san, it’s already pretty rugged to the point that he said he’s already buying a new one. Normally, augmented suits won’t get that bad so quickly. That would mean that he had gone through enough fierce fights to get his augmented suit, not his body, that bad so fast. So it’s not an exaggeration to say that he’s not right in the head since he thinks that it’s a normal thing. Then to top it off, he said that someone also mistook him before and asked if he’s trying to be a superhuman, that would mean he’s been doing that without knowing it. Although I feel bad for saying this, but he’s simply crazy.”

Shiori frowned.

“It must be rather severe since even Kanae says so.”

“Well, I bet it’s because he’s like that that Ane-san had a hard time fighting him.”

After Kanae said so, she suddenly made a rather confused look.

“…But still, putting that aside, I still find it rather strange. People who are that strong usually have an aura that you can recognize. But although Akira is actually strong, why does he still look weak? And I don’t think that he’s deliberately trying to look weak either. Milady, do you have any guess?”

“M-me?”

“I heard that Milady looked down on Akira-boy thinking that he’s just a small fry the first time Milady met him. Is there any particular reason why Milady thought he was just a small fry?”

Reina remembered her mistake and looked slightly displeased. But as she continued searching through her memories, her expression slowly changed to a confused one.

[Now that Kanae mentions it, why did I think so? No matter how he looked, he was called to that place as a Hunter and he had proper equipment too. Was it simply because there was something that I did not like about him? No, I only felt so after I talked to him, I thought that he looked weak even before I spoke to him… That’s why when he refused our offer to work together, I got irritated and… Is it because Akira is just a small boy? But I think he’s more or less of the same age as me though…]

Shiori was also searching through her memories as to why she misjudged Akira’s strength. She then remembered Shikarabe’s answer when she inquired about him and realized that Shikarabe also had made the same mistake as her.

This could not be just a pure coincidence, there must be something behind it. Although Shiori could not identify what this something was, there was no mistaking it, something was causing it. As she thought so, she decided to be more careful with Akira.

“Ane-san, did you get anything?”

“What are you planning to do with that information?”

“As Milady’s bodyguard, it’s so that I won’t lower my guard even if my opponent looks weak.”

But then Shiori replied back causally.

“Nothing in particular came to mind except the shame from the mistake I made. So you should be careful too.”

“Yes ma’am.”

Kanae noticed that subtle change in Shiori’s attitude and smiled excitedly.

[This Akira-boy is really an interesting boy. The more I know about him, the more questions come up about him. I wonder if I can get a chance to properly fight him soon.]

And so, her interest in Akira got even deeper along with her smile.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 155, The Ability to Persuade

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Kadol was lying on the ground in a pool of his own blood in the middle of the slum city, he was dying. His wound was fatal, there was no way to save his life. The other three who were Shijima's men were already dead.

"…Why… I always… Got involved… With these… Strong brats…"

If he had not met Akira that day, he might have not been in this situation right now. He replayed the flashbacks of everything that happened that had led him to this ending. His expression was filled with grudge and frustration as he breathed his last breath.

Katsuya's group had an overwhelming victory. None in his group was wounded. After the shooting stopped, the area was so silent that it was even felt strange. Everyone in the area had run away far enough that their scream and curses did not reach that place, either that or they also got killed during that shootout.

Both Katsuya and Yumina, who still had some reservations against killing other people, had a pained look on their faces. Alna was cowering on the ground and shaking in fear. While Airi's expression was as flat as usual as she calmly scanned her surroundings.

“Katsuya, I can’t confirm what happened to the boy who shot those shots from the alley. Is it better if we go and check on him too?”

“N-no…”

“In that case, we should leave this place as soon as possible, we caused too much ruckus in this area.”

“Y-You’re right, let’s go.”

“We should hurry up, it might be a good idea to never come to this place again.”

Airi readied her rifle and made sure that the area was safe as if she was escorting an important person. When Katsuya and Yumina extended their hands towards Alna to help her get up, she suddenly jumped and hugged Katsuya.

“Alna, can you walk?”

Alna did not say anything back, she kept clinging on Katsuya and just nodded. Katsuya started to walk while Alna was still clinging on him. Yumina and Airi frowned, they looked slightly jealous when they saw that, but they kept watching their surroundings while having a conflicted expression plastered on their faces.

Tiol was swaying left and right as he walked through the alley. He was badly wounded and bleeding pretty badly. The blood dripping from his wound painted a red line on the ground. It was by pure luck that he did not get killed when Airi shot back at him. He was barely able to get out from that place alive thanks to the armour that he was using and the fact that he immediately ran away after he made that shot. And to top it off, Airi was only spreading bullets randomly without aiming exactly at him.

Tiol kept on walking through the alley with his fading consciousness, but it did not take long for him to hit his limit as he collapsed into the ground. He did not have the power to push himself back up. Both his consciousness and his life were fading away. In the middle of the terror that he felt from the approaching death due to the bleeding, he could see through his blurry vision someone walking toward him. He then heard a man's voice.

"Hm? If I'm not mistaken, you're from Sheryl's gang, right?"

Tiol squeezed out his voice to beg for help.

"H-help me!"

Tiol knew that man was Yatsubayashi.

"Ahhh, If I'm not mistaken, you're that boy, right? The one who took those attackers into Sheryl's base? The guys that I treated were complaining about you. I don't know what happened to you, but you're not looking good at all there."

"H-help!"

"I don't mind fixing you, but just how much do you think that would take? Can you really pay for it? Or is it that Sheryl will pay for it?"

"H-He-"

"That doesn't sound like a yes."

Tiol was filled with hopelessness. Looking at that, Yatsubayashi lightly smiled and amusedly asked him a question.

"In this case, since you can't pay for the treatment fee, it won't be a treatment, but an experiment. I won't force you to take it though?"

"I-I'll t-take it."

Tiol was barely able to squeeze out his answer and immediately fainted after that. Yatsubayashi did not panic at all, he lightly smiled and said.

"We have a deal then."

Yatsubayashi took out a syringe from within his pocket and injected its content into Tiol's neck. The syringe was filled with a glowing green liquid and that liquid was injected into Tiol's body.

"Don't worry. I can still save your life. We're both lucky here, don't you think so?"

Yatsubayashi was indeed lucky to find Tiol in that situation, but that might not exactly be the case for Tiol, or at least, it was still unclear if he was really lucky or not for meeting Yatsubayashi there.

***

Sheryl was giving Akira a short report from what he asked her to do. The reason why she was being nervous was because of the contents of the report. It was about Alna and it seemed to be immensely annoying Akira. And to top it off, it was a bad news.

Sheryl was not able to find Alna, and according to Viola's report, a fight had happened over Alna that resulted in some dead bodies. Sheryl was giving her report in fear.

"…So then, we don't know where that Alna went."

"I see."

Akira's mood was a bit worse than usual. In reality, it was not because he was angry at Sheryl and her gang. But that was enough for Sheryl to think that Akira was disappointed since she was not able to give any good news.

"I'm really sorry for not being able to be of any help."

"Don't worry about that. Like I said before, that girl has a strong Hunter backing her. It's dangerous, so you guys can stop looking for her. In the worst-case scenario, that Hunter might get his eyes on you guys after all. In the first place, I wasn't expecting you to do anything about those Hunters."

"…I understand."

There was a fight over Alna, getting Sheryl and her gang involved in this matter might be dangerous. As Akira thought so, he said that in consideration for Sheryl's gang.

But Sheryl interpreted Akira's words as if he was saying that he did expect right from the start that Sheryl's gang would not be able to be any of use.

"We'll do our best to be useful to you next time."

Akira smiled wryly.

"Next time, huh. Honestly speaking, I don't want to get my wallet picked again though."

Akira interpreted Sheryl's words in a bad meaning and went on to admonish himself, Sheryl's face went pale as she flusteredly said.

"I-I'm really sorry, that wasn't what I meant…"

"Hm? Ahh, it's just that I interpreted that in the wrong way. Sorry, I'll be relying on you again if something comes up."

"Y-Yes."

Akira realized that his mood was worse than he had thought. He then took some deep breaths and told himself that it was his own mistake and that he should not cause more trouble than he should as he forced himself to calm down.

A notice suddenly reached Akira's information terminal. When he checked its content, his mood immediately brightened.

"Sheryl, I have something to do, so I'll take my leave for today. Just call me if anything comes up."

"Okay… Uhmmm, is it okay to ask what is this something that you need to do?"

Sheryl tried to act casual when she asked that question, but since it was able to fix Akira's mood in one go, her curiosity and insecurity were leaking out.

Akira did not notice Sheryl was looking at him as if she was clinging to him, he just lightly replied to her.

"My orders just arrived, so I'm just going to pick them up."

He then took a short pause before he said apologetically.

"Ahh, by the way, I'm sorry, I might not be able to come here that often after this. I need to return back to my Hunter job after all."

"…I see, that's really unfortunate, but it can't be helped. I would be really happy if you can come when you're free."

"Well, compared to before, I might come here more often though."

Sheryl forced herself to smile while Akira just casually said so. The difference in their feeling toward each other was in full view there.

Sheryl accompanied Akira all the way to the base's entrance before returning back to her private room. Now that she's alone in her room, she looked slightly desperate and sad at the same time, but then she shook her head and said to herself.

"…No, letting myself get depressed won't fix my situation. I need to calm down and think about my next plan. I don't want Akira to abandon me after all, right?"

Sheryl was able to get a peek at Akira's cliques not too long ago, and because of that, she lost her calm. Akira was acquainted with many girls, and most of those girls were beautiful. So Sheryl could not help but to get suspicious.

Carol's attire and attitude were both tailored to seduce the opposite sex. And it seemed that Akira enjoyed talking to her. Then she also heard from Erio and the other children that Akira was visited by some high-class-looking girls in the middle of their training. The two maids and the girl who visited Akira seemed to be more than just acquaintances.

And the person that cheered Akira up in one go was probably also a girl. She remembered that Wataba said something right before Akira shot him dead and it was supposed to be about a girl who worked in a weapon shop.

Unfortunately enough, Akira's interest in the opposite sex was extremely low, or at least that was what Sheryl had always thought. But thanks to that, she also thought that she could take her time to build up trust. But the girls that kept appearing next to Akira erased that thought.

Sheryl started to think that it might be simply because she did not have enough charm. Her men would be surprised if they heard that, but she started to doubt herself there.

Sheryl tried to keep her calm while thinking of what to do from here and on, unfortunately, she could not come up with any good idea. Right when she was stuck in her thought, someone suddenly knocked on the door. It somehow immensely irritated her as she shouted at the door.

"Didn't I tell you to save it for later unless it's something important?!"

Erio who was on the other side of the door flinched.

"Someone by the name of Colbert came, he said it's something about that pickpocket, should I tell him to leave?"

Sheryl calmly took a deep breath. Although Akira told her that it was okay not to get involved any longer, it was not something that she could just ignore.

"…Take him to the guest room, I'll be there in a few minutes."

"O-Okay."

Sheryl realized just how much she had lost her calm listening to Erio who stepped away quickly. She then brought her hand to her chest and took a few deep breaths to calm down.

Colbert and Sheryl were sitting facing each other in the guest room. Sheryl had Erio and Alicia behind her while some of her men were also standing by in the room.

Erio and the other children seemed nervous. It was not only because Sheryl seemed to be in a bad mood earlier, even Colbert also seemed to be in a bad mood too.

Sheryl looked suspiciously at Colbert and said.

“I heard that it’s about that pickpocket, so, why exactly did you come to this place?”

“Actually, the one who has some business with you is not me.”

“What do you mean by that…?”

Colbert took out his information terminal and put it in front of confused Sheryl. Viola’s voice then came out from that information terminal.

“It’s me, I’m sorry that I have to speak with you like this.”

Sheryl did not have a good impression of Viola, so she frowned when she heard Viola’s voice.

“…Shouldn’t you be able to give me a call or something?”

“That’s because I’m a rather paranoid person. It’s because of my job, you see. And it would be stupid to demand you to have a special secure line just for my sake. So then, it’s actually an important subject though, if there are people around you whom you don’t want to listen to this conversation, can you tell them to leave the room first?”

“It depends on what are we going to talk about.”

“It would be too late if I tell you now. I hope you can understand how much trouble this subject is from the fact that I’m speaking to you like this.”

Sheryl thought for a bit before she sent a glance to the other children in the room, signalling them to leave. Colbert who saw the other people leaving the place then said to Viola.

“Viola, I’ll leave too.”

“Oh? I’m okay with you listening though.”

“You didn’t say don’t leave either.”

Colbert stood up and was about to leave following the other people in the room, but before he left, he warned Sheryl.

“Be careful, that girl is one crafty witch. She can casually bring up something herself just to make her negotiation opponent refuse it, and that’s also true for the opposite case.”

“Oh my, that’s pretty cruel of you considering that you’re working for me.”

“I don’t want to be responsible for tricking Akira’s lover without even realizing it. I have nothing to do with this, okay?”

Colbert then left the room after he said that to both Viola and Sheryl.

Sheryl looked intensely at the information terminal and carefully said.

“So then, what is it?”

“To put it short, it’s about to reconcile with you. In order to do that, I have a good news for you.”

“For me?”

“Yup. I was originally planning to capture that pickpocket and bring her to Akira to make up for my mistake, you see. But unfortunately, it ended up in a failure. And since I can’t think of anything that I can offer to Akira, I thought that at least I can do something for his lover. It’s also my way of apologizing to Akira, so there’s no need to worry. I won’t do anything funny since it’ll only worsen Akira’s mood.”

That was enough of a reason for Sheryl to accept that explanation which also caused her to lower her guard.

“Very well, let’s hear it.”

Viola could notice that subtle change in Sheryl’s tone as she happily continued her explanation.

__*__*__*__

After Akira left Sheryl’s base, he immediately headed to Shizuka’s shop. He looked quite happy as he was filled with expectation.

“I can finally return back to my Hunter job, huh. Alpha, what should we do after this? Are we going to look for undiscovered ruin again using that information we still have from the Lion Steel corporation’s information terminal? I don’t mind doing that, but I think it might be a good idea to go to Kuzusuhara ruin again, you know?”

Alpha casually replied.

“If you want to do that, then sure, but can you at least tell me your reason?”

“Well, there’s this knife that I found in Kuzusuhara ruin before, right? That one that I used to cut the wall after I destroyed its safety device. I just think that it might be a good idea to keep one of those things as a trump card in case of emergency, and it should not be that difficult for me to look for that relic in Kuzusuhara ruin after I get my new equipments, right?”

Alpha smiled inquisitively at him and brought her face close to his.

“Is that all?”

Akira winced back a bit.

“Even if you say so… Well, it’s just simply that I don’t have much relics left and I want to get more relics to sell… Uhhh, is it a bad thing to go to Kuzusuhara ruin right now?”

Alpha’s smile returned to her usual one as she jokingly said to Akira.

“Nope, there shouldn’t be any problem. It’s just that I want to warn you in case you are getting ahead of yourself since you are getting new equipments. I thought that you wanted to go back to Kuzusuhara ruin in order to fight those monsters that you ran away from before, and the autonomous weapons that you had to fight after ignoring my instruction just to wash clean the stain in your record.”

Akira smiled bitterly. He was about to get killed back then by a huge camouflaged monster since he ignored Alpha’s instruction. He remembered that the cannon of that monster was able to easily demolish buildings around him as he was running away from that monster.

“Alright alright, I’m sorry about that. I won’t do something like that again.”

“Now that I think about it, that was a good chance for you to change your way of thinking.”

“I’m sorry, okay? I did follow all of your instructions since then, right? So just drop it already, will you?”

Akira had already moved on from that incident to the point that he could just laugh it off when he reminisced about it. He did regret his action there, but he did not let it weigh him down. So Alpha just smiled and let that slide too.

And when Akira thought that he had grown since that time, a question suddenly came up in his mind.

“Well, it’s true that I’ve gotten stronger since then, but like, can you tell me about your request in more detail? Ah, but if telling me will only discourage me, then I’m okay with not knowing it.”

“Unfortunately enough, I can’t tell you anything. It’s a bit complicated from my side too, like those limiters and TOS.”

“…I see.”

Akira thought that he had become quite strong since then and believed that it would not be strange if he was strong enough to go to the particular ruin that Alpha wanted him to go to. But it seemed that was not the case. He seemed to be a bit down there, seeing that, Alpha made a suggestion to him instead.

“But well, it’s true that you’ve grown stronger. So I guess it’s fine telling you about relatively safe places for your current strength, huh. Once you can defeat that huge monster and those autonomous weapons on your own, I’ll at least consider starting the subjugation of the ruin that I want you to explore for real.”

Akira frowned.

“Those monsters? On my own? Without your support?”

“Yep, without my support at all.”

“No no no, isn’t that too high of a hurdle. Wasn’t it impossible for me to defeat those monsters even with your support?”

“Well, you would need at least that much power, you see. I hope you now can understand why I didn’t tell you the details of my request back then.”

“Yeah, I understand it clearly now. Geez, I still have a long way to go, huh?”

Indeed if Alpha told Akira about it back then, he would have dismissed it right away thinking that it would be an impossible thing. But when he thought about it, he once again realized how much he had grown since he now believed that it was not completely impossible.

“But still, I at least got a good gist of how far my goal is, huh.”

Akira’s face was not filled with mockery, instead, it was filled with confidence and excitement. Looking at that, Alpha smiled and cheered for him.

“It seemed that completing my request has been shifted from utterly impossible to extremely difficult. Once it’s changed into a risky exploration, I’ll tell you the location of the ruin. We’ll only start exploring the ruin for real once you have a good chance to come back alive.”

“I see. I’ll also give my best without getting too reckless. I’ll be in your care until then.”

“Of course, just leave it to me. I’ll be in your care too.”

Akira smiled faintly at Alpha while she smiled confidently at him, expressing their trust in each other. But Akira’s expression immediately turned sour when he saw Katsuya in front of him.

It was rare for Katsuya to be moving alone that day, and when they noticed each other, their faces turned stern. Their inner feelings were expressed right on their faces.

Akira only looked at Katsuya as a troublesome guy with a mix of irritation, but that was all there was to it. Akira’s hatred was solely directed at Alna who stole his wallet and got away. Compared to that, Akira’s hostility toward Katsuya was close to nonexistent. As a matter of fact, it was small enough to the point that Akira could keep his calm thinking that Katsuya was also a victim who got tricked by Alna.

“Akira, calm down, okay? Although I won’t tell you not to fight him and I’ll even give you my support this time, you should be able to get an easier and safer victory once you get your new equipments. So I hope that you would not throw away the better winning chance. Not to mention that it’s a bad place for a fight too. This isn’t the place where you can freely fight without any repercussion like in the slum city.”

“I know. In the first place, it’s not like I have any grudge against him anyway.”

Akira leaned to one side of the road as if he deliberately took a detour to avoid Katsuya and kept walking past Katsuya. That action was also showing that he had no wish to cause a commotion with Katsuya there.

But Katsuya ignored that gesture. When Akira was about to pass him, he walked straight in front of Akira and stopped him with a stern face.

“Wait!”

Katsuya’s face was clearly expressing hostility against Akira, his voice also contained the intimidation and the commanding power of a Hunter.

Now that Akira’s way forward was blocked by Katsuya, he looked at Katsuya annoyedly and said.

“What?”

“Stop messing with Alna! To think that you would even pay some people to bring her to you, do you really think I’ll back off just because you did that?”

“Pay people? What do you mean?”

“Stop playing dumb. I know that you offered 20,000,000 Aurum for surrendering Alna, what’s the big idea here, huh?”

“Seriously though, what are you even talking about?”

Akira seemed to be honestly confused, so Katsuya who thought that it was all Akira’s fault started to question his own guess.

“…Back in the slum city, about 4 or 5 people who looked like Hunters came to me and told me that they’ll give me 20,000,000 Aurum if I surrender Alna. That wasn’t your doing? Weren’t you the one who told them to look for Alna?”

“It’s true that I asked some people that I know to tell me if they spot Alna somewhere, but like hell I would pay them 20,000,000 Aurum for finding her. I never promised them money. In the first place, who in their right mind would pay 20,000,000 Aurum just for a pickpocket?”

“…W-well, that’s…”

Katsuya reeled back from Akira's logical argument. Akira sighed, stepped aside, and walked past Katsuya. When he did that, Katsuya immediately returned back to himself, turned around, and yelled at Akira again.

"…Wait!! I'm not done yet!"

"What now? You have no more business with me, right? I don't know what's going on, but one thing for sure, it's your misunderstanding. I have nothing to do with whatever you're facing."

Akira did think that it might be Viola and Shijima's gang. But he then thought that it was absurd for them to offer 20,000,000 Aurum for something like that and ruled out the possibility. So he was sure that it was Katsuya's misunderstanding.

Katsuya then shouted.

"That might have nothing to do with you, but that doesn't change the fact that you're targeting her!!"

"Yeah, so what?"

"Just keep your hands off her. If you do anything to her, I won't forgive you."

"I see, got it."

Akira casually replied as if it was nothing. Katsuya was doubtful of that answer, so he asked Akira one more time.

"So, you won't do anything to mess with her anymore, huh?"

Akira then replied with the exact same casual tone as before.

"Nah, I'll kill her if I find her."

Katsuya was so surprised his face was tinted with the colour of anger.

"…Do you think that I'm joking here?"

Akira’s expression suddenly turned serious, he sent a sharp gaze filled with hostility toward Katsuya.

“I was only answering your question. Or more like, right back at you, are you being serious here? You won’t forgive me? Do you really think I need your permission to kill the pickpocket who stole the money that I gathered by risking my life? Or does it mean that you’ll kill me if I don’t stop? In that case, I get it, I don’t want to die after all.”

Katsuya was suspicious since Akira said something that sounded as if he just obediently accepted Katsuya’s demand. But Akira’s next words completely wiped off his suspicion.

“That’s why you’ll have to die too.”

Both of them looked at each other with hostility, the only reason why they did not pull out their rifles yet was simply because both of them knew it was not a good idea to fight there.

“Last time, I backed off because the difference in our fighting power was too large. But don’t expect me to back off again next time.”

Alpha exasperatedly warned Akira.

“Akira, stop provoking him, okay?”

“I’m just answering his questions. I don’t want him to misunderstand, after all. I know it’s bad to fight here, and I have no plans to fight him here. So let’s just slowly step away like last time.”

Seeing Akira slowly stepping away, Katsuya mocked him.

“Humph, you’re nothing but talk. In the end, you’re still going to run away, huh?”

“It’s not like I have any reasons to kill you right here right now after all. If you want it so much, you can go ahead and point your rifle at me, that would make things way simpler and I would be happy to oblige.”

Although both of them were just young boys, both of them were properly armed as Hunters. People around the area started putting some distance from them. In contrast to that, people who were there from the private security company and were stationed there to stand guard in the area started checking what was going on. If either Katsuya or Akira reached for their rifles, it would be their own fault if the guards there shot them dead.

If Katsuya raised his rifle, Akira would be able to say that it was out of self-defense. The guards would then focus on apprehending Katsuya instead. And this time Alpha would also give her support. Even if he got caught off-guard, Akira should still be able to fight back. Akira's intention was fully conveyed in his gaze and Katsuya fully understood it as he clicked his tongue.

The guards in the area started to slowly but surely approach Katsuya and Akira to check if it was only a quarrel between Hunters or that they needed to defuse the situation with force. That was when 2 Hunters approached Akira and Katsuya, those two Hunters were Sara and Elena.

Elena raised her voice as if she was scolding them.

"Akira, Katsuya, what do you think you're doing in this place?"

When Katsuya and Akira heard Elena's voice, the tension between them suddenly died down as both of them lowered their guard and looked in Elena's direction with a troubled face.

Akira was not sure what to do there, so Alpha made a suggestion to him.

"Akira, let's use this chance when he's focused on Elena to withdraw from this place."

"Eh? but…"

Akira hesitated to leave that place without giving his side of explanation of what was going on to Elena and Sara. But Alpha then said to him with a serious face.

“Are you going to get them involved in case if something happened in this place?”

The fastest and most effective method to make sure not to cause a commotion there was for Akira to get away from that place. He himself knew that much. Although he hated the idea of leaving that place as if he was running away, for him, it was thousands of times better than getting Sara and Elena involved. As he finally reached his decision, he lightly bowed to Elena and Sara and said.

“I’m sorry, but I have an urgent business to take care of.”

“W-wait, Akira?”

Elena was taken aback, but when she tried to stop him, Akira quickly left the place. Sara also did not expect that from Akira as she looked obviously surprised. While Katsuya only glared at him as Akira walked away.

Elena and Sara were actually there to see what was going on since they spotted two Hunters whom they were familiar with confronting each other. If they caused a ruckus there, it would definitely cause them a lot of trouble later. Both of them were Hunters, if they fought there, it would definitely cause big damage to the area and the common people around them. If it was something that they could stop, Elena and Sara were thinking of stopping them, but now, one of them had run away.

Since it was not like they could do anything about Akira who was leaving the place, they decided to ask what was going on to the one that was still present. Sara then casually asked Katsuya.

“It seemed like you were having a fight there, what happened?”

Sara smiled gently. There was no trace of reprimanding in her voice, it seemed that she was genuinely curious. She deliberately did so to calm down Katsuya as well as to express her wish that it was not anything big.

But although Katsuya was able to calm down to some extent, he then answered with anger.

“I was stopping that guy from killing my friend.”

Elena and Sara frowned and looked at each other. It was a bigger issue than Elena had thought. Elena then made a stern face and spoke to Katsuya as if she was having a serious discussion with him.

“Can you tell us the details?”

Katsuya nodded and explained what happened to Elena and Sara, of course, his explanation was biased and mostly mixed with his personal guesses. Elena and Sara’s expression obviously turned cloudy when they heard his explanation.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 156, Reconfirmation

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira returned back to his house first, hopped onto his vehicle and went to Shizuka's shop. When he arrived, his mood had mostly returned back to normal. He went into the shop, exchanged some greetings with Shizuka, exited the shop, and then moved his vehicle next to the shop's warehouse.

Shizuka opened the shutter and welcomed Akira.

"Once again, thank you very much for coming to my shop. Come, it's this way."

Shizuka guided Akira into the warehouse, they then stopped in front of a mechanical cupboard. Shizuka opened the double door on that cupboard and revealed Akira's new augmented suit inside it. Akira could not help but to 'oooh' when he saw it, Shizuka smiled and said.

"It's a TL-type, 2A model 2N Augmented suit, its seller is Neoptolemos. It's originally not designed to work in tandem with an information-gathering device, but as you requested, I also ordered the optional accompanying information-gathering device."

It was a thin body suit-type augmented suit, its basic colour was black. It also had a headgear-like device which doubled as a display device, while it had some protrusions on its neck, back and torso. Besides that augmented suit, there was a coat which was also made with the same metallic fabric that made the augmented suit. The coat's size was relatively bigger than the augmented suit, it might be made with the consideration that its user would be carrying rifles and magazines under that coat.

"Its size readjustment function is also equipped with a simple automatic self-maintenance feature. Do you want to try it now?"

"Yes, please."

Akira took off his augmented suit and his clothes down to his underwear, and just like last time, Shizuka scanned his body to take his measurements. When she did that, the augmented suit's size automatically recalibrated according to his measurements as it started looking more and more like a human body. Akira watched on with curiosity.

"It's automatically recalibrating itself, huh. That's really convenient."

"But there's a limit on how much it can recalibrate itself though. With this, it can readjust its size with body's changes, so I think it's perfect for you."

"Is that so?"

Akira seemed to be a bit confused, Shizuka smiled amusedly at him and explained.

"So, you haven't noticed it yet, huh? Your body has changed a lot since the last time I took your measurement. You've grown taller and your muscle composition is getting better. I wonder if it's because you're in a growth spurt."

"Well, I've been earning well, so I've started eating more without caring much about the taste. That might be the reason."

Akira said that casually, but Shizuka understood well the hardship that he had gone through so that he could say so. Akira had casually spoken about all kinds of stuff that he had gone through in the middle of their usual daily conversations, which included all the dangers when he almost got killed. Not to mention, the stories that she heard from Elena and Sara too. From there, Shizuka could understand what he had gone through in such a short time.

Akira spoke nonchalantly and indifferently although all of those hardships he had gone through could be interpreted as a curse if he could not face them. Indeed, as long as he could face them, the fact that he could do that could be interpreted as a blessing. It was all a matter of getting used to it or not. The way Akira said it, spoke of just how far he had gone through all kinds of hardship again and again. If Shizuka had to make a guess, that must be because even before Akira had started being a Hunter, he was so used to hopelessness and the feeling of resignation to the point that he got used to facing hardship without him realizing it. As a matter of fact, her intuition was telling her that her guess was correct.

But at the same time, Shizuka also did not think that Akira should stop being a Hunter. Position-wise, feeling-wise, economy-wise, she could not take over that burden from Akira. That was why, in place of that, she could only smile gently at Akira and remind him.

"…They say that a Hunter's main asset is his or her body. So make sure to take good care of your body, okay?"

"…? Okay."

Akira was a bit weirded out by that strange sudden change of attitude from Shizuka, but he just frowned and nodded without knowing the reason behind it.

Akira then put on his new augmented suit with Shizuka's help and put on the coat which also doubled as protective armour. After that, Akira was rather surprised.

"It's lighter than I thought."

Akira thought that the augmented suit would weigh him down like a lead armour before it was turned on, just like his previous augmented suit. But he was glad to find out that it was not true. As in matter of fact, it felt even lighter to move in compared to normal clothing. Since the suit readjusted its form to fit perfectly with his body, the weight of the augmented suit was evenly distributed on his body.

Shizuka, who saw a surprised Akira, found it amusing. She then smiled and said.

“It’s an expensive augmented suit after all. It’s made of a light and strong but expensive material, it might be so that you still can remove it yourself even after it runs out of energy. Although I was the one who offered you that augmented suit, it’s still hard to believe that you spent 350 million Aurum for an augmented suit.”

This also meant that Akira had used most of his 400 million Aurum budget to buy goods from her shop. Of course, Shizuka took a part of that as her service fee, but it was nowhere near the profit that the shop which originally sold that augmented suit could get. Shizuka wished that Akira would spend that much money for buying stuff in her shop one day, she could not help but smile bitterly when she thought so.

Akira saw that bitter smile and panicked.

“Ahhh, I’m really sorry. I was really at a loss on what to buy, and after thinking about what is the best thing to buy to increase my overall fighting power, I concluded that an augmented suit is the best choice… S-so please wait until the next time I get a lot of money.”

Getting a better augmented suit was the most effective method to increase the effectiveness of Alpha’s support. After all, Akira did not want to get his bone broken every time he fought. So he decided to prioritize on increasing the basic strength of his body instead of his firepower and ended up investing most of his budget on an augmented suit.

Seeing Akira, Shizuka just smiled and said.

“Don’t worry about it. Like I said, a Hunter’s main asset is their body. Since it’s a rather expensive augmented suit, it is to be expected, it’s a high-quality augmented suit. It should be able to greatly reduce the burden on your body from the kickback from using powerful guns. Moreover, from my point of view, I think you’re someone who would do reckless things without realizing it. So if you spend your money on firepower, you’ll get more and more used to fighting more powerful monsters and I feel like you’ll be doing more reckless things at that point. That augmented suit is designed to put more focus on reducing the burden and protecting its user, it should be able to reduce the number of occasions when you have to act recklessly. I’m sure it’ll reduce your medicine consumption too.”

Shizuka said so with a smug smile, seeing that, Akira flusteredly smiled back. To be honest, it was not like he did reckless stuff because he wanted to, but he could not think of any good excuses to give to Shizuka either.

Akira put his old augmented suit in a box and left it inside the warehouse to be sent for repair. As for how much it would cost, Shizuka said to him that no one could tell until he sent that augmented suit for repair first.

Akira was thinking of keeping his old augmented suit as a spare if the repair did not cost that much. But if buying a new one was cheaper, he was planning to give it away to Sheryl. Even if he only repaired the outlook, it should be enough to give off an extra intimidating look. On the other hand, it could also be completely turned into an information-gathering device too. So, it should still have some uses.

As Akira was moving the metallic mechanical cupboard into his vehicle, Shizuka was gathering rifle modification parts into a cart. Akira decided to buy some modification parts with the rest of the budget that was left after paying for his new augmented suit. He might be able to buy new rifles, but since there was a limit on how many rifles he could carry, it would mean that he had to stop carrying one or more of his current rifles. So instead, he decided to buy modification parts to upgrade the rifles he already had.

Akira was deep in thought looking at the modification parts lined up in front of him. Not too far from him, Shizuka was still lining the rest of the modification parts that she brought there, she then warned Akira.

“Don’t worry, you can take your time deciding. You can even try them too, but remember that if you open any sealed goods, you’ll have to pay for them. Although the parts that are not sealed are second-hand goods, they should be working just fine since I’ve checked them myself beforehand. And be careful, Some parts are designed to be used on rifles with certain built-in functions, so they might need some extra parts if you want to install them.”

“Okay, thank you.”

“I’ll return back to the shop. If you need anything, just call me. Well then, take your time.”

Shizuka then returned to the shop, Akira started to analyze the modification parts scattered in front of him.

“Well, which one should I pick? Most of them are pretty pricey, I feel like I’ll go over the budget if I don’t choose carefully”

“Let’s upgrade your AAH and A2D assault rifles with the assumption that you would use them without an augmented suit. And if you still have some money left, let’s use it to buy parts to upgrade your augmented suit. I already have a plan on what kind of upgrade to do, the rest depends on your preference and how much you want to spend.”

“There are just too many types of parts, you know. Though, it’s better than having too few options.”

“This is also a training, so you can take your time.”

Akira was humming while looking seriously at the various parts in front of him, next to him, Alpha was smiling just like usual.

__*__*__*__

In her office, Mizuha was at loss on what to do. The reason why she was so troubled was because of Katsuya’s request, he asked Mizuha to provide protection for Alna.

At first, she heard that Katsuya was simply trying to save a girl who was falsely accused of pickpocketing. Up to that point, Katsuya was only being nice and everything, and it was fine. But now she came to know that the Hunter, whom that girl stole from, was looking for her and trying to kill her, then there was also a fight against an unknown organization that was also looking for that girl to the point that some people got killed. Now that it had come to this, it was no longer that simple anymore.

Mizuha then asked an acquaintance of hers to gather more information just to be safe. And from there, she knew that Alna was indeed a pickpocket, the Hunter that was looking for her was someone who even participated in hunting a bounty monster, and it was true that a certain organization was trying to capture her.

Normally, Mizuha would have refused to give that kind of protection to someone of Alna's status. There was no need to even think about it. But since it was a request from Katsuya, it could not be helped. She could not afford to sour her relationship with the person that was allowing her to maintain her influence and power.

At the moment, Mizuha hid Alna in one of the camping cars parked in one of the parking lots owned by Drankam that were scattered in various places in the wasteland. It was at least able to satisfy Katsuya for now and bought her some time. With Alna staying inside one of Drankam's facilities, outsiders would not be able to freely come after her, but at the same time, she could also not afford to let Alna, who was an outsider, stay in Drankam facilities for too long. She might be able to do something about it if Katsuya accomplished something that would give her more influence. So, she decided to stall for time hoping that something like that would happen.

To be honest, Mizuha did not really care about Alna, as a matter of fact, she was a bother. As someone from the inner wall, there was nothing she could gain except scorn if she associated with a pickpocket from the slum. Whether she sent Alna to work as a Hunter or as a helper in the office, depending on how people looked at it, it might seem like she was providing Katsuya's lover with a shelter using Drankam's money. If the news got out, the critiques from both inside and outside the gang would be severe. And if the opposing faction got their hands on this information, they would definitely use it as ammunition. Now that she thought about it, it was nothing but a hassle.

Mizuha seemed extremely annoyed as she said to herself as if giving an excuse.

“…I guess there’s no other way out, huh?”

She took her information terminal and made a call. Her call immediately connected and a woman’s voice came out from her information terminal.

“Oh, it has been quite a while. If I’m not mistaken, last time you said to me that you have nothing to do with a bad girl like me. So I’m really happy that you called first.”

In contrast to the happy voice, Mizuha sounded pretty annoyed.

“Let’s stop with the silly talk, is this line secure?”

Since Mizuha asked if they were talking through a secure line, there was no mistaking it that she was planning to make a request that she could not afford to get out in public. The other person that Mizuha called understood that well as she casually replied.

“Yep, it’s no problem from this side.”

“In that case, I have something I want to ask you. Since I even came to ask for your help, I hope you can understand the gravity of the matter while listening to my explanation.”

“Of course. So, what do you want me to do? Do you want me to spread information that she’s already dead? Or should I prepare for a fake corpse too? Honestly speaking, it’s much easier if spreading the information that she has gone missing is enough, but in that case, they might still try to look for her. So that would be a no, right?”

Mizuha was surprised, but she did not say anything. The reply that she got there was exactly what she was about to ask. She was able to somehow maintain her calm as she said.

“…I haven’t said anything yet.”

“You want to keep your hands clean while you want to remove that Alna girl who is clinging on that Katsuya boy as naturally as possible as not to anger him and not to cause any trouble to the gang, right? Honestly speaking, that’s not something you would normally ask from an information broker like me. But well, it’s not like we’re strangers anyway, so I can give you some help and introduce you to some people I know.”

Mizuha was so surprised that the subject that she was about to bring up was indeed that. She then somehow barely regained her calm and tried to probe how much her talking opponent knew about what she was going to ask with a stern expression.

“As expected of you, how much do you already know?”

“That’s a secret. Having an honest informant is good and all, but the question is whether that informant’s skill can balance his or her honesty… Although, in this case, it might be the opposite though.”

Hearing her opponent talking in a good mood there, it really reminded Mizuha that the person she was talking to was just the worst. That woman was basically working by manipulating information in order to manipulate people for her own benefit. Those who she manipulated only realized that after the matter had finished, and that was if they were lucky. Those who did not get lucky enough died before they could realize that they were being used.

Mizuha frowned while staring at her information terminal. She was the one who made that call. But even so, she questioned whether she did that because out of her own will or because she was already being manipulated.

Since Mizuha did not say anything, the other person continued.

“So then, what should I do? Should I stop here? I don’t really mind if that’s what you want. No matter what reason you have, doing bad things will always leave you with a guilty feeling.”

“I haven’t said anything yet.”

“Hmm, you’re right, I’m just speaking on my own, right? Just send the reward through the usual bank account, I’ll decide how far I should go depending on how much money you transfer to me. Later then.”

The call ended. Mizuha just sat there with a stern face, thinking for about 5 minutes. She then finished the administration needed to transfer money to a certain bank account.

__*__*__*__

Akira was still trying the modifications for his rifles. No matter which parts he chose, all of them increased the power of his rifles. If he had the leeway, he wanted to modify his rifles to the point they did not resemble their original forms at all. But of course, that was impossible with his limited budget.

“…Maybe I should add another 10 million Aurum?”

If he wanted to, he could add more money into his budget. That leeway started to make him seriously consider increasing his budget. Since it seemed that Akira would really do that at this rate if he was left alone, Alpha warned him.

“I won’t stop you, but don’t keep repeating yourself. The better equipment that you get, the bigger its maintenance cost would be. Or at least, your augmented suit’s energy consumption has already increased with that new augmented suit. Not to mention, we still don’t know how much the cost for fixing your old augmented suit is. It’s important to make sure that you have enough reserves to rise up again in case if something were to happen and you lose all of your equipments.”

“I-I know. And also, it would be okay as long as I try not to get in a situation where I might lose all of my equipment, right?”

“Honestly, I think the moment you know that you might lose all of your equipments would mean that you’re already in a situation where you can’t avoid it though.”

Akira recalled through his memories, there were too many occasions where that situation applied to him. When he imagined himself back doing Hunter work with nothing but his AAH assault rifle, he immediately said with a serious expression.

“…For now, let’s build a rifle with the original budget first and decide after that.”

“Yup, you should do that.”

Even with the help from Shizuka in order to get better deals, Akira’s last equipment set cost 80 Million Aurum in total. So he decided not to increase his budget just to be safe in case he got himself in a situation where he would lose all of his equipment.

Shizuka then returned back to the warehouse.

“Akira, how is it going?”

“Ah, I’m sorry, I’m not done yet. Should I hurry up?”

“It’s okay, I don’t mind you staying here until I close the shop. Just take your time.”

“Thank you very much!”

Akira then noticed Sara and Elena behind Shizuka, so he greeted them.

“Elena-san, Sara-san, uhhh… I’m sorry for what happened. I was in a bit of a hurry.”

Elena smiled lightly at him to let him know that she was not bothered by that. Although, in reality, she did that deliberately, but Akira was not able to see through her smile.

“Don’t worry, I just called you there since it would be a bad idea to cause a ruckus over there. Even a small quarrel between Hunters could be scary to normal people after all. Well, since we're armed to teeth for fighting monsters, that's totally understandable though. In the worst-case scenario, the private security company guarding the area might mark you too. If that happens, you won't even be able to enter that area anymore. So be careful."

"I understand, thank you very much for worrying about me."

As Akira earnestly thanked Elena and Sara, they smiled lightly at him. But Elena and Sara's expression immediately turned stern. Sara then looked at Elena, who made a serious look as she hesitated for a bit before she made her resolve and asked.

"Akira, is it okay if I ask you something?"

"Sure?"

"…After what happened back then, we asked Katsuya what happened between the two of you. Is it true that you're trying to kill Katsuya's friend?"

Akira's hands stopped, his face also turned serious.

"It's true that I'm hunting a pickpocket who stole my money. I didn't know if that pickpocket is his friend."

"Katsuya said that it's your misunderstanding though, is that true?"

"There's no mistaking it, although, I can't give you anything if you want me to show you a proof to convince you."

"You can't even tell us anything?"

"Yes, that pickpocket stole my wallet, emptied it, and threw it away. So I have no physical evidence. There were no witnesses either. So if you don't believe me, it's not like I can do anything about it."

"So both sides don't have any proof, huh…"

Elena frowned. To be honest, she believed Katsuya's side more. It was simply because Katsuya said so with confidence and desperation, she felt that Katsuya would not go that far if he was lying.

In contrast to that, Akira seemed uninterested. Depending on how Elena looked at it, it even sounded like Akira simply said that because he was asked. To top it off, it even seemed that he did not even try to convince anyone there. It was even obvious to the people there that Akira had completely given up trying to convince anyone since he figured that no one would believe him anyway.

After hearing what Akira said, Elena thought of convincing him that it was only a misunderstanding to make him stop. But since it was not like she was there when that happened, she could not tell who was in the right; Katsuya or Akira. But it did not even matter, after all, she only thought that it was not worth getting into a fight with Katsuya just because of a few hundred thousand Aurum.

But seeing from Akira's reaction there, it seemed that making Akira back off by pointing out the possibility that it was just a misunderstanding would be difficult. As she thought so, she started to think of another solution.

This time, Sara was the one who asked a question to Akira. She sounded a little hesitant when she asked him.

"Uhmm, Akira, why do you want to kill that pickpocket?"

"It's not like I'm going to chase her to the end of the world. But if I can find her with a little bit of effort, I'll kill her. Of course, if I find her in front of the Hunter Office, I would let her go since it would be too much trouble. But if it's in the middle of the wasteland, I'll definitely kill her. And if I see her somewhere else, well, it depends on the location."

"I-I see."

Akira answered back casually. But that was exactly the reason why Sara knew that he was being serious. Sara and Elena both knew how he felt nothing about killing others. Although they did not know exactly how willing Akira was in killing people who were related to that pickpocket, people who got in his way, and people who got involved in that incident, they knew well that Akira would not hesitate that much when it came to killing them.

Akira frowned and showed an expression that he had almost never shown to Elena and Sara.

“Elena-san, Sara-san. I have no wish to tell you to believe me, I won’t tell you to take my side either. So, can both of you please stay away from this matter?”

Elena had a worried look on her face as she frowned and said.

“No, I can’t do that when I know that two of my friends might try to kill each other because of something like that.”

She could not take Akira’s side and demand Katsuya and his group to hand over Alna. At the same time, she also could not take Katsuya’s side and pressure Akira to back off. Not to mention, it would be super difficult to convince Katsuya to handover that pickpocket when they knew that Akira would kill her. As Elena thought so, she made a suggestion to probe the situation further.

“If I’m not mistaken, the main problem is that pickpocket stole 100,000 Aurum from you, right? It would feel wrong if I just gave you 100,000 Aurum to take its place. So let’s see, ah, that’s right! Since this matter left a bad aftertaste, so in order to clear up that bad aftertaste, how about I treat you to something around 200,000 Aurum? So let’s calm down, okay? I know a pretty good restaurant, you know?”

Akira’s face stiffened and slightly turned emotionless.

“…No, that in itself still feels wrong. So I’ll have to refuse.”

“Oh, so it’s still a no even if it’s my invite, huh. That’s just too bad. Honestly, I have some confidence in myself, but I still got rejected, huh. It feels pretty disheartening. In that case…”

Elena was trying to act coy to reduce the tension in the air while she was smiling and thinking what to do next. But Akira suddenly said with a rather stern tone.

“Elena-san.”

Akira’s expression returned back to normal after a few seconds.

“If Elena-san and Sara-san want me to stop no matter what, then I will stop hunting for that pickpocket.”

Sara was surprised, she found it weird that suddenly Akira sounded like he would obediently follow what she and Elena said.

“Are you sure?”

“Yes, both of you have helped me so much until now, so I can at least do that much.”

Elena and Sara looked at each other. Although it still felt a bit forced, it was still better since Akira seemed to be willing to go as far as to fight Katsuya just to kill that pickpocket, which, in the worst-case scenario, might cause a full-blown fight between him and the whole Drankam gang. Both Sara and Elena agreed on the same conclusion there.

“In that case…”

Elena was about to say that she wanted Akira to stop no matter what, but Shizuka suddenly interjected rather forcefully.

“In my opinion, it’s better if you think carefully first before saying anything.”

Shizuka jumped into their conversation abruptly, so everyone redirected their attention to her. She confirmed that everyone present was looking in her direction before she continued.

“Akira, I understand that you have your reason to kill that pickpocket, but it’s not like you have to kill that pickpocket right away, right? And it’s not like you'll get killed unless you kill her first. So if you can afford to wait, I want you to use that time to think carefully about it. There's no need to rush yourself to make a decision."

Shizuka said so while looking straight at Akira with a serious expression. Akira thought for a bit before he mumbled.

"Think carefully about it, huh…"

Shizuka then continued as if she was reminding Akira.

"Yes. Making you believe that it would be too late unless you decide now without giving you the time to think about it is how some people usually trick other people. As long as you have the leeway, use it to think carefully. Those people who say 'I didn't expect that this would happen' are those who usually had the chance to take another option if they had thought about it more carefully. Just think about it, if they had considered all of their options and made their resolve before picking a decision, they would not have said something like that."

Akira frowned as if he was thinking hard. Shizuka's voice changed to a gentle one.

"In the end, Sara, Elena and I are all outsiders in this matter. We don't know exactly what happened and what the situation was. That is a fact. But it's exactly because we're outsiders that we can offer a third-party opinion in this matter. It's not like we're saying that your decision is wrong. But, we're worried that you're forcing your decision just because you have decided so when you were filled with emotion although that decision is no longer worth the trouble now. From our point of view, it seems that our friend is going to do something that isn't worth the trouble because of the decision that he made based on emotion. That's why we just thought that it's better if you calm down for a bit. They say that an empty stomach can cause your mood to worsen. So if filling your stomach can calm you down and make you change your decision, then it might be a better idea to do so. That's why Elena invited you for a meal."

Akira looked at Elena and immediately asked.

“Is that so?”

Elena and Sara froze. During all their previous meetings with him, it was obvious from Akira’s gaze, expression, and voice that he thought dearly of both of them. They had saved each other in the past, they had worked together as Hunters too, it could be said that they were close to each other.

But Akira’s expression right now showed no trace of friendliness. He was looking at both of them as if they were only strangers to him, like people who he did not know that might pose danger to him. His gaze was saying that he was trying to make sure if they were enemies or not while he was waiting for their answer.

Sara was deeply shocked that the person who she thought was close to her would look at her like that. Elena was equally shocked too, but since she was used to handling negotiations, she was able to maintain her usual expression from the outside. She then tried to make a friendly expression as she agreed to what Shizuka said.

“That’s right. If you get into a fight with someone from Drankam, it might cause the whole gang to fight you if you get unlucky. Especially when Katsuya is valued highly in Drankam to the point that they are treating him as an officer. I even heard that some officers in the gang are also actively supporting him. I’m sure you have your reason, but from the other’s point of view, it looks like you’re willing to turn an organization that even has connections with the City Management against you just because of one pickpocket. So it does not seem to be worth the trouble no matter how we look at it. After all, in the worst-case scenario, it might even mean turning the whole city against you. Not to mention, it seems both of you got too emotional back there. So I just thought that it might be a good idea if you could calm down and think about it one more time. I’m sorry if I said something that offended you although I’m just an outsider.”

“…No, it’s fine.”

Akira’s expression still seemed rather stiff. The mood there also felt rather awkward.

Shizuka suddenly said in a bright voice as if to exorcise that awkward mood.

“By the way, Akira, are you still in the middle of picking parts? Since Elena is here, how about you ask for her opinion? If you’re going to pick parts to work with your information terminal, I’m sure that her opinion would be valuable. Not to mention, if I’m not mistaken, Sara’s equipment is also modified equipment. So you can ask her opinion too.”

Akira hesitated as he asked both Sara and Elena in a rather formal fashion.

“Is it okay?”

Elena smiled and nodded.

“Of course, right, Sara?”

“Eh? Yeah, sure. We have nothing to do after this anyway, so you can ask us anything.”

Sara also nodded and smiled.

“Thank you very much.”

Akira bowed without showing his smile to Elena and Sara.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 157, People Who Sow Conflicts

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The lower district of the Kugamayama city was vast, the public order was more or less as bad as the wasteland. And in the area that had even worse public order, there were some organizations with strong economic power doing illegal businesses. They employed powerful military power to control the other smaller organizations within that area. Ezont Family was one such organization, its territory expanded from the slum city all the way to the lower district.

Ezont family's base was located in a certain mansion that was in the boundary between the slum city and the wasteland. That mansion demonstrated the power of the organization and the most important thing was not the size of the mansion.

There was no shortage of land in the eastern district, and with the advancement of technology, people could build mansions relatively cheap. But it was a whole different problem whether it was safe or not for them to do so. The main reason why the land inside the inner wall was expensive, was simply because it was safer. Having a mansion right next to the wasteland meant exposing it to monster's attacks, it showed that they had enough money to pay for the people to guard that mansion, unlike those countless small gangs scattered inside the city.

In a large guest room inside that mansion, the boss of the Ezont family, Rogelt, was sitting while thinking hard. On the other side of the table, in front of him, Viola was smiling like usual.

Rogelt had his men standing guard behind him, while Viola had Carol standing guard behind her. They were all armed.

Rogelt looked at the four pictures on top of the tables while immersed in his thoughts, his gaze then returned to Viola.

Viola tried to analyze his gaze; if it was saying that there was a chance for negotiation or not as she happily said.

“So then, what do you think?”

“It’s not a bad offer.”

Two of the pictures were of Akira and Katsuya. Akira looked slightly annoyed in that picture, while Katsuya was smiling as if that picture was taken for publicity.

“We also did some investigation about those two. That Katsuya boy has his past record properly written in the report from Drankam, so it’s easy to compare it with the information that you brought in. His Hunter Rank is also pretty high. Well, basically, I’m sure he’s indeed a strong Hunter. While that Akira boy, he has a rather low Hunter Rank. But I heard that he was able to fight against eight robbers all by himself recently, and if I add the information about him that you just brought in, well, I’m sure he’s pretty strong too. If I can get both of them working for me, our battle against Haurias would definitely be easier. We’re thankful that you even prepared a way to make them work under us.”

“I’m glad that you found it interesting.”

Viola said that with a bright smile, but Rogelt suddenly put some intimidation in his voice.

“So then, how much of it was your plan?”

Viola tilted her head and looked confused, but she looked rather exaggerating.

“What do you mean?”

“Don’t play fool with me. Even I at least know that you’re not a decent human. It’s your usual modus operandi to spread information that doesn’t seem connected to one another at a glance in order to manipulate the situation for your own benefit, right?”

“That’s a big misunderstanding. It’s just that those people who bought information from me made a blunder and pinned the blame on me. They’re really giving me a lot of trouble.”

“Misunderstanding?”

Rogelt snorted.

“The method to control these Katsuya and Akira that you offered is basically taking hostage the girls they love. It’s all good up to there, they’re guys, after all. It’s not strange for them to go that far for the girls they love.”

The other two pictures on the table were of Alna and Sheryl. According to Viola, Akira was emotionally invested in Sheryl, whereas Katsuya was in Alna.

“But, I highly doubt that everything is a coincidence.”

Rogelt started questioning Viola. He was suspicious about the information she brought in, it was hard for him to believe that it was all out of pure coincidence.

It took an unnaturally short time for people to misunderstand that Sheryl’s relic shop was selling expensive relics, and the robbers even misjudged

Akira to be a small fry. Sheryl wanted to take her chance with her relics shop, so she wanted to eventually reopen it, but now that Akira was going to return back to his Hunter work, she needed other people to guard her shop. If Sheryl joined Ezont Family, she could have the gang guard her shop, and Rogelt would be able to use Akira through Sheryl. After all, Akira was so invested in Sheryl to the point that he had bought an expensive dress for her and made her the boss of a gang.

As for Katsuya, he seemed to be abnormally interested in Alna who should have been just a common pickpocket. He even used the power of Drankam to protect Alna who was being hunted by Akira, but of course, that could not stay for long. If the Ezont Family gave shelter to Alna, they could make a deal with Katsuya, or if they took Alna hostage, they could use it to control him.

With all of these things mixed together, Rogelt found himself in a situation where he could easily manipulate both Katsuya and Akira. But Rogelt could not ignore the feeling that someone was setting this up.

“I admit that the information from you is accurate. But, the reason why those robbers aimed for Sheryl’s shop as well as them mistaking that Akira as a weak Hunter, they’re all because of the information that you spread. You manipulated them into attacking Sheryl’s shop, didn’t you?”

“It’s just a coincidence. Another relic shop asked me to gather information about Sheryl’s shop, and Shijima asked me to check Akira’s real strength. So it’s not like I did that because I wanted to.”

“Then, how do you know that Alna is staying in one of the Drankam’s mansion when it should be restricted only to Drankam members? And why have you even made some preparations to get her kicked out from there?”

“There are people inside Drankam who don’t want Katsuya to get involved with a pickpocket from the slum for the sake of keeping their reputation with their sponsors in the inner wall. You should be able to at least guess that much, right?”

“…If Akira is really as strong as you make him out to be, it’s strange that Alna could steal his wallet. If he’s really that strong, he should have been able to stop her. And even if it is because he was caught off-guard when that happened, he should still be able to get it back if Alna was somewhere near where he could still track her down. It’s also strange that Katsuya would go that far to protect that Alna. She’s just a stranger to him, right? And it’s not like Alna was wearing an expensive dress that might make people mistake her as a rich lady either. Not to mention that the person hunting for Alna is not just a common Hunter, Akira has even participated in hunting bounty monsters. Is this Katsuya really risking a fight against that Hunter just to help a mere lowly pickpocket? I know that he’s weak with girls, but it’s still unnatural, you know?”

“Even if you ask me so, I’m sure that there are times when Akira makes mistakes. His money might have gotten stolen because of that. As for that Katsuya, maybe he is just really kind and really weak to girls, you know. Even in the reports for Drankam’s sponsor from the inner wall, they are highly praising Katsuya for his kindness. I also heard that he has so many girls around him that people even mock his group as the harem squad. So he might just be someone who would casually risk his life for girls.”

Rogelt then continued pointing out contradictions and abnormalities in Viola’s story while checking for a reaction from her. But Viola always replied casually and calmly just like usual. Eventually, Rogelt ran out of materials and found himself with nothing more to say.

“…Seriously now, can you really say that you didn’t do anything else other than just gathering information?”

“If I really have to say something here, I just sent someone to check how far Katsuya would go for Alna to help me find a plan to get him to give up on her. I was also surprised when I found out that Katsuya would not give up Alna even after offering him 20 million Aurum, and when I was content that I could get some information on him, the people that I sent got killed, you know. Thanks to that, I can’t collect the rest of their debts, it was a huge loss. The reason why I came here to sell this information is to make up for that loss. And since you’re a reputable person, I agreed to give you the information first before you pay for it, right? I really hope that you would pay me a lot for it afterwards.”

Rogelt smiled wickedly.

“I don’t know about that. It’s true that it’s rather valuable information, but there are a lot of things that I can’t just accept. So I can’t really say if I would give you the amount of money that you’re hoping for…”

Viola looked rather surprised, she then smiled confidently.

“Oh my, are you really going to go that far? Geez, it can’t be helped then. It doesn’t feel right to demand money for information that you don’t find to your liking. Carol, let’s leave.”

Seeing how Viola was really about to leave, Rogelt suspiciously said.

“You sure you don’t need the money? You suffered a big loss, right? But you don’t seem desperate at all there.”

Viola smiled.

“But of course, it takes a lot of money to gather information, you know. That’s why, if you don’t take this offer, I think I’ll go bankrupt, so I’m planning to sell the same information to Haurias.”

Haurias was another gang that was more or less as powerful as Ezont Family and they were in a feud against each other. They were very close to starting a full-blown war for territories. If Haurias got the same information, they might get the upper hand against the Ezont family.

“Y-you fox!”

Rogelt could not help but to raise his voice in anger, his men behind him readied their rifles in reflex. But Carol already aimed her rifle at Rogelt faster than anyone present. Rogelt frowned and made a stern face as he signalled his men to lower their rifles.

Viola smiled at Rogelt and asked.

“So then, should I leave now?”

“…Alright.”

Rogelt seemed to have given up and took out his information terminal.

“There, I sent it. Go ahead and confirm it.”

Viola opened her information terminal and checked her bank account, she then lightly shook her head.

“That’s not enough.”

“What!? Are you kidding me!? Shouldn’t that be enough!?”

“That’s true if it’s just to pay for that information. But that’s not enough to stop me from selling that information to Haurias. And also, since you even made some extra work for Carol here, I’ll need to pay for her extra wage too. It’s your fault, so you have to pay for that too. So with all included, let’s see, you’ll need to pay me 50% more than what you just transferred.”

In contrast to Rogelt who looked pretty angry, Viola was smiling as if she just confirmed her victory.

“That’s your fault for doing something that you shouldn’t have back there. Or is it that you want me to demand more money?”

Rogelt clicked his tongue and sent the demanded amount of money.

“Yup, I’ve received it. Don’t worry, as an information broker, I won’t sell it to other places. I can promise you that.”

“…Humph, I bet that you made the same offers to the other people too. You won’t live for long, you know.”

“I’m already used to hearing that from other people, but for some reason, they always die first. So you better be careful, okay?”

Viola only left that threat and smiled wickedly before she left that place with Carol.

Rogelt immediately yelled at his men as if he was venting his anger.

“Get moving!! Now!”

While he saw his men flusteredly scurrying to get on with their jobs, he promised himself to vent his anger on Haurias first before venting it on Viola.

__*__*__*__

Akira finally finished choosing modification parts for his rifle with some help from Sara and Elena. Akira, who took a long time deciding which one to choose, was able to finish choosing relatively fast with the help from Elena and Sara. He even finished installing the modifications there. Now that his new rifle was modified to the point that he had to use special types of bullets, plus the modification parts too, he had to pay 60 million Aurum in total. Although he ended up spending a little more money than his original budget, he was satisfied with the result.

Akira packed everything he bought into his vehicle and thanked Shizuka, Elena and Sara who saw him off, especially to Shizuka.

“Thank you very much for everything.”

Shizuka noticed that Akira directed his thanks mostly at her, she then smiled and said.

“I’m a merchant after all. It’s my job to serve customers. If you want to thank someone, you should thank Elena and Sara. They helped you although they’re not obliged to do that.”

“That’s true. I’m sorry for taking your time.”

Akira lightly bowed to Sara and Elena. Elena noticed the same thing that Shizuka also noticed, but she didn’t show that on her face as she smiled at Akira and said.

“Don’t worry, it’s not like we have something else to do anyway, not to mention that you helped us a lot too in the past, we can at least help you that much.”

Sara also smiled as if to dispel something that was worrying her.

“Although I’m sure that they’ll work just fine, if you have any trouble with the parts that we picked for you, please tell us. I might have picked some parts based on my strength, you see. So the kickback might be rather strong, though I think it should be okay with that augmented suit.”

“I’m sure it’ll be okay, I’ll take my leave then.”

Akira hopped onto his vehicle and left the shop. Elena and Sara were lightly waving at Akira as he drove off, but the moment Akira was no longer in their views, their expression turned stern.

Elena understood that Shizuka interjected back then for their sake.

“Did we say something that we shouldn’t have back there? Shizuka, what do you think would have happened if I went and told Akira that we wanted him to stop hunting for that pickpocket no matter what?”

“I think he’ll really stop hunting for that pickpocket for real. But in exchange for that, I bet he’ll stop maintaining the close relationship that he has with both of you until now. In the worst-case scenario, he might even cut any relationship with both of you…”

The word ‘severance money’ came up in the back of Elena’s mind. That time, if she had told Akira that she wanted him to stop no matter what, Akira would have really stopped hunting for that Alna. But she would have had to pay it with the relationship that they had built up until now as the severance money. Considering that Shizuka even interjected there, Elena thought that her guess might as well be true.

Elena tried to remember what she had said while making a grim face. But she could not think that she said anything that bad.

“Did I say something that really angered him…? Sara, I’m sorry, it seems that I really soured our relationship with Akira because of something I said.”

Sara looked rather dispirited as she shook her head.

“It’s not your fault. I didn’t notice that I said something pretty bad back there as well.”

Sara lightly sighed.

“…If you hadn’t cut in, our relationship with Akira might have ended then and there. Shizuka, thank you, you really saved us.”

Sara smiled and thanked Shizuka, but this time, it was Shizuka who made a stern face.

“Though it might be too late, are you sure that was fine?”

“Of course, why did you ask?”

“As long as Akira is still hunting that pickpocket, there’s a good chance that he’ll get into a fight with that Katsuya, you know. I did tell him to think carefully about it, but it’ll only buy some time at most. Moreover, if he still decides to kill that pickpocket after he thinks about it calmly, this time, he might really hunt for that pickpocket to the end of the world.”

“Ahh, you have a point there.”

“I wonder if that was a mistake, it might have been better if I was able to come up with something else to calm him down back there…”

It seemed that Shizuka doubted her own choice there, but Sara could not think of any better solution than that. Moreover, she did not want to think that Shizuka made the wrong decision. After all, had Shizuka not cut in, she would have asked Akira to stop no matter what.

If that had happened, Sara felt that Akira would have cut any ties with them. Their relationship would turn into acquaintances who were frequenting the same shop, and if she tried to invite him to go to the ruin again, Akira might casually refuse without even considering it, and Sara would not want that.

Elena and Sara knew that they were thinking of the same thing and told themselves not to make the same mistake ever again.

“Shizuka, do you have any idea why Akira reacted that strongly? I don’t mind even if it’s just your guess.”

“A guess, huh… Now that you mention it, there was a time when he sounded really in a bad mood. I wonder if it has something to do with that.”

Shizuka then told what had happened to Elena and Sara. Elena and Sara’s expression turned even more cloudy after they heard Shizuka’s story.

Elena lightly hung her head.

“…So, he got that annoyed even when he was able to contain the damage, huh. That explains why he got annoyed when his money got stolen. Although it isn’t worth that much. Judging from how bad his mood got back there, he must have thought that we seemed to believe more in Katsuya’s story to the point that we’re willing to pay to help him… Geez, what a disaster!”

Shizuka looked at Elena as if she was pitying Elena.

“I bet there were many occasions where people didn’t believe him at all in the past to the point that he did not expect anyone to believe him from the start. It exactly felt like that when you asked him if Katsuya’s explanation was true or not.”

Elena made a stern face and said.

“I should’ve been able to notice it if only I paid more attention to him… I guess I put too much trust in the information that I got beforehand, huh? And that happened to me, who usually handles negotiations too, what a big blunder.”

Sara lightly smiled at Elena and tried to cheer her up.

“Elena, please don’t be too hard on yourself. That also applies to me too, I believed in Katsuya’s story too much. Katsuya did not seem to lie and he sounded pretty desperate too after all. So it’s not strange that we didn’t even doubt his story… wait?”

“What’s wrong?”

“No, it’s just that, now that I think about it, it’s weird that we didn’t even question it although it’s not like Katsuya was directly involved and it’s basically second-hand information…”

“…Now that you mention it, that’s true.”

Elena and Sara suddenly noticed that strangeness. Shizuka tilted her head and looked at them, equally confused.

__*__*__*__

Alpha was observing Akira who was driving the vehicle. Although he obtained his new equipment, he looked rather down. There was also a trace of anger that accompanied it.

Akira noticed Alpha was looking at him, but he did not react at all while still looking annoyed. But of course, he could not ignore her gaze forever.

“…Is there anything you want to say to me or something?”

“You now have your new augmented suit and you have modified your rifle to the point that it’s a completely different rifle. I want to spend some time analyzing both the new augmented suit and rifle so that I will be able to have full control over both of them. We’ll only go back to our Hunter job after that, so we’re not going to the wasteland anytime soon.”

“… Alright… Is that all?”

Akira seemed to be doubtful, but Alpha smiled like usual and said.

“If you really want to know, I actually also agree with Elena and Sara. It’s better if you stop hunting that pickpocket out of stubbornness. Although, my reasoning is different compared to them.”

“What do you mean?”

“Unlike Elena and Sara, I don’t care if that pickpocket dies. What I’m worried about is the trouble it would cause you later after you kill that pickpocket. If you really want to kill her that much, it might be a good idea to get a long-range anti-personnel sniper rifle and snipe that pickpocket from far away. It isn’t worth the trouble antagonizing Drankam just to kill that one pickpocket. In that regard, I agree with Elena and Sara.”

Akira frowned and asked sceptically.

“…Then why didn’t you recommend me to buy that rifle?”

“Do you think an anti-personnel rifle has any use in the old-world ruin?”

Akira could not say anything back. Alpha made a serious face and continued.

“The only reason I’m giving you my support is so that you’ll complete my request. Of course, if you ask me, I might help you with other things too, but things like this are normally outside my support. So don’t forget about that.”

Akira did not say anything back for a while, but he suddenly sighed and lowered his shoulders. He did think of killing Alna and fighting Katsuya and his group, but he assumed that he would have Alpha’s support when he considered that. It was true that Alpha was not obliged to go that far to help him, so him thinking that it was given for Alpha to help him was nothing more than him being too naive. Akira thought so as he mocked himself.

“You’re right, I was too naive.”

He might have gotten a little bit too stubborn without him realizing it. Akira thought so as he took a deep breath and let it go. It might be just a self-suggestion, but he did feel lighter after he did that.

Alpha's expression returned back to its usual gentle smile.

"I don't mind if you want to take advantage of my support, but do remember that I won't help you if you're going to do something that would put your own life at risk. If there's no danger in it, I won't stop you. If you want a sniper rifle, let's buy one next time, a long barrel one with super long-range."

"Well, I'll think about it again once I earn more money. There's no need to rush, I'll think about it carefully."

"Indeed, you better do so."

Alpha smiled at Akira as if to look over him and thought.

The reason why Alpha urged Akira to get away when Elena and Sara called him right when he was quarrelling with Katsuya, was simply because she thought that it would cause a crack in their relationship. But after analyzing the result of doing that, Alpha thought that she should have let Akira stay.

If it was not for Shizuka, Akira would have seriously decided to stop aiming for Alna and risk a fight with Katsuya and his group, while at the same time, his relationship with Elena and Sara would have significantly soured. That way, Akira would have been less likely to do something that might cause more trouble. As Alpha thought so, it was not an exaggeration to say that she had made a wrong decision there.

__*__*__*__

The boss of Ezont Family, Rogelt, was sitting in the guest room inside his mansion. He had his men standing guard behind him. He was directing a rather stern look at the person in front of him.

"You refuse, you say?"

Sheryl was lightly trembling, but her expression was filled with determination.

“Y-yes, I can’t accept that offer.”

“Do you really understand the situation that you’re in right now?”

Rogelt glared at Sheryl. Sheryl shivered, her expression stiffened. She was there alone, without any bodyguard. If Rogelt wished it, he could easily kill her there.

Rogelt sighed. Sheryl refused his offer although she understood well the content of the offer. She did not have the ability to make sure that her men would take revenge if she got killed, and it did not seem she had any chance to even make a bluff. She did not seem careless, nor mocked Rogelt and his men, it was also true that she was trembling. Rogelt just could not understand why she refused the offer.

“Think again, I have my reputation to uphold. If a small weak gang like you opposes us, it’ll hurt our reputation. Or is that you already have a deal with the Haurias?”

“N-No, I don’t.”

“Then, is there anything that you don’t like? Don’t worry, I have no plans to take over your gang or anything like that. I’m just offering you to work under my gang. And since that would mean I’ll be your boss and you’ll work for me, you’ll properly get paid, and of course, I expect that you would obey my orders. Though I might give you some orders just out of spite from time to time, considering the profit that you can get from working under me, I think you’ll get more than you lose, you know? You’ll be able to reopen your relic shop and you can use that to gather money. Your men will also feel much safer since that attack. It’s nothing but good things. If I was in your position, I would have definitely accepted it.”

Although Rogelt looked calm on the surface, he was actually pretty surprised as he kept thinking at the back of his mind.

[…Why did she refuse? There should be no reason to refuse it considering her situation, position and power. She knows well that she will only be killed if she refused, but even so, she still refused. Did we kill someone close to her in the past or something…? No, it doesn’t seem that she has any grudge against us.]

Rogelt lightly raised his hand. His men immediately aimed their rifles at Sheryl. Sheryl trembled even more and her expression was filled with terror.

Rogelt said with such pressure as if he was telling Sheryl that it was her last chance.

“Think again.”

Sheryl did not say anything while still shivering.

After a short silence, Rogelt clicked his tongue and signalled his men to lower their rifles.

[She still won’t say yes in that situation, what the heck is wrong with her? I just can’t understand.]

Now that she was no longer in immediate danger, Sheryl started breathing again albeit roughly. Rogelt exasperatedly looked at her and said.

“Your courage is commendable. If there’s anything you don’t like in my offer, go ahead and tell me. I might consider it in respect of your bravery.”

But Sheryl still would not say anything. Rogelt clicked his tongue and told his men.

“Take her away. Lock her up until she changes her mind.”

Two of his men grabbed Sheryl by her arm and dragged her out, Sheryl did not even fight back at all.

Rogelt hung his head low. He thought that it would be a simple negotiation, but that did not seem to be the case and he did not know the reason why. He did not understand why Sheryl reacted so differently than what he expected, and that caused him to feel anxious and irritated. He started to think that the thing he had ignored until now thinking that it was unlikely, might actually be the reason why.

The person who brought that plan to him was Viola. He started to worry if this was also because of something that horrendous woman had planned. Now that he thought about it, he could not just let it off his mind.

"…I guess I'll try to check it out."

Rogelt then went to the other person that his men had locked in the base before Sheryl.

In order to fix Akira's mood, Viola told Sheryl about that offer from Ezont Family. Normally, for a weak gang without a connection like Sheryl's gang, it was a good enough offer.

After that, Rogelt's men who Viola called in, guided Sheryl to Ezont Family's base. Rogelt then told Sheryl the details of the deal in the guest room. Although Sheryl only heard that if she accepted that deal then her gang would work under Rogelt's gang for the first time there, that in itself was not a bad offer. If that was all, Sheryl would have happily accepted that offer.

The real problem was the reason why Rogelt was trying to take in Sheryl's gang. It was simply because he wanted to be able to use Akira via Sheryl. Sheryl, who noticed that, had no other choice but to refuse that offer.

From the outsider's point of view, it might look like Sheryl was able to skillfully get Akira to be interested in her and use it to manipulate him. She might already have Akira in her palms to the point that he would support her so that she could maintain her position as the gang's boss, buy her an old-world dress, guard her relic shop, and even give all the money that he got from selling the robbers to her. Others might have thought that it should be easy for Sheryl to control Akira.

But that was completely their misunderstanding. Sheryl did not have that power, but she could not say that to Rogelt, while at the same time, she could not conform to that misunderstanding either. If Sheryl accepted that offer from Rogelt and asked Akira to obey Ezont Family, Akira might as well cut all his ties with her. She was sure about it.

While on the other hand, even if Sheryl could get away with some lies there as if she was selling Akira to Ezont Family, that would definitely come to light, and when that happened, Akira might abandon her without giving her the chance to explain herself that it was only a lie. Although it might be just her being a little too paranoid since nothing good had happened to her lately, she was sure that Akira would do that.

The reason why she thought so was because she relied on Akira for her mental support. For her, whether she was killed by Rogelt there or abandoned later by Akira, both were equally bad.

Because of that, Sheryl was locked inside one of the rooms in that mansion. The room at least had facilities for welcoming guests. Her information terminal was taken away from her and she was alone inside that room. Although no one was keeping watch in that room, that room had no windows and the only door was also locked. She had no means to escape that room.

Sheryl anxiously mumbled.

“…What should I do?”

She did think of the possibility that Akira would come to rescue her. But her logical side that properly understood her current situation denied that possibility.

She could not contact Akira and Akira did not know where she was. In the first place, it was rather doubtful if Akira would antagonize the whole Ezont Family just in order to save her. Sheryl’s logical side told her so as if it was not her problem, the possibility for Akira to come to save her was unrealistically small.

Sheryl smiled bitterly and started sobbing.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 158, Ignition

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was relaxing in his own home. He left his augmented suit on a shelf in an empty room.

Just like with the previous augmented suit, Alpha was working on the control device of Akira's new augmented suit.

"Alpha, how long will it take until my augmented suit is ready?"

"It'll be done sometime around tomorrow night. We'll head to the wasteland again after that."

"Hmmm, that's pretty long."

"Unlike your previous augmented suit, this is a high-quality augmented suit after all. Moreover, it's not like I'm just simply hijacking the control device. I'm basically rewriting the software from the bottom-up to be able to pull out its full power, so putting that in consideration, finishing it tomorrow night is pretty fast, you know."

"Is that so? That's pretty amazing then."

Alpha was telling the truth, but Akira barely showed any reaction to it at all. So Alpha pouted and said.

“It’s understandable since it’s out of your area of expertise, but I really wish that you would show more interest in it.”

“Even if you told me so… Just wait patiently until I have enough knowledge to be honestly amazed by something like that.”

Forget difficult things like that, Akira only had barely enough common knowledge according to the current standard. Not to mention, he would need all kinds of complex information that normal people would not know in order to be honestly amazed by what Alpha just said.

“Seems like it would take quite a long time until you reach that point, huh.”

“Yup.”

It seemed that it was not an easy thing to get Akira interested in that kind of information. Alpha thought so from how he replied apathetically.

A call suddenly reached Akira’s information terminal. When he checked the caller, it was from Viola.

“It’s Akira, what is it?”

“…It’s about Sheryl, is this a good time?”

Viola’s voice was rather rough. There was a hint of fear and it was obvious that she could not keep her calm. Akira also noticed that and frowned, but it was out of suspicion.

“What? If it’s about Sheryl’s gang, go talk with her. Don’t try to jump over her by trying to ask for permission straight from me.”

“That’s not it. As in matter of fact, this problem is because I didn’t inform you first. So I want to give you a short explanation first here.”

“Alright alright, so, what is it?”

Akira got even more suspicious. Viola then carefully started her explanation.

“…Sheryl is being held in Ezont Family’s base. At this rate, she might even get killed.”

Akira’s face slightly turned stern.

Viola then continued her explanation which sounded more like her making excuses. She started from when she introduced Sheryl to Ezont Family which she did originally as an apology to Akira. But then, for some reason, Sheryl refused that offer which offended Ezont Family. She then said that it was something that she did not expect and that it was not her fault. She nervously gave her explanation as if she was making excuses for what she did.

“…So basically that’s what happened, I really didn’t have any wish to put your lover in danger. I hope you can understand that.”

Akira replied rather indifferently.

“I understand the situation.”

Viola sounded rather relieved as she said.

“I see. I only called you to make sure that we don’t have any misunderstanding between us, so I’m really glad that you understand.”

“Is that all?”

Viola then continued while sounding rather nervous.

“Just one more. About that pickpocket, it seems that Alna is also in Ezont Family’s base. But I don’t know if she’s also being held there or if the Ezont Family is sheltering her.”

Akira’s voice immediately changed, he sounded slightly annoyed.

“So?”

“…You might already know that Shijima and I tried to capture or kill Alna, but unfortunately, Drankam got in our way. If Alna is still somewhere in the slum city, we can try again, but it would be too much of a trouble if she’s under Ezont Family’s protection. That’s why, I know that you didn’t ask us anything, but in case you were expecting us to be able to capture Alna… I’m sorry that we can’t satisfy your expectations. I hope you can understand.”

Viola sounded slightly scared although she also sounded rather relaxed at the same time.

“I did say it before, I didn’t you ask you to do anything.”

“Is that so? Well, you have a point there… Although it might sound strange for me to say this, but it might be a good idea for you to give up on killing that Alna, you know.”

Akira’s mood clearly worsened.

“…What do you mean by that?”

“There’s no need to be that angry. It’s simply a matter of too much trouble, you see. It isn’t worth getting into trouble with Ezont Family just in order to kill one pickpocket. That’s all there’s to it, so don’t misunderstand me here. It’s not like I’m saying that you can’t win against Ezont Family, it’s simply a matter of whether it’s worth the trouble or not. Moreover, from the information that I gathered, it seems that Katsuya Hunter is making a deal with a Drankam officer to make Alna a Drankam member. Of course, that officer is opposing his request, but it’s only a matter of time before she gets overwhelmed. It’s a whole different thing between killing a mere pickpocket and killing a Drankam member. Not to mention, Drankam seems to be in a rather good relationship with the Kugamayama City Management. So in the worst-case scenario, you might get the whole city against you. No matter how strong you are, it’s stupid to get into a fight against Drankam. I’m sure you know at least that much too, right?”

In the middle of her explanation, Viola’s tone slowly turned to normal. But once she remembered her position, after a short pause, she once again sounded rather scared as she said.

“That’s all, later then.”

“Wait!”

Akira still sounded in a bad mood. Viola replied, sounding scared.

“W-what is it?”

“Tell me where’s this Ezont Family’s base.”

“What are you planning to do with it if I tell you…? No, it’s nothing. I’ll send the location to your information terminal after this. Later then.”

Viola flusteredly closed the call. It seemed that she was scared since continuing the call might only turn the situation worse.

Akira put down his information terminal. He hung his head low, sighed, and raised his head again. His bad mood seemed to have vanished. In its place, he had a resolute expression.

Akira swung his legs toward the room where he kept his augmented suit. Alpha understood what he was about to do, she frowned and said to Akira.

“Akira, as I explained to you, the augmented suit is not ready yet.”

“It’s not like it’s useless just because I can’t receive your support, right? Well, if it’s useless, I can just use another armour though. I’m glad we modified the AAH and A2D assault rifles so that I can use them without an augmented suit. As for the CWH anti-material rifle and DVTS minigun, I’ll only use them when they’re ported on my vehicle.”

Alpha understood that Akira was being serious. There was a time when Akira went to Shijima’s base with only his AAH assault rifle and no augmented suit. Considering his opponent and his equipment at that time, it might be equally as reckless as what he was going to do this time. So it was rather impossible to stop Akira who had made his decision using his equipment as an excuse. So Alpha decided to try a different method.

“Are you going to save Sheryl or to kill that pickpocket?”

“Both if it’s possible. You’ll know whether I can do it while I’m at it.”

Akira himself could not tell if he would only save Sheryl while aiming for Alna or that he would kill Alna while he’s saving Sheryl. If it was only one of those, he might not have decided to move out. But with both of those things pointing at the same location, it was enough of a reason for him to move out.

“I believe Shizuka told you to think about it one more time about killing that pickpocket though.”

“She did, but it seems that I don’t have the leeway to take my time any longer.”

Akira was running out of time, if Drankam gave protection to Alna, he would have to prepare to fight Drankam in order to kill her. But right now, he just needed to prepare to fight Ezont Family in order to kill her. As a matter of fact, he might be already too late, but it did not change the fact that the sooner he made his move, the better it was. And that would mean to make his move now.

Alpha made a serious face and said to Akira.

“Like I said before, I have no obligation to provide you support for this, you know?”

Akira stopped and stared back at Alpha. Normally, he would casually say that she did not have to help him in that case, and Alpha was actually expecting him to say that and was planning to use that to convince him.

But Akira lightly smiled and said to Alpha.

“You did tell me to spoil myself with your support, right? So help me.”

Alpha looked obviously surprised. She then smiled bitterly, a little amused too at the same time.

“Geez, alright.”

“Thanks!”

“I wonder if it was a mistake telling you that.”

“It’s really something you or I should not say lightly.”

“I completely agree with you.”

Akira and Alpha smiled at each other, they then immediately prepared themselves to move out.

Once Akira finished his preparation, he hopped onto his vehicle. Alpha was already sitting on the driver assistant’s seat. She then teased Akira.

“But still, it seems that you are starting to learn how to use me, huh?”

Akira replied with a joke.

“That’s well, that’s all thanks to all of your education.”

“Oh my, are you saying that it’s my fault? I might have taught you things that I shouldn’t have.”

Alpha’s expression turned to her usual smile as she continued.

“Viola just sent you the location of Ezont Family’s base. Now that we know where it is, shall we go?”

“Roger that!”

Akira immediately moved out once he finished all of his preparation.

__*__*__*__

Viola was smiling in a certain room. It was right after she sent the location of Ezont Family’s base to Akira.

“…That should do it. I delayed some time before sending the information to make him think that I didn’t have it ready beforehand, but did I delay too much?”

Viola’s expression did not show the fear that she had when she was talking with Akira. All of that was nothing more than her acting. She was just acting scared like how she was usually acting calm. She looked completely fine like usual as she said.

“I guess it’s time to give a call to the other person too… Now then, I wonder what will happen next.”

Viola smiled amusedly imagining what was going to happen.

__*__*__*__

Ezont Family’s base was surrounded by fences. The scene behind that fence completely looked out of place in the slum city, it looked so luxurious with a big courtyard. It was sitting in the boundary between the slum city and the wasteland.

The people who lived outside that fence would look inside the fence and be amazed by the power of the Ezont Family. Eventually, they would join the gang in order to get a share of that power.

Right when the sun was about to set. The entrance guard noticed a vehicle heading in their direction. They immediately aimed their guns at that incoming vehicle. But that vehicle stopped not too far away from the entrance.

The guards quickly surrounded the vehicle. One of the guards saw that it was only a young boy driving that car, he then mockingly said to Akira.

“Brat, what are you playing here? It’s not a place for a brat like you to loiter around. Go away!”

“I heard that Sheryl is here, so I’m here to pick her up.”

“Sheryl?”

Since that guard was only a lackey in the gang, he did not know the details of what was going on inside the gang, but even so, he felt that he heard that name before when his boss summoned that Sheryl. So he made a call to the people inside the base.

“You, what is your name?”

“It’s Akira.”

That man was talking with his superior through his information terminal while glancing at Akira from time to time.

“…Eh, ah, yes. He said that it’s his name, and he said that he’s here to pick up Sheryl… No, even if you say so, he looks like just a common brat from my point of view… Well, it’s true that he has better equipment than a common slum brat, it won’t be strange if he calls himself a Hunter with his equipment… No, he doesn’t look that strong.”

That man lowered his information terminal and turned to Akira.

“You, are you really Akira?”

“I don’t know who’s this real Akira that you’re expecting, but my name is Akira.”

“I’m talking about that Akira, a Hunter who is protecting Sheryl’s gang. Is that you?”

“That would be me.”

That man compared the Akira from the picture that he received from his co-worker and the person in front of him. The person in front of him did look like the one in the picture, but he did not seem like a strong Hunter that his superior told him about. He then frowned and made another call.

“…Yes, it’s the brat from the picture… I understand.”

That man then closed the call, looked at the other guards, and gave them a signal to lower their guard and return back to their posts.

“Just wait there!”

Akira was still sitting in the driver’s seat as he nodded. Alpha, who saw that Akira just obediently nodded, lightly smiled.

“And here I thought that you would just break your way through.”

“If we can solve this without a fight, it would be way easier, right?”

“Of course. Let’s just hope that we can solve the other matter as easily too.”

“That would depend on the reason why these guys are protecting that pickpocket. If these guys are also a victim to that pickpocket and are planning to publicly execute her to make an example out of her, then I’ll just leave her be.”

Alpha raised her eyebrows in surprise.

“Oh, you’re okay with that, Akira?”

“It’s not like I need to be the one who kills that pickpocket. As long as she would end up dead, I don’t really care about the rest.”

“Well, it would be way easier in that case then.”

“Yeah.”

If that was enough for Akira, Alpha had no complaints about it at all. If Alna got killed somewhere that had nothing to do with Akira, it would not cause any trouble for him afterwards. As Alpha was thinking of a way to accomplish that, her plan was immediately crushed.

Another car was heading in their direction, the guards there immediately noticed that vehicle. It was a fully armoured vehicle with no windows. It was equipped with multiple cameras to let the people inside it see the situation outside the vehicle. It was even equipped with a machine gun on top of it.

That vehicle stopped not too far away from the entrance, the side door of that vehicle opened and an armed young boy stepped out. It was Katsuya.

Katsuya's aura intimidated the guards. One of the guards there winced back from that aura as he tried to hide it by yelling at Katsuya.

"What the heck's with you?! Do you even know where you are right now!? Do you want to die?!"

Katsuya glared angrily at those guards. Although they were already aiming their guns at him, Katsuya did not show any fear at all.

"I know you guys are the people who kidnapped Alna. I'm here to get her back!"

"What are you even talking about? Who is this stupid guy?!"

That guard noticed the Drankam stamp on Katsuya's vehicle and winced.

"You, you're a Drankam Hunter, huh?"

"I am. I'm Katsuya from Drankam. I don't know why you kidnapped Alna, but if you will obediently return her back now, I'll still forgive you. If you don't…"

Ezont Family was indeed a strong gang, but it would still give them a lot of trouble if they killed a Drankam Hunter. The guards there slowly surrounded Katsuya. The guard who was responsible for communication flusteredly called his superior.

"…Yes! It's an emergency… A Hunter from Drankam by the name of Katsuya is here…"

Katsuya, who saw those guards scared, made an annoyed face. He thought that if having him there would make them that scared, they should not have kidnapped Alna in the first place.

"…Eh, ah, yes, it's indeed the guy from the picture. I think he's the real Katsuya. Unlike Akira, he looks well-armed for just a brat and his equipment are better than those common Hunters…”

Katsuya finally noticed Akira sitting in his vehicle with his hand on his chin. He immediately connected Alna who was being held in Ezont Family’s base to Akira who was there, his expression immediately filled with anger and glared at Akira.

“…I see what’s going on here.”

Katsuya thought that Akira asked the Ezont Family to kidnap Alna.

Akira actually already noticed Katsuya for quite some time now. He looked obviously annoyed as he sighed and said.

“Why is that guy here?”

Alpha seemed obviously disappointed, it seemed to be impossible to avoid a fight now.

“I bet he’s here to save that pickpocket.”

“Why he would even know that pickpocket is he-“

Akira was suspecting that Katsuya also received that information from Viola, but since he did not have any proof and he had no trust in his own intuition, he decided to just forget about it and consider other possibilities.

“…Well, it might be from Drankam’s information network. According to Elena-san, he’s treated as one of the officers in the gang after all. So it might be possible for him to get that information from there.”

“So, he’s glaring at you though, what are you going to do?”

“Let’s see…”

Akira stepped off his vehicle and said to the guard who was still talking to his superior.

“Hey!”

“What?! Don’t bother me! Just shut up and wait!”

Akira then yelled to let the person, to whom that guard was reporting, hear him.

“If that Alna is still there and alive, give her to me and I’ll kill her, either that or kill her yourself now.”

“Hah!? What are you-“

That man was confused by what Akira just said. But Katsuya immediately interjected.

“If you give Alna to him, I’ll never forgive you!!”

That man looked even more confused as he looked at Akira and Katsuya. One of them told him to kill Alna while the other was there to save Alna. But both of them were telling him to hand over Alna to them. The weak-looking one looked at that man with a slightly stern face, while the strong-looking one glared at him with an angry face as both of them were demanding him to hand over Alna.

That man who was just a lackey had no privilege to make that decision, but he was obviously leaning to one of them while he was talking to his superior.

Akira noticed that and mumbled.

“…Well, this doesn’t surprise me at all.”

At this point, Akira already fully abandoned the possibility of peacefully resolving the current matter. Just like everything that happened to him until now, it was just like always, this time too, it did not go as he wanted. He thought that they would only let Katsuya in and they would hand over Alna to Katsuya.

Up until now, Akira looked at himself as an outsider in this conflict between Sheryl and Ezont Family. That was why he peacefully came and asked the entrance guard, and if Sheryl was returned to him without any trouble after that, he would not look at the Ezont Family as an enemy.

But that was no longer the case now. They were hindering him from killing Alna. Now that Akira looked at them as such, he completely turned hostile toward Ezont Family. Of course, from this point onward, he would react to them just like how he reacted to his enemies.

Akira walked past the guard and stood in front of the locked gate. Alpha sighed and mumbled.

“It still turned to this in the end, huh?”

“I’ve backed off twice from getting into conflict with him. And just like people say, if you’ve done it twice, you can do it thrice. At this rate, I feel like I’ll always avoid getting into a fight with him. That’s why I won’t do that this time, just like they say, third time’s the charm.”

Unlike before, this time Akira was properly armed. Or at least, it no longer gave him a reason to back off again this time. There was a time limit too, he had to kill Alna before a stronger organization took her in. Akira no longer had any reason to withdraw.

“Though just like I told you before, that augmented suit is not ready, so I won’t be able to give my full support. So don’t expect to get my usual support, okay? Not to mention, you’re not used to that augmented suit yet. So be careful, okay?”

“Okay!”

Alpha then smiled gently at Akira.

“Well then, you can go ahead. Good hunting!”

“Roger that!”

Akira’s augmented suit was already functional. He used his full force to deliver a powerful kick to the strong-looking gate. The 350 million Aurum augmented suit showed its power and blew away the gate with a loud bang.

As the other people were still dumbfounded by what just happened, Alpha controlled Akira's vehicle and ran it straight to him as if to mow him down. Akira lightly jumped to evade that and landed on his vehicle.

He then quickly reached for the guns fixed on his vehicle, removed them, and equipped them himself.

"Alpha, do you know where's Sheryl and that pickpocket?"

"Unfortunately, I only know that they're not outside the mansion. Viola did send the blueprint of the interior of the mansion, but it doesn't say where Sheryl and that pickpocket are held."

"I guess I have no other choice but to raid the base and ask them, huh?"

"I'll try to look for them too and tell you if I find them."

"I'll be counting on you."

As Akira's vehicle went straight into the mansion through the courtyard, people inside the base started shooting at him. Of course, Akira shot back with the powerful rifles that he just took off from his vehicle. The night scene immediately filled with flashing muzzles.

After Akira kicked the door open and drove in, Katsuya finally returned back to himself and immediately started shooting at Akira. But Akira had already disappeared and it was not like he was properly aiming at Akira, so none of his shots hit Akira.

"Dammit!!"

Katsuya seemed obviously vexed. The guards around him immediately aimed their rifles at Katsuya. Although he was only aiming at Akira, it did not change the fact that he released shots into Ezont Family's base. It was obviously an act of hostility. Even if he was a Hunter from Drankam, they could not just let that go.

"You brat!! Doing something like that!!"

The guards shot at Katsuya aiming to kill him. Katsuya reacted to evade them while shooting back at those guards. Katsuya showed his skill in that fight. The guards were riddled with bullets as they fell down one by one to the ground, some of them were immediately killed while some of them were severely wounded after that exchange.

When it ended, Katsuya was the only one still standing. He looked at all the people he shot down scattered in front of him, as the one who did that, he then said to them as if to make an excuse.

“It’s your fault for kidnapping Alna, okay!!”

Katsuya made a stern face as he hopped back to his vehicle and chased after Akira.

One guard was still alive albeit badly wounded and was drowning in his own blood. He used the last life force that he had left to reach for his information terminal to send a notification in order to alert everyone that they were under attack before he let out his last breath.

__*__*__*__

After questioning Alna and judging from how she answered his questions while shaking in fear, Rogelt then thought.

[She’s not lying, or at least, she thinks she’s telling the truth. It doesn’t look like she had this planned either. It’s purely out of luck that Katsuya came to save her. If I think that Katsuya only saved her to show off to the other girls that were with him, it all makes sense. And the reason why he did not give up Alna when he was offered 20 million Aurum might be because he doesn’t want people to hate him thinking that he’s someone who would exchange a girl for money, either that or it’s because he had gone too far and had no other choice but to keep it up. It’s not too strange for a Hunter, who is earning well, to think of 20 million Aurum as a small amount of money. Not to mention, the info said he’s a womanizer. It all makes sense… As for the chance of him working together with Viola behind the scene… That’s unlikely.]

Rogelt thought that the information about Katsuya and Alna were nothing more than fake information made up by Viola, but he quickly dismissed it. And when he thought that the information Viola spread might incite it, considering the reason why Akira was hunting for Alna, he quickly dismissed that too. It was because he had enough reason to think that it was all nothing more than pure coincidence. But even so, the reason why he questioned if that was really a coincidence was simply because he knew of Viola's bad reputation.

"I'll ask you one more time. You're close to that Katsuya and he promised to save you if anything happens to you, right?"

Alna was still shaking, but she replied back firmly.

"That's right!! He'll definitely save me!!"

"But you're in this situation now. Doesn't that mean that he wasn't able to save you?"

"…That is… It's my fault, he told me not to walk around outside since it's dangerous but I disregarded that…"

When Alna was hiding in one of the camping trailers owned by Drankam, a Hunter came and kicked her out since he was about to use that vehicle. As she was thinking about what to do inside Drankam's base, a guard found her and kicked her out since she was an outsider. When she was loitering around outside Drankam's base, she heard that Katsuya went to the slum city to look for Akira. She was so worried and ended up going to the slum city too. And that was where she was kidnapped by Rogelt's men.

Alna thought that it was nothing more than a series of bad luck, in reality, it was all orchestrated by Viola. The Hunter who kicked her out of the vehicle she was hiding in, and the guard who found her later, all of them were there only because of the information that Viola spread. They did not even know that they were being used by Viola. Similarly, the reason why she heard about Katsuya going to the slum city was because she overheard some people talking about that and those people only did so because they were told to do so after they received some money from someone they did not know.

Rogelt looked at that depressed Alna and felt fear welling up from inside him. Fear towards Viola. Alna thought that she was kidnapped because someone whom she stole from in the past still had some grudges against her. That was also what Rogelt said to Alna. Rogelt did not notice that it was all according to Viola's plan.

Rogelt looked at Alna who was about to break down and sneered at her.

"Well, it doesn't really matter. If Katsuya really holds you that dearly, then it's good news to us too. I'll have him properly pay for all the troubles that you caused us. And if he refuses, we can just kill you too. I'm expecting that you'll be a good hostage, okay?"

Rogelt looked at Alna's face and guessed how good she was as a hostage. He decided that it was worth making her a hostage as he smiled and left the room with his men.

"…Katsuya… Save me…"

Alna said so with a pained face now that she was left alone in that room.

The moment Rogelt stepped outside the room, an emergency alarm reached his terminal. He pulled his information terminal out and asked with a stern face.

"It's me, what is it?"

His men replied with a panicked voice.

"Boss!! It's an attack!!"

"Who is it from? Don't tell me it's the Haurias!?"

Rogelt thought so judging from how panicked his men were, but he was surprised when he heard the reply.

“What!?”

The attackers were Akira and Katsuya. Rogelt did not expect that at all. He was even more surprised when he checked the record of their exchange.

[What’s the meaning of this!? Why do they know about Alna and Sheryl!? I understand it’s only a matter of time before they knew it, but this is just too fast!! They found out about it on the same day!? And they even raided the base without giving us a chance to negotiate! It’s just too strange.]

Rogelt immediately noticed why it happened and made a grim face.

[…Viola! Don’t tell me that she brought that plan to us not so that we can manipulate them but to make them attack us?! Did she also say something to them that made them not even try to talk it out first? But even if that’s true, why would they attack us? There’s no way they can win with the only two of th-]

Rogelt froze. After that, he immediately shouted at his men.

“Kill both of them!! There’s no need to give them a chance to surrender! Call back everyone outside the base to fight them!! Use all the powered suits inside the hangar too!”

Rogelt’s men, who did not expect that at all, confusedly replied.

“Wait for a sec, isn’t that too much just to fight two young Hunters. Not to mention, we stocked those powered suits to fight Haurias in the first place…”

But Rogelt yelled back to that guy who was questioning his order.

“If they’re your common young Hunters, there’s no way they would raid our base just with the two of them, you know!! If my guess is correct, that Viola might have something to do with Haurias!! They might even come here using this chaos!! Go! Make sure that the powered suits are ready before I’m there!”

“O-okay!”

His men flusteredly ended the call. Rogelt still had an extremely grim expression on his face as he looked around his officers and his men and told them.

“I’ll go to the hangar. All of you take your squad to join the fight outside. Hire those Hunters who would help us too. It’s a full-blown war. In case if Haurias don’t come after we finish taking care of those two, we’ll go and attack Haurias base.”

“Roger that. Should we kill Sheryl and Alna too?”

Rogelt was able to regain some of his calm after he looked at his men who were calm in that situation. After giving it a short thought, he then said.

“…No, try using them as hostages. Both of them attacked us without even giving us a chance to talk it out, they might not be here in order to save them in the first place, but at least give it a try.”

Rogelt quickly ran towards the hangar after he said that while his men immediately went to move as they were ordered to.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 159, What A Hunter Is Allowed And Not Allowed To Do

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was holding down the trigger of his DVTS minigun while still standing on top of his vehicle. Although he was aiming at the enemies in front of him, the shaking from the vehicle prevented him from hitting his shots. He tried to sweep horizontally with his DVTS minigun, but due to the shaking, his stray bullets even landed on the third floor of the mansion.

“This kickback is no joke! Alpha, can you do something about this?!”

“Nope. As I said, I haven’t finished taking control of the augmented suit so I can’t help you fix your aim or anything else that includes controlling your augmented suit. So use your own power to try to stabilize it. Or do you still want me to try?”

Akira tried his best to hold his DVTS minigun while thinking that it was rather too reckless of him to go to a real fight with his new equipment without getting used to them first. It was difficult to stand firm on top of the shaking vehicle. If Alpha was not controlling his vehicle, he would have been thrown off the vehicle by now. Thanks to that, he was only able to randomly scatter bullets to the enemies in front of him.

But that was enough to suppress his enemies down. The modified DVTS minigun could easily turn a monster into minced meat in a matter of milliseconds. If it hit a human without strong armour, it would normally be a death sentence. As more and more of his enemies chose to hide behind covers, less and less of them had the leeway to shoot at Akira.

“Akira, hold on tight!!”

Akira flusteredly held on to his vehicle. Almost at the same time, Alpha made a 90 degrees turn. When she did that, countless bullets came from behind and drew a line on the ground as it tried to catch up with Akira, it came from the machine gun on top of Katsuya’s vehicle.

“Shoot back now!! At this rate, he’ll one-sidedly keep shooting on you!”

Akira grabbed at his vehicle with one hand and used his other hand to aim his DVTS minigun at Katsuya’s vehicle.

“If it’s impossible to properly aim at him, at least keep it aimed at one point, I’ll try to help by adjusting the vehicle’s position.”

“Roger that!!”

Akira stopped trying to aim just like he was told to. He used his augmented suit to hold down his DVTS minigun aiming at one point before pulling the trigger. As the effect from the shaking of the vehicle, Akira’s aim, and the kickback that threw off his aim had been minimized, Alpha adjusted the vehicle position to aim at Katsuya.

Katsuya’s vehicle was riddled with bullets, shaving off the armour platings covering his vehicle. From Akira’s point of view, the fire sparks coming out from the bullets hitting the armour plating made it look like he was shooting fireworks as he was also listening to the bullets that went past him and landed behind him. Every time they released a barrage, a flower-like flash illuminated the dark courtyard.

Alpha focused her aim more to interrupt Katsuya's aiming rather than to destroy his vehicle. Some of the released bullets hit the machine gun on top of Katsuya's vehicle and interrupted its aiming. And even before the control device on that vehicle was able to readjust its aiming, more bullets hit that machine gun. It was in order to preserve the durability of Akira's vehicle which had less armour.

In less than 10 seconds, they already exchanged enough bullets to kill a few hundred normal people. At first, Katsuya tried to force his way relying on the armour platings of his vehicle, but when the control device of his vehicle alerted him that a certain part of his vehicle was badly damaged, he noticed that Akira was focusing his aim at one point trying to break through the armour of his vehicle. Katsuya then clicked his tongue and made a turn to escape from Akira's barrage.

Alpha used that opening to accelerate the vehicle and put more distance between them. At the same time, Akira quickly switched to his A4WM automatic grenade launcher and scattered grenades in Katsuya direction to prevent Katsuya from chasing him any further.

Akira had a stern expression plastered on his face as he said.

"That guy finally retreated, huh. But still, to think that he would raid the base from the front just to save a pickpocket, is that guy even right in the head?"

Alpha looked exasperated at Akira. She had no idea if Akira just simply did not realize what he too was doing, or if he understood what he was doing but was just ignoring it for now, or he was surprised to find someone who was as reckless as him.

"I'm sure he doesn't want to hear that from you, you know. You're basically doing the same thing as him, right?"

Akira raised his eyebrows as if he was telling Alpha that it was rude of her to say that to him.

“I came here fully willing to resolve this peacefully if they just hand over Sheryl and that pickpocket to me, you know. If it’s needed, I was even willing to negotiate. That was why I was obediently waiting when they told me to until that guy came. But after that guy came, the situation changed and negotiation seemed to be out of the question, that’s why I had no other choice but to take drastic action. So I don’t want you to lump me together with a guy who came here with a battle vehicle and acted so arrogantly the moment he came as if he was fully expecting for a fight right from the start, you know.”

There were many parts of Akira’s argument that were actually subjective to individual interpretations. But since he honestly thought that they were not the same, Alpha decided not to point it out.

“I’m glad to hear that you were actually willing to resolve this matter peacefully. Now, if only you would keep that up a little more, I would be really happy.”

“It depends on whether the other side would respect that or not. But people tend to not let me do that, so as long as that’s true, I don’t see any reason to stubbornly stick with it.”

If he only put out his argument and opinion, then let others take the decision, more than often things would not go as he wanted to. That kind of pessimistic thinking was carved in Akira’s head, that was the main reason why he stayed alone and did not get involved with any gangs when he was living in Slum City. He always thought joining a gang would give him more loss than what he could gain.

In the harsh-living condition of the slum city, living as a group rarely had more minus than the plus, of course, excluding special cases like Akira. Akira understood that if he affiliated himself with a gang, he would often get blamed and when the push came to shove, he would be the first one to be abandoned. As such, he was basically always alone. Had Alpha not delivered the shock that disrupted his usual way of thinking, he would have refused the deal that she offered to him right off the start.

Alpha understood without knowing the detail that there was a deep reasoning why Akira was like that. While at the same time, she also found that beneficial for her too.

“Well, it’s true that it’s useless to try to negotiate with someone that won’t even listen to you. I don’t think it’s a bad move to just abandon a negotiation with a low chance of success.”

“I know, right?”

Akira’s stern face relaxed for a bit, it might be because he thought someone finally agreed with him.

“We’ll break through the mansion from the entrance not too far ahead. You’ll have to leave the vehicle behind and search the inside of the mansion after that. Since you’ll be leaving your vehicle behind, there’s a good chance that you’ll lose it too, so just keep that in mind.”

Akira sighed.

“So I’ll lose my vehicle again, huh… “

“If you’re lucky, you won’t lose it.”

“Unfortunately, I’m not a lucky guy.”

Akira thought for a second if he was cursed to keep losing his vehicle or something.

Once the squad from Ezont Family finished their preparation, they immediately scrambled to the courtyard to fight the invaders. All of them were either former Hunters or were in the army before, they were not like those amateurs with rifles.

As they were passing through an atrium into the courtyard, Akira’s vehicle suddenly busted into the atrium. Akira paced his car to its full speed before he charged it into the door of the mansion. Ezont Family’s squad acted immediately and started shooting the vehicle. The vehicle was riddled with bullets in no time, but Akira was not in it.

When those people were shooting at the vehicle, Akira jumped into the atrium with his DVTS minigun ready in his hand and opened fire just like that.

Akira got some of them in his first opening barrage, but those who survived immediately spread out. Some of them set up a portable wall and used that as a cover while shooting back at Akira, some of them moved away from the group before shooting back at him, some of them lied down on the ground, or used Akira's vehicle that just broke in as a cover, or used the full power of their augmented suit to jump away. Basically, they spread out so that Akira would not be able to finish all of them in one sweep.

Akira could see the trajectory of the incoming bullets thanks to Alpha's support. He unconsciously compressed his time perception while trying to evade those incoming bullets, but since he was not used to his new augmented suit yet and the number of the incoming bullets were too many, some of those bullets hit him.

But the moment those bullets touched Akira, his coat blew those bullets away. Akira's coat was made of nanomaterial equipped with force field armour and it drew from his energy pack. It was even light enough to be used with an augmented suit, but compared to the armour plating for vehicles, it had a very bad cost-to-benefit ratio. Not to mention once the energy pack was emptied, it would turn into a common coat. It was a very expensive piece of equipment to use.

Alpha warned Akira who just got shot.

"Try evading better. Even if it's alright to get shot a few times, every time you get hit, your energy reserve will also get hit pretty badly."

Akira did his best evading and shooting back as he replied.

"I know!! But it's just that they're too many! It seems that I didn't get enough of them with the surprise barrage!"

"Make sure to finish those who are already lying on the ground, otherwise, there'll be no end to them, you know?"

Those who got hit and just fell unconscious on the ground were resurrected by their augmented suit. When the augmented suit read a disruption in its user's life signal, it would inject its user with medicine, accelerator drugs, and other battle stimulants to wake them up and allow them to temporarily continue fighting for a short time.

When Akira saw that, he could not help but frown.

"So a few bullets is not enough to neutralize them, huh!?"

Akira desperately evades the incoming bullets while shooting back at his enemies. Even with his compressed time perception, he could not stop moving. If he stopped for a second, he would be a sitting target. At the moment, he needed to keep moving around while shooting back with his DVTS minigun to keep his enemies suppressed and throw off their aims.

In the middle of that fierce battle, no one was watching Akira's vehicle that was already stopped after breaking into the atrium. That was when it suddenly started running again as it forced its way through the atrium as if it was trying to run over the Ezont's soldiers. Of course, it was Alpha controlling that vehicle.

Akira quickly shot those who were distracted by his vehicle. Moreover, he quickly ran along beside his vehicle while using it as a cover. He did not stop shooting at his enemies while running, confusing his enemies even more. Alpha gave Akira instructions to match his movement with his vehicle, thus he was able to effectively shoot down his enemies one by one.

Ezont Family's soldiers were killed one by one, some of them were run over by Akira's vehicle, some of them got shot down by Akira, some of them were blown away by Akira's kick. The fierce battle died down as more and more dead bodies kept piling up.

As the dead bodies finally outnumbered those who were still alive. Akira slowly but surely got the upper hand in that fight, but that was when another sudden change in situation happened. A reinforcement suddenly poured in from inside the mansion.

Akira started considering pulling back and assaulting the mansion from another side. If Alpha told him to do so, he was planning to do so right away. Alpha then gave Akira an order.

“Akira.”

“Temporary retreat?”

“Force your way into the mansion.”

Although Akira was surprised by that unexpected order, he had a stern face as he looked at the direction Alpha was pointing at. He then gathered his resolve and started running. Akira had to pass through several positions where he had no cover in order to follow that order, but he did not hesitate at all.

Ezont Family’s soldiers were surprised by the sudden charge that looked nothing more than just a reckless and pointless action, but they immediately aimed their rifles at Akira. Right when they were about to pull the triggers on their rifles, another barrage suddenly came from the courtyard followed by another vehicle that crashed right into the atrium. Katsuya was chasing Akira while scattering bullets from the machine gun fixed on his vehicle as he rammed his whole vehicle straight into the mansion.

Akira used that opening to slip past those soldiers. He held his DVTS minigun in one hand and randomly shot bullets at those men while running.

Of course, those men could not just ignore the battle vehicle inside the atrium, they shifted their focus from Akira and focused their firepower on Katsuya’s vehicle. Some of the reinforcements who came with rocket launchers fixed their aims at Katsuya’s vehicle and pulled the trigger.

The rockets did not have a hard time finding their target, as those rockets hit Katsuya’s vehicle that was inside the atrium. The fire from the explosions even reached outside of the mansion and the shockwave shook the whole mansion.

__*__*__*__

Sheryl, who was also being held inside the mansion, looked very confused. She no longer looked sad anymore.

[…What's going on? It seems that there's something going on outside for a while now…]

She was able to notice the change in the situation from the room that she was locked in. She could hear the siren going off outside accompanied by the sound of people running around.

Sheryl thought of using the current chaos to escape, but she could not find any ways to do so. The only door in that room was locked and she did not have anything that she could use to force it open. Although there was something going on outside, it did not change the fact that she was not able to get out of that room on her own.

But even so, she tried her best to think of the best decision that she could take in that situation. She was trying to regain her calm so that when the opportunity presented itself, she would not miss it and would be able to react calmly.

If she kept looking down while crying, she might overlook something that she could have done, she might have unconsciously ignored some chances that she could have used. She kept telling herself that while taking deep breaths to calm herself down.

Then something happened. The door to that room suddenly opened and a few men came into the room. The man who was leading those men aimed his rifle at Sheryl and held out her information terminal that was confiscated before.

"If you don't want to die, give Akira a call."

Sheryl extended her hand and took that information terminal with a serious face.

__*__*__*__

After Akira went through the atrium, he kept running into the deeper part of the mansion through the hallways. He loaded a new magazine into his DVTS minigun while running. He had to pay for the price of using his new augmented suit, which he was not used to yet, with a few pills of medicines.

“That was pretty dangerous. I thought I keep myself vigilant back then, but those guys were pretty strong.”

Akira inadvertently compared the strength of the people that he just fought to those robbers that he fought in Sheryl’s base excluding Zalmo, who he had especially extra trouble fighting against. But if he included his current equipment, these people were a little stronger than those robbers.

As Akira thought that it was to be expected that the guards defending such a huge base would be rather powerful, he then regretted the fact that he was unconsciously looking down at them before. But he did not regret his decision to raid the base.

“But still, didn’t that guy come to this place to save that pickpocket? So why is he chasing after me desperately?”

“He might have misunderstood that you know the location of that pickpocket and decided to kill you first.”

“What a pain in the neck!”

As Akira looked immensely annoyed, Alpha suddenly made a suggestion to him.

“If you think that it’s already way outside your calibre, you can decide to withdraw, you know. That fight just now was pretty bad after all, right?”

“Well, it’s true that it was rough, but I somehow started to get the feeling of how to use this augmented suit from that fight. As expected of an expensive augmented suit, it doesn’t seem hard to operate. That’s why I should be able to give a better fight next time. It’s rather unfortunate that I still can’t get your support, but I don’t think I’ll withdraw yet.”

Alpha understood that Akira was not trying to sound strong from the way he said it. While at the same time, rather than being happy with his ability to adapt, she thought that she needed to be careful with it. Akira was able to get used to his new augmented suit to the point that he did not worry about it at all just after a single fight. That ability to adapt was way above her expectation.

Although Alpha was worried about that kind of thing which was outside her prediction, she did not show that on the surface. She was still smiling like usual as she said.

“That’s good to hear then, let’s hurry up.”

“Did you get their locations?”

“Unfortunately, I still can’t find them. I guess we have no other choice but to check all the locations where they might be held. I’ve always been keeping my eyes on the information-gathering device for any signal that might indicate their locations, but I still got nothing until now.”

Akira seemed a little bit disappointed.

“…I’m sure I can easily find them if I interrogate one of those guys, but with how strong they are, I guess that’s out of the question, huh.”

Akira did not have the leeway to take his time interrogating one of Ezont Family’s soldiers. If he did not fight them with the intention to kill, he might get killed instead. If he did not do that, he would get overwhelmed fighting those people.

Alpha suddenly turned to Akira and said.

“Akira, I know where Sheryl is.”

“Oh, you got it? So what was that just now when you said that you can’t find her?”

“I got her location now so it doesn’t really matter, does it? I’ll guide you there. And also, she’ll be calling you soon. Just tell her what I’ll tell you.

I’ll also be the one connecting you to her, so there’s no need to use your information terminal.”

“Hm? Okay.”

Akira thought that instruction was a bit weird, but he also did not want to use one of his hands to hold his information terminal. He knew that there must be a good reason why Alpha told him to follow her instruction while talking to Sheryl, so he just ignored the questions that came up in his mind.

__*__*__*__

Sheryl used her information terminal that was returned to her to call Akira. It was the information terminal that Akira lent her the other day. She made a call with a stern expression and it did not take that long for her call to connect. Akira’s voice could be heard coming out from her information terminal.

“Sheryl? Where are you?”

Before Sheryl could answer, the people inside that room quickly covered her mouth and took over her information terminal. The guy who took Sheryl’s information terminal then yelled a threat.

“So you’re Akira, huh? If you don’t want this girl dead, throw away your weapons.”

“Who is this?”

“Are you being serious here? I’m really going to kill this girl, you know?”

“Well, I mean, I don’t even know you, so it’s not like I can take you seriously even if you tell me so…”

From his voice, Akira sounded more like he really had no clue at all rather than just playing dumb, and it really irritated that guy.

“Are you really attacking this place without knowing who owns this place!? Don’t play dumb with me! If you’re going to play dumb again, I’ll really kill her now! I'm not bluffing here, I'm being serious!"

Akira paused before replying.

"…Let me get this straight first. I came here after hearing from Viola that Sheryl is being held in this place after she made a blunder during a negotiation with Ezont Family, then Viola also said that at this rate Sheryl might get raped and killed to make an example out of her. So I just thought that if she's still alive, then I'll get her out, but if she's already dead, I at least can take revenge in her place. Thought it might be too late to say this, but to be honest, I'm not even sure if that information is correct. So, is that really what's going on here?"

That man frowned the moment he heard Viola's name. His expression saying that he knew how horrendous that Viola girl was.

"It's true that this girl refused an offer from the boss. That's why we're holding her here."

"I see. Then, how about the information that a pickpocket called Alna is also here? I also got that from Viola."

"Does this have something to do with that pickpocket?"

"Because of a personal reason, I want that pickpocket dead, you see. So if she's really here, I'm just thinking of killing her while I'm here."

That man raised his voice.

"I don't care about your personal reason or what not! That pickpocket has nothing to do with this right now, does she!? The only thing that matters here is if you would obey us or not, and if you won't, then we'll kill this girl!!"

Akira paused for a bit again before replying.

"…I have two things that I need to confirm first before I can give you my answer."

Since it sounded that Akira might accept his demand depending on the things that Akira wanted to confirm, that man calmed down for a bit.

“Oh, so what is it?”

“Is Sheryl really alive? And if the girl who you have with you is really Sheryl or not? I want to know those two things first. Judging from the guys who were mocking me in the entrance, it won’t be strange if you guys already killed her, you know. After all, it seemed that you guys are not scared if I came here to take revenge. So if Sheryl is already dead, then it won’t be strange if you guys took her information terminal and used it to call me in order to trick me. In the first place, it’s weird for Sheryl to come to this place alone without asking me to accompany her. It doesn’t seem like you guys kidnapped her either, and even if I wasn’t able to accompany her, she should have at least given me a call. There’s also a possibility that someone stole her information terminal, used it to ask for a meeting with your boss, and said something that she shouldn’t have to your boss, so the person that you have there might not be the real Sheryl. If she’s really Sheryl and she’s still alive, then I don’t mind listening to your demand. After all, I don’t want to throw away my weapons just to save someone who’s pretending to be Sheryl, you see.”

That man clicked his tongue after hearing how paranoid Akira was. But since he was trying to confirm the identity of the hostage, that in itself meant that Sheryl had some value as a hostage. He then extended that information terminal to his friend who was covering Sheryl’s mouth and signalled him.

After that man let Sheryl off, she took that information terminal. The other men were still pointing their rifles at her as she started talking to her information terminal with a stern face.

“…It’s Sheryl… Uhhh, I’m being held here but I’m not injured. So, uhh, I’m okay at the moment. Ah, yes, it’s the real me. Please believe me.”

Sheryl somehow sounded rather awkward. It was both because she was buying more time while thinking about what she could do in that situation as well as because she was so surprised and delighted to find out that Akira really came to save her.

“So you’re okay, right? Then, why did you come here alone? I was there with you when you went to Shijima’s base, remember?”

In reality, considering the fight that almost happened because of Akira back then, it was enough of a reason not to bring him along again. Sheryl could not understand what Akira was thinking about that matter, if he just did not notice it himself yet, or if he was just putting that aside for now, or if he thought that it was way better to do so rather than having to face this kind of situation.

“I-I’m really sorry. Viola introduced me to Ezont Family and brought up that offer to me. Judging from what I could gather from her that time, I figured that I didn’t need any bodyguard for this.”

“I heard that you refused their offer though, did they tell you to give up your territory again?”

“Although it might sound suspicious, they wanted us to work under their gang. So I think it can be interpreted that my territory will be Ezont Family’s territory too. But if I have to make a guess, I believe that they were talking about the chain of command, and in that chain of command, they wanted Akira to be in it too. So, since I thought that it’s not my place to decide that, I refused their offer.”

“…I see, so that’s what happened, huh?”

Sheryl was a little surprised since Akira too sounded surprised. She thought that since he never considered himself as a part of Sheryl’s gang, he would not have any interest in such matters.

One of the guys there then snatched Sheryl’s information terminal again.

“You confirmed that she’s the real Sheryl now, right? Then let me tell you this again, if you don’t want this girl to die, throw down your weapons. I’ll send you a location, come to that location with your hands up an-“

Akira interjected.

“You’re going to kill me there, aren’t you?”

“…Don’t make me say it again. If you don’t follow my instruction, we’ll kill this girl. That’s all you need to know.”

“…I’m a Hunter, you know?”

“Hah?”

“Working as a Hunter means regularly risking my life. And risking my life is the most that I will do. I have no plans to go along with something that would definitely kill me. That’s why I can’t accept your demand. In the first place, if I die, there’s no guarantee that you guys won’t kill Sheryl too. This won’t even be a negotiation. I’ll make a suggestion here instead, if you hand over Sheryl and kill that pickpocket, I’ll leave peacefully. And make sure that you guys don’t interrupt me on my way out either. This way both of us won’t have to face any loss, what do you think?”

That man exploded in anger.

“Are you f*cking kidding me!? Do you really think that we would accept that offer?!”

“I’m saying here that I’m willing to forgive you for threatening to kill my lover. Isn’t that enough for a reason? Or is it that there’s no place for negotiation?”

“Yeah, that’s right!”

“I see.”

Right at the next moment, Akira kicked down the door to that room. He already had rifles in each of his hands. Everyone in that room was frozen by that sudden turn of events, Akira used that opening to fix the aim of both of his rifles and immediately opened fire. The closed room and the close range did not give them any chance to evade nor to shoot back. In the next moment, those guys were lying on the ground, drowning in their own blood after being riddled with bullets.

The scene inside the room was turned into a macabre in a split second. Akira looked at the dead soldiers there and said.

“It’s your fault for saying there’s no chance for negotiation, so I won’t accept any complaints, okay?”

Of course, no one was complaining there. Deadmen could not complain after all.

Akira was actually just buying time when he was talking to Sheryl and the other guys. The moment Alpha said that she knew where Sheryl was, Akira already knew that it was really Sheryl and that she was still alive.

He also was not doubting the information from Viola. Although Viola might have had a bad intention when she shared that information, for some reason, Akira was sure that Viola would never lie. She would only share real information, though not everything, to manipulate people.

He was only buying time to make sure that Sheryl was alright until he arrived. That was the only reason why he did that. But if they had accepted Akira’s offer, he was willing to peacefully leave too. But of course, he did not think that they would accept his offer right from the beginning.

His demand would get refused, he at least got that guess correct. Since he made that offer while assuming right from the start that the negotiation would break down anyway, that result was fully under his expectation. Akira himself did not notice how twisted his way of thinking was.

Sheryl was dumbfounded by the sudden change in front of her, but once she registered what just happened, she made a troubled face. She was happy that Akira even called her his lover and came here to save her, but at the same time, she shuddered at the fact how Akira did not even bat an eyelash massacring everyone in that room and stared coldly at the dead bodies in the ground to top it off.

Akira lowered his rifle and turned at Sheryl. Sheryl tried her best not to show fear on her face.

“Well, just to be safe, are you okay? I was trying to be careful as not to shoot you by mistake…”

“Ah, yes. I’m okay, thank you very much for coming to rescue me.”

Sheryl bowed and thanked Akira while giving off a calm smile at him.

Akira did not seem to be bothered that much, it looked as if he just finished cleaning up some small stuff.

“…Well, I did say that I’ll help you out if something were to happen. Though it’s not like I’ll come to your rescue every time, I can at least rescue you if it’s only this much.”

For Sheryl, Akira seemed so reliable from that short exchange. While at the same time, she also thought that if she ever made an enemy out of Akira, he might clean her up like what he did just now.

Putting aside whether Akira was a good person or not, one thing was for sure, he had a very low moral value and had almost zero aversion toward killing other people. To top it off, he had the power to do so although he obeyed a vague set of moral values. Sheryl thought that it would be scary to have him as an enemy, but that also did not erase how scary he was even if she had him as an ally.

Sheryl understood that she loved Akira and she depended deeply on him. That was why she wondered if her fear was her self-defense instinct kicking in for the scary person in front of her. She could not help but wonder if that fear would subside if she could gain more power. She felt insecure as those thoughts ran through her mind.

Akira lightly sighed, with this, half of his goal why he came to that place was achieved. Although he did encounter some soldiers on his way to that room, they were not as strong as the people that he fought back in the atrium. Not to mention that he had also already gotten used to his new augmented suit, so he had no problem fighting through those soldiers and it gave Akira some leeway.

Alpha smiled at Akira and suggested he withdraw now.

“Well, we’ve rescued Sheryl now, so let’s get out from this base.”

Akira slightly pouted.

“I still have a pickpocket to kill though.”

“Even if you say so, it’s not like you can hunt for that pickpocket while protecting Sheryl, right? She’ll be dead if you go around while taking her along with you, you know? It’s not like you rescued Sheryl just to get her killed, right?”

Alpha wanted Akira to get out from that base as soon as possible. That was why she decided to help him rescue Sheryl. She wanted to avoid the situation where he killed Alna, which caused Katsuya to have some grudge against him which definitely would cause more trouble later down the line. Moreover, it would be great if Alna got killed by chance in the middle of the ongoing chaos. That was why Alpha wanted Akira to leave that place as soon as possible.

Akira looked conflicted. He understood Alpha’s argument, but he could not just leave either.

“Well, one thing for sure, we shouldn’t stay in this place. Let’s move somewhere else where you can better ascertain the current situation. It would be troublesome if they send some reinforcements to this room, so let’s hurry up.”

“You’re right.”

Akira turned to Sheryl.

“Sheryl, we need to hurry up and move somewhere else. I’m sorry but I might need to carry you rather roughly.”

“I understand, please don’t worry about it.”

Akira used one arm to pick her up. Sheryl then said that she felt like she might fall, so she extended her arm around Akira’s neck and back as not to get in his way too much. If he wanted to prioritize the ease of moving around, Akira could just carry her under his arm, but Sheryl kept that to herself.

Akira then followed Alpha while carrying Sheryl, who was hugging him tightly.

Sheryl felt really happy that someone she loved was hugging her even when she was in that situation. As she thought that she was rather a calculating girl for feeling like that, she smiled bitterly and most of her worry from just now was already gone.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 160, Large-scale Battle

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

When Akira was heading to where Sheryl was held. Another change happened outside the mansion.

A few dozen vehicles went past through the gate that Akira kicked down. Since Katsuya killed the entrance guards, no one was there to stop those vehicles.

A large trailer stopped in the courtyard. Its huge backside opened and revealed multiple powered suits under its cover. They were about 5 metres tall with thick bodies and limbs, those thick limbs gave off a powerful and durable impression rather than simply being heavy. There was also a big gun lined up beside each and every powered suit.

The other trailers also opened their backsides, showing the same powered suits and tanks under them. While some of the other trailers started disembarking the soldiers inside them.

Those people were from Haurias. Rogelt’s guess was correct, Haurias used the chaos caused by Akira and Katsuya to attack Ezont Family’s base.

Haurias commander looked around the mansion and gave his men an order.

“That info was correct! Let’s use this chance to crush the Ezont Family!! Go out there and join the battle!”

The activated powered suits slowly moved their huge limbs to get up before grabbing the huge gun lying next to them. They then fixed their aim at the mansion in front of them.

Right at the next moment, a huge explosion flashed from their torsos. High-calibre rounds hit their large torsos followed by a loud banging as they were toppling over one by one. The armour platings around the area where they were hit, crumbled down and made a loud banging sound when it hit the ground.

The one that shot them was a black powered suit that appeared from behind the mansion. Those robots were designed for agility with light thin limbs and bodies. It was manoeuvring around quickly on the ground with the mobility support device equipped under its feet while carrying huge guns that looked unfitting with its small body.

That black robot was Rogelt’s powered suit. Rogelt then shouted from inside his powered suit as if to let everyone in that place hear him.

“You damn bastard!! I knew you would come!! I’ll crush you here and now!”

The other undamaged Haurias’ powered suits and tanks focused their aim from the general direction of the mansion to that black powered suit. But that powered suit manoeuvred nimbly to evade the incoming rounds while shooting back at them. Haurias’ foot soldiers spread out so as to not get swallowed in that exchange.

With tanks and powered suits involved, it was no longer on the level of a battle between the slum gangs.

Akira watched what was going on from the mansion’s rooftop and could not help but frown.

“…What the heck is going on?”

Just right outside the mansion, there was an ongoing chaos between dozens of tanks and powered suits. Not to mention the cannon barrage coming from outside the mansion by Haurias' side, Ezont Family's powered suits were shooting back at those cannons from inside the mansion. Haurias' powered suits flooded the courtyard trying to neutralize Ezont Family's powered suits, but a black powered suit was blocking them.

Quantity-wise, Haurias had the upper hand with their tanks and powered suit. But the black powered suit was obviously a few times stronger than a common powered suit and it compensated for the lack of number on the Ezont Family's side.

It would not be strange to feel a sense of superiority if someone was to stand somewhere high while looking down on the ensuing battle. But since Akira knew very well there was a good chance one of those huge rounds strayed and hit him, he was only able to smile wryly with a stern face.

"What kind of battle is going on here? They even have powered suits out too, this isn't on the level of a fight between slum gangs…"

Akira watched the black powered suit closing its distance against its enemies. It bobbed and swayed, evading the incoming bullets to get close enough before using its chainsaw-like weapon to cut down the cover together with the enemy hiding behind it. Fire sparkles flew everywhere as it cut the whole thing together and left a clean-cut powered suit and cover in its trail.

Akira inadvertently asked.

"…Whoah, that's really something. But why is that powered suit fighting in such close proximity from his enemies? It has a gun with it, right?"

Alpha answered his question.

"The anti-force field armour device works better when it's in close range, you see. Of course, some of the warheads have anti-force field armour devices installed on them too, but it's impossible to have the same negating power in those relatively smaller warheads. Not to mention that it might also be for scaring the enemies by showing its ability to fight in close range. Other than that, it might be its user's preference, I guess?"

"Preference?"

"You still remember back then in Seranthal building when Shiori cut down the huge monster, right? I bet it has similar equipment to Shiori. There was also Kanae who fought the smaller monsters using CQC. Those people who have that kind of preference often have the talent and skill to support it, you see. For them, fighting in close range is much easier and they do perform better in close range."

"I see, so that's how it is, huh."

Akira nodded as if he was fully convinced.

From Sheryl's point of view, it looked like Akira found an answer that he just mumbled himself. Although she did find that strange, she felt like Akira would tell her not to ask him if she tried, and since it might even worsen his mood too, Sheryl decided to stay silent.

"Akira, let's not spend our time watching them and get out of here. It would be bad if you get involved in that battle."

Alpha was urging Akira to withdraw, but he had a conflicted expression as he said.

"…But, I still have that pickpocket to be killed…"

"Like I said, it's impossible for you to hunt for that pickpocket while carrying Sheryl around. Even standing here is already pretty dangerous, you know? Moreover, although I don't know the reason, it seems that a fight is also ensuing outside the base. It would be dangerous if you don't escort Sheryl to a safer place."

A battle was also going on outside the fence of the base. It was a fight between Haurias reinforcement soldiers and Rogelt's men that were on their way back after they were told to return to the base.

Akira had thought that he could just escort Sheryl outside the fence and then return back to the base, but it seemed that it was no longer a viable option now.

“Like people always say, if you chase 2 rabbits at the same time, you’ll lose both of them. Your best course of action in this situation is to evacuate Sheryl to somewhere safe and hope that pickpocket gets killed in the ongoing battle.”

Akira made a stern face, it might really be his only choice there. But before he decided to just give up and do that, another idea came up in his mind.

Akira understood that his plan was unlikely to work. But even so, he was still willing to try. And if it really did not work, he would just give up and retreat, that way it would lessen his regret.

“Alpha, I need your help to control my information terminal.”

“Sure, but what do you need me to do?”

After Akira explained his plan, Alpha frowned and said.

“I’m not even sure that it would work, but…”

“I know, we’re just going to give it a try. And if it doesn’t work, I’ll give up killing that pickpocket and obediently leave this place.”

“Well, if you would feel better that way, then sure.”

Alpha operated Akira’s information terminal to send a message.

___-*__*__*__

Inside a building not too far away from Ezont Family’s base, Viola was watching the ongoing battle between Ezont Family and Haurias through her binoculars.

“Ohh, they’re fighting just fine.”

Carol was also there as Viola’s bodyguard, she then exasperatedly said.

“Good grief, you’re really an awful woman. But still, although it’s true that they’re fighting just next to the wasteland, to think that they would bring out tanks and powered suits too. I wonder how much oil you poured for that to happen.”

Viola replied with an empty smile.

“Oh my, you make it sound like I caused them to fight. That’s so rude of you. They did that themselves, you know. I have no power to make them fight each other. And even if I do, just imagine how much damage they would cause had they fought in the lower district. So I really want the City Management to thank me for making them fight in the slum. But well, since of course, I don’t have that power, I guess that’s meaningless, huh.”

“I’ll just leave it as that.”

Carol lightly smiled, it was obvious that she did not believe Viola at all.

Suddenly a notice reached Carol’s information terminal. Carol checked the content of that message and raised her eyebrows. She then smiled amusedly.

“Viola, I need to leave for a bit.”

“Oh, but you’re my bodyguard, you know?”

“I’m sure you’ll be safe in this place. So just stay here. I got a request that might earn me 50 million Aurum, you see. If you would pay me more than that, I don’t mind staying here though. I’m just staying here since I don’t have any other things to do, but I don’t feel like I’ll get any extra bonus if I continue staying here, you know.”

“Well, good luck then.”

Viola waved at Carol. After Carol picked up her equipment that she left in that room and finished her preparation, she then said to Viola.

“I don’t really care if it’s because you planned all of this. But how about you try to be a bit more careful? It’s only a matter of time before the fire that you set also gets you burned, you know?”

Carol then immediately left the room. Viola who saw that only mumbled.

“Looking at how excited she is, it must be from a guy that she likes or something. Either that or it is some kind of time-limited request.”

She then smiled amusedly.

“Get myself burned, huh? But even without me setting the fire, they already had enough oil mixed that it was only a matter of time before they started fighting though. And it would have been too late for me to run away if I don’t know where and when that fire will start.”

Viola thought that if it was only a matter of time, she could just set it herself so she knew when she had to run away to not get swallowed by the fire. To top it off, she could even enjoy watching the fire too. She was very talented in this kind of thing.

Viola thought that her work there was what god destined her to be, after all, she had the right aptitude to do that kind of work and it was a kind of work that could easily influence someone’s habit. Moreover, she believed that it was only a matter of supply and demand, and she was on the side who was supplying.

Viola then shifted her focus back to the fight and watched it while smiling.

__*__*__*__

Sheryl was still carried by Akira as she was looking around. She looked slightly scared.

She could see powered suits fighting each other and their firepower way outside what normal people could produce. Stray bullets that were more like huge warheads ripped off the mansion and opened a huge hole. If it hit someone, there was no question it would turn him or her into minced meat.

Sheryl could also feel her feet trembling, someone inside the mansion might have been using explosives. Although Akira was protecting her, it did not change the fact that it was scary.

And Akira was just standing on top of that mansion, it did not seem like he was going to move anywhere anytime soon. It was not strange that Sheryl found it weird and felt worried.

“Uhmm, are we not going to withdraw?”

Akira calmly replied.

“Yeah, but just wait for a bit here. It’s not like I’m just waiting here without any reason, you know.”

“I-I see, I understand.”

Sheryl could not pursue any further if Akira said so. After all, she did not have the ability to escape from that place with her own power. If Akira thought of her as a bother, she might get left behind to die there. She did not say anything any further, she just tightened her arms around Akira to ward off her worry.

Akira seemed a little disappointed and thought.

“…As I thought, it won’t work, huh. Well, I did expect that though.”

He did that fully expecting that it would not work in the first place. As he was about to make his next move, Alpha suddenly said in surprise.

“Akira!”

“I know, we need to go, right? I’ll give up on killing that pickpocket and go back home.”

“No, that’s not it. She’s here.”

Akira raised his eyebrows and looked in the direction that Alpha was pointing at, he could see Carol running towards him.

Carol stopped in front of Akira and smiled at him.

“Sorry for the wait, did I come too late?”

“No, it’s fine. I didn’t expect you to really come though…”

Carol smiled and exasperatedly said.

“Geez, that’s so like you. Not only did you call me here with just one message, I even happily ran as fast as I could to get to you. That’s not how you should react to a girl who did that much for you, you know. Or is it that you’re doing it on purpose to hit on girls?”

Carol was using the seductive augmented suit that she used back in Mihazono ruin. It would not be strange for other people to think that she was using that suit to seduce someone. Sheryl was so surprised by Carol’s augmented suit and how cold Akira reacted to it.

But Akira just ignored that and proceeded to confirm something.

“Carol, that message is just an escort request, you know. Don’t make it sound like I sent some strange message to you. And since you’re here, it means that you’re willing to take it, right? I know it’s weird for me to say this since I was the one who sent that request, but I didn’t expect you to accept it, you know?”

Akira sent an escort request to Carol. The content was a very one-sided offer, the reward would be paid later after the request was finished and the amount was open for negotiation. He was also willing to pay for the expense up to some amount, and it had no detailed explanation. To top it off, it only had a coordinate mentioned and a text saying that it was a time-limited offer as if it was only a prank.

If it was himself, Akira would have refused that request. In the first place, he could not reach the designated location under the time limit. Akira thought so when he sent that message. Because of that, he was amazed that Carol actually came.

“But still, it’s pretty impressive that you could come here under the time limit.”

“I was somewhere nearby, you see. But well, I wouldn’t have been able to come if I wasn’t using this augmented suit though. That aside, I didn’t expect you to send an escort request, but seeing those powered suits fighting each other over there, well, that’s understandable. Well, let’s go.”

“Wait, I’m not coming with you.”

Akira only said that as he lightly pushed Sheryl to Carol. Carol and Sheryl were equally surprised there.

“I still have something to do here, that’s why I can’t leave yet. The request is not to escort us, but to escort Sheryl. So, there you have it. I’ll leave her to you.”

Seeing Akira was about to leave after saying that, Carol flusteredly stopped him.

“W-whoah, wait there! Akira, you’re not coming? Are you sure?”

“Yeah, it would be hard for me to do the other thing that I need to do here while carrying Sheryl around, that’s why I sent you that escort request… I know it’s my fault for not giving enough explanation in that message, but the request that I sent is an escort request, not a request for reinforcement. I sent that request considering my fighting power, if it’s impossible for you to do that without me coming along, then just refuse it.”

“No, I’m okay with that, but…”

“I see. Well, later then. I’ll be counting on you.”

Akira immediately left after he said that.

Carol and Sheryl looked at each other, both of them were fully shocked. They could see from each other’s expression that the other person was equally confused. Carol then awkwardly said to Sheryl.

“Uhh, well, shall we go now?”

“Y-yes!”

Sheryl understood that it was not like Akira abandoned her, but she could not help but to make all kinds of guesses as she made a rather conflicted face.

Carol saw that and smiled bitterly.

[She’s having it tough too, huh. As I thought, he really doesn’t know how to treat girls.]

If that was the case, then it made sense why he reacted so indifferent toward her. Carol thought so as she escorted Sheryl away from the battle.

The other aim that Akira still had left was to kill Alna, so he once again went into the mansion to finish that job. She might as well already be dead, but of course, no one had the leeway to clean up all the corpses in that situation. He thought that it would be enough if he could find her corpse.

The inside of the mansion was filled with the sounds of gunshots. Ezont Family’s soldiers were trying to fight back the invading Haurias’ soldiers. Akira moved around the mansion while evading both sides.

“They are fighting both outside and inside the mansion, huh. Well, it’s not like they can bring those powered suit inside the mansion, so it’s still better than being outside.”

“You might get hit by the stray bullets if you move too close to the outside, so let’s only take the route through the inner part of the mansion. Depending on the situation, you might need to break through some walls though.”

“Roger that.”

Even Akira also did not want to get involved in that battle between powered suits. That was why he did not have any complaint taking the inner route. Although leaving holes inside Ezont Family’s base would bring huge trouble to Ezont Family, it was not his problem, so he did not care about that.

“By the way, Akira, are you sure you’re okay doing that to Sheryl?”

“I had someone to escort her, so I’m sure she’ll be fine. I know how strong Carol is and she was using that strong augmented suit with a high power consumption rate too. I’m sure she can handle it just fine.”

“But putting that aside, it’s not like you can fully trust Carol, right? What will you do if she did something to Sheryl?”

Akira frowned and said with a serious face.

“…If something like that were to happen, then that’s just how far Sheryl’s luck is. It’s not like I can protect Sheryl 24/7 and I have no wish to do so in the first place. Once I’m back exploring old-world ruins again, I won’t be able to rescue Sheryl all the time if something happens to her. So let’s just say that this is also a test for her luck and I hope that she’ll do her best for that too. If Sheryl finds it unpleasant that I didn’t escort her myself, I don’t care at all. I have things that I need to do too, I have no obligation to do everything that she wants me to do.”

Including this time too, Akira came to Sheryl’s rescue, so Alpha thought that Akira had been too invested in Sheryl. Alpha had anticipated that she might need to do something to change that soon, but judging from Akira’s reaction just now, it seemed that there was no need to worry about it. Although he might be slightly invested in Sheryl, he had no problem with abandoning her when needed. In the worst-case scenario, he did not even care if she was dead. For Akira, Sheryl was only worth that much.

But another problem came up from there. Between saving Sheryl and killing Alna. Akira actually put saving Sheryl after killing Alna on his priority list. He put more priority on killing Alna. Which meant that it would be difficult for him to change his priority.

Akira would kill Alna, and if Katsuya witnessed it, it would no doubt cause a lot of trouble. Alpha wanted to avoid that.

“Akira, get into that room.”

“Did you find her?”

“Just get in.”

Akira went in as he was told to. But there was no one inside that room.

“No one is here though.”

“Then put furniture to block that door.”

“…What’s going on here?”

Akira looked suspiciously at Alpha, who looked back at him with a serious face.

“…Alright.”

Akira thought that there must be a reason why Alpha did that, so he then barricaded the door. Once he was done, he was told by Alpha to wait in the middle of the room, and that was exactly what he did without complaining. His right hand suddenly moved on its own.

“Oh? Alpha, is that you?”

“It seems that it’s working just fine.”

“With this, I can get your support through my augmented suit, huh? But if I’m not mistaken, you said that you needed more time to fully take control of my augmented suit, right?”

Akira said so and looked at Alpha, who pouted and replied.

“I really didn’t want to do this. I put in a crude control software since it’s better than having no support from me at all.”

“I-I see, why do you look so displeased then?”

“Personally, I really don’t want to use that crude control software, you know. But, since it’s better than nothing, I don’t have any other choice but to use it. I can give you some support with this, but don’t expect anything advance, okay?”

Alpha obviously looked really displeased. Akira winced back since it was very rare for her to make such a face. He then said as if to change the subject.

“I-I see, okay. I’ll be careful, by the way, why is there a need for me to get in this room and barricade the door?”

“You can’t use your augmented suit while I’m rewriting the software. So it’s to buy some time in case your bad lack caused someone to attack you while I’m in the middle of rewriting the software.”

“I see. You could’ve told me, you know?”

Alpha sent a slightly intense glare to Akira.

“I’m sure I’ve told you this before, if you can’t follow that level of order without asking me the reasons then it might be too late. That was also for confirmation, and from the result, I decided that it’s better to be able to control your augmented suit although I would be using that low-quality software.”

Even Akira understood that Alpha was basically saying if he had followed her order quickly without questioning anything, then there would have been no need for her to install that low-quality software.

“I-I see.”

“Since we’re here, you should check if you feel anything weird. I’m sure that it would be fine, but since I changed the control software, there might be a different lag time compared to before.”

“O-Okay.”

Akira immediately started moving around and testing the newly rewritten augmented suit as if not to worsen Alpha's mood. He moved around, readied his rifle, and checked for any possible uncomfortable sensation from his augmented suit.

"It's fine, no problem at all."

"That's good to hear, let's hurry up then. I'm sure you want to finish what you come here for and get out of this place as soon as possible too, right?"

"Yeah, you're right. Let's go."

Akira immediately left the room and went to the basement of the mansion to search for Alna.

[…I don't know what's going on but it seems that she's in a rather bad mood. Is it because of the software? I remember that she was pretty angry when I called her a good alarm clock too, does it have something to do with that? I have no idea at all. Well, this is not a good time to ask her anyway, so let's just do that after I'm done in this place. Though I might no longer care about this when I'm done here though.]

And so, Akira decided to forget about it for now. With Alpha's bad mood and her constantly urging him to hurry up, Akira could not notice why she decided to make sure that he was able to receive her support.

Silavin: Yay! We hit the goal! 3 Chapters here we go!

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 161, A Foolish Small Fry

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Rogelt used the chainsaw equipped on his black powered suit to sever Katsuya's vehicle and raised it up. The spinning blade of the chainsaw spat fire sparks through Katsuya's vehicle.

After Katsuya chased Akira with his vehicle, it had sustained a considerable amount of damage from all the shootings. So he decided to retreat. He ran away from the war zone, then moved his badly damaged and slow-moving vehicle to the yard and went to look for Alna. But unfortunately, Rogelt found him first after he defeated the enemy's powered suits.

Rogelt's powered suit was able to make short work of Katsuya's vehicle. He went straight for Katsuya's vehicle and cleaved it open through its ceiling.

Katsuya was barely able to get out of his vehicle in time. Although he lost his vehicle, he still had all of his equipment while he was lying on the ground, glaring at the black powered suit.

The black powered suit waved its arm with Katsuya's vehicle still stuck on its chainsaw blade. It then ripped the vehicle into two and threw them away as a display of power. The split parts landed with a loud bang and rolled over the ground.

Rogelt used the external speaker to let Katsuya hear him.

“You damn brat!! Did you really think that you can do something by working together with Haurias? Or did you think that by coming in a Drankam vehicle we would be scared of you?! Hah, that’s so unfortunate for you.”

Although Katsuya was absolutely at disadvantage, he still managed to speak back.

“Where’s Alna?!!”

Rogelt mockingly replied.

“What’s the point even if I tell you? You’ll die here. It’s too much trouble capturing you alive. I’ll crush you with this powered suit.”

Rogelt showed off his melee weapons. It had enough power to easily rip Katsuya’s vehicle into two. If Katsuya got hit by it, there was no questioning that he would be squashed.

Katsuya imagined that scene and twitched, then yelled back.

“I’m asking where’s Alna?!!”

“Goddammit, just shut up! I won’t spare you even if you beg, or do you think that it’s cool to die while thinking about the girl you love? In the first place, that girl is just an excuse for you to attack us, isn’t it? I don’t know what kind of deal you made with Haurias, but it’s stupid for you to come and join this battle too. You can go ahead and regret your foolishness when I squash you into minced meat.”

The black powered suit swung its melee weapons. The spinning chainsaw let out a deafening ring. If Rogelt swung it down, Katsuya would be minced to smithereens.

Rather than fearing for his own death, Katsuya was more reeled up for being mocked. He let his emotion take over as he loudly yelled.

“Like hell if I know about Haurias!! And this has nothing to do with Drankam!! I want to save Alna and that’s why I’m here!!”

Rogelt stopped the chainsaw that he was swinging downward. He sounded rather surprised as he asked.

“…You’re saying that you don’t know them? You didn’t come here with Akira after Viola introduced you to Haurias?”

“I don’t even know who is this Viola you’re talking about?! You’re trying to kill Alna and that’s enough of a reason for me to come here!!”

Rogelt reeled back. As the boss of the gang, he was used to reading between the lines. He was confident that he could see through lies. Of course, there were exceptions like Viola, but the little boy in front of him was not a part of that exception.

[…This boy really doesn’t know about them, huh? He doesn’t know Viola nor Haurias, does that mean that he’s not working together with Akira either? And it doesn’t seem he’s lying…]

Rogelt then continued, he obviously sounded slightly confused and troubled.

“Let me get this straight. So basically you have nothing to do with those Haurias, you have nothing to do with that Akira, and you came here all on your own decision, correct? Although you came here in order to save Alna, you did not even try to sneak in. Did you really think that you can save her by doing something like this? Are you sane?”

“T-that is…”

Katsuya wavered. Rogelt was clearly able to see that through the camera on his powered suit and confirmed that it was not a fake reaction and that he was not trying to hide something.

Rogelt’s laugh could be heard through the speakers of his powered suit.

“You’re really stupid. So you came here without even giving it a proper thought first, huh! Stupid people like you are usually just small fries who die after doing something equally stupid. So basically you’re just lucky to stay alive until now, huh!”

Rogelt’s anger mostly died down after he laughed hard. He regained some of his calm and cleared up his mind. He had no plans to fight Katsuya if it could be helped. If he had another choice for the benefit of his gang, he would definitely pick that choice. He then changed his communication line to call his men.

“It’s me. How’s that Alna? Is she alive?”

The men that he told to keep Alna hostage replied.

“She’s with me right now and she’s still alive. At first, we were planning to take her near Katsuya and use her to threaten him, but since we can’t contact him, we don’t know where he is right now. At the moment, we’re in the middle of fighting Haurias while looking for that Katsuya.”

“If it’s about Katsuya, he’s right here with me. Tell her that this call is connected to Katsuya and make her scream for help and make sure it could be heard from this call.”

Alna’s voice could be heard coming out from the powered suit’s speakers.

“K-Katsuya? Are you there?”

Katsuya immediately reacted to Alna’s voice.

“Alna! Are you alright?!”

“You… Really came to save me… Thank you… I… I…”

Alna’s voice was cut short by Rogelt.

“Just like you heard, that girl is alive. You came here to save that girl, right? Aren’t you glad? So, here’s a deal. You follow my orders from here and on, and I’ll guarantee the safety of this girl. I also won’t kill you here. This way, you and that girl will survive, isn’t that great?”

“…What do you want me to do?”

“First of all, I’ll have you kill those Haurias guys.”

“…Like hell I can tell which one of them is which!”

“Set your information terminal to catch the signal from our broadcast frequency. We’ll tell you where to go and what’s your target from there.”

Katsuya frowned and had a pained look.

“…If I kill them, you’ll return Alna back to me, right?”

“No, that’s not everything yet. I’ll have you do other things too. From what I heard about you, you’re earning a lot of money, right? So I’ll have you pay me a lot of money too.”

“What!?”

Rogelt added more intimidation in his voice when he saw Katsuya reel back.

“How many of my men do you think you have killed? I won’t let that slide unless you kill 100 people for every one of our men that you’ve killed! And money too!! How much money do you think I spent on this battle?! So don’t think that I’ll accept just a small amount of money!! And if you refuse, we’ll kill that girl!! That girl is only worthy for making you obey us! If you won’t obey us, then she’s good as dead to us!! That’s for you too! We can kill you anytime, you know!! And don’t ever think that you’re safe just by running back to Drankam, okay? Leaving those Hunters from the frontline aside, common Hunters around this parts are no threat against this kind of powered suit.”

Most of what he said were bluff, but threatening was important for successful intimidation. Putting the result aside, presenting a realistic possibility of causing damage was more than enough as a threat. In order to not give Katsuya any time to think, Rogelt thrust the chainsaw on his powered suit at Katsuya. The big spinning blade went past right in front of Katsuya.

“Either you obey me, or die here! You have 5 seconds! If you don’t give me any answer, I’ll kill you here! 5… 4… 3… 2…”

“…Alright!”

Katsuya had an extremely pained look, Rogelt pulled his chainsaw away from Katsuya.

“You’ve made the right choice. Go back to the mansion and kill those Haurias. Don’t forget to open your channel for our signals too. Now go, make sure to work hard out there. Otherwise, consider that girl dead.”

Katsuya still had a pained face as he went back to the mansion. He was also thinking of saving Alna if she could spot her somewhere, or more like, he used that as an excuse to tell himself to return back to the death zone.

Rogelt then said to his men.

“It’s me, as you just heard, don’t kill that girl. Or at least, make sure that she’s alive as long as Katsuya is still alive. Don’t try anything funny, it would be bad if you kill her by mistake. Treat her like a guest. And send some people to accompany Katsuya to make sure that he fights Haurias.”

“Roger that!”

When Rogelt was about to disconnect, he remembered something and asked.

“…By the way, I wonder how about that Sheryl?”

“My call was cut off midway. Should we try to look for her?”

“Only if you have the leeway to do so. Taking out the Haurias comes first. There’s no need to go out of your way to look for her. I’ll continue killing the Haurias outside. If you can’t handle any of them, just bait them to the courtyard or any other places where my powered suit can reach you like outside the mansion or just outside the hangar. Pass this on to the other men outside the base too."

Rogelt cut the call and returned back to the courtyard to continue killing Haurias. It might be because Haurias was prioritizing the battle outside the base that it seemed they were pulling their men back from the mansion. Of course, Rogelt's men did not let that chance slip away and targeted those retreating soldiers.

The black powered suit once again prowled the dark night as it returned back to the courtyard. Not too long after that, a scream could be heard from one of the enemy's soldiers.

"N-No one told me that we're going to be facing something like this!?"

That man was shooting at the black powered suit, but all of his bullets just bounced off from its armour.

The black powered suit swung its chainsaw and turned that man into a blob of meat in one go.

"Idiots. I don't know if they're here because Haurias paid them or something, but do they really think that they can fight quality with quantity alone? Or these people are basically like that stupid boy, coming here without giving it any thoughts first?"

Rogelt continued killing his enemies there while thinking if Akira was also one of those stupid people.

__*__*__*__

Akira was running through the mansion when Alpha suddenly said to him.

"Akira, you sometimes act like a foolish small fry, don't you?"

He twitched and looked a little surprised since he did not see that coming at all.

“That was out of the blue.”

“The thought just suddenly crossed my mind, you didn’t realize it yourself?”

“Small fry usually refers to those weak people who love to pick a fight, right? To be honest, I’m more on the side who usually gets picked to a fight though. It’s not like I proactively pick fights against other people after all. That’s why I don’t think that’s the right description for me.”

“Then how about the foolish part?”

Akira looked away. He knew that Alpha was correct. He himself understood that it was not an exaggeration to call him a fool for raiding Ezont Family’s base by himself like this.

But another side of him was urging him not to accept it. If he retreated now, he felt like he would be pushed back to the state when he was still living in the slum alley. That fear and feeling of insecurity pushed him to come to this place.

Alpha silently stared at Akira before saying.

“Well, I guess it’s way too late for me to say it, huh? That aside, I found Alna. Let’s go and finish this fast.”

“Oh, you found her? Alright then, let’s go.”

“This way.”

Akira thought something was a bit strange as he followed Alpha’s guide.

“Alpha, for some reason, I feel like you’re suddenly rather supportive, or is it only my imagination?”

“You won’t return back home unless you kill Alna, right? So I guess I have no other choice but to get you to finish her and get away from this place as soon as possible… Of course, if you decide to retreat here, that would be for the best though.”

Alpha was smiling at Akira as if she was pressuring him. Akira's frowned a bit.

"I-I see, I'll hurry up too."

Just like Alpha, Akira also wanted to finish his business there as fast as possible. Since he felt like it would only get him in more trouble if he said something there, Akira just shut up and started running.

__*__*__*__

Alna was held in one of the Ezont Family's hangar. The hangar was built large enough to house several powered suits, there was also maintenance equipment inside the hangar to do maintenance for those powered suits. Alna was shoved behind those equipment and there were several men around her guarding the area.

One of the men guarding the hangar looked at Alna, who was hanging her head down, and said.

"But still, I didn't expect this girl could be used as a hostage. That Katsuya guy is a famous Hunter from Drankam, right? I heard that the City Management also recognized his contribution to the city and he even got invited to some parties in the inner wall as well. I know that Drankam is using him for publicity, but he's basically not your usual Hunter, right? So why would such a Hunter come to this place just to rescue this slum girl?"

"Like hell if I know, something might have happened between them."

"I can understand it in Sheryl's case. That girl's dress and outward appearance are not on the same level as those girls that you can find in the slum city. That dress, although she might have gotten that from a Hunter, with that outward appearance, it would not be strange for some people to get so invested in her. But this one here is just a slum girl. If it was me, I would have just abandoned her, no question about it."

"Well, different people have different tastes for women. That Katsuya might be just a very earnest person and something happened in the past that made him owe something big to this girl here.”

“Is it that big to the point that he’s willing to antagonize us?”

“No idea. It’s just a guess, honestly speaking, I have no idea why either.”

Alna was listening to their talk while hanging her head low. She felt guilty for making Katsuya come to rescue her, but at the same time, she also felt happy for that. Then suddenly a question came up in her mind.

“Why would Katsuya even go that far for me? Just like these guys said, he has no reason to go that far for me. So why…”

Alna kept her head low while thinking, the guys guarding her did not pay her much attention since it was also helpful to them if she would just obediently sit there.

__*__*__*__

Akira was aiming through his CWH anti-material rifle from the rooftop of the mansion. He loaded a special bullet with high piercing power beforehand as he aimed straight at one of the hangars, or to be more precise, at Alna who was inside that particular hangar. Thanks to Alpha’s support, he could see the interior of the hangar together with the predicted trajectory line of his bullet.

Alpha was right beside Akira, she then said with a serious face.

“I’ll watch out for enemies, so you can focus on finishing your job here.”

“Alright, I’ll be counting on you.”

“Don’t expect too much from my aiming correction support, okay? Like I’ve explained before, the control software in your augmented suit is still a crude one. Just aim carefully with your own skill as if you don’t have my support at all. If you miss your shot, the enemies would discover your position and it would be a huge pain in the neck.”

“I know this is where I need to get super serious.”

Akira gathered his focus and used all of his senses for aiming as he was slowly adjusting his aim that swayed greatly with a slight move. The moment before he pulled the trigger, he compressed his time perception to its limit, extending and distorting the banging sound coming from his CWH anti-material rifle.

In that slow-motion world where he compressed his time perception to its limit, he could hear the sound of his heartbeat stretched to infinity. In that strange silence, a bullet flew out from the muzzle at high speed and a flash of light sparkled accompanying that bullet.

The bullet ripped through the air, straight into the hangar wall, and passed through some equipment inside that hangar as it sought its target, Alna. But it went about 30 cm beside her.

Akira made a stern face as he inadvertently said.

“Dammit, I missed!”

“Next shot, quickly!”

“I know!”

Akira immediately released the next shot. Each bullet that he released left a hole on the hangar’s wall at the same time it illuminated the dark courtyard with a flash of light.

__*__*__*__

Alna was frozen in shock when a bullet just passed close by her. But the other men there immediately reacted to it, one of them grabbed Alna by her dress and pulled her down to the floor.

The guards immediately reconfirmed their current situation.

“An attack?! Did someone slip into the hangar?!”

Another guy checked his information-gathering device for any signal.

“No signals nearby!! It’s from outside!!”

“A stray bullet then? But the wall is pretty thick, you know…?”

Another bullet flew right past Alna. Alna inadvertently shrieked. Then another bullet flew by, hit one of the equipment, and left a fire spark.

One of the guards immediately grabbed Alna and urged her to move. The incoming bullets landed one after another as it chased them while they were relocating themselves.

“It’s an enemy attack!! And they can see us inside the hangar!!”

One of the guards grabbed his hand grenade and threw it. It blew up and filled the hangar with smoke, but that smoke was cleared right away.

But right after that, Akira’s shots started to miss by a large margin. That hand grenade was actually a cheap jamming smoke grenade. Although it could not inflict much direct damage, it was enough to disturb the enemy’s information-gathering devices outside the hangar’s wall.

Akira had a stern expression plastered on his face. The interior of the hangar that was visible to him until now suddenly went blurry.

“Dammit!! Did they do something inside there?”

Alpha calmly explained.

“It’s the effect from the jamming smoke inside that hangar. You should be able to have a clear vision inside, but it’s impossible to check the interior of the hangar from outside.”

“Then there’s no other choice but to storm the hangar, huh. As I thought, I need more training to be able to shoot relying only on my own skill.”

“You can train as much as you want later, but first, we need to welcome the incoming guests.”

A guy suddenly jumped out of the hangar, he was using a heavy augmented suit. Akira immediately sniped that guy. The force of the bullet threw that guy straight back into the hangar wall. But that guy, with his back still stuck on the big crater in the hangar's wall, aimed his minigun at Akira and started shooting back.

Bullets showered the mansion and destroyed a part of the mansion, especially around Akira. Akira flusteredly got away from the barrage.

"Alpha!! That guy survived CWH anti-material rifle, you know!?"

"He knew that he could take that shot, that's why he came out in full view. It's not like it didn't damage him at all, so don't stop shooting."

As Akira was focus firing at the guy with a heavy augmented suit, another guy came out from inside the hangar with a grenade launcher, he aimed it at the rooftop and pulled the trigger. Frag grenades drew a beautiful arc on the sky. They did not explode immediately and instead got stuck on where they landed.

Akira already slipped away in order to escape from the minigun barrage. He was hiding in the enemy's blindside. But frag grenades suddenly started raining down on him. Alpha let Akira know where the incoming grenades would land, they landed and exploded one by one behind him, but he was able to get away from the explosions.

Some of the grenades exploded close to him. But thanks to his force-field armour equipped coat, he was able to get away uninjured. But of course, his energy reserve quickly whittled down with every explosion.

"That was dangerous!! It's not like that guy is only randomly shooting at me!! How in the world he did that!?"

"The first few shots were not grenades, but mini information-gathering devices, those that stuck on the walls and floors."

Akira looked around, it was true that there were small devices sticking on the rooftop. He could not help but frown when he saw that.

“So those things, huh!! Those are the things that Elena-san used during our exploration to Yonozuka station ruin, right? So basically they always know where I am, huh!!

“You’ve gone through a fight where your enemy can clearly see you during the training with Erio and the other children, remember? There’s no need to panic and just handle it calmly.”

“Don’t compare them with Erio!! Those guys are super strong, you know!! The difference in our equipment is just too big!!”

“It’s still better than having me as their commander, no? So stop complaining and get to work.”

“Basically you want to say if I’m going to complain I should just go back home, right? I got it already, geez!!”

Akira desperately evaded the explosions as he was conversing with Alpha. But Alpha did not reply to his remark there.

Akira and the soldiers from Ezont Family were engaging each other while constantly knowing each other’s location. Akira prioritized to keep moving so as not to get shot by staying in the direct firing line of the enemy’s minigun while shooting back with his A4WM automatic grenade launcher. If he could use the mansion as a cover, he could avoid getting shot by the minigun just fine. And of course, the enemies were also shooting back at him with their grenade launchers in the middle of that fight.

The more firepower they were using, the more money they spent in that battle. Since the mansion was built next to the dangerous wasteland where monsters were roaming freely, it was made with pretty strong material to withstand the attack from monsters. If it was made of common materials, the mansion would have been blown to smithereens by now. Eventually, Akira ran out of A4WM ammo first.

When Akira was about to reload a new magazine to his A4WM rifle, Alpha suddenly said to him.

“Get down!”

Right at the same time, Alpha moved his augmented suit and Akira did not fight back at all as he let his body be thrown back. When that happened, he saw a dim blue blade fly past under him. If Alpha had not moved his body, his leg would have been severed.

Thanks to Alpha’s support, Akira noticed another enemy was running towards him from the floor below. But he didn’t expect them to try to cut his leg from below. After all, it was rare to find people who had a talent for melee combat, and it was even rarer to find those people who had good enough equipment to do so.

The blade that extended from below the floor chased Akira. Although it only extended as far as Akira’s thigh, it was clearly aiming for Akira as if not to allow him to stay in one place for too long. Akira desperately avoided the incoming grenades and bullets as well as the blades that were chasing him, he had no leeway to reload his A4WM automatic grenade launcher.

His A4WM automatic grenade launcher was out of ammo while his DVTS minigun did not have enough piercing power to shoot through the walls. His CWH anti-material rifle was too long to aim directly below. But even so, it was not like he could just leave the enemy below him alone. So in order to open up some distance from the floor to be able to aim his CWH anti-material rifle straight below, Akira lightly jumped.

“Don’t!”

Alpha’s was too late, Akira was already off the floor and was in the middle of swapping his A4WM automatic grenade launcher to his CWH anti-material rifle.

Another enemy suddenly appeared from the other side of the rooftop and aimed his huge gun at Akira who was in midair. While the enemy under him readied his blade to welcome Akira when he landed. Akira had no way to evade both of them.

If he prioritized the enemy on the rooftop, he would be welcomed by blades the moment he landed. If he prioritized the enemy below him, he would get shot by the other enemy. Akira understood that very well as he made a grim face.

[Oh crap! If my legs get cut, I would lose my mobility! And when that happens, I would be just a sitting duck!! I have no other choice but to ignore that other guy!! But still, how much firepower does that big gun have?! Can I survive a direct hit from that gun!?]

In that deadly situation inside a slow-motion world, Akira immediately made his decision and gritted his teeth. But Alpha suddenly intervened, she controlled Akira's augmented suit and changed his course of action.

When Akira noticed both of his arms started moving on their own, he understood that it was Alpha and was surprised by that, but he immediately matched his movement with her. As he was still floating in the air, Akira had his left hand aiming his CWH anti-material rifle right at the enemy below him. While at the same time, his left hand reached for his DVTS minigun that was dangling on his body and immediately pulled down the triggers on his both hands.

The bullet from Akira's CWH anti-material rifle forced the enemy under him to move away from his position, while the kickback from Akira's DVTS minigun that he wasn't even aiming at anyone shifted his body midair, making the enemy that was aiming at him miss their shot.

A powerful shot ripped through Akira's coat. If Akira had got hit by that, he would have been fatally wounded.

Akira did not release the trigger of his DVTS minigun as he shifted its aim to the enemy who just released that shot. That particular enemy was riddled with bullets as he was blown back and fell down from the rooftop.

The moment Akira landed, he immediately ran away from that place.

"That was dangerous!! If I took that straight, I might as well be dead! Alpha, Thanks for the help!!"

Alpha then made a suggestion to Akira with a serious face.

“Akira, the enemies are stronger than I expected. That one guy too, he must have only fallen down and not dead yet. Let’s retreat for now.”

“…Do you mean retreating from this place?”

Akira had a grim look on his face. Risking one’s life was different from doing suicidal action. His resolve was leaning towards something so reckless that it was closer to suicide. If it was a worthy gamble, then it was still acceptable, but that was not the case if it was straight suicidal. And the extreme situation there pushed Akira slightly past that line. If Alpha gave another push, Akira might actually give up the idea of killing Alna there.

But Alpha did not do that, she smiled and replied to him.

“I know you don’t want to do that no matter what, right? So I won’t pursue it any further. That’s why we’ll take the next best choice. Retreat for now and I’ll rewrite the control software to get a better control. But since your augmented suit would be rendered useless while rewriting the software, that would be a dangerous course of action. But I concluded that you will have a better winning chance that way rather than keep on fighting in this state. Since I’m not telling you to fully retreat, you won’t say no to this, right?”

Looking at Alpha, who was smiling at him, Akira could not help but to lightly smile back.

“Alright, let’s take a temporary retreat.”

“It’s great that you would listen to me.”

“I don’t want to die after all. And it’s helpful to get a better winning chance too.”

“I was planning to give you more reasons to convince you to retreat if you had said no there. Let’s hurry up then.”

Akira smiled wryly at Alpha and immediately left that place.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 162, Testing Luck

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The people who just fought Akira near the hangar were talking to each other through their communication devices.

“Did he run…? No, a temporary retreat? What should we do? Should we chase after him?”

The guy with the blade asked, but the guy with the heavy augmented suit stopped him.

“No. It would be bad if he’s planning to divide us into smaller groups. Not to mention, I’m using a heavy augmented suit. You might be able to chase him, but I don’t believe that’s the case for me.”

The guy that was riddled with DVTS minigun’s bullet and fell down from the floor was still lying on the ground. His augmented suit had injected his body with battle stimulants to keep his body and mind ready to fight. He then pushed himself up while still dazed.

“Dammit, the heck is wrong with that boy?! He’s not normal!”

“If I’m not mistaken, that face… He’s one of the guys that the boss was planning to take control of. Judging from how he accurately sniped us while we were inside the hangar, he must be carrying a pretty high-quality information-gathering device. I bet his other equipments are more or less of the same quality, and his skill must be good enough to match them too.”

A call suddenly reached them. It was from those guys inside the hangar.

“How’s the situation over there?”

“We’re fighting one boy, I think it’s that Akira. Although we were able to repel him, we weren’t able to kill him. We have one man injured here… Hey, you, can you keep on going?”

“Of course! This much of an injury is not enough to drive me away from the battle, you know.”

The injured guy replied in a high spirit. But he then followed up with a calm voice.

“…But it’s also true that boy is indeed strong. I was only able to survive since we’re ganging up on him. To be honest, I don’t want to fight him in a one-on-one fight, he’s way more than I can handle. So, what to do? Want to let the boss know?”

The other guys did not reply. They had their own pride and reputation to uphold too. Although Rogelt did tell them to ask for help if they encounter enemies whom they could not handle, if they asked for help just because they could not handle a single young boy, people would definitely question their abilities. But if they were caught off guard and got Alna killed, it would be a huge disaster for them. After all, Akira almost got Alna during the previous surprise attack.

The guy inside the hangar understood that all of them were at a loss on what to do next, so he then said.

“Well, for now, let’s group up. We can decide whether to report it to the boss or not later. First of all, we need to treat anyone injured and refresh our ammo reserve.”

Unlike the Hunters who fought in the wasteland with limited ammo and supply, these guys were fighting in their own base. So they did not equip their rifles with a high-quality extended magazine. After all, they could always refresh their reserve in their base. So rather than using an extended magazine that did not increase their firepower at all, it was far cheaper to be using their usual magazines. That was also true for their energy packs too.

They also had used a considerable amount of bullets to fight back Akira just now. So they decided to return back to the hangar to refresh their supplies.

__*__*__*__

Katsuya was fighting the Haurias people who were invading the mansion. Just like in Akira’s case, Rogelt had paid a lot of money to Viola in order to be able to control him too. Katsuya had the skill and the equipment to make that piece of information worth the money, he did not have any trouble fighting back the Haurias, as in a matter of fact, it was a rather one-sided fight.

The guy accompanying Katsuya who also doubled as his observer was amazed to see Katsuya’s skill from up close.

[…This boy is pretty strong for just a young Hunter. No wonder the boss wanted to be able to control him. But if he’s this strong, then why would he go so far just for that girl. If he only accepted that deal to be able to run away from the boss, he could have escaped once the boss left him alone. But since he’s not even trying to do that here, it means that he’s really fighting for that girl… I really can’t understand him at all. But well, different people have different tastes in women, so I guess I’m in no place to say anything about that. It’s all good and well as long as he’s obeying us, it’s great to be able to take it easy.]

After Katsuya had finished all the Haurias’ men in that area, he just stood there with a grim expression. It was not like Haurias’ men were being hostile to him.

Katsuya was threatened by Rogelt and had no other choice but to follow his orders. Haurias, who came invading the mansion, were there to kill other people right from the start, so it would be their own fault if they got killed instead. Even if Katsuya told himself so, it did not lighten his feeling of guilt at all.

Countless reinforcement requests from the other Ezont Family's soldiers reached the observer's information terminal. The battle in the mansion had been going on for some time now. With all the corpses already lying around the mansion, the number of people fighting in that area should have been reduced by that much too. But with the Ezont Family's men who were outside the base returning back to their base, they were also bringing along Haurias soldiers that were chasing them.

Using his powered suit, Rogelt was fighting the enemies outside the base. If he spotted any tanks, he would prioritize taking them out first. While at the same time, it was impossible for him to hold back the enemies that were invading from the other parts of the fences that had been torn down. The area was filled with Ezont Family and Haurias' soldiers as well as the former Hunters, whom they paid to fight for their causes, fighting against each other.

The observer thought for a bit before he gave an order to the other guys near him.

"Good grief! I'll take that boy to the east side of the mansion, you guys go to the west side."

"You're going alone? Are you sure?"

"This boy doesn't need a bodyguard, you know. I can just let this boy take the front while I'm just observing him from behind."

"This damn guy, taking it easy like that."

"It's one of those special privileges I get for being this boy's observer, yeah?"

He jokingly laughed. Katsuya sent a glare at him.

They immediately went to the west side of the mansion, leaving Katsuya and his observer behind. The observer guy then said to Katsuya.

“Hey, get a move on!”

“…I know.”

Katsuya replied brusquely and followed the other people who went before him.

__*__*__*__

Akira was gathering his focus in one of the rooms inside the mansion. Alpha was going to start rewriting Akira’s augmented suit’s control software, they had already finished their preparations. Since it was impossible to use his CWH anti-material rifle without his augmented suit, Akira just left it on the floor with the other things that he could not use without the help of his augmented suit. He was only carrying AAH and A2D assault rifles that he could use just fine without his augmented suit and held one each on his right and left hand.

The entrance to the room was barricaded. The lamp in the room was already destroyed during the fight, so the room was pitch black. There were corpses scattered around on the floor. And if he gathered his focus, he could hear gunshots echoing. The mansion was right in the middle of the war zone of that battle, and Akira was planning to deactivate his augmented suit in that room.

Alpha made the final confirmation to Akira.

“I’ll start updating the control software of your augmented suit. You won’t be able to use your augmented suit at all while I’m doing that. There’s quite a large portion of the software that I need to rewrite, so once I start, even if you try to reboot the augmented suit because something came up, it’ll take about 1 minute until you can use your augmented suit again. So, are you ready?”

“Yeah, you can start.”

Akira could feel his augmented suit suddenly turn slightly heavier. With his augmented suit completely turned off, it did not provide any support to him at all. If someone attacked him in that situation, he would have to fight back with his own power. But the enemies that he just faced were able to tank a direct shot from his CWH anti-material rifle and was able to survive a barrage from his DVTS minigun. If he encountered them right now, it would be game over for Akira. So it was, in a sense, a test for his luck.

Alpha was still monitoring the surroundings for enemies, Akira’s job there was to keep himself hidden and made sure that he could quickly react if something were to happen. In that pitch-black room, Akira could hear the sound of gunshots, screams, and footsteps coming from the floor below and the ceiling above him. As he breathed deeply, he felt like the world was strangely running in slow motion.

Akira kept telling himself to keep his calm and not to focus too much on the sounds coming from his surroundings to make sure that it would not dull his focus. That was when he said.

“By the way, it’s thanks to you that I can see clearly in the dark like this, but I wonder how about the other guys.”

“Well, they would be able to see just fine too if they are using high-class night vision. Although it won’t be as good as my support, they should be able to see enough as not to lower their fighting ability.”

Akira looked at the dead corpses lying on the floor. Some of them were indeed equipped with such night vision. But most of them were not using anything like that.

“You’re right, they do, although it’s not all of them. That kind of thing is pretty expensive, right?”

“It depends on its quality. Night vision is also a type of information-gathering device, some of them might be using other kinds of information besides optical information to increase the accuracy of the imaging process.

There are mass-produced night visions for Hunters who want to explore dark ruins. I'm sure that kind of night vision equipment is relatively cheap."

"But they're still pretty expensive, right? I don't know about the people of this base and those who are attacking this place, but since they have this kind of equipment, they must be pretty rich, right? Not to mention, they have those powerful soldiers and those powered suits too. The amount of money that I'm earning must be nothing to them."

The 500 million Aurum that Akira received from that one request in Mihazono ruin was not a small amount of money. But that was not even close to enough to hire those powerful men and buy equipment for all those soldiers, not to mention those powered suits too. Akira could not even imagine how much money he would need for all of those things.

Akira basically picked a fight against someone with enough power and money to be able to pay for all of those things. He did not regret it at all, but it was still rather discouraging when he thought about it.

Alpha lightly smiled.

"Well, I don't think it's the right thing to do to compare how much one man can earn to how much an organization can earn though, but it might be a good idea to aspire to earn that much too. It won't be strange for a first-class Hunter to be earning around that much, you know. So let's keep working hard."

"First-rate Hunters, huh. I do plan to work hard, but I have no idea how long it would take until I can be earning that much money…"

Akira replied back rather ironically after he was reminded of his current situation. But Alpha smiled at him and told him that it was not necessarily correct.

"Oh my, it might be sooner than you think, you know? You only got 300 Aurum in your first exploration and now you're already earning 500 million Aurum for one request after all. If you keep this up, you'll be able to easily earn more than 10 billion Aurum by next year. And once you get there, you'll be one of those big earners."

Alpha once told him that anything less than 10 billion Aurum was nothing than a small amount of money. Of course, Akira understood that such a comparison did not make any sense at all.

Akira smiled as he thought that once it reached that amount of money, even Alpha would not call that a 'small amount'.

"You're right, I guess I'll keep working hard until I can reach that point, huh."

If that was enough to discourage him, he would not be able to finish Alpha's request to him. Akira thought so as he picked himself up.

Suddenly Akira's expression turned grim. Alpha was also making a serious face.

"Akira, get yourself ready."

"Yeah, I know."

There were already some people passing through in front of the entrance to that room, when that happened, Akira would hold his breath to hide himself. But this time, some of them were trying to break into that room. Whether they were only trying to save their friends or search and kill their enemies, either way, they were Akira's enemies. After all, he was neither a part of Ezont Family nor Haurias.

"Well, I guess it's too much to expect a respite with my luck, huh?"

"Buy as much time as you can, I'll also hurry up and finish rewriting the control device of your augmented suit. But don't expect too much, I think it'll still take some time until you can reboot your augmented suit even if I do so."

"Roger that!"

Akira aimed both rifles on his hands at the barricaded door. He then gathered his focus, the moment the door was blown open, Akira immediately started shooting.

A few guys stormed into the room. But Akira did not have enough firepower to deal fatal injuries on those people. Amidst that confusion, Akira was desperately fighting back those guys.

Akira compressed his time perception to its limit, thanks to Alpha's support, he could clearly see the trajectory of the enemies' bullets as he did his best to evade them. Akira could feel the big difference in his movement without his augmented suit. From his perspective, he was moving so slowly as if his body had lost its mobility. With that difference in the moving speed without his augmented suit, Akira put most of his effort into making up for that difference.

Akira was evading the incoming bullets while aiming his rifles at the enemies. Alpha had given him the orders in which enemy he should shoot and how he would do that. He tried his best to follow that order in spite of his current limits. When he was not fast enough to follow that order, he paid that failure with a bullet in his body.

But thanks to the coat he took off and set in the maximum output beforehand, Akira was able to withstand a few direct shots. But of course, his energy reserve had to pay for that. He could only keep that up for a few minutes even without taking any bullets. If Akira stopped moving there, he would only be able to keep that force field armour up for 2 seconds.

Every time bullets flew out from his rifles, he could feel kickbacks assaulting his arms. Depending on the armours that his enemies were using, Akira might not even have enough firepower to pierce their armours. Both of Akira's rifles were loaded with powerful bullets that he could control well without his augmented suit, but still, the kickback was enough to damage his arms. He was only able to keep that up because the medicines that he took beforehand kept healing his damaged arms.

Akira bravely jumped the gaps in between his enemies and used the enemy in front of him as a shield while he aimed at another person. The guy that he shot lost his balance, Akira used that opening to quickly thrust the rifle on his right hand at that guy's throat and pulled the trigger while he used the rifle in his left hand to shoot the other enemy behind him. The guy in front of him lost consciousness from that point-blank shot, so Akira kicked him away and aimed both of his rifles at the other guys. The barrage from Akira was able to break their balance as they fell on the ground and sprayed bullets randomly inside that room.

The combination of Akira's skill and Alpha's command was barely able to secure a victory over those guys. The people that he just defeated were lying on the floor both inside the room and the hallway outside the entrance to the room. But most of them were not dead, they were only rendered unconscious. Once everything was done, Akira then fell on his knees.

Alpha shouted at Akira, pulling his consciousness together right when he was about to faint.

"Hurry up, get on your feet! Get some medicines first, quickly!"

"…O-okay."

The exchange did not even last a minute, but Akira had squeezed all of his physical and mental strength in that exchange. Akira's movement was severely dulled as he was reaching for his medicine inside his coat and he was still a bit dazed. But strangely enough, he could not get his medicines, and when he looked at his arm, he found that some of his fingers were bent in an unnatural way.

Akira smiled wryly and used his still functional fingers to take out his medicines and swallowed them while gritting his teeth against the pain assaulting his body. His broken fingers were slowly returning back to their original shapes in a rather forceful manner. He then slowly pushed himself back up.

"Some of them are still alive, so you need to make sure that they're really dead. Hurry up! If they get up, you would have to go through that fight again."

“…That wasn’t enough to kill them, huh. Although these bullets are usable without an augmented suit, they are powerful, and I shot them from a point-blank range, you know? These guys are pretty strong.”

“Remember that some of them even survived a direct shot from a CWH anti-material rifle. Aren’t you glad that these guys are weaker than that guy?”

As Akira picked up his rifles, an indicator could be seen from his vision telling him which one he should kill first. So he walked toward the guy with the highest priority.

“…But still, I feel like my bad luck is making me fight incessantly against stronger enemies, you know. Those guys that I fought when I went to save Sheryl were nowhere near these guys. Is it that they were especially weak?”

“To be honest, I think it’s way too late for you to be complaining about your own bad luck.”

“…You have a point there.”

Alpha was giving a rather conflicted smile at Akira, so he replied back with a bitter smile.

Just like the other guy that Akira shot down, the guy who was lying on the ground returned back to his senses thanks to his augmented suit that injected him with multiple battle stimulants. But when he looked around to confirm his current situation, he already found Akira standing in front of him with a rifle extended straight to his head.

Akira used both of his arms to keep his rifle stable when he pulled the trigger. The guy was frozen still as a bullet blew off his head and instantly killed him. Akira immediately moved to the next person on his priority list and killed them without hesitation. From their point of view, it could be said that they were more unlucky than Akira to die in that place.

“So then, how’s my augmented suit, is it not ready yet?”

“I’m trying my best here, but it’ll still take some time.”

“I see… It’s taking too long. It might be a good idea to get out of here first, I mean, out of the base. It’s safer outside, right?”

“Well, I’m pretty sure that it’s quite safe if you go that far, but with your bad luck, I feel like you’ll encounter that black powered suit before long, you know. That’s why I didn’t tell you to do that. Although, it’s fully possible for him to appear in front of us even if we stay here.”

Akira looked super annoyed and said.

“…That’s true, rather than fighting that black powered suit with my augmented suit, I would gladly fight the guys inside the mansion even if it means that I don’t have the support from my augmented suit.”

Akira remembered how the black powered suit was moving around the battlefield when he looked at it from the rooftop of the mansion. A powered suit was a powerful piece of equipment, it was not something that one would fight with normal equipment. Not to mention, that powered suit was stronger than a common powered suit.

Of course, he was questioning why these people had that kind of powered suit in their base. But now that it was there, it was not like he could do anything about it. He just blamed it on his bad luck and stopped worrying about it anymore.

Akira reloaded new magazines to his rifle and replaced the energy pack in his coat with new ones. He then took some medicines and hid himself in one corner of the room. He was breathing silently while feeling the nanomachines from the medicines spread through his body. He calmly let his body and mind take a rest while waiting for Alpha to finish rewriting the software in his augmented suit.

But that resting time was immediately cut short. Not because Alpha finished, but because another enemy appeared.

“Akira, get out of the room and try to shoot him, it would be bad if you let him get near you.”

Akira jumped out of the room with rifles in both of his hands, he quickly aimed at the guy who was on the other end of the hallway. When Akira saw who that was, he could not help but frown.

“Why is that guy in this place…?”

“Just keep shooting, don’t get in his range no matter what.”

Akira immediately pulled the triggers of his rifles, releasing a barrage against that guy. That guy immediately crouched his body and used a big-sized blade to shield himself from the bullets. The bullets generated sparks when they hit his blade.

“That is the guy who tried to cut my leg, right? Is he here chasing after me?”

“Don’t stop shooting. You have no winning chance against him if you fight him up close without your augmented suit. Though unfortunately, your bullets won’t be able to pierce through his armour. But at least it’s enough to slow him down. So hold him back with bullets.”

Actually, some of Akira’s bullets passed through the blade and hit that guy’s body, but that guy kept his calm and firmed his footing. Although he could not push forward against the incoming bullets, it did not seem that he was about to run away either.

Akira frowned.

“…Is that guy waiting for me to run out of ammo?”

“Likely so, but you can’t stop shooting, okay? If you slow down even for a bit, he will immediately close the distance. Without your augmented suit, it’s impossible for you to run away from him. So just keep on shooting for now to buy some time.”

“So either I run out of ammo first or you finish rewriting my augmented suit’s software first, huh. Basically, it’s another test for my luck, huh!”

“It won’t even be a test of luck if you don’t properly aim at him. Keep your focus on shooting at him and don’t show any openings.”

“I know!”

Akira desperately kept on shooting at that guy. He deliberately aimed at the points that would easily break that guy’s balance as he kept that guy from coming any closer. If he was using a normal magazine, he would have already run out of ammo by now, but thanks to the expensive extended magazine that he was using, he could somehow survive that long. As he was thinking how lucky he was for preparing those beforehand, he noticed another issue that he was facing.

[…My arms… Can they hold out until I run out of ammo?]

The kickbacks were damaging both of his arms while the medicines that he took beforehand were continuously healing them. He made his resolve and firmly held his rifles with both of his arms. That resolve was Akira’s lifeline there. But of course, that did not help his arms at all, otherwise, he would not even need his augmented suit. He could not use his CWH anti-material rifle or his DVTS minigun without his augmented suit. Of course, that was not the case if he was a superhuman, but Akira was not one.

[…If other people would even suspect me of trying to be a superhuman, it means that I should have more strength than a normal human!! So please hold out!!]

Akira wished for good luck as he held down the triggers. It was only a matter of time before the result of his wish came out.

The guy, who was hiding behind his blade from Akira’s bullets, confirmed that he had the upper hand and smiled. That guy, Toralt, was indeed waiting for Akira to run out of ammo just like Akira had guessed.

Toralt actually did not come there for Akira. After Akira retreated, he discussed with his friends what to do next.

It would be hard for them to fight someone as strong as Akira while protecting Alna. But if they asked for extra help, it would hurt their reputations. As such, they wanted to finish Akira by themselves without involving their boss if it was possible. They could just make a deal with the guy observing Katsuya to bring Katsuya somewhere close by and let him fight Akira. Since Katsuya did not want Alna dead, he would give his best to fight Akira too. Toralt and his friends decided to let Katsuya take on the dangerous job while they could just protect Alna in safety, that way, they would be able to deal with Akira without much trouble.

So then Toralt decided to move alone to find and make a deal with Katsuya's observer. The reason why he would go that far was to make sure that it would not leak, after all, his boss would know if he used the wireless communication. And even if Rogelt asked him why he went alone, he could use chasing Akira as an excuse. Toralt thought so as he went alone into the mansion.

That was when he encountered Akira by pure chance. He used his blade as a shield from the barrage instinctively. After all, his blade should be able to hold a few shots even from a CWH anti-material rifle. He was originally planning to temporarily retreat once Akira ran out of ammo, but the impact from the incoming bullets made him change his decision.

[…Too light, what's with this sudden drop of firepower?]

Toralt glanced at Akira.

[That's… AAH assault rifle? Why is he using that? Did he run out of ammo for his big guns?]

That level of firepower was barely able to inflict him any damage even if he was to take them head-on. Such leeway allowed Toralt to check on Akira. Akira was shooting at him while gritting his teeth and looking very nervous. His arms were shaking while supporting the guns in both hands. Looking at that, Toralt lightly smiled.

[I see now, is it some kind of trouble with his augmented suit? I bet he can't use his big guns even if he wants to, right?]

From the impact of the bullets and type of the rifle that Akira was using, Toralt could make a guess on how much kickback Akira was resisting. If Akira was using an augmented suit, that level of kickback would not even affect him at all. So looking at Akira, Toralt could make a guess that Akira's augmented suit was not functional.

Toralt smiled because of his sudden good luck.

[Lucky!! If I can kill that guy, it'll give a good boost to my reputation!! I'm sure that no one would know even if I kill him while he has no functional augmented suit! So then, what's the next plan? He's a little too far. If it's only this much, I can just resolve myself and take some bullets head-on while closing into him, so, should I do that? No, wait, I'm okay right now because I'm using my blade to shield myself from the bullets. Without it, if I get shot on my legs or arms, it would definitely take away my mobility. Of course, it won't kill me, but he might use that opening to run away. I need to get closer first, or at least wait until he runs out of ammo. Even if he's using an extended magazine, it's only a matter of time before he runs out of ammo if he's shooting at me like that! If he loses his balance before he runs out of ammo, I can just use that opening to jump on him!]

Toralt was slowly closing into Akira while still using his blade as a shield. With the help of his augmented suit, he had a longer swing range than normal If he jumped at Akira before slashing down, he could easily trim a few meters between them. It was only a matter of time before Toralt thought that he was close enough to Akira.

Akira kept shooting at Toralt, who was slowly closing in. But he could not step back to open up some distance between them. He had no leeway to put his power on something else other than holding his rifles, if he wavered even for a bit, he felt like his opponent would immediately jump on him.

Then finally, Akira's AAH assault rifle ran out of ammo. Akira who noticed that was rather flustered. As the force of the kickback from his AAH rifle was gone, he immediately lost his balance, and the kickback from his A2D rifle broke his balance even more. Akira could see Toralt suddenly close the distance between them.

The compressed time perception allowed Akira's eyes to follow Toralt's movement. But his body was nowhere fast enough to react to it. He could see Toralt had his pale blue blade raised up, ready to split him into two. With its length, that blade would hit the ceiling first before hitting him, but Akira knew very well that it would hardly hinder that sharp blade. Without his augmented suit, Akira had no method to evade the incoming blade. Akira understood that the blade would cut him into two in the next moment.

The time stretched into infinity as if it was completely stopped. In that frozen world, Akira and Toralt looked at each other's eyes. Toralt was sure of his victory, while Akira already accepted his defeat.

But in the next moment, that assumption was completely flipped over.

As Toralt swiftly swung his sharp blade down through the ceiling and right at Akira, Akira slid his body to the side even faster than that and evaded the blade. At the same time, Akira used the momentum that he had from evading that blade to spin and delivered a kick to Toralt's head. The 350 million Aurum augmented suit squeezed more than its original power due to Alpha's control.

Toralt received that kick head-on, like, literally on his head. His body was blown straight to the wall, his body was even slightly planted into the wall from the impact and created a big crater on the wall. He was still confused by that sudden turn of events, and in that confused state, the last thing he saw was Akira diving through the air with both legs aimed at his body.

Both of Akira's legs landed straight on Toralt's head, leaving a big splatter on the wall. Toralt's life was blown to pieces together with the wall behind him.

After he landed, Akira still looked flabbergasted. But when he saw Alpha nodding in satisfaction, he returned back to himself. But he was still confused since he could not process what just happened.

“The augmented suit is pretty strong, and the improvised control software is pretty accurate too.”

“Eh? Ah, Eh!? Hm!? W-wait for a sec!!”

“What is it? If you have any questions, let’s get yourself ready first. You need to get your rifles and other equipment you left behind in that room. Then you should treat both of your arms too.”

“Ah, right!”

Akira was still confused, but he knew that he needed to move. He hurriedly returned back to the room where he left his equipment just like he was told to, and picked up all of his equipment that he had left on the floor. He then used medicines to heal as much as he could. After he did all of that, he was mostly calmed down.

“Alpha, when exactly did you finish rewriting the control program?”

“Around when you were in the middle of shooting at that guy.”

Akira frowned.

“Thought so. You should have told me, you know. I thought I was going to die there.”

But Alpha smiled at him as if it did not bother her at all and replied casually.

“It’s not like I did that to bully you, you know. If I had told you, the enemy might have been able to guess it from the change of your behaviour. That was why I didn’t tell you. Thanks to that, we were able to catch him off guard and finally kill him, right? So I think it was the right decision not to tell you back there.”

Akira understood Alpha’s argument. But that was not enough to make him accept it. But at the same time, he did not have any other ideas on how to get out of that situation. Not to mention that his hardship just now was the result of his selfishness, so he was just reaping what he had sown. That thought made Akira give a conflicted look, but his anger toward himself immediately changed his expression.

Alpha smiled and tried to cheer Akira.

“Thanks to the time that you bought there, I was able to make a good improvisation on the control device. With this, not only can I give you support to increase your fighting power, I can help you calibrate your aim too. The next time you try to snipe at that pickpocket, you’ll be able to accurately snipe at her as long as there’s no disruption. So cheer up, okay?”

Akira looked at Alpha who apologetically smiled at him, so he returned with a light smile and decided to forget about that for now.

“You’re right. I guess it means that it was worth the risk, huh… Alright then, let’s go.”

As Akira pulled himself together and left the room, Alpha pointed at the blade lying on the ground.

“Akira, let’s take that.”

It was Toralt’s blade that was on the ground not too far from Akira. It had lost its pale blue light and did not seem that sharp any longer.

“That? Is it still usable?”

“Yep. Performance-wise and security-wise, it’s still functional. You can use it for melee combat. Just leave it to me.”

“Is that so? Alright then.”

Akira picked up that blade. He also picked up the part that fixed the blade from Toralt’s body. After that, Alpha told Akira to connect his information terminal to that blade.

“Is there any meaning in doing this?”

“I’m rewriting its control device just like what I did to your augmented suit… It’s okay to take it off now. Let’s equip that thing to fix the blade on your body before we go.”

Akira then equipped the blade. With this, he had an AAH assault rifle, A2D assault rifle, CWH anti-material rifle, DVTS minigun, A4WM automatic grenade launcher, and foldable blade with him. He was basically fully armed. He would not have been able to move at all or even crushed under their weight if it was not for his augmented suit.

“Hmm, I feel like I’m carrying too many weapons”

Akira smiled wryly, Alpha then mischievously said.

“If it’s getting in the way, you can discard some of them, you know?”

“No thanks!”

Akira replied back firmly and started running.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 163, Broken Promise

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

One of the guards, who were guarding Alna in the hangar, suddenly frowned and said.

“Toralt got killed.”

All the other guards near him could not help but react to that.

“He’s dead!? It’s Toralt we’re talking about here!? Are you sure?”

“Are you sure you didn’t just lose connection because of jamming smoke or something else?”

The person who said that Toralt was dead shook his head.

“His vital sign has flat-lined. Judging from the last information sent across, although it’s only just a guess, he might have gotten his head crushed. The vital sign check is done through the augmented suit and is also sent through it. I wonder if he took on a warhead head-on or something.”

“Was it a surprise attack…? No, he’s too smart to get caught off guard. It should be near impossible to launch a sneak attack on him. And if he was in a pretty bad situation, he should have run, or at least called for help."

"Yeah, that's exactly why we sent him alone. But to think that he got killed even before he could call for help like this…"

Their faces turned pale. Although they could not go as far as to say for sure that Akira was the one who killed Toralt, most of them thought that was the case. Then the guy who was responsible for leading them said.

"We have no other choice here! I'll ask the boss for help!! You guys are okay with that, right?!"

No one there objected.

On the other side of the mansion, the guy who was responsible for watching Katsuya called Rogelt.

"Yes, boss, it's me… Yes, this brat is pretty useful. Those small fries are no match for him… So, I just need to take him to the hangar, right…? No? The other way…? Ahh, I see. Roger that!"

That guy closed the call with Rogelt and yelled at Katsuya.

"Hey!! Don't just stand there! Let's go to the next place!"

"…Did something happen in the hangar?"

Katsuya casually tried to gather more information, but the guy raised his voice even higher.

"It's none of your business!! You just need to do what I say!"

"…Alright."

Katsuya replied without even trying to hide his displeasure and followed that man.

The battle inside the mansion was still going on. The interior of the mansion was already scattered with corpses, the difference of the skill, equipment, and luck between the people who were fighting there led them to two different outcomes. Those who had worse equipment, or lacked skill, or did not have enough luck were all turned into cold corpses scattered around inside the mansion.

The ones who were still left alive inside the mansion were those who had survived that natural selection. As such, even Katsuya had a hard time fighting against them.

The guy who was responsible for keeping Katsuya under his watch kept yelling at Katsuya.

“Put your back into it! If you don’t work hard enough, there’s no meaning in keeping that girl hostage, you know?!”

Katsuya still had his displeased face on him as he put himself out a bit more, but the more he moved forward, the more dangerous his position was. But thanks to that, he could take out his enemies faster. Seeing that, the other guy relaxed and said to him.

“You should’ve done that right from the start! You damn brat!!”

Katsuya had a pained look on his face as he listened to the other guy yelling at him. But even so, he still gave his best fighting there.

One of his enemies suddenly contacted someone from behind who sent a warhead straight at Katsuya. Katsuya was able to evade it as it flew past behind him and blew up next to the guy who was keeping watch on him.

Although it only injured him lightly, it really scared him. He then sacredly and flusteredly ordered Katsuya.

“H-hey!! Come back here!! We’re retreating for a bit!!”

That guy was telling Katsuya to return to be his shield. Seeing how Katsuya hurriedly returned back to him, his only thoughts were that he would be safe since he had someone strong next to him and became careless in being wary of Katsuya.

But Katsuya suddenly aimed his rifle at that guy's head. Of course, that guy was so dumbfounded, but the bullet that landed on his face right at the next moment turned his face into an unrecognizable mess.

Katsuya then shot some bullets to suppress the enemies that he was having a hard time fighting against just now and hurriedly left that place.

[Judging from the disruption in my information-gathering device after that warhead exploded, it must have some kind of jamming smoke inside it too! With this, no signal should be able to reach this place! I can use this opportunity to make them think that he was killed by the enemies!! Or at least, it should buy me some time before someone notices!]

After he left that place, Katsuya ran as fast as he could towards the hangar.

[Judging from that conversation, although it's only my guess, Alna must be in the hangar! And she must be under attack too! If I don't go and rescue her now, I might be too late!!]

Katsuya only obeyed Rogelt's men thinking that by doing so he would eventually find a window that he could use to rescue Alna. And he believed that this was his only chance.

Katsuya already knew where the hangar was. Back then when he asked the other guys with him about Rogelt's powered suit, they happily told him all kinds of information about that powered suit including the hangar where it was stationed. He originally asked that question trying to figure out the weakness of that powered suit, but it turned out that it was also useful for something else too.

[Just wait there! I'll definitely save you!!]

Katsuya used the full power of his augmented suit to run as fast as he could. When he guessed who might be attacking Alna, he could not help but worry.

__*__*__*__

Akira was also running towards the hangar, but at that time, he was still outside the mansion. He was frowning because of the fatigue. Alpha, who was floating next to him, noticed it and asked him.

“Akira, the hangar is just ahead, but, are you okay?”

“My both arms still feel a bit weird, other than that, I’m also having a slight headache.”

“Leaving your arms aside, that headache must be because you overused the time compression. Try your best not to faint, okay?”

Akira smiled bitterly.

“I know. If I faint, it’ll cut off your support, right? But still, my arms are okay, huh? I thought that I don’t feel any pain because of the painkillers and they’re actually still injured right now while the medicines that I took are trying to fix them, is that the reason why I’m feeling this weird sensation?”

Alpha lightly smiled.

“For your arms, well, even if they get torn off, I can still move them by controlling your augmented suit, so it should be alright. That’s why it’s not that important right now.”

“Yikes, that doesn’t sound okay at all. Can we like, you know, take a short rest?”

Akira was joking when he said that, but Alpha just smiled and stared back at him without saying anything. So he said while smiling bitterly.

“I get it already, you want to tell me that if I’m going to complain, I might as well withdraw from this place, right? But with all that I’ve faced until now, and since you can control my augmented suit to some extent, it would be a waste to leave now. So help me out, I’ll give my best to finish this as soon as possible and I’ll go straight back home after that.”

“In that case, let’s hurry up. It’ll put your body in some stress though, so endure it, okay?”

“Alright.”

Alpha controlled Akira’s augmented suit to force him to run faster. Akira could feel slight pain coming from both of his arms. With the current stress, his arms were trapped in the cycle of healing from the medicines and damage from the stress as he was blazing through the wasteland.

She did not tell Akira to stop nor to take a rest at all, it was all for the sake of encouraging him to withdraw from that place instead of going for Alna.

Although they had different motivations, both Akira and Alpha had the same goal, to kill Alna as fast as possible.

———*—

The guards inside the hangar quickly noticed Akira with the help of their information-gathering devices.

“Oh, here he comes! This signal must be from that brat!”

“Get into your post! Don’t worry about ammo! We need to hold out until the boss is here!”

The guards inside the hangar started setting up their portable walls. They bunkered themselves between the portable walls and the hangar’s walls in anticipation of the enemy’s attack. The one with the heavy augmented suit stood guard outside the walls, while the rest were taking cover inside the walls, all of them readied their weapons in the direction of the incoming signal.

They were only able to get the rough location of Akira. The mini information-gathering device that they used had a small range, not to mention, they spread those around to avoid a surprise attack.

“How long before the boss arrives?”

“He said that he’ll come once he’s done with the tanks and the other powered suits!”

“Why the heck is even Haurias here too!? Do they always have that much money to spend?”

“Hell if I know!”

Their conversation was suddenly cut short by a huge explosion that left a big hole in the hangar’s wall. It was blown off by countless grenades that came from the outside.

All of the guards inside the hangar immediately turned toward the direction of that explosion. The guy with the heavy augmented suit did not spend any second, he quickly released a barrage in that direction with his minigun. While the other guys who were hiding behind the walls kept shooting the incoming grenades down through the gaps between the walls. Explosions and gunshot immediately filled the hangar. That frenzied shooting happened for about 10 seconds. The bullets and the explosions only served to widen the hole on the wall until they stopped.

Now that they had calmed down, the guards inside the hangar started to nervously check for the location of their enemy. But they did not find any corpse around the hole nor in the direction of the hole.

Right at the next moment, a loud explosion echoed through the hangar. The guy with the heavy augmented suit found his minigun blown off to pieces, he shuddered and could not help but to lower his guard for a sec there.

But Akira did not let that slide, he used that small opening to jump in through the hole. He used his CWH anti-material rifle on his right hand to snipe the guy in the heavy augmented suit and his DVTS minigun on his left hand to suppress the guys behind the wall as he stormed into the room. His augmented suit did not have any trouble in holding back the kickback from both guns. He then kept on shooting through the gaps of the big equipment scattered inside the hangar.

The guy with the heavy augmented suit discarded his already destroyed minigun and screamed in anger.

“Goddammit!! Give me another one!”

Once he got another heavy weapon from one of the men behind the wall, he immediately started shooting again. Although by doing so he would be destroying the equipment inside the hangar, he did not show any hesitation at all.

Akira kept on moving around inside the hangar while shooting at the guys behind the portable wall. He used his DVTS minigun to release a barrage on them or his A4WM automatic grenade launcher to rain them with grenades. But it did not seem that the portable walls would come down anytime soon, Akira could not help but to make a stern face.

“That thing is pretty strong! I’ve been shooting at it for quite some time now, you know?!”

Alpha frowned and replied.

“This place is a hangar for powered suits after all, so they might be using portable walls designed to be able to withstand attacks from powered suits.”

Akira remembered the power of the melee weapons and the guns of that black powered suit. If those portable walls were designed to be able to hold out against that level of firepower, no wonder why they were still standing strong. But that did not make his current situation any better, so he still had a stern look on his face.

“Even if that’s the case, it doesn’t mean I didn’t do any damage at all, right?”

“Of course, they don’t have much durability left. So keep on shooting.”

“Roger that!”

Just like Alpha said, it did not take long for the portable walls to hit their limit. The moment their force field armours were down, they were turned into just simple metallic walls that offered almost no defensive value against bullets. Although most of the barrage from Akira only ricocheted off the armours of the guy with the heavy augmented suit since he had retreated behind the portable wall, Akira’s CWH anti-material rifle did not find any resistance in plowing through them. Eventually, the guy with the heavy augmented suit could not take it any longer, a bullet ripped through his armour and straight to the guy's torso. Even after 3 shots of battle stimulants and medicines, he could not save his own life.

The other guys who realized that they had lost one of their friends shot back at Akira in a frenzy, but of course, it was not enough to hold Akira back since he had regained Alpha's support now. The portable walls that had hit their limits were quickly shredded to pieces while the grenades made a short work of them. The explosion also blew off some of the guys behind the walls and rendered them unconscious, but those showered with bullets drowned in their own blood and died there.

Those who were still alive started thinking of running away, they grabbed Alna and put their bets on the small chance that they could sneak away from Akira who was shooting at them from the other side of the mostly destroyed portable walls.

Unfortunately, they lost that gamble. But that was because of something that neither Akira nor they were expecting.

As Akira came out from behind the destroyed portable walls, chasing for those people, he could not help but frown when he saw what was in front of him. The guys who were running away from him were already lying dead on the ground. Furthermore, not too far from them, Katsuya was hugging Alna.

Katsuya reached the hangar a bit after Akira. He noticed Akira was fighting against the Ezont family's soldiers inside the hangar, so he decided to take a detour to avoid them as he sneaked into the hangar. After that, he hid while waiting for the right time to come out.

The adrenaline rush from the fight just now and the surprise from that sudden turn of events prevented both of them from reacting to what just happened. Akira and Katsuya just stood there, looking at each other. Both of them did not give any friendly look at each other. But unlike Katsuya who was looking at Akira with obvious hostility, Akira's expression was more of an exasperation.

Akira sighed.

“You again? Or is that it’s your hobby to get in my way when I’m already so close… Haah, I guess I’ll try to say this to you one more time.”

Akira sent a sharp gaze at Katsuya.

“Give her to me.”

“I refuse!!”

Katsuya refused without showing any fear and tightened his hug on Alna.

Seeing that, Akira’s expression changed from exasperation to questioning as if he could not understand the person in front of him.

“…I really can’t understand it. Why are you trying so hard to protect her? I can understand why you did what you did back then. At that time, I wasn’t using an augmented suit and I didn’t carry any powerful weapons. It was fully understandable that you told me off just with a little intimidation. I’m sure I only amounted that much in your eyes back then. But that’s not the case right now, is it?”

Akira slightly moved both of his rifles as if to show them off to Katsuya.

“Since then, I gathered enough money to buy new weapons and a new augmented suit. These things cost me about 400 million Aurum. I don’t know how much your equipment cost you, and they might be better than mine, but at least the gap between our equipment has already considerably reduced. Not to mention, you have someone pulling you down and you have no friends with you right now. Or is it that you still think you can easily win against me even in this situation?”

Katsuya slightly raised his guard without saying anything back, Akira looked at Katsuya with confusion.

“Even if you can easily win against me, what exactly do you get from saving that girl to make you even come to this gigantic base all by yourself?

Is she actually a rich lady from some big family or something and you're offered a huge amount of money for rescuing her?"

Katsuya looked at Akira with scorn and yelled at him.

"It's not for money!! I'm sure someone like you will never understand it!!"

"Then, is it like you actually knew her before and you're indebted to her, then she meeting you in the lower district's street the other day was not a coincidence, but it's because you told her to come to you if she's in trouble or something?"

"That was the first time I met her!! All of your guesses are wrong!!"

Akira did not believe that Katsuya lied there. Because of that, he just could not understand Katsuya as he was making a rather troubled face, he then said in a rather serious voice.

"So why then? It's not for money, not because you're indebted to her, and she's not your friend. I can't understand why would you go this far for a total stranger."

Akira's gaze was sharp, it was as if he was trying to see through something that he could not understand at all.

Katsuya felt slightly pressured under that gaze, but when he felt Alna shaking under his arm, he made his resolve and yelled at Akira as if to shake off his fear.

"It's because I've promised her that I'll save her! I don't need any other reason!!"

Akira looked slightly surprised there. Then his expression changed as if he finally understood what was going on although he still found it surprising.

"You're indeed a good person."

Someone who had the pride of fulfilling just an oral promise, not because of money nor debt. For Akira, it was something understandable, as a matter of fact, it was something that he could respect. Even more so when it was a goodwill promise to save someone. Hostility vanished from Akira's gaze for a few seconds.

Katsuya was taken aback by what Akira suddenly said. Akira's short sentence was nothing more than just a compliment and he felt that too. His resolve slightly wavered thanks to that.

But Akira's next sentence completely reverted it.

"Unfortunately, you won't be able to keep that promise."

Akira was there to kill Alna. Respect was not enough to change his mind. There was no ill-will nor hatred in his eyes. But he was looking at Katsuya with hostility simply because Katsuya was blocking him from killing Alna.

Two people stood there, confirming each other's intention. One came there in order to kill Alna, while the other one came there to rescue Alna. And both of them were just one step away from accomplishing their goal.

Even the slightest hesitation would lead to certain death. If any of them made a move, they would be able to kill their opponent, but if any of them made any slight moves, it would get them killed. Because of that, both of them only stood there without making any moves as the tension slowly rose between them.

But a third party suddenly appeared in that situation.

A black powered suit broke through the shutter and stormed into the hangar. Akira's intuition told him to get away from that place, but due to the tension from just now, he could not move his legs that quickly, and the same happened to Katsuya too. That small opening was enough for that black powered suit to close its range on both of them.

Rogelt saw Akira and Katsuya through the external camera of his powered suit and immediately yelled in anger.

“Damn brats!! I knew it, both of you are actually working together, huh!! Taking me for a fool like that, I’ll kill both of you!!”

In his head, Rogelt thought that Katsuya only accepted his offer in order to buy time while Akira went to save Alna before regrouping.

Because of his misconception, there was no chance to straighten his misunderstanding now, Akira understood at least that much. Katsuya also thought so, but his train of thought was different from Akira, so he made a suggestion to Akira although it was against his will.

“…Hey, let’s work together here. How about a truce until we can do something about that powered suit and get out of this place?”

Akira replied back instantly without any hesitation.

“No thanks.”

Katsuya was dumbfounded, he did not expect that Akira would refuse in that situation.

“You… Are you serious?!”

“I’m here to kill that girl. Something like this is not enough for me to change my priority and help you save her. If you really want my help no matter what, that would be after that girl is dead.”

Akira replied so casually. But if Katsuya would accept that proposal, he would not be in that place in the first place. So Katsuya inadvertently yelled back.

“Are you kidding me?!”

The pointless exchange was forcibly cut short when the black powered suit raised its arm. The chainsaw-like weapon made a loud ringing sound as its teeth spun fast. Akira and Katsuya inadvertently looked at that chainsaw, then that powerful-looking chainsaw came down at them.

Its first target was Akira. Akira matched the movement of his Alpha-controlled augmented suit to evade that chainsaw and jump away from that place. Just a split second after he jumped off, the chainsaw came down at the floor where Akira was standing a few milliseconds ago. It left a huge crater on the floor and threw pieces of the floors all around the area. Some of the big pieces hit the equipment inside the hangar and made loud banging sounds which showed how hard they were thrown.

If Akira got hit by that, there was no question about it, he would have turned into minced meat. He could feel a chill run down his spine as he made a stern face and evaded the incoming pieces of the floors inside his distorted time perception.

“Why is he coming for me?! Shouldn’t he prioritize taking on that guy since he has someone slowing him down?!”

But Alpha replied back calmly.

“I’m sure he plans to kill everyone, so he decided to go for you first since you have nothing slowing you down.”

“Isn’t it a better idea to go for the one whom you can kill for sure first?”

“That kind of decision varies from person to person, you see. So it’s not like I can do anything about it even if you complain to me.”

For Akira, it was normal for another person to aim for him first given the option. So he was not really that surprised when it happened, he just ran as fast as he could toward the hole on the hangar’s wall.

“Let’s run into the mansion first. I’m sure that black powered suit won’t come chasing for you all the way into the mansion.”

“How about that guy then?”

“I’m sure he’ll run into the mansion too, we’ll kill that girl there.”

“And if he doesn’t?”

“If he decided to run outside the mansion, I’m sure that black powered suit would catch up with them and kill both of them. If that happens, it means that you’ll have your work cut short.”

Akira jumped out through the hole and exited the hangar. Immediately after that, the black powered suit forced its way through the same hole, chasing after him. There was no need for Akira to look back to understand what happened, he just kept on running toward the mansion. He then jumped and broke through one of the glass windows of the mansion which was already cracked from all the fighting.

Akira found himself in one of a big hall. As he went straight to go deeper into the mansion, he could see Katsuya and Alna also jump into the hall from the other side. Akira who noticed that immediately shot at both of them out of pure reaction.

But his aim was interrupted by Alpha. Because of that, his shot landed away from Alna on the wall next to her.

Right at the next moment, a huge blade suddenly grazed the air right in front of Akira. The black powered suit cut into the mansion from the outside with its huge blade. But that attack did not only cut through the wall, it simply destroyed the whole wall. Akira could not help but frown.

“If you want to kill that pickpocket, do it once we are deeper inside the mansion.”

“Got it!!”

Alpha controlled Akira’s augmented suit to get him back on his feet and Akira immediately blazed into the mansion after that, away from the black powered suit’s melee range. Behind him, the black powered suit exchanged its melee weapon with a heavy rifle.

Akira was still running as he forced his hand to shoot his A4WM automatic grenade launcher behind him without even looking back. Of course, the grenades did not have enough firepower to destroy the black powered suit. But the explosions were enough to disrupt its aim.

The black powered suit released a powerful shot using its gigantic gun. It went right past Akira and hit the wall in front of him, turning it into a pile of rubbles. Akira used the hole made from that shot and vanished into the mansion. He could not help but frown after witnessing the power of that shot.

“What the heck was that? It’s not something that you would normally use against normal humans, you know?!”

“It was a warhead designed to fight gigantic monsters and powered suits. So judging from that, it’s indeed not something that you would use against normal humans. If you have the time to be surprised, you need to hurry up. If you get shot by that, no amount of medicines would be enough to save you, you know?”

Akira ran as fast as he could into the mansion to get away from the enemy’s line of fire.

Rogelt was furious inside his powered suit. Even after he used his prided powered suit, both Katsuya and Akira were able to get away from him. That fact really ticked him off. He opened a line to all his men and yelled an order to them.

“I’ll send you the location of those brats!! Find them and kill them!! If any of you encounter them, immediately send your location to me!! I’ll snipe them from outside the mansion! If you can’t handle them, drive them outside the mansion and I’ll take care of the rest!! Y’all got it?!”

The black powered suit made a loud sound as it moved away. It patrolled around the mansion while using its information-gathering device to scan the inside of the mansion. And when he found some of Haurias men inside the mansion, it angered him even more so he cut up the mansion wall. His powerful blade turned the furniture together with the Haurias men, who were even using a sturdy augmented suit, into mincemeat in an instant.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 164, The End of The Hunt

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was running through the mansion, going after Katsuya and Alna. He used the A2D and AAH assault rifles on both of his hands to repel any enemies he encountered. The reason why he swapped to those rifles was because Alpha told him to do so. Since he was using rifles with low firepower, he took more time to fight each and every enemy he encountered.

“Say Alpha, my augmented suit is already functioning, right? So why am I using these rifles?”

“If you use the other rifles, the firing sound would draw in more enemies. Not to mention, they think you’re a strong opponent. So there’s a good chance that they would give up on killing you, and instead, leaving the rest to that black powered suit. Although it is hard on you, it might be better to let them think that they would have their chance if they keep buying time.”

“But it’s slowing me down, you know? At this rate, they might get away from me, no?”

Alpha smiled just like usual and said.

“It’ll be fine. He has someone slowing him down. So they should not be able to move that fast and he can’t shoot us either. That’s why, I’m sure he’ll have no choice but to fight back rather hardly which would draw more people to him, and that will slow him down even more. We’ll catch up with him sooner or later.”

Akira did not stop shooting even while he was talking to Alpha, and after listening to her explanation, he understood why it would be fine to use assault rifles in that situation.

Alpha did not lie there, but she also did not tell Akira everything. Even with his assault rifle, he would have a good chance of killing Alna even if Katsuya tried to shield her. Akira did not even notice that fact.

__*__*__*__

Katsuya peeked out from one of the rooms inside the mansion and shot at an enemy just ahead of him who was carrying a powerful gun. He could hear screams coming from that direction mixed with the gunshots from his own rifle.

Katsuya was cornered. He had a stern look on his face, he kept mumbling curses and complaints. He still had Alna next to him, but since she was not using any augmented suit nor had she ever trained or experienced combat, she could not move as fast as him. Then to top it off, more and more enemies were swarming him due to Rogelt’s order. He had to protect Alna in that situation, even for him, he was having a hard time fighting the incoming enemies. Not only was he cornered, but he also had no way to escape. He already had his hands full protecting Alna after evacuating her into that room.

Alna looked in pain, seeing how Katsuya was having a hard time protecting her. The kind stranger that she clung to by pure chance back then, and right now, he was still desperately trying to protect her. That thought turned her feelings toward that stranger to love. And the fact that person was trying to protect her because of a mere promise without any benefit at all, only strengthened her feelings for him.

Then something clicked inside Alna.

“…Katsuya, it’s fine, it doesn’t matter now. Thank you.”

Katsuya looked at Alna in surprise.

“What do you mean?”

“I’m really happy that you came here for me. I think that you’ve already saved me enough. It’s fine now.”

“What are you talking about…?”

“Just leave me behind and get away from here. Without me slowing you down, you can at least escape from this place alone, right?”

Katsuya was dumbfounded while Alna smiled bitterly.

“Why would you even say that? It’s fine, don’t worry. If you keep saying something like that, I would get angry, you know?”

Katsuya lightly said so to Alna while trying not to worry her. But instead, the smile vanished from Alna’s face which only left her with a pained look. She then started crying and confessing to Katsuya.

“I’m sorry. I… I’ve been lying to you… I took it.”

“Eh?”

“I was the one lying. I stole Akira’s wallet. Then he noticed it and started chasing after me, that was when I bumped into you. I lied to you so that you would protect me… I-I’m really sorry.”

Seeing how shocked Katsuya was, Alna smiled bitterly at him.

Alna felt really guilty towards Katsuya who was trying to rescue her. But she always thought that if she told him the truth, he would abandon her to her fate. And with Akira ordering a search for her, she would lose her life if she didn’t have Katsuya’s protection. That was why she could not bring herself to tell him. Although she felt guilty about it, she could not deny that she was also happy that he came for her.

But now that she was in love with him, she prioritized his life more than her own. If Katsuya died because of her wrongdoing, she would not be able to forgive herself.

“I… I’m not worthy of your protection… That’s why… it’s fine.”

Alna tried her best to make Katsuya abandon her. She did not even care if that would make him hate her. After she confessed everything, she looked down. She had nothing left. She only smiled mockingly at herself, she was only getting what she had sown.

Katsuya, who saw her miserable state, made his resolve and clearly stated.

“That doesn’t change anything.”

“…Eh?”

“As I said, I’ve promised you, so I don’t need any other reason. I won’t take back my promise just because of something like that.”

Katsuya smiled, trying to cheer Alna up.

“Moreover, well, like, you know, trust is a crucial thing for a Hunter, and I’m aiming to be a great Hunter. That’s why, although it might sound weird, even if you lied to me, I’ll still keep my promise. That’s why I won’t let you die. Even if you don’t want it, I’ll still protect you.”

Alna shuddered, emotion flooded her heart.

“And also, well, it’s true that stealing is bad, but I don’t think that’s enough of a reason to kill you. I’ll try to talk it out with that guy. So don’t worry, it’ll be fine. You have my promise, so just believe me.”

Katsuya said so and smiled kindly. Alna nodded without saying anything, tears were still running down her cheeks as she tried her best to smile.

Right at the next moment, Katsuya felt something approaching, so he quickly jumped off.

The black powered suit readied its rifle and aimed it at Katsuya. Rogelt used the information sent by his men together with his own information terminal to lock down on Katsuya's position. Although it was nothing but a crude approximation, with the firepower of his rifle, there was no need for him to snipe precisely.

"Damn brat!! Running your mouth like that!! Now die!!!"

Fuelled with anger, Rogelt operated his powered suit. A huge bang echoed, his rifle that rivalled the firepower of a tank shot released a warhead straight into the mansion. It easily broke through multiple walls and left one big continuous hole through the mansion.

Katsuya was able to barely avoid the warhead. Although he was shocked by the destruction left behind, he immediately went back to secure Alna.

"Alna, are you alright?!"

Although Alna was lying down on the ground, she was unhurt. She was so horrified that she was not able to immediately reply to Katsuya. But she was at least able to nod to let him know that she was fine.

Katsuya's expression relaxed slightly. He was relieved to know that Alna was fine, but what happened next left him aghast. Akira suddenly jumped into the room through the hole left by that warhead. That sudden change of event caused Katsuya to freeze, and that was enough to dictate the end result.

Akira kept Katsuya suppressed with the rifle on his left hand without even looking at him. While Akira's gaze, as well as the rifle on his right hand, were fixed on Alna. Inside that compressed time perception world where everything was running in slow motion, Akira and Alna locked gazes at each other. Akira pulled down the trigger, showered Alna with bullets and Katsuya had no means to stop him.

Akira kept on shooting at Katsuya to keep him suppressed and escaped from the mansion through the hole left by Rogelt. Katsuya was only able to see Akira run off without doing anything.

The one that pulled Katsuya back to reality was Alna's weak voice. The moment he heard it, Katsuya immediately ran toward Alna and confirmed that she had been wounded. Although she was fatally wounded, she was not dead yet. Judging from the locations where she was shot, it seemed that Akira intentionally did that. Katsuya did not notice that far, but judging from the blood on the ground, he knew that Alna did not have much time left.

"…M-medicine!!"

Katsuya pulled out medicine from his pocket. But he immediately detected enemies coming from the direction of the hole and started shooting at them. He then shouted at those people who were taking cover behind the wall around the hole.

"Don't get in my way!!"

He could not treat Alna in this situation. Katsuya understood that and picked her up with his arm and slowly dragged himself away from that place while keeping those men in check. He thought that no enemies would come from the direction where Akira just left, so he tried to retreat there while protecting Alna.

Alna coughed out blood and her body gradually turned cold. She would die soon. There was no chance to save her now. Although she understood that, she did not feel fear at all. The happiness of being held by someone she loved and the fact that she would no longer slow him down was stronger. As her vision slowly turned dark, she could see Katsuya still desperately trying to protect her. It made her fall in love deeper with him and regret the fact that Katsuya had a pained look on his face.

She felt cold. She wanted to feel warmth during her final moments at least. Alna squeezed the last bit of power that she had to raise up her hand that was already soaked with her own blood. Katsuya who noticed that tried to call her name. Unfortunately, she could no longer hear anything, but even so, she could still feel the warmth on her palm and smiled happily.

Alna's arm gracefully fell. Her life ended there, in the arms of her loved one.

Katsuya realized that Alna was gone. He understood that trying to treat her wounds while shooting at the guys attacking them would not help at all. He was extremely frustrated as he softly placed Alna's body down.

Katsuya's scream echoed through the mansion. Once it died down, he was filled with rage and disappointment for not being able to save her. And in order to remove the main source of the reason why he could not save Alna, he pushed his rare talent to full bloom.

Rogelt's men, who had gathered in that place due to an order from Rogelt, were thunderstruck at how Katsuya suddenly turned so strong as if he was completely a different person. Although they had the upper hand, it did not take long for that to be overturned. The mansion was filled with flying bullets and it was only a matter of time before it stopped.

⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯*⎯⎯

Akira went through the hole that Rogelt opened and escaped the mansion. He then used the full power of his augmented suit to propel himself up to the rooftop of the mansion, then ran toward the opposite side and jumped down onto the courtyard. He then kept on running towards the entrance.

Sheryl was saved and Alna was dead. He no longer had any reason to stay there. The only thing left was to get out from that place alive. Of course, picking a fight against the Ezont family would entail a lot of problems later, but he shelved that for another time. He could take his time thinking about it once he was out of there, Akira kept on running as he thought so.

"Alpha, I just want to confirm something though, that girl is dead, right? There's no way she might be saved, right?"

Akira had shot Alna following Alpha's instruction. He thought that it should be enough to kill her. But he also knew that there was a treatment that could save someone even after that person lost half of his body, or expensive medicines that could save someone from certain death, or many other ways to survive that level of injury. That was why he was not so sure.

Alpha smiled and replied.

"You're such a worrywart. Don't worry, it's true she might be able to survive using expensive medicine and proper treatment. But I'm sure he wouldn't have the leeway to do it in that situation."

"But like, is there any reason why I can't kill her right away there? A shot on her head would guarantee her death, you know…"

"If you blow her head or kill her with any means that make it obvious that she's dead, I'm sure that boy will immediately leave Alna behind and chase after you, to kill you. That's why we did that. If we let her alive although only for a few seconds, it's obvious which one that boy would prioritize."

"If that's the problem, isn't it easier to just kill that boy or at least wound him too? In that situation back there, although I might not have been able to kill him, I should have been able to at least injure him, right?"

"If we did that, the rest of Ezont family's soldiers would focus on hunting you down. In the worst-case scenario, you would have to fight the whole gang on top of that black powered suit all by yourself."

"Now that you mention it, that does make sense."

Akira agreed with that argument too, so his displeasure and doubt were gone.

"Even if that boy tries to chase after you once the girl is dead, he would have to face Ezont family's men first. So let's get him to buy some time for us while we escape from this place."

Akira was still running as he glanced back. Inside that mansion, Katsuya should be fighting the Ezont family's men as well as that black powered suit. As he imagined that scene, he thought that it must be a huge pain in the neck as if it was none of his business.

"…Well, even if some of them might still come at me, at least that powered suit won't be coming for me. Although I do feel bad about it, let's have him buy us some ti-"

Akira immediately frowned. In order for the black powered suit to chase after him from the other side of the mansion, that black powered suit would need to go all the way around the mansion, that was why he thought that there was no way that black powered suit would come for him. And even if it did, it would take some time for it to go around the mansion. But his feeling of safety was immediately betrayed, he could see the black powered suit standing right on the top of the mansion.

"You gotta be kidding me!?"

"He must have used the full power of his powered suit to get it on top of the mansion. Although, in order to do that, it seems that he had no other choice but to leave some of its heavy weapons behind. It has no ranged weapon at all, that melee weapon is the only weapon that it has at the moment."

"That's not even the problem here!!"

The black powered suit jumped down and landed with a big bang. It then jumped with a power that was enough to shake the ground as it headed right toward Akira.

"You damn brat!! Do you think I'll let you get away?!!"

The black powered suit moved around while reading its chainsaw, the countless teeth of its chainsaw raised a deafening sound as it started spinning.

Akira's augmented suit increased its output to its limit as if it did not care how much burden it would put on Akira's body. Akira just ignored the stinging pain from both of his legs as he kept on running as fast as he could. But of course, it was no match against the high-speed powered suit. The distance between him and the powered suit was slowly shrinking.

“Alpha! Can we do something about that thing?!”

Unlike Akira who obviously looked very worried, Alpha only looked slightly concerned. She then casually said to him.

“It can’t be helped then, let’s fight it.”

“Are you serious?!”

Akira was wide-eyed, but Alpha smiled and replied.

“Get yourself ready, you at least have a better chance fighting it rather than keep running from it like this.”

Akira smiled wryly.

“Alright, I get it! If resolving myself is enough to do something about it, I’ll resolve myself as much as you want!! That’s my responsibility, after all!!”

“And the rest would be my responsibility. So just leave the rest to me. We don’t have time to waste, let’s prepare ourselves before it catches on to us.”

Akira was running at high speed when he used his augmented suit to immediately stop himself. Right at the same time, he reloaded a new magazine to his CWH anti-material rifle, and then threw it down on the ground together with his A4WM automatic grenade launcher, and DVTS minigun.

He then took out the foldable blade that he had obtained from the mansion, grabbed it with both his hands and expanded it. Once it was fully unfolded, its bladed started to give a faint bluish glow.

Right in front of Akira, the black powered suit raised its chainsaw while blazing straight at him. Seeing that, Akira took a deep breath and readied himself.

Rogelt then yelled from inside the powered suit.

“Die!!!”

The black powered suit swung its powerful chainsaw down with a huge force. Akira, who was inside the slow-motion world, swung his foldable blade as vigorously as he could.

The moment their blades made contact, blue light flashed from Akira’s blade, it then turned into dust and carried away by the wind. While at the same time, the force of the collision threw Akira’s body back.

With that one exchange, although Akira was fighting a powered suit with only his own flesh and his augmented suit, it was able to push the black powered suit back.

Normally, it would be nothing strange if that one attack crushed Akira. There were 2 reasons why it did not. First of all, Rogelt had spent most of his energy on fighting all the powered suits and tanks in the previous fights, because of that, his powered suit could not exert its full power. While the other reason was because Alpha modified the blade to use all its available power for one swing.

The only thing that maintained the blade’s sharpness was its energy. Due to modification from Alpha, it used all of its energy in one go, way above what that blade could withstand. Thanks to that, it increased its destructive power to its utmost limit. Although it turned into dust right after that, it was able to withstand that exchange against a powered suit. And with the help of Alpha’s support, Akira swung it with the technique that rivalled a swordmaster.

While his body was blown backwards, Akira quickly grabbed his DVTS minigun and CWH anti-material rifle and immediately started to shoot using his DVTS minigun. Although most of his bullets hit the powered suit, it barely caused any damage at all.

Rogelt was surprised by what happened but immediately regained his composure. After reassessing his situation, he readied himself and quickly went for another attack. Unlike Akira who had lost his blade, the black powered suit still had its weapon just fine, and it was powerful enough to easily crush Akira.

From the external camera of his powered suit, Rogelt could see Akira aiming another shot at him. This time, Akira was using his CWH anti-material rifle.

Akira pulled the trigger, the bullet that was shot in a point-blank range hit the black powered suit and released a loud bang. Right at the next moment, Rogelt immediately lost the power output of his powered suit. Akira's shot had destroyed his powered suit's energy generator.

When the powered suit stopped moving, Akira nimbly manoeuvred away while picking up the rest of his weapons before running away from that place.

Akira was running like a madman when he threw a question to Alpha.

"Alpha! That should be enough to stop that thing, right?!"

"To be more precise, you just sniped its generator and temporarily stopped it. If it has a spare generator, it can immediately swap its generator and start moving again. So I don't think stopping it is the right word to use in this situation."

"Wha-!? Even that wasn't enough?!"

"It's a matter of fighting a tank only with an augmented suit, or like fighting a powered suit only with a human body. The power gap is simply too big. But even if it has a spare generator, it'll take some time to replace the destroyed generator. So you should have enough time to run away, that is, as long as you don't stop because you're tired or something."

"Alright alright, I get it!"

Akira smiled bitterly and started running again. He then jumped over the fence with the help of his augmented suit, and just kept on running away from Ezont Family's base. He finally was able to escape that place.

———*—

The rear side of the black powered suit opened, Rogelt came out from it. His face was deep red, he looked absolutely furious. He kept looking at the direction where Akira ran away and mumbled.

"…That brat… He got away, huh!"

Rogelt jumped off from his powered suit and checked the hole on his powered suit. It was the hole left by the bullet that destroyed the powered suit's generator.

[…I bet it's a powerful anti-force field armour bullet. It was able to pierce through my powered suit's force field armour after all. Otherwise, it would have been impossible to do that.]

As Rogelt had predicted, Akira actually used the anti-force field armour bullet that he bought as a lucky charm and a trump card. It was a high-quality bullet that cost him 5,000,000 Aurum per shot. He only bought one bullet just to be safe in case he had no other choice but to go against a powerful monster, like that one huge creature that he fought back in the Seranthal building. Akira himself did not expect that he would be using that bullet so quickly.

[But still, even if he shot that in a point-blank range, normally, that would not be enough to destroy my generator, so how…]

Rogelt frowned, he did not want to believe the explanation that came up in his head.

Unlike armour plating, the force field armour of the black powered suit was the type that continuously consumed energy and extended out its force field. Since it would consume too much energy if he kept moving, Rogelt usually only stood still when he was not in a fight. And even in the middle of a battle, he would lower the force field for parts that were unlikely to get shot in order to save energy. Otherwise, it would consume too much energy to maintain.

Focusing the force field armour only at the points where they were receiving shots was something that only skilled users could do, and one of the indicators of a high-quality control device was whether it could accurately predict incoming shots and only expand the forced field in those locations.

But this automatic adjustment from the control device usually had some particular quirks. In some cases, it might cause the force field to focus only on one point and leave another location more open for an attack.

Rogelt remembered how Akira used his DVTS minigun to shoot a barrage on his powered suit. If it was in order to damage his powered suit, then it would have been a pointless action, but what if he did that to manipulate the automatic adjustment control of Rogelt's powered suit. If Akira did that to focus the force field armour in one place and open a weak point in another place to shoot at, if that was all true, then it would explain how Akira was able to snipe the generator.

Although it was possible theoretically, it was actually almost impossible to execute. It would have been possible with the combination of a huge amount of bullets and a powerful information-gathering device that could precisely calculate the small changes in the force field armour in order to create a concentrated force field and opening a weak spot. But in order to do that, Akira would have to analyze and calculate a huge amount of information, which would have been impossible.

Rogelt rejected the solution to his question that came up in his mind. He then lightly shook his head, just to blame that on his bad luck, and decided to stop thinking about it.

Rogelt shook off his thoughts from what just happened and looked at his powered suit one more time. Seeing how his prided black powered suit was rendered to that state, anger started to well up again.

“That brat, wrecking my powered suit like this. I’ll definitely kill him next time.”

“Unfortunately, you won’t be able to do that.”

A woman’s voice abruptly replied to Rogelt. Rogelt immediately pulled up his rifle and released some shots in the direction of that voice.

Although there was no one there, his bullets ricocheted and made a sound as if they bounced off a metallic object. A blade was floating in the air there. When the owner of that blade took off her camouflage, it revealed a girl smiling amusedly. She had a metallic cyborg body covered under a camouflaging coat, both of her arms were armed with blades, it was Neria.

Neria and Rogelt made eye contact. Right at the next moment, Neria suddenly dashed and closed the distance between them.

Rogelt made a rough approximation of how strong his opponent was by judging from how she moved just now and how she blocked his shots. He quickly decided that his rifle would not do him any good and threw it away, instead, he grabbed 2 knives behind his hip and readied himself. When he unsheathed his knives, blades extended out and they turned into swords.

Rogelt had talent in CQC, that was why, during the battle against other powered suits, he was always using melee weapons, and of course, that talent also translated very well when fighting against another human. As a matter of fact, his skill with the blade allowed him to distinguish himself in the eastern district where guns were a norm.

Nelia and Rogelt exchanged blows for just a split second, by the end of that exchange, they were standing past each other with their backs facing each other.

“See, it would be impossible for you.”

Nelia smiled and said so, behind her, Rogelt was sliced into 4 pieces with a cross centered on his throat. Not only did he get beheaded, but his head and body were also split cleanly into two halves. His body parts fell down and painted the ground red in blood.

Now that her job was finished, Nelia looked in the direction where Akira ran off to. She smiled amusedly which even looked like she was ecstatic.

“But still, although it hasn’t been that long since the last time, to think that he has become strong enough to defeat a powered suit with only an augmented suit. It was really unfortunate that I wasn’t able to seduce him back then.”

Nelia once again activated the optical camouflage of her coat. Her figure was slowly swallowed into the scenery and vanished completely.

“It would be great if I can get another chance to try to seduce him, although, it would be hard to do that in my current situation. Seriously though, what should I do with you?”

She did not feel anything wrong with seducing someone that she would try to kill 5 seconds later. Nelia, who had such a distorted way of thinking, had a regretful expression on her beautiful face. But that face also quickly vanished from the views, leaving behind the nonfunctional powered suit and the dismembered corpse of its user.

__*__*__*__

Haurias, the gang that was at war against the Ezont family. Inside its base, in its boss’ room. The report from Haurias’ soldiers echoed through the room.

“Boss! These guys are too strong!! We’ll be wiped out at this rate!! Tell us what to do!! Boss!! Are you there?! Whether we group up or retreat, just give us something!! Dammit!! Is it not connected!? What the heck is going on here?!!”

Their boss was unable to give them any orders, after all, he had a bullet on his head and he was already dead.

Haurias already sent most of its men to attack the Ezont family. Its boss was left only with a handful of bodyguards in the base. And those bodyguards, like their boss, were already dead.

Both Haurias and Ezont family had some similarities. First of all, both of them were huge gangs with a lot of members, the boss of the respective gang held a ton of influence. Because of that, it was extremely difficult for the members of those gangs to rise up against their boss. So right now, with both sides left with no boss, their men had no other choice but to fight to the death, save for some who ran away at the very last second.

Ezont Family and Haurias, the two goliath gangs in the lower district of Kugamayama city. With the loss of their boss and their men, the money that they spent in that battle, both of them were effectively destroyed in a single night.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 165, Negotiation with Viola

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

When morning came, another group arrived at the Ezont family's base. They were the people from Drankam. Although the battle last night happened in the area between the slum and the wasteland, Kugamayama city could not just ignore it. So they dispatched Drankam there in the morning to check on the situation.

Drankam had another reason why they had to come there. It was because one of their vehicles was destroyed around that area. When that vehicle was destroyed, its control device sent its last record back to Drankam. Before the City Management got suspicious that last night's battle had something to do with them, Drankam decided to investigate the incident prior to the request from the City Management.

When Shikarabe arrived there, he looked around the courtyard and frowned.

"It must have been one hell of a battle."

Now that the morning light shone the whole courtyard, the scene looked like hell. Corpses were scattered all over the places, he could see pools of blood formed in various places, and the whole area was filled with the nauseating smell of blood.

Yamanobe looked around in slight amazement.

“Whoah, this here… I’m pretty sure the body count can easily reach a few hundred. Depending on how many bodies we can find inside the mansion, it might even go up to thousands. And I don’t see any dead monsters at all, it’s entirely a fight between humans. Geez, honestly though, we have more than enough monsters to kill in the wasteland, there’s no need for them to kill each other, right?”

Velga checked the wreckages of powered suits in the courtyard and hummed.

“…Hmmm, they were even using this kind of thing to fight each other, huh. These guys were pretty invested in this, weren’t they? 100 or even 200 million Aurum won’t be enough to pay for this stuff, you know. Including the fuel and ammo that they consumed last night, it might easily go beyond 1 billion Aurum, no?”

After the three of them exchanged opinions about how horrendous the scene in the courtyard was, they immediately moved on to finish why they came there. They searched for Drankam’s vehicle among all the wreckage in the courtyard. Once they found it, it was already sliced in half, they then ripped the inside of the vehicle and extracted its black box. It should contain all the information until the vehicle was destroyed.

Shikarabe checked the damage on that device.

“Well, it seems that it’s still intact. But even if it wasn’t, it’s not our fault.”

Velga looked at the sliced vehicle and said.

“Was it sliced with a huge blade or something? I guess one of those powered suits must have had that, huh? So where’s the guy who was inside it? Shikarabe, did you find anything?”

“Nothing. I can’t say anything about the user unless we check the record inside this device first, I don’t even know who might have been inside. I heard that whoever took this out, used it without asking for permission after all. Well, since it’s basically turned into a pile of metal, the insurance won’t be able to fully cover it. I don’t know how much the gang would have to pay for it, but the guy who used it would not be able to get out of it unscathed, that is if that guy is still alive.”

Now that they had completed their mission and recovered their priority target, they made a call to Drankam. Drankam told them to get back to the base as soon as possible to check the record inside that device. So Shikarabe went and conveyed that to Velga and Yamanobe, that was when Yamanobe noticed Yumina and the other girls. Yumina, Airi and 10 other Drankam members entered the mansion.

Yamanobe raised his eyebrows and said.

“Those are from Katsuya’s team, right? I don’t see Katsuya with them though.”

Velga also noticed them, but he noticed something else too.

“Hmmm…? Isn’t that Nergo? What is he doing there with that group?”

Shikarabe frowned and obviously sounded rather annoyed as he said.

“Don’t know, and don’t care. Just leave them be, we have nothing to do with them.”

Seeing how Shikarabe’s mood turned worse the moment Katsuya’s name came up, Yamanobe and Velga smiled wryly. There was no need to keep souring Shikarabe’s mood by talking about that subject. So they decided to just move on and leave that place.

Yumina and her friends heard from Mizuha that there was a good chance Katsuya went to that place alone, that was why they came there to look for him.

The scene inside the mansion was more or less as horrendous as the courtyard. Although Yumina and her friends were already used to killing monsters, they never witnessed the leftover of a battle between humans that was this bad, more than half of them had a pale face and were filled with terror as they continued searching the inside of the mansion. The only one who was completely fine was Nergo. Since the group was mostly made of girls, Nergo was sticking out since he was a battle cyborg.

Nergo had rifles in all of his 4 arms, he was leading the team in front of Yumina while checking the safety of the surrounding area. Yumina then apologetically said to him.

“I’m sorry for making you do this. Although it was a request from Mizuha-san, I feel bad for making you help us in doing something this dangerous…”

But Nergo replied in a bright tone.

“Nah, don’t worry about it. Katsuya-kun did save me back then, so I still owe him some. I’m more than happy to help.”

Nergo looked at how the other guys were doing while he said so. Some of them seemed thankful, some others had no particular reaction, while some were simply people who did not express much of their feelings through their faces. Nergo closely observed every single one of them.

“By the way, although it might be weird to hear this from me, but if you want, I can search this place alone, you know? I know that you girls are Hunters, but I’m sure this scene is too much for you girls since you’re still young. If I find something, I’ll contact you, so you girls can just wait outside the mansion.”

Yumina thought that Nergo was simply being considerate to them. If Katsuya was really inside the mansion, judging from how bad the scene inside the mansion was, it would not be strange to find him dead. And if that was true, more than likely his body would be in a pretty bad shape. It would be too much to let herself and her friends see that. Yumina thought that was why Nergo said so.

Although Yumina understood that possibility very well, she still replied firmly.

“No, that would be asking too much from you. So we’ll come too, we’ll be fine.”

“…I see, you’re pretty brave.”

Nergo did not say anything more after that as he returned back to his search.

[It would be fine if we find him alive. But to be honest, if he’s already dead, I want to secure his body though… Well, I have my own reputation to hold in Drankam, so it’s better if I act for the sake of our long term goal.]

Nergo made that decision in the back of his metallic head.

They went deeper into the mansion. There they got a signal from Katsuya’s information terminal. But when they tried to make contact, there was no reply. So they prepared themselves for the worst-case scenario as they used the data from that signal to look for Katsuya. When they arrived at the source of that signal, they saw a room filled with dead bodies. Katsuya was on the floor, looking down, in the middle of that room.

They immediately swarmed Katsuya and asked him if he was alright. But Katsuya did not reply back, he kept his head down with a dark expression. Airi, Nergo and Yumina took a step back and scanned the room.

Yumina looked around and frowned. The room was filled with dead bodies, the floor was basically covered in blood. Airi was even slightly surprised when she counted the number of dead bodies in the room.

“That’s a lot of dead bodies, is it all Katsuya’s?”

“Maybe, but not all of them. Moreover…”

Among the dead bodies, Yumina looked at a particular dead body and made a saddened face. It was the body of a girl that was lying not too far from Katsuya, it was Alna.

After seeing that, Yumina understood what was going on. Katsuya came to rescue Alna and failed. It must be the reason why he was so depressed.

Yumina cut through all the girls that surrounded Katsuya, she then crouched in front of him and said to him.

“Katsuya, let’s go back.”

Katsuya still looked down without replying back.

“We need to bring Alna back.”

Katsuya raised his face. But he still did not reply. Yumina understood that it was all he could do at the moment, so she grabbed Katsuya’s shoulder and got him on his feet. Katsuya did not resist.

Yumina sent a glance at Airi. Airi nodded as she pointed at Alna’s body and said to the rest of the girls.

“We’ll take her too, help me.”

Alna’s body was soaked with blood. Her face was wiped clean of blood, but her body was soaked with her blood as well as the other people’s blood who were killed near her. The girls frowned seeing that body. Airi’s gaze turned sharp, the girls there winced back. That was when Nergo suddenly said.

“It’s fine, I’ll do it.”

Nergo pulled out a body bag from his backpack and gently put Alna’s body inside it. Airi who thought that Nergo was going to carry Alna’s bloodied body thanked him.

“Thank you.”

“Don’t worry about it. Like I said before, I’m fine with it.”

Carrying dead bodies around was not a strange thing for Hunters. Because of that, Airi did not find it weird that Nergo was carrying a body bag with him.

Looking at Alna’s dead body that was carried carefully, Katsuya mumbled while still crying lightly.

“…I wasn’t able to protect her.”

Yumina who heard that smiled both sadly and gently at him.

“…I’m glad that at least you’re alright.”

Katsuya then left the room with Yumina’s help. While Airi was carefully carrying Alna’s body in her arms. The other girls followed behind her.

Nergo was the last one left inside the room, he scanned the room once more and thought.

[All of these dead bodies are probably because of that boy, it’s pretty impressive to do this all by himself. I thought that his reputation is actually because of that thing, but I guess I need to revise it, huh… Well, it doesn’t really matter, even if that’s true, it doesn’t change my plan much. I need to confirm it with the others too, so I’ll shelve this for the latter for now.]

Nergo left the room soon after.

Katsuya and his group left the mansion after that. They then boarded the armoured APC parked outside the mansion and went back to Drankam’s base.

Katsuya was sitting on the long bench inside the APC in between Yumina and Airi. He still looked very depressed, but after leaving the battlefield, he regained some of his composure. But that gave him a leeway to think about something else and his head used that leeway to remember a certain sentence. Even when he tried to shake that sentence off his head, it still would not leave him alone. As a matter of fact, his efforts only made it ring louder in his brain. Katsuya inadvertently mumbled in resistance against that voice that was ringing inside his head.

[…Dammit!]

‘Unfortunately, you won’t be able to keep that promise’ that one sentence from Akira kept on playing on replay inside Katsuya’s mind.

__*__*__*__

Akira was sleeping like a dead log on the bed in his house. After he returned back from Ezont family's base, he just put down his heavy weapons randomly on the floor, kept his augmented suit and his coat back in their original cupboard, dragged himself against the tiredness and the sleepiness assaulting him to finish his bath, took a heavy dose of medicine, and finally crawled to his bed. There was no doubt about it that he was exhausted after what had happened last night, so Alpha did not even bother to tell him to finish doing maintenance of his rifles before going to sleep.

Akira woke up in a dark room. It seemed that the sun had already set, he must have slept the whole day. But even inside that dark room, he could still see Alpha clearly.

"Morning, Akira, or more like, it's already evening though."

Akira's brain had not fully woken up yet as he was thinking of taking another snooze.

"I don't mind if you want to sleep again, but you had a call from Erio and Carol while you were sleeping, you know. They also left a text message, so you can check it out if you want."

It was rare for Erio to call him. As Akira thought so, the curiosity helped him wake up. He pushed himself up, reached for his information terminal, and checked the message.

Akira frowned when he read the message. Erio was asking about Sheryl's whereabouts in that message. And checking from the timestamp, that message was sent after Akira sent Carol to escort Sheryl.

"…She's not back in her base, huh?"

After that, he checked the message from Carol. It said that Carol still had Sheryl with her and for him to call her as soon as he could.

So then Akira tried to make a call to Carol, who immediately picked that up.

“Oh, you finally called me? Weren’t you taking too long there?”

“Sorry, a lot of things happened after that. So then, is Sheryl still with you?”

“Yep, she’s here with me.”

“You didn’t escort her back to her base?”

“I did consider that, but my request was to take Sheryl to a safe place, right? It’s true that my request might as well be done once I escorted Sheryl out of that place, but I thought that if I took her back to her base while the slum was still engulfed in that battle, she might get injured or even killed if there were any following battles after that, and that would definitely cause trouble later. Personally speaking, I want to finish my request by handing her back to you, you see. That’s why I still have Sheryl with me.”

“Ahh, I see, you have a point there.”

“So then, if it’s possible, can you come here as soon as you can? Are you okay right now? Well, I don’t mind keeping her with me if you want, but keep in mind it’ll cost you more the longer you leave her with me, okay?”

Akira smiled bitterly after hearing Carol’s happy voice.

“Alright, I’m coming now, where should I come?”

“I’ll send you my location later, I’ll be waiting for you.”

Carol left Akira with that rather inviting line before closing the call.

Akira lightly sighed and drooped his head. As his brain started to wake up, he remembered all kinds of stuff inside his head.

“…I wonder how much should I pay Carol this time.”

“How much are you planning to pay her?”

“I don’t know the market price, but I’m planning to limit it to 50 million Aurum.”

Although he would have to negotiate with Carol about the reward, he had decided not to pay her more than 50 million Aurum. So in short, Akira would only pay that much money even if it made Carol think that she deserved more money for the work she did.

“I never thought that someone who likes to butt into other’s business without being asked to would say something like that. But well, I guess that was the suitable word for someone who would do something just to regret it later though. Aren’t you glad to have decided the upper limit of the reward beforehand?”

“Can’t agree more to that.”

Alpha smiled mischievously at Akira, who replied with a bitter smile.

Akira thought that he would be meeting Carol near his house, or somewhere in a cheap inn, or maybe a tavern. So he was surprised when he checked the coordinates of the location sent to him by Carol. It was located far away from the location where he picked her up before going to Mihazono ruin last time. Although he did find it weird, started his preparation to head there.

He took his augmented suit and protective coat out of the cupboard and put them on, that was when he noticed that the holes on his protective coat were all already fixed.

“Oh, they’re all fixed. That’s pretty amazing.”

“The cupboard is equipped with an automatic repair system. I also put in a little bit of medication there too. It should have done the maintenance for your augmented suit and coat.”

“You can even do that too, huh? That’s really convenient.”

“But because of that, you’ll need to replace the repair cartridge that you got when you bought that augmented suit. Make sure to buy a new one later.”

“I see, how much it costs by the way?”

“About 10 million Aurum.”

Akira froze.

“Don’t forget that there are still medicine, ammo, energy pack, and other consumables that you need to buy too.”

“…Aahh, my money…”

Akira remembered that Carol also changed her augmented suit depending on what she was doing. Up until now, Akira always thought that it was better and safer to keep using the better augmented suit all the time although it meant that he had to regularly pay more for the upkeep. But now he was not so sure if that was the best thing to do.

Akira finished his preparation. He brought along his AAH and A2D assault rifle as well as his CWH anti-material rifle, and of course, he also carried some spare magazines too.

He then headed to the Kugamayama city lower district. He did think that he might not need his CWH anti-material rifle, but he decided to bring it along anyway just to be safe while leaving his DVTS minigun and A4WM automatic grenade launcher behind as not to increase the chance of anything bad happening.

“I’ve completed rewriting the control software, so you have my full support this time. Well, in the worst-case scenario, let’s just run away.”

“…Of course.”

Although Akira did not ask her, Alpha did say what to do in the worst-case scenario. So he just smiled bitterly at her, said so, and went to Kugamayama city lower district.

__*__*__*__

Carol, Sheryl and Viola gathered inside Viola’s office that was located in an office complex building in the lower district.

Viola had other offices too. She had one in the slum, one near the inner wall, one was open and easily recognizable in public, one was located in a rather secretive place. She kept changing one office to another depending on her situation. Carol met up with Viola while bringing along Sheryl with her and then Viola suggested they go to one of her offices.

After Carol finished her call with Akira, she then conveyed that to Sheryl and Viola. Sheryl was relieved to know that Akira was alright, her worried face that she had up until now was completely gone.

Unlike Sheryl who was sitting on the guest chair, Viola was sitting not too far away from Sheryl on her own office desk. Even after she heard that Akira was coming, she still had her usual smile.

Carol came next to Viola and asked her a question.

“Viola, are you sure you want to be here too?”

“Yep.”

Viola replied with a smile without asking Carol what she meant by that question.

“I see.”

Carol deliberately did not tell Akira that Viola was also there. Viola also noticed it as well as the meaning behind it. But even so, she still decided to stay there. Carol thought that if Viola decided so, then it was not her place to say anything to Viola.

Akira eventually arrived. He lightly scanned the area and felt that it seemed to be safe before entering the building.

When Akira entered the office, Carol and Sheryl immediately welcomed him. Carol had her business smile when she welcomed Akira, while Sheryl smiled happily for being able to reunite with him. But even before he was able to reply to both of them, he noticed Viola. His expression immediately turned slightly stern as he asked.

“Carol, sorry but can we talk about the reward a bit later?”

“Sure, but, is there any problem?”

“It’s nothing big, just a small thing that I need to attend to first.”

Sheryl thought it was weird since Akira immediately left her behind and went inside the office room. But when she noticed that he went straight to Viola, she smiled bitterly although she also felt slightly happy at the same time.

Sheryl had gone through a lot of trouble after Rogelt detained her. It was nothing strange if Akira wanted to complain to Viola since she was the source of all of that trouble. Of course, she herself had also complained to Viola, but Viola just gave her a light smile and a cheap apology. If Akira was the one to do that, Viola should not be able to give the same reaction. As Sheryl thought so, she had a mischievous smile on her face which was rather rare for her.

Sheryl was not mistaken there. But Akira actually was planning to do more than just sending some complaints to Viola. In contrast to that, Carol understood well what he was about to do, the difference between her and Sheryl’s understanding was shown in their faces. Carol was not smiling there.

Akira stood in front of Viola, who was still smiling like usual.

“Uhh, Viola-san… Right?”

“Yep, you can just drop the honorific.”

“I see, thanks for the info about Sheryl and that pickpocket. I’ll at least give you my thanks for that.”

“You’re welcome. I’m glad that my information was useful to you.”

Viola was smiling like usual, while Akira had a stern and serious face. Both of them were looking at each other without saying anything for a few seconds.

“…So then, I have a question for you. About this incident, I have no idea how far this thing has been going on, and this is just my guess, but, I feel like you’ve been manipulating me.”

“Hmmm, that would be a misunderstanding. I don’t know where you got such a misunderstanding from. If you tell me, I would be able to give you an explanation. Is that the thing that you wanted to ask me?”

“Not really. Even if I ask you, I feel like you’ll just come up with an answer that makes sense just to convince me. And of course, I don’t have the ability to see through it even if you lie to me. I feel like you would just trick me and leave it as it is. That’s why I won’t ask you. But instead, answer me this.”

“Sure, what is it?”

Akira raised his arm, his rifle now aimed at Viola.

“If you’re in my position, do you think it’s better if I kill the person in front of me now?”

Sheryl was dumbstruck by what just happened. While Carol’s expression did not change at all.

Even after pointing his rifle at her, Viola did not show any change in her expression. She was still smiling like usual as she calmly answered Akira’s question.

“Nope, I don’t think so.”

“Why?”

“There are many reasons that I can come up with. Let’s see, Akira, do you know what is post-mortem program?”

“Yeah.”

“It’s simple then. If you kill me, you’ll get a bounty put on your head and it’ll be as high as all of my current assets. Although I look like this, I’m pretty rich, you see. So don’t think it’ll be something as small as 1 or 2 billion Aurum, okay? If I have to add more, judging from the mediator company that will put that bounty under my request, not only common Hunters, even big organizations would be hunting you, you know?”

“Anything else?”

Akira replied almost instantly. Viola was taken aback seeing how he replied without showing any hesitation, but she immediately returned back to her usual smile and said.

“Oh, that wasn’t enough for you? Let’s see then, how about the person next to your lover is my best friend?”

“I see.”

Gunshot echoed, a hole drilled through Viola’s chest all the way to her back. Viola looked aghast as she slid down her seat and fell to the floor. A pool of blood started to form around her.

Akira lowered his rifle and looked back at Carol.

“So, I should fight you now, right?”

Akira’s expression was completely casual. There was no hostility in his eyes at all. But there was also no sign of him trying to avoid the upcoming fight. Sheryl was shocked by that sudden turn of events, but Carol, who was next to her, just smiled and said calmly.

“Well, Viola indeed paid me to work as her bodyguard, so it’s not like I can just let this slide without doing anything.”

“I see.”

Akira only said so as he turned his whole body toward Carol. But before he shifted his state of mind to battle state, Carol suddenly said.

“But I’m not paid enough to fight you. So to be honest, I want to avoid it if it’s possible. But since I already got paid, I can’t just leave without doing anything either. So, if you're okay with it, I want to do something to earn that pay but without fighting you."

Akira thought for a bit. He recognized that Carol was a strong fighter. He had no idea what she was going to do, but if it meant that he did not have to fight her, then that would be for the better.

"Very well."

"Thank you."

Carol smiled and said so. She then went to Viola, opened the drawer close to her, and seemed to be searching for something.

"It should be around here… Ah, there it is!"

Carol took out a half-spherical mechanical device from inside the drawer, brought it to Viola, and crouched down. She then took off Viola's cloth to expose the bullet wound and placed that device on top of that wound both from the front and back. When Carol turned the device on, the hole in Viola's chest started to slowly close up.

Akira walked next to Carol and looked at it with interest.

"What are you doing?"

"An emergency treatment. This is an automatic treatment kit, it's usually used on a Hunter who's wounded so badly to the point that there's no other way but to replace the wounded area with a prosthetic. Originally, it's used to keep that Hunter alive until they finish installing the prosthetic. This thing is pretty expensive, you know?"

Carol placed a similar thing on Viola's neck. A thin tube came out from the flat part of the device and it went straight piercing into her neck. After about 10 seconds, Viola opened her eyes and coughed out blood.

Akira was stunned to see someone that he thought he had killed return back to life.

“That’s pretty amazing. It can save your life even after getting injured that badly, huh?”

Alpha smiled and explained to Akira.

“It depends on the treatment and your first reaction to it. You witnessed something similar back in Kuzusuhara ruin, remember? There was someone who treated a person who had lost half of their body as a badly injured patient. From his point of view, a hole from a bullet might even be a slight injury.”

“Ahh, you’re right. I remember that guy also told me not to treat an injury on a Hunter and on common people as the same thing though.”

People died when their time came. But their survival chance changed greatly depending on how quickly their injury got treated. Akira had a rather conflicted feeling when he thought about that subject.

When Viola finally stopped coughing, she looked around and understood what just happened.

“…Carol, could you have done something more about this?”

Viola looked at Carol as if she was blaming Carol, expecting her to have eliminated the hostility there by now.

But Carol did not seem to be bothered by that at all, she just casually replied.

“I at least have erased the result of you screwing up your negotiation. I did my job, so you’re on your own for the rest.”

Akira pointed his rifle at Viola again. This time, he was properly aiming for her head.

“I’ll get to the point, anything else?”

Viola smiled wryly. She was a bit scared, her face started to go pale. She went silent for a few seconds as she was thinking about what to say. She then smiled which could be interpreted as both bluff and no worry.

“…I don’t know the reason why you spent so much money on Sheryl’s gang, but I bet you didn’t really calculate the return that you can get from that investment, right? I can help you with that part. I can give advice to the leader of the gang or lend them my connection or money. If Sheryl’s gang can earn quite a lot of money, I’m sure that you’ll get some benefit out from that too… So, what do you think?”

Akira stared back at Viola without saying anything.

“One more question then, were you trying to kill me in that incident? That includes asking someone to kill me, or provoking someone to kill me.”

“No, I didn’t do such a thing.”

“Alpha.”

“She doesn’t seem to be lying, but it may not be the complete truth.”

After listening to Alpha’s guess and Viola’s answer, Akira thought about it one more time. He then said to Viola while still having his rifle pointed at her.

“…Very well. Work hard to make me not regret this decision. The moment I think that I should’ve killed you, I’ll hunt for your head. The same thing would happen if you try to mess with me too. You get that?”

Viola sighed.

“Alright. I don’t want to die after all. I’ll give my best to be useful.”

“Alpha.”

“Yep, she doesn’t seem to be lying there too.”

Akira finally lowered his rifle, seeing which Carol lightly smiled and said.

“You’re done, right? I guess I can finally talk about the reward with Akira now. Akira, now that I have handed Sheryl to you, this will end your request to me. Are you okay with that?”

“Sure.”

“Well now, I’ll need to carry Viola to hospital. Akira, see you again next time.”

Carol lightly smiled and said so. She then pulled Viola up and dragged her out of the office.

Akira looked a bit troubled.

“Carol, don’t we still need to discuss your reward?”

“Ahh, that won’t be necessary. Or more like, I’ll get Viola to pay for that. So you don’t have to worry about it.”

Voila looked obviously displeased.

“Ehhh, to be honest, that has nothing to do with me though.”

“It’s your fault in the first place, isn’t it? Not to mention, you said you’ll be helping Sheryl’s gang from now on. So just think of it as an apology for messing with them.”

“Good grief! Very well then, I’ll do it.”

Akira looked a bit troubled by how Carol was taking it so lightly.

“Uhh, are you sure you’re fine with it?”

“Yeah. If you’re bothered by not paying me, you can invite me for a meal later with the money you were planning to pay me. Or you can invite me to search for relics while paying for my expense, or even paying for my side job too if you want. Either way, I would be happy to accept it. I’ll be waiting for your call.”

Carol smiled provocatively and said so before she left the office.

Akira still had a stupefied look on his face as he saw Carol and Viola off. One of them just got shot and then meekly accepted a demand from him, while the other one was someone that he almost fought against after he shot her close friend. He was speechless at how both of them were taking it very lightly.

That was also the case for Sheryl. She could not hide her surprise with how fast the situation changed there.

After both of them were left alone in that place, Akira and Sheryl looked at each other, the mood was a bit awkward.

"…Well, let's just head back for now, huh. I'll take you back to the base."

"Eh, ah, yes, thank you very much!"

Akira and Sheryl left that office while still feeling slightly awkward. Akira thought that Carol who was on Viola's side would do something after taking Sheryl hostage. Although his guess was incorrect, he did expect that Carol would do something that he did not expect there.

Silavin: Yes, we have dropped below the Patreon goal. That's why it is currently 2 chapters a week again.

On another news, [ ] on our discord has brought this up and I would like to share it as well.

The Konorano 2022 voting is happening right now! It closes on the 23rd of September!

https://questant.jp/q/konorano2022

So, some background info. This is one of the indicative polls that publishing houses use to decide which series is popular enough for an English release.

It also votes on WIFUS! AND MY BOY AKIRA DESERVES TO BE FIRST!!!

Ahem

So, to increase the chances of Rebuild World light novel to be officially translated (this is the Web Novel VBTW), to support our beloved author, AND TO SIMP FOR THE BEST BOY…

Do help ~~skew~~align the votes to be in our favor.

For some instructions on how to do so, [ ] has made a pdf on how to vote.

https://drive.google.com/file/d/16KAUKMKOHo5SAXoSE1XIZS2Gkv8PJrEQ/view?usp=sharing

So, in relation to this announcement, Bonus chapters if our best boy gets first. Priorities right?

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 166, Those Who Work Under The Shadows

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The battle between two large gangs—Ezont Family and Haurias—had, of course, affected the slum city. Sounds of gunshots filled the slums. Erio and the other children in the gang made use of the portable walls they got from Katsuragi to barricade themselves inside their base and were able to get through the night. But even so, it still caused a huge ruckus within the gang that Erio and Alicia were barely able to calm everyone down since they were officers in the gang, but everyone in the gang were still anxious even right now.

They were unable to contact neither Akira nor Sheryl, and that fact really caused chaos inside the gang. They went through the night reminded of just how large both Akira and Sheryl's presence was inside the gang.

It was then that Akira and Sheryl suddenly appeared. Akira was weirded out at how big the welcoming cheer was, as the children gathered around him. Sheryl tried her best to calm everyone down to no avail.

Akira was planning to head straight back home after getting Sheryl back to her base. But Sheryl thought that it would cause even more chaos inside the gang if Akira left, so she asked him to stay for the night. She then told the supervisors to give her their reports of what had happened while she was gone.

The other children had a lot of questions they wanted to ask Sheryl, but after she reprimanded them, and looking at how Akira was slightly annoyed by the ruckus, they regained some of their composure and eventually returned to their respective jobs.

“Sheryl, couldn’t you at least contact these guys?”

“Carol-san told me not to. She said that since the request from you was to get me to safety, it was just to be safe in case someone else other than you used that call to locate me. Of course, I tried to call you too, but I wasn’t able to. “

“Sorry about that, I was a bit preoccupied during that time.”

Akira felt bad saying that he was so tired that he slept for the whole day, so he came up with another excuse. But that was no lie, he was indeed rather busy after leaving Sheryl to Carol.

“Please don’t be, I’m really happy that you came to rescue me… And also, uhhh, about Viola, thank you for making her help run the gang.”

Sheryl tried her best not to show her insecurity or displeasure on her face.

At the moment, Sheryl’s gang had not given any benefit to Akira. It did not even have the prospect of giving any profit to him. Sheryl herself understood that very well. That was why, if Akira told her that Viola would lead the gang in order to turn the gang profitable for him, then she could not refuse.

Sheryl could no longer live without Akira. So in order not to get abandoned by him, she planned to do everything she could to make the gang useful to him. She felt really insecure about the matter regarding Viola.

Akira then spoke to Sheryl with a rather serious face.

“Ahh, by the way, I’m sorry for asking you this after deciding it without even consulting with you, but, Sheryl, can you keep an eye on that Viola?”

“Keep an eye on her?”

“Yeah, tell me if she tries anything funny. I’m sure it’ll be easier to watch over her if she’s close. And also, if you don’t find her useful at all, you can go ahead and kill her. After all, that is the condition she accepted for sparing her life. If you find it hard to kill her, just tell me the reason why you need me to kill her and I’ll do it.”

“O-Okay!!”

“Hm? I’ll be relying on you for that one.”

Akira was a bit weirded out at how Sheryl replied with such vigour. But he did not think too much about it after that.

Sheryl was so elated that Akira actually had no plans to replace her position in the gang and she resolved herself not to disappoint him as she replied firmly to his request.

Alpha had another question that was different from Sheryl about Viola.

“Akira, are you sure that you’re okay with that matter in regards to Viola?”

“Eh? Do you think I should have killed her instead?”

Akira thought that Alpha was against it, so he was surprised when he heard that question. If Viola was telling the truth there, he would have a few billion Aurum bounty on his head. Although she might be exaggerating, it did not change the fact that a bounty would still be placed on his head. But if Viola was lying, Akira thought that Alpha should have caught that from Viola’s expression and told him about it.

“That was not what I meant, I just find it strange that you were rather lenient there. Compared to the matter with that pickpocket, you even raided into a big gang’s base just to kill her, right?”

“…Well, I did shoot her once with the intention to kill her. So, if that was not enough to keep her in check, I’ll think about something else when it comes to that.”

Akira believed that the reason why he spared Viola’s life was because he already felt better after he shot her once with the intention of killing her. Moreover, although he was manipulated by her, she did not do anything to directly kill him. But in truth, there was another reason why Akira spared her that he himself did not notice.

That reason was because Akira wanted to know if he could protect himself without increasing the body counts. He had always believed that if he spared his enemy, that person would definitely come for revenge later. Also, he was convinced that he was simply not strong enough to have the leeway to spare his opponents.

Akira wanted to find a way other than killing his opponent. Although it might be cheeky of him to have that desire, he could at least try.

Of course, it was a completely different matter whether his desire would come to fruition or not even if he tried.

__*__*__*__

Viola was lying on the hospital bed. Her wound was already treated, her life was no longer in danger. She should be fully recovered after a few days of resting on the hospital bed.

She was having a chat with Carol, who was sitting on a chair not too far from her. But Carol suddenly threw a question at her with a rather solemn expression.

“So then, Viola, what are you scheming this time?”

Viola frowned, she looked a bit offended.

“That was out of the blue.”

“You intentionally let Akira shoot you back then, didn’t you?”

Although Carol said that so casually, her tone was telling Viola that she was sure about it.

“I know you’re not that stupid, you knew well what would happen if you met him. You were the one who told me to go to your office with Sheryl, remember? Although you have many offices, that one has a hospital nearby and I know that you have an emergency kit and where to find it in that office. You intentionally said all of that in the first half of your negotiation with Akira, didn’t you? Had Akira aimed at your head back then, you would not have provoked him like that. You knew what I would do, that was why you let Akira shoot you. And by doing that, it would remove most of his grudge against you, right? Then with his grudge mostly gone, you can make an excuse to get involved in Sheryl’s gang saying that it would bring benefit for both Sheryl and Akira.”

Carol smiled rather ominously.

“In the first place, putting Akira and Sheryl aside, if you were planning to trick me too, you could have done something better than that, right? Or is it that you have dulled?”

Viola faked a surprise and smiled.

“You’re thinking too much. If you hadn’t saved me back then, I would have been dead by now.”

“I do think that you’re my friend, but let me tell you this, I don’t believe what you said there at all since I know you very well.”

Carol could easily tell that Viola was scheming something, but she could not tell what it was. Viola might actually be tricking her into thinking that she was scheming something. And if she tried to pursue her suspicion, she might find herself being manipulated by Viola without realizing it. After all, up until now, Carol had seen so many people fall for that trick up close.

Carol smiled smugly.

“Well, in the end, my potential customer did shoot you after you tried to mess with him, so I guess I’ll let that slide. Though I bet I would get shot because of that too.”

“I have no plans to do that though, but if you’re okay with that, then I won’t pursue this subject any further.”

Viola and Carol smiled at each other.

Someone suddenly knocked at the door. A few men came in without even waiting for a reply. Then the representative from that group showed his ID card and said.

“Viola Alhans, I presume? I’m Endou from Kugamayama city’s Long-term Strategy Department, Public Order Section. We have some questions regarding the huge battle yesterday.”

Endou’s men stood in front of the door as if to close Viola’s escape route. Seeing that, Viola sighed.

Carol then said to Endou.

“I have nothing to do with this though, so, can I leave?”

“Of course. In the first place, I would have asked you to leave since you’re not involved in this matter. Although it’s a simple investigation, the subject that we are going to discuss is not for the public’s ears.”

“I see, later then, Viola.”

“Oh my, that’s so cold of you.”

“You didn’t know?”

Viola said that as a joke, so Carol replied with a joke too. Carol left the room while lightly waved at Viola. Half of the men guarding the door also left the room together with Carol and guarded the door from outside.

Endou looked sharply at Viola and stood in front of her. Viola still had her usual calmness.

“So then, I just need to answer your questions, right?”

“That won’t be necessary, it was just an excuse to come here. Of course, I’ll forge a document for that too, but don’t worry, I’ll handle everything.”

“Then, why are you here?”

“I’m here to listen to your report.”

“There’s no need to come all the way here by yourself, you know? I can just send you the report later, right?”

“It’s an order from the guys in the upper echelon. Well, it’s no surprise since the battle was bigger than we expected and we heard that you got hospitalized soon after. Not to mention, we have also received a report saying that Drankam also went to check the place where that battle happened. So, we want to confirm the current situation as soon as possible.”

After he said all of that, Endou looked slightly exasperated as he said.

“But well, what can I say… To think that you can cause such a big battle just from a small rumour about a certain Hunter who got his wallet stolen by a pickpocket, you’re pretty good.”

Viola smiled smugly.

“That was nothing more than a trigger. A rather volatile boy, just like a landmine. So I would rather have you appreciate all the preparations that I’ve done to make sure that the fire would burn strongly.”

Kugamayama city usually did not bother much about the power distribution around the slum city which was next to its lower district. Even if a large battle occurred there and numerous people got killed, the City Management normally did not intervene at all.

But they could not ignore it if it had reached a certain scale. And that Ezont family and Haurias had grown too big and too strong for the City Management to ignore.

Both gangs had survived numerous conflicts, grew bigger, and attained enough money and military power to maintain the gang. To the point that their influence had even reached the commercial district in the lower district and had enough money to buy, arm, and even use powered suits. But it was all good up until that point. After all, rising high as an organization was a commendable thing even from the point of view of the Corporate Government that ruled the eastern district.

The problem was that their existence was disturbing the public order in the city. Their activities were against the law and they were doing illegal businesses. And with the rather barbaric people of the outer wall with powered suits living close to the inner wall, it was no surprise that it bothered the people from the inner wall. It would have been well and good if it increased the worth of living inside the inner wall, but unfortunately, they only lowered it. In the worst-case scenario, some people from the inner wall might even decide to move out because of them.

There were cases where such a strong organization worked together with the Nationalists. The Nationalists would then send that organization powerful augmented suits as well as sneak some of their agents in, and eventually enlist their help during a huge battle. Even if it did not go that far, buying powered suits from the Nationalists was enough to help the Nationalists to collect money. So their existence only caused worry for the people in the inner wall.

Once it reached that point, the City Management could not afford to just ignore them. Power-wise, the City Management could easily crush that kind of organization using the city’s defense squad, after all, that squad was prepared to even withstand a fight against ginormous monsters. An organization that just rose to power from the lower district was no match for that squad.

But the problem was the expense. Of course, dispatching the defense squad was no cheap thing. So if that kind of organization had become big enough trouble for the City Management to dispatch such a costly defense squad, they would look for the one who was responsible for not curbing it.

Because of that, the City Management was looking for a cheaper alternative, and that would be letting the gangs that were disturbing the public order in the city destroy each other. Of course, it would not come for free, but it was indeed cheaper than dispatching the defense squad.

So, Viola received that job from the City Management. Basically, it was outsourced to her.

Viola had manipulated various organizations and people to their own doom. Some of them were out of requests from the City Management. Such a track record earned her quite a reputation from the City Management's point of view. Which in some cases, she was even feared for her skill.

Even the ruckus that happened recently between Ezont Family and Haurias was actually connected to the City Management, but there were only a handful of people in the City Management who knew that. So the people who sent that investigation request to Drankam were the City Management people who were unaware.

Of course, Endou was one of those who knew. But even he was listening to Viola's report while feeling fear in his heart. After all, Viola had done some preposterous things to complete that request.

"…That aside, this might have nothing to do with this matter, but we lost 3 of our agents, do you know anything about them?"

"Is this a request to investigate from the City Management?"

"No, just a casual talk."

"I see. Unlike in the inner wall, the lower district is a dangerous place. They might have done something stupid and got themselves involved in a fight or something."

"Like what?"

“Let’s see. Maybe like boasting their connection with the City Management and trying to get their hands on a woman who is not interested in them. That kind of connection might be enough to help them seduce someone, but it is nowhere near enough as a threat, you know? And it seems that many people don’t understand that well enough, so there’s a good chance they got involved in a fight because of some stupid reason. I can really understand why the City Management spends money to make sure that Hunters behave well, it’s an important thing after all, right?”

Viola smiled as if she was hiding something. Seeing which Endou was barely able to keep his calm.

__*__*__*__

Sheryl was sitting in her personal room with a serious face. The reason was the information from Viola whom she was talking with through her information terminal.

“…Is this information true?”

“It’s not like I’m going to tell you to trust me, but well, I do feel guilty for what I did to you, you know? I even let you hear about this before I tell Akira as a token of apology from me.”

They were talking through a call, so they could not see each other’s faces. But Sheryl was so sure that Viola was smiling right now, she could imagine Viola smiling with her usual gentle smile while scheming something behind it.

“Is this a threat to me?”

“Of course not, like I said, it’s an apology from me. Ah, by the way, if I have to add anything, Akira had already finished off Alna. That’s why, I’m sure that he won’t be that bothered even if you tell him that you know about it. Of course, that is if he doesn’t notice it on his own and misunderstands thinking that you’re intentionally trying to hide it from him.”

Sheryl shivered when she remembered back then when Akira was in a very bad mood. That day, Akira, who was in a horrible mood, said in front of Sheryl that he would kill that Alna. And now, if she did not handle this situation well, in the worst-case scenario, Akira might direct that killing intent to Sheryl's gang.

Sheryl was trying her best to maintain her calm, suddenly Viola said with her usual calm voice.

"We're just going to take the initiative here. I just thought that it would not sour Akira's mood that much if you let him hear it from you. Of course, I won't be forcing you to do it though. But, if you won't do anything, I plan to tell Akira myself. After all, I need to give Akira some useful information as an apology to him too. You know that well too, right? So that's it, later then."

"W-wait!"

"What is it?"

"…I'll do it. Thank you very much for sharing this information."

"You're welcome."

Viola replied with a happy voice before closing the call. After that call ended, Sheryl was barely able to hold back herself from screaming out of anger.

Sheryl then called Nasha to one of the rooms in the base. When Nasha came in, Sheryl, Alicia, and Erio were already waiting for her inside the room.

Sheryl and the other two had a grave expression on their faces, the mood was rather heavy. Nasha could feel the heaviness of the mood as she slowly and sacredly came forward.

"Uhmm, Boss, I heard you have something you want to talk about with me."

Sheryl looked at Nasha. She then said with an extremely stern face and firm voice.

“I’ll get straight to the point here, did you tell Alna about Akira?”

Nasha went pale, it was so obvious that there was no need for her to answer that question.

Sheryl and the other two made an even sterner expression when they saw her reaction. Their slight hope that it was a mistake was completely crushed. Nasha was a nice girl, she did all her job earnestly, and she got along well with the other members in the gang. Recently, she was even given the responsibility to supervise some of the other members. Sheryl, Erio, and Alicia trusted her, that was why it came as a big shock for all three of them.

“So that’s true, huh!! Come in!!”

With that signal from Erio, some of the other gang members came into the room. They immediately surrounded Nasha and froze. They were only told to come in and secure someone that might anger Akira, they did not know who that someone was. So no one expected that it would be Nasha.

Those children looked conflicted as they looked in Sheryl’s direction. They could feel the heavy air coming from her, so they started securing Nasha although they still had a pained look on their faces. Nasha did not fight back at all.

Nasha just stood there with her head down, both of her arms were grabbed by the other children to make sure that she won’t be able to do anything. Looking at that, Alicia worriedly said to Sheryl.

“…Sheryl, so… What do you plan to do with her?”

Sheryl could understand Alicia’s wish to help Nasha if it was possible. But if she tried to cover for her, it might put her and her gang in danger.

Nasha used the money that Alna stole from Akira to join Sheryl's gang. She then helped Alna to run away even after Akira made such a frightening expression. At that point, Sheryl could no longer protect Nasha.

Moreover, Sheryl also had come to know that Akira only stayed behind after leaving her to Carol in order to kill that Alna. He wanted to kill Alna so bad that he would jump into a battlefield that was filled with tanks and powered suits. She could not tell how far his killing intent would go, whether it would include people who helped Alna get away, or if it would even include those people who were not able to prevent that, or if it would include people that he thought protected anyone involved in that matter. When Sheryl thought about that, there was no way she could protect Nasha.

Sheryl did not say anything as she took out her information terminal, she paused for a bit to get herself ready before initiating a call to Akira.

"It's Sheryl. I have something to talk about, is this a good time?"

The mood inside the room tensed up. Everyone was looking in Sheryl's direction. Sheryl was apologizing while trying to explain what was going on to Akira. When she did that, Akira did not say anything back. He did not say anything that sounded as if he was surprised or angry. Not even a slight reply to let Sheryl know that he was listening. He was just silent. It was even dubious if he was properly listening or not.

Sheryl could not bring herself to ask Akira if he was listening. She could not tell if Akira was trying to calm himself down, or if he was too angry to say anything back, she could only pray that it was not because Akira had abandoned the gang as she kept on talking. After she explained everything, Akira then said.

"…I see. Alright, I'll head there now."

"I understand, we'll be waiting."

Akira ended the call there. Sheryl sighed in relief. Alicia then worriedly asked Sheryl a question.

“…How was it?”

“…Akira is coming.”

Sheryl only said that. Alicia wanted to ask if there was a chance to save Nasha, but after seeing Sheryl’s reaction, she decided not to.

Not too long after that, Akira came into the room. All the other children that surrounded Nasha stepped back all the way to the wall so as not to get involved in Akira’s fury.

Nasha had completely given up hope. She was scared, but not to the point that she was shaken up. She had resolved herself knowing that something like this might happen the moment she joined Sheryl’s gang.

[I’m sorry, Alna. It seems that this is the end for me, I hope that you at least can live well.]

Nasha smiled lonely at the thought of Alna.

Akira stood in front of Nasha.

“So this one is Nasha, right? Let her go.”

The guys who were holding both of Nasha’s arms released her and stepped away just like the other children.

“Come.”

Akira only said that and headed to the door. Nasha did not follow him, she only stood there with a bewildered face, she thought that he would kill her there. So Akira turned around and said.

“I don’t mind dragging you out though if you prefer that.”

Nasha still had a bewildered look, but she started following behind him. Akira then left the room with her.

Sheryl and the other children could only see them leave without doing or saying anything. They were only standing there, looking slightly confused since Akira left without blaming anyone at all.

__*__*__*__

Inside the Drankam base, Mizuha was yelling in anger. The reason was the person that she was on a call with.

“Viola, it’s pretty bold of you to call me after what you did.”

Mizuha anger was obvious from her voice, but in contrast to that, Viola replied back calmly and casually.

“Oh my, you didn’t find my service satisfying? I did finish your request almost perfectly, you know? Alna is dead, not because she simply vanished, but because she was killed and there was a corpse to prove it. So, there is no doubt that she’s dead for good. And since the reason for her death is because she got swallowed in the battle between Haurias and Ezont family, no one would expect that it had anything to do with you. So what is it that you don’t like about?”

Mizuha was really annoyed at how Viola was playing innocent there, she was trying to be careful not to raise her voice too high.

“Don’t kid with me. I didn’t say anything about telling Katsuya about that and sending him into that battlefield, what the heck were you thinking? What were you going to do if he got killed there? Are you planning to make an enemy out of me?!”

“Ohh, about that, huh? I have nothing to do with that matter, you know. It’s not a part of my job after all.”

“Do you really think that I believe you?”

“Well, I won’t tell you to believe me. But it’s the truth. Moreover, whether it’s a person or an organization, anyone who antagonizes me, they all end up dead, you know. After all, it would be a hassle to deal with them if they ever come for revenge later. So like, do you want to get killed or the whole Drankam gang destroyed by tomorrow or something?"

"No!"

"Thought so. Moreover, if you didn't want Katsuya to get involved, you could have sent him for a Hunter job somewhere far away for some time, no? You should have known that something would happen the moment you put that request for me, that's why I didn't warn you at all, and you would still blame that on me? Well, though I'm sure it's not that simple with Drankam involved though."

Mizuha twitched, she did not have anything to counter that argument. If she said that it was Viola's fault, then in turn it would mean that it was Mizuha's own mistake for not being able to predict that. Since she did not want to admit it, she came up with another excuse.

"…Katsuya is already assigned to another job in Kuzusuhara ruin front-line temporary base. And Kugamayama city thinks highly of him. That's why I can't just suddenly assign him to another job."

"Is that so? But that's your problem, right? So, even if you tell me so, it's not like I can do anything about it, right?"

After a short pause, both of them were trying to probe what the other person was thinking. After that, Viola sounded as if she had given up and decided to step back.

"Well, putting that aside. Since you're not happy with my work, I don't feel like taking my reward just like this too. So, it's okay if I transfer it back, right? But with one condition."

"One condition? What is it?"

"Tell me how Katsuya discovered Alna's location that day, I'll give my reward back to you as a payment for that info. I might even give you some bonus too depending on how much details you can give me."

Mizuha was a bit surprised by that request.

“…What are you scheming this time? It was you who told him, right?”

“As I said, it wasn’t me. I don’t know who or what organization did that, but the one that I sent there as the trigger for that battle was only Akira. Akira was the only one that I told about Alna’s whereabouts. I didn’t say anything to Katsuya or anyone around him that might let him know. But even so, Katsuya did go there and made a mess of my plan. Because of that, I ended up in hospital after Akira shot me. I’m still in the hospital even right now, you know?”

“Really?”

“I would be really happy if you come to visit me though.”

Viola was telling Mizuha to come and check it for herself if she was suspicious of Viola lying. And with that, most of her suspicion about Viola letting Katsuya know about Alna’s location had also vanished.

Viola then added.

“If everything went as I planned, I wouldn’t be in the hospital right now. That’s why I want to know the reason why someone would want to mess up my plan by telling Katsuya where Alna was. Of course, I’m planning to investigate it further myself. But it’s easier for you to investigate within Drankam, right? And even if I’m planning to ask Katsuya myself, it would be easier if you’re the one to do that for me, right?”

Viola sounded as if she had a grudge against whoever told Katsuya about Alna, Mizuha’s suspicion reduced even further.

“…So, it really wasn’t you?”

“Yeah, I didn’t tell Katsuya anything. I have my reputation to be held as an information broker, you know. I won’t do something as stupid as leaking the information after a contract like that. My information is always correct, that’s why people keep buying information from me even after they know the bad rumours about me. You do know that well yourself, no?

Mizuha took some time to think. Even if Viola might put in some of her personal opinions in her information, she would never leak any information and the information itself would always be correct.

It was as if she was standing at an intersection and there was a trap if she went to the right. She was properly told so by Viola, so if she went to the right without trusting Viola, she might as well get hurt. But if she trusted Viola and went left, she might find a worse trap and get hurt even worse than if she had gone right. But if she believed someone else, went to the right and avoided the worse trap on the left, it felt like Viola then would happily take whatever treasure that she could find on the left.

Viola’s bad habit was how she manipulated people with correct information, Mizuha herself knew that very well. Which meant that she must be telling the truth when she said that she did not tell Katsuya anything about Alna, or at least, that was what Mizuha thought.

“Very well. Either way, Drankam will do our own investigation too. We’ll send a copy of the report to you too, is that good enough?”

“We have a deal then, thanks. By the way, I already returned back the reward that I received, so you can go ahead and check it. I’ll transfer more if you can give me good info. That’s it then, bye-bye.”

Viola closed the call. Mizuha checked her bank account and confirmed that she got back the money she had given to Viola. It was as if Viola knew that Mizuha would accept her condition. Mizuha felt slight displeasure after realizing that Viola had completely read her, but she immediately moved on to something else.

[If it was not Viola, then who told Katsuya about Alna?] Mizuha could feel slight anger for whoever was it who sent Katsuya to that dangerous battlefield as she immediately planned her investigation.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 167, Balancing The Scale

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Nasha followed behind Akira. She was looking at Akira's back while walking through the street of the slum city. Akira did not look back at all as he kept walking forward.

It might be a good chance for her to run away. But Nasha did not harbour such thoughts, she had no wish to do so. Akira knew that she was not following him when they were back in Sheryl's base even without looking back. That was why she thought that Akira must know whether or not she was following him at the moment and it might be futile to even try to run away in such a situation.

Nasha had already given up. Because of that, she did not have the will to fight back, she was only following behind Akira without saying anything.

Akira hopped on his vehicle that he parked close by and said.

"Get in."

Nasha obediently climbed to the driver's assistant seat. Akira then drove out from the slum and into the wasteland.

It had been a few minutes since Akira and Nasha left the city. Akira did not say anything, but he looked slightly annoyed as he was driving the vehicle. Looking at him, Nasha got even more confused.

Some Hunters would only kill people in the wasteland, so at first, Nasha thought that Akira might be bringing her out to the wasteland just to kill her. But it already had been a few minutes since they left the city. If Akira was planning to kill her and dump her body in the wasteland, they were already far enough from the city. Eventually, she could not hold back her curiosity.

“Where are we going?”

“Well, to Narahagaka city.”

“Narahagaka city?”

“You’ve never heard of it? It’s a city to the west of Kugamayama city. Although it’s not as big as Kugamayama city, it still has a wall protecting it. Well, you can think of it as a smaller version of Kugamayama city… Or so I heard. Though I asked you if you’ve ever heard of it, to be honest, I only came to know about it recently too. So I don’t know much about that city either, how about you?”

“…Uhh, I’ve heard that name before, but nothing more.”

“I see.”

Their conversation ended with that. Nasha got even more confused and stopped the conversation there. Silence returned back between them. With time, Nasha’s confusion pushed her to ask another question.

“Uhh, what are you planning to do with me once we arrive there?”

“Nothing. Ahh, that’s not right, I’m planning to take you there and leave you in that city.”

“Leave me…?”

“I’ll head back straight home after I drop you in that city. You might hate me for leaving you in a place that you know nothing about, but that’s just how it is, sorry about that. If I leave you somewhere nearby, I feel like it’ll only cause trouble later on after all. Or more like, that kind of thing has already happened once before.”

Akira casually pointed at the rucksack that he put in the back of his vehicle.

“And it’s not like I’m going to leave you in an unknown place so that you’ll starve to death. I’ll at least give you some money, a gun, and some clothes. You can take that rucksack with you. But that’s all I’ll do for you. Then you can do anything you want. So, sorry, but you’ll have to do everything by yourself after that.”

Nasha opened the rucksack and looked at its contents. It was true that there were some Hunter clothes and a gun inside.

“Even though I did tell you that you can do anything you want, I don’t recommend going back to Kugamayama city. Sheryl and her gang also have their reputation to maintain, so I’m sure that they won’t ignore you if they spot you and I have no plans to tell them to let you go just because I spared you.”

Nasha was surprised. She looked at Akira and at the rucksack alternately. She looked completely flabbergasted.

“You’re going to spare me? Why?”

Akira hesitated.

“…Well, it’s fine, isn’t it? It’s just out of a whim.”

Nasha seemed to be thinking hard, she then said with a rather stiff expression.

“Please tell me.”

“Is it really that important?”

“Yes, so please tell me.”

“Just think of it as a weird guy making a weird decision.”

“Please tell me.”

Akira looked at Nasha in the eyes and slightly squinted his eyes.

“…If you keep pushing your luck, I might change my mind, you know.”

Nasha replied while looking straight into Akira’s eyes.

“…It doesn’t matter, please tell me.”

Nasha still asked for an answer although Akira said that he might kill her if she kept pursuing that subject. Akira was a bit surprised by it. But he could feel that it was not something that he could just ignore, so he sighed and said as if he was confessing.

“It’s just balancing out the scale.”

Nasha did not expect such an answer at all, she tilted her head in confusion.

“What do you mean by that?”

“I killed your best friend. So to balance that out, I’ll spare your life.”

Nasha froze, she then said with a shaking voice.

“You killed Alna?”

“Yeah, I did.”

Nasha felt a storm of emotion struck her. Her best friend was killed and the person who killed her best friend was pitying her right now. It stirred her emotion even more.

“Are you saying that you feel guilty for killing Alna, but since you had no other choice but to kill her, you’ll spare me in her place? Is that what you mean when you said ‘it’s for balancing the scale’?”

“No. I did kill her because I wanted to and it’s not like I’m sparing you because I feel guilty for it.”

“Then why?!”

Nasha raised her voice. She looked at Akira with hatred and vengeance, but Akira was not surprised at all, as a matter of fact, he was completely calm. But that only served to stir her emotion even further.

With her emotions brimming, Nasha looked away from Akira for a split second, that was when her eyes wandered to the gun inside the rucksack. She immediately reached for that gun and released the safety trigger while glaring at Akira.

But even so, Akira did not show any reaction at all.

“I killed your best friend, so I won’t tell you not to hate me. But don’t think that I’ll just let you kill me. If you want to give it a try although you know the outcome, then be my guest.”

Akira pointed out the power gap between him and Nasha and stopped her. But his next sentence changed that.

“…And also, although it might be weird for me to say this, do you think that Alna wants you to go that far to avenge her death?”

Nasha’s anger welled up again. She was on the verge of pointing the gun in her hand at Akira as she screamed as hard as she could at him.

“You… You know nothing about Alna!!!”

“Yeah, that’s why I’m asking you since you must really know her well. You’re her best friend, right?”

Akira looked straight at Nasha, who was staring dagger at him, he was seriously asking Nasha a question there. Nasha was taken aback to the point that it erased all of her anger. She was baffled and was shaking while making a very confused face. Akira looked straight at Nasha without saying anything.

Nasha imagined Alna's figure from all the memories that they had together. That Alna in her mind threw a sad smile at her and said something to her.

Nasha stopped shaking, she then pointed the gun in her hand at Akira with a pained face.

A gunshot echoed through the wasteland, the bullet went and vanished into the distance. Akira had slightly shifted Nasha's hand right before she pulled the trigger.

Nasha lightly smiled, she somehow looked relieved. But even after that, Akira still did not do anything to her while having a flat expression. The smile vanished from Nasha's face. She looked slightly confused and said with a pained voice.

"…Kill me already… Just kill me!! I shot at you, you know!? Are you still going to spare me!?"

Akira did not say anything as he shook his head.

"Sorry, but I'm already strong enough to know whether my life is in danger or not. If you want to kill yourself, you can do it on your own. And if you fail even after that, I'll at least warn you not to do that again."

Nasha fell on her knee. In the end, she could not save her best friend and she could not die in the same fashion as her best friend died, all kinds of feelings were mixed inside her heart as she started screaming and crying as if to vent her anger and sadness.

A few minutes later, they were still midway to Narahagaka city. Nasha had cried herself out to the point that she was too tired to keep crying. After venting all of her emotion through her tears and crying her eyes out, she finally calmed down and just sat there silently on the driver's assistant seat.

Nasha once again looked at Akira and mumbled with a small voice.

“…What’s with that balancing the scale?”

“Before I answer that, I want to confirm something first. That Alna, your best friend, was she the kind of girl who would tell you to avenge her death, although it’s hopelessly impossible?”

Nasha shook her head.

“…No, it’s something that I did out of my own volition. I’m sure that she would tell me to just forget it. She might even get angry at me if she knew that I tried.”

“I see, she must have been a kind girl.”

“…Yes, she was.”

They then continued talking calmly.

“…About balancing the scale, huh? Well, it’s basically just about testing luck.”

“Testing luck?”

“Yeah, for some reason, it seems that I have very bad luck, you see. Thanks to that, I’ve gone through a lot in the past.”

Basically, it was as if Akira was taking a gamble. He then continued.

“It’s about that time when I killed Alna. There was someone really strong protecting her and he is also a kind person. Although he has no debt nor has been offered a reward for it, he gave his best to protect Alna. Since he even went that far, he and the girl he was protecting might as well be good people, but even so, I still killed Alna… If I kill a good person, it feels like it’ll bring some bad karma on me later. That might be the reason why I have very bad luck. As a matter of fact, I did encounter something really troublesome right after I killed her. I would have been able to evade it if I had given up on killing her. So, well, I guess I just reaped what I sow there.”

Nasha was really happy to hear that someone did that much to protect her best friend. But at the same time, it also made her feel sad knowing that Alna had done something so that someone would still want to kill her despite having someone like Katsuya protecting her.

“…Then why didn’t you spare her just like how you did to me?”

Akira felt that Nasha was not blaming him, she simply just wanted to know, so he answered her question honestly.

“…I couldn’t, it’s a matter of my personality. Even if you ask me why I couldn’t do that, I don’t think I can come up with anything that might convince you.”

“…I see.”

“It doesn’t matter how strong they are, people will die when they get unlucky. That’s what I believe. The reason why I’m sparing you is simply because I think it might improve my bad luck, even if it’s only by a bit. So basically, I am doing this for my own sake. Although I said it’s for balancing the scale, I don’t think this is anywhere near enough to accomplish it. But it’s still better than nothing. That’s all the reason I have, I don’t do this because of any other profound reasons or anything.”

It was an absurd reasoning. It might be true that Alna was killed because she was unlucky and Nasha was spared because she was lucky, but Nasha still felt something did not feel right.

“…Was there really no other way for Alna? Was killing her the only choice you had?”

“As I said, it’s a matter of my personality, so it’s not like I can do anything about it.”

“No, that isn’t what I meant. I mean like, if something else, no matter how small it is, if there was anything that could have been done to save her life.”

“…Hmmm, let’s see then…”

Akira tried to think of all kinds of scenarios where Alna might have been saved.

If only Alna did not aim for Akira that day, or Akira did not lower his guard, or Alna was not able to steal Akira's wallet, or if Alna did not meet Katsuya, or Katsuya did not protect her that time, or if Katsuya did not push Akira back and triggered the domino effect which led to Alna's death, if that failure did not spread out as a rumour that discredited Akira, if only that rumour did not cause the robbers to attack Sheryl's base, or that Alna did not get kidnapped by Ezont family, or if Katsuya came sooner to save Alna.

Akira put out all the scenarios where Alna might be saved. After listening to everything, Nasha had a sad smile as she said.

"So, even with all of those possible scenarios, Alna still got killed, huh… That would mean she's really unlucky… Do you know that Alna is a really good pickpocket?"

"No."

"She's really talented in stealing wallets. Because of that, all kinds of people tried to get their hands on her to make her steal for them. Alna was having it hard too. But, there's nothing commendable about stealing others' money, right… She might have gotten that bad luck because of all the bad things that she had done up until now… If only I had stopped her sooner, she might have got luckier, and she wouldn't need to die…"

Nasha felt so frustrated by her inability to help, although she had already cried her eyes out, she started to tear up again.

Akira did not say if that was true or not, he just kept quiet.

Akira and Nasha reached Narahagaka city right around evening. He dropped Nasha in front of the Hunter Office near the city wall.

Nasha had already changed to the clothes that Akira gave her. It was rather shabby-looking Hunter clothing. It was a suitable cloth for someone who would visit that Hunter Office. It was rather good clothing for someone from the slum. Compared to her previous clothes, people would ridicule her less with that attire.

“So then, well, it might be weird to hear this from me, but be well.”

“Yes, Akira-san. You too.”

After they exchanged a rather formal-sounding good-byes, Nasha looked at Akira with a serious face and said.

“I… I think I hate you. You killed Alna, I might carry this grudge until I die.”

Just like Alna, who did all she did because of reasons, Akira also had his reasons for doing what he did. If a Hunter had a bad rumour spread which lowered his or her reputation, it might turn fatal for that Hunter. That was why Nasha understood that there were things that a Hunter like Akira could not back off from.

Although Nasha did not do it intentionally, she also helped spread such horrendous rumours about Akira. Not only did she use the money that Alna stole from Akira to join Sheryl’s gang, she also leaked the information about Akira to Alna to help Alna escape. Normally, it would not be strange if Akira wanted to kill her, but he still spared her life.

“But even so, thank you very much for sparing me.”

Nasha did shoot Akira, cried her eyes out, and talked all kinds of things with him. One good thing about it was that she was able to move on from her best friend’s death. Although it was not like all of her grudges were gone, at least it was enough to help her to stand back on her feet. She bowed deeply at Akira as thanks.

Akira did not expect to be thanked, so he was really surprised. After that, he looked slightly sad as he smiled and said to Nasha.

“You’re also a nice person, huh.”

“Is that so? I did try to shoot you, you know?”

“Even nice people sometimes have to do extreme things too. But even so, that’s not enough as a reason to let someone steal my wallet or kill me. That’s all there’s to it.”

“Is that the reason why you killed Alna?”

“Yes, half of it.”

“Then what’s the other half?”

“The other half is that I didn’t have the leeway to spare her life because of my personality, how cowardly I am, and how weak I am. If only I had been strong enough, well, I might have let it slide with a kick… Bye then.”

Akira was about to leave, but Nasha suddenly stopped him.

“Before you go, can I ask you to convey a message for Sheryl-san? I’m really sorry for betraying her trust, after all, I don’t think I’ll ever meet her again.”

“Alright, I’ll let her know.”

“Thank you very much.”

Nasha saw Akira off until he completely vanished from her views, after that, she started walking away firmly.

__*__*__*__

Sheryl was in her private room when a call reached her.

“…I see, so you left Nasha in Narahagaka city, huh…”

“Yeah, sorry for doing that without consulting with you first. I’m sure we could have found a better alternative if I did. So, sorry about that.”

“Please don’t be. If Akira is okay with it, then I have no complaint about it either. So please don’t worry about it.”

Sheryl was not lying when she said that, she was relieved. She was actually waiting nervously until Akira called her.

She had no idea what kind of deal Akira made with Nasha, but judging from the call, it seemed that they were able to find a peaceful solution. It even sounded as if Akira had a good impression of Nasha. Judging from there, it did not seem that Sheryl and her gang were in any danger at all. Sheryl was thankful to Nasha for that.

“And there’s a message from Nasha. She’s sorry for betraying your trust. So there, I already told you. Though it might be weird for me to say this, there’s no need to hold a grudge against her any longer, okay?”

“Yes, if you said so, then I have no problem with it.”

Sheryl replied back firmly, Akira was a little bit weirded out by that.

“A-alright then. Well, you can do whatever you want to handle the rest after this. If it might cause trouble in the gang, you can just say that I killed Nasha and dumped her body in the wasteland. I don’t know anything about that kind of thing, so that part would be fully up to you. If anything comes up, just give me a call, and also, I’ll visit the base again sometime soon. Later then.”

“I’ll be waiting for you. Ah, can I ask one thing? How did you know that Nasha is Alna’s close friend?”

“Hm? Not too long before you gave me that call, Viola called me first and told me all kinds of things.”

Sheryl gasped, Akira could clearly hear that, he smiled bitterly on the other side of the call and said.

“She even told me to rethink how to deal with your gang if you tried to hide this matter from me even after all I had said. But it seems that I don’t need to worry about that, huh?”

“O-Of course!!”

“Right, later then.”

Akira ended the call. Sheryl was about to scream but she was barely able to hold herself back.

During the last incident, Sheryl had seen so many instances where Akira showed how ruthless and merciless he could be, how he always shot first and asked questions later. But after he spared Nasha, Sheryl could see a glimpse of Akira’s kindness, and she was really happy about it.

Sheryl was so happy up until the point where Viola’s name came up.

It all made sense now how calm Akira was when she told him about Nasha during that call. Akira already knew everything even before she had called him. And since she did contact him about that afterwards, Akira did not have any reason to be angry now.

[…That was dangerous!! Is that what Viola meant when she said about taking the initiative!? But didn’t she say that she won’t say anything to Akira if I choose to tell him myself?! Good grief, just how evil is that woman?!]

Sheryl took a deep breath to calm herself down. She then summoned Erio and Alicia, and she decided to tell Alicia and Erio about Nasha. After all, they looked really worried, so Sheryl thought it might be a good idea to let them know and to make them not overly scared of Akira. She also told herself to make sure that Erio and Alicia knew how bad Viola was.

Akira was still on the way back to Kugamayama city. The sun had already set and the city was still far away. Since he was using a rental vehicle, he took a big detour evading areas with a good chance of encountering monsters.

After he called Sheryl, Akira noticed Alpha was staring at him.

“What?”

“I thought I’ve been together with you for quite a long time now, but your way of thinking is still a big mystery to me. Are you sure you’re okay with that?”

“Is there anything bad with sparing her? Well, it’s true that she might change her mind later and decide to kill me. But when that happens, I can just kill her.”

To be more precise, Akira wanted to know if he was still that weak to the point that he should have killed Nasha instead of sparing her, and although he did it mostly unconsciously, he did think that it should be alright since Nasha was a nice person.

“That’s not what I meant. You let Viola live and even took Nasha all the way to Narahagaka city, so like, you could have spared Alna too, no? That way you would not have needed to fight that black powered suit and get into all of those troubles, right? So I’m just wondering how you made all of these decisions.”

Akira smiled bitterly, he also looked slightly annoyed.

“Sorry about that. I didn’t think that it would cause this much trouble… Though it’s already too late, now I can understand why Elena-san and Sara-san warned me. No, that’s not right, I don’t think even Elena-san and Sara-san knew that it would cause this much trouble.”

To Akira, Alna was the evidence of his weakness. He feared that he would return back to the slum if he kept making the same failure. The reason why he wanted to kill Alna no matter what was also because he wanted to wash himself clean of that fear. And with Alna dead now, his state of mind returned back to normal.

“I feel bad for being rude to Elena-san and Sara-san although they were only worrying about me.”

Akira sighed, he sounded slightly sad. Sara's and Elena's warning was correct and he ignored that. He felt like he should apologize to them.

Alpha smiled and tried to cheer him up.

"If you feel bad about it, then you should be more careful next time. That way you would not worry other people too much. Of course, that includes me too."

"Of course!"

Akira returned Alpha's smile with a bitter smile.

"By the way, what's your plan with Katsuya?"

"Katsuya? What's about him?"

"You did fight each other back then. If you want to be more careful to avoid any possible extra trouble, it might be a good idea to just forget about him even if you actually don't want to."

Akira nodded in agreement but his face immediately changed as if to say that he actually did not care.

"I see, so that's what you meant, huh? Rather than forgetting about him, I actually don't care about him in the first place though. After all, the only reason I fought him was simply because he was blocking me from killing Alna, it's not like I have a grudge against him that I want to kill him or anything like that. So it depends on what he is going to do. Personally speaking, I don't really care about him."

After he said that, Akira's face turned serious.

"But if he comes at me for revenge, then I have no other choice. I'll kill him too."

Alpha smiled as if to lighten the heavy mood oozing from Akira.

“I see, in that case, just to be safe as well as to prevent him from trying to do that, you need to become stronger. If you are strong enough, I’m sure he won’t even try to come at you. So let’s get better equipments for the sake of that.”

Akira lightly smiled, the heavy mood that was oozing from him right until now had completely vanished.

“I already spent 400 million Aurum for my equipments and it’s still not enough huh?”

“At least, one thing for sure, it’s not enough to accomplish my request. I still need you to work hard for that one too.”

“Roger that, it seems that I still have a long way to go.”

Akira lightly smiled as he kept on driving through the dark night. He had become strong enough to get out from the slum and traverse the wasteland. But that was still not enough, Akira could not even imagine just how strong he needed to be.

__*__*__*__

Yanagisawa was staring at an empty space. There was no one there, but from Yanagisawa’s point of view, he could see many faces of Hunters through the augmented reality display that he was using.

Yanagisawa focused on one person. When he did that, detailed information of that Hunter came up in the information terminal on his hand.

“Are you the one?”

Yanagisawa mumbled so as he thought of all the factors that supported his guess, he then considered all the factors that denied it. After doing all the calculations and summing up the result, he then said.

“…That would be a no.”

The information about that Hunter vanished and was replaced with the information of another Hunter.

“Is it you then?”

He did just like last time and concluded.

“…That would also be a no.”

Yanagisawa kept doing so for a few times through information about different Hunters of all ages and genders, cyborgs and non-cyborgs.

“Are you the one then?”

Just like last time, information of a certain Hunter was displayed on his information terminal, this time it was Akira.

[A young Hunter from the slum, huh. Let’s assume that he can connect to the old-world domain, then let’s assume he met one of them when he went to Kuzusuhara ruin and made a contract with them. Due to that contract, he got help to find relics, then he used the money that he got from selling those relics to buy equipment, and eventually, they invited him to that place. The beguiling ghost, it’s a rumour that I spread to help people find them. He has become so strong as a Hunter so fast which might as well be thanks to that contract with them. Everything makes sense here.]

Compared to the other Hunters up until now, Yanagisawa came up with a lot of factors to affirm his guess there. But his expression then turned slightly more serious than usual and continued.

[But, although he’s strong, he’s far away from being strong enough to go to that place. So it’s doubtful if they would make a contract with someone as weak as him. But let’s assume here that they did. It’s strange that he almost got killed these many times. That emergency request from Katsuragi. That encounter with the relic thieves. That time when his vehicle was eaten by that bounty monster. Then that battle in Seranthal building as well as the battle that happened yesterday. It won’t be strange for him to get killed on any of those occasions. If he’s in contract with them, they would have done something to make sure that the people that they're in contract with would stay alive by keeping them from getting in those dangerous situations. So he wouldn't meet this many dangerous occasions. In conclusion, he doesn't seem to be the one… If I have to say, it's more like he's one of those gifted people who then got his talent bloom when he's still young then got lucky enough to find old-world relics and reach success as a Hunter. It's a rare case, but not impossible.]

Yanagisawa listed all the factors that denied his guess and finally made his conclusion.

"…Then that would be a no too, I guess?"

Yanagisawa thought that he still needed more materials to decide. So for now, he kept Akira's name on the candidate list. The list had already been filled with so many names. Yanagisawa then moved on to the next Hunter.

"Are you the one then?"

Yanagisawa looked closely at the information displayed in front of him. It was about Katsuya.

[A Hunter from Drankam. The gang has always been thinking of him highly, but lately, his performance has been increasing significantly. In the past, his name had even come up in the reports to the City Management, but now some of the people in the City Management even recognize his strength. Judging from the numbers, it can even be said that it's as if he's a completely different person. If he's someone who can connect to the old-world domain and get in a contract with them, that would explain the sudden increase in his performance.]

After listing all the factors that approved his guess, just like before, Yanagisawa started listing all the factors that denied his guess.

[But he only got this strong after that battle in Mihazono ruin. No, is it when he was fighting in that battle near the Seranthal building? Either way, it's not when he was in Kuzusuhara ruin. None of them should be in Mihazono ruin. Or at least, there's no past record of finding them in ruins other than Kuzusuhara ruin. Although putting my trust on the record without much evidence is a bad thing, I cannot just ignore it either. Moreover, he's still far from being strong enough to go to that place. If I have to say, it sounds more like something happened in that battle near the Seranthal building that triggered his growth, it's not a rare thing for Hunters to be pulled out of their slumps because of some kind of trigger.]

When Yanagisawa was about to make his decision, something piqued his interest.

"…Seranthal building, huh? And this date… I was there too when he came to the Seranthal building. But at that time, my appointment reservation was deleted. They usually only stay in Kuzusuhara ruin though, so did they come to the Seranthal building temporarily to erase my appointment reservation? If that's the case, then this boy might… No, wait, it's not right to force my guess like this. If I force it here, it'll affect all my decisions later. In the first place, it's all under the assumption that he can connect to the old-world. It's just an assumption, it's okay to use it for checking all the possibilities, but it's wrong to put my bet on an assumption."

When Yanagisawa was about to continue, he received a call from someone. He stopped there, checked the call, and frowned when he found that it was not from someone that he could just ignore. So he took a deep breath and smiled just like usual before accepting the call.

"…Uhh, it's still Nergo, right? Or have you changed your name again?"

"I've given my name for the great cause, so it's not something that I can do lightly numerous times."

"I see. So, you're still Nergo right now, huh? What is it then?"

Yanagisawa sounded pretty casual, but in contrast to that, Nergo replied back with a rather serious tone.

"Do you know anything about a young Hunter in Drankam by the name of Katsuya?"

Yanagisawa glanced at Katsuya's information and faked ignorance.

"Katsuya?? Hmmm, ahh, uhhh, it's that guy, right? That young Hunter from Drankam who has been doing pretty well lately, right? I heard that he even caused Drankam to break into factions. It's that one, right?"

"Yeah. There's something that I need to confirm about Katsuya to my other brothers. Or more like, I need their permission."

"Permission? For what?"

"I want to secure him."

Yanagisawa was surprised, he did not expect that from Nergo at all. But he replied with a light joke.

"Ahh, well, of course, I'll help you out, but I'm still a part of the City Management staff, you see. If you ask me if it's okay to kidnap one of our Hunters, I have no other choice but to say no. Or more like, in the first place, why would you bring that up to me?"

"We want to maintain a good relationship with you."

"What do you mean?"

"There's a possibility that Katsuya might be someone that we're looking for. I know you're looking for one too, right? Someone who could connect to the old-world domain from the Kuzusuhara ruin."

Yanagisawa's smile vanished. Nergo did not notice it at all as he casually stated.

"Katsuya can connect to the old-world domain."

"…Ohh!"

Yanagisawa's smile returned back. But this time, it was not a fake smile, he was really jovial after hearing that statement.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 168, Restarting Hunter Activities

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Shizuka was waiting at her shop just like usual when she spotted Akira. As she was about to call him, she stopped when she realized that he was acting weird.

Akira looked a bit scared as he carefully entered the shop, he looked around as if he was searching for someone. After he confirmed that the person he was looking for was not there, he sighed in relief but with a rather conflicted face.

“Welcome!”

Shizuka smiled and welcomed him, Akira twitched and awkwardly smiled back. Shizuka found it weird, but for now, she was relieved to see his smile. Akira no longer gave off that tense mood which he exuded when he was talking to Elena and Sara last time.

Even after Akira came to the counter, he seemed to be wanting to say something but hesitating to do so. Shizuka was curious about that, but for now, she decided to just smile and gave her usual business-like service.

“So, what do you need today? Though I feel like it’s rather too soon for you to come here for ammo, after all, it hasn’t been that long since the last time you came. Ah, or is it that you’re here just for a chit-chat? If that’s the case, I don’t mind at all, you know.”

“Ah, no, uhh, I’m here for ammo.”

“Is that so? I thought you bought enough ammo the last time you came here for your new equipment. Did you go on a monster curbing request to get yourself familiar with your new augmented suit or something and used a lot of your ammo there?”

“Eh, ah, well, uhhh, things happened, you see.”

“Is that so? Then, is the usual okay?”

“No, uhh, I might need other things too…”

Akira sounded a little bit scared as he placed his order. Shizuka was listening to him calmly, but inside, she was actually pretty surprised. She did not think that he would need a new repair cartridge for his augmented suit, a replacement for the anti-forcefield armour-piercing bullet that he bought as a lucky charm, and bullets plus energy cartridge enough for a normal battle this quickly.

Shizuka slightly frowned and said.

“I’m sorry but I can’t give you the repair cartridge right away. That thing is pretty expensive after all, so I don’t have that ready in my shop. But if you need it immediately, I’ll place an express order for that…”

Akira shook his head flusteredly.

“Ah, it’s fine! I don’t need it that badly. I just thought that I need to buy some while I have the money and the chance while I still remember it.”

“Okay then. In that case, I’ll put a normal order for the repair cartridge. You can get the rest just fine. You’re buying quite a lot this time, so if you’re here with your vehicle, can you bring it to the back of the shop?”

Shizuka smiled and said so, to which Akira flusteredly replied.

“Ah, uhmm, uhh… Alright.”

Akira slightly slumped as if he had given up and went out to bring his vehicle to the back of the shop.

Akira was loading ammo and other stuff into his vehicle. Shizuka who was looking at him then casually asked him.

“Say, Akira, that vehicle is a rental vehicle, right? How about the one that you got from me? Did you send it for repair or something?”

Akira stopped, he avoided looking straight at Shizuka as he replied.

“No, actually, uhhh… I’m sorry, I no longer can use that one…”

“What do you mean by that…?”

“Uhhh, things happened.”

Akira was not lying, the vehicle that he bought from Shizuka was no longer available for him to use. But that already happened a few battles ago, to be more precise, that vehicle was broken when Akira fought that bounty monster. He was thinking of buying a similar vehicle sometime soon or buying a better one so he could use that as an excuse to replace the vehicle that he received from Shizuka, but before that happened, even his new vehicle got wrecked right afterwards, taking away all the ammo and medicine that he had in that vehicle with it. That was why he was buying new supplies today.

Judging from Akira’s reaction, Shizuka thought that he looked like a small boy who was scared of telling the truth. And when she made a guess as to the reason why, she said to Akira as if to calm him down.

“Say Akira, about last time. Do you hate Elena and Sara now after what happened? If that’s the case, I won’t force you to reconcile with them, but I hope you would understand Elena and Sara did not do that because of any ill-will. They were just worried about you, though you might not like it.”

Akira thought that he would get scolded for losing his vehicle. That was why he was slightly surprised when Shizuka brought that up, he then flusteredly shook his head and said.

“Not at all. To be honest, I’m actually a bit worried that Sara-san and Elena-san hate me now since I thought I did something rather rude when they only tried to stop me since they’re worried about me. And it’s as they said, it really was not worth the trouble… I might have really gotten a bit too emotional back then. I know I can be a bit stubborn sometimes, though it may be too late to say that now…”

Akira looked a bit down and seemed to feel bad for what he did. Shizuka who saw that smiled at him to cheer him up.

“I don’t know what happened for you to lose your vehicle, but I’m glad that you’re fine. Are you injured?”

“Ah, not at all, I’m alright.”

“Then that’s all that matters. Make sure to take care of your body. I’ll at least tell Elena and Sara that you’re not that bothered by last time too. You did look a bit scared coming in after all, so I bet you feel awkward coming to my shop now.”

Shizuka smiled bitterly as she said so, Akira replied back also with a bitter smile.

“I’m sorry and thank you.”

“Don’t mention it, I’ll make sure to let them know. Don’t worry, it’s not like they are angry at you. So it’ll be fine.”

Akira looked obviously relieved there. Seeing that, Shizuka happily smiled and said.

“But still, I’m really glad that your friendship with Elena and Sara didn’t break up. If you guys are on bad terms, it would be awkward for both of you to come to this shop and it would hurt my revenue.”

Shizuka smiled when she said that, so Akira smiled back at her.

After Akira loaded all his new ammo and other supplies into his vehicle, he then went straight back home. Shizuka saw him off with a smile, when Akira was no longer in her view, her smile slightly turned cloudy.

“Wasn’t worth the trouble, huh…”

Shizuka noticed that Akira had killed Alna.

Akira sounded a bit regretful when he said that it was not worth the trouble. Shizuka bet that it must be the reason why Akira lost his vehicle and came there today to buy supplies. Elena and Sara did try to stop him and Shizuka herself also had told him to put a serious thought about it first, but even so, he still went and killed that pickpocket. Judging from his reaction last time, Shizuka thought that it was unlikely for them to find a peaceful solution to that matter. This time, he had regained his calm to the point that he could say he might have gotten a bit stubborn back then. Which made it likely that he had regained his calm after killing that pickpocket.

If that was really the case, that would explain why Akira looked a bit scared when he entered the shop. He ignored the warnings from the people close to him and went to kill that pickpocket, so it must be awkward for him to meet them now. Or at least, that was what Shizuka’s intuition was telling her.

From that guess, Shizuka then thought. Although she did not feel any sympathy for the pickpocket that Akira killed, she felt sad for Akira, who killed that pickpocket. Akira had become strong enough to buy 400 million Aurum equipment, and even after acquiring that much power, the possible danger and loss from killing that pickpocket could not stop him from doing so.

Power would normally provide leeway and tolerance. But the power that Akira had gained was not enough to provide him with enough leeway and tolerance to let matters with pickpocket go. Akira’s mind was still stuck as if he was still living in the slum.

Shizuka felt sad when she thought how much strength Akira needed to be able to just laugh it off when something like that happened, and how many times he had been reminded of his weakness to the point that he unconsciously craved for more power.

“…I guess, for now, I need to let Sara and Elena know as soon as possible, huh.”

Moping would not change anything. In order to move on from that matter for her own sake as well as Elena’s and Sara’s, Shizuka decided that she should let Sara and Elena know with a smile that their last conversation with Akira was nothing to worry about. Shizuka thought so as she went back to her shop with a light smile.

__*__*__*__

Yatsubayashi had both an experiment room and a treatment room in his clinic. He treated people who came to his clinic either in the experiment room or in the other room depending on how much money those people could pay him. And since his clinic was in the slum, most of the people who came there got sent to the experiment room.

There was also another room in his clinic, it was a special room where people could not just casually come in. It was a room neither for experiment nor for treatment. Inside that big room, there were all kinds of mysterious devices lined up. In the middle of that room, there was a bed, and Tiol was sitting on that bed.

Tiol was only looking forward with an empty stare as if he was daydreaming. Although his hand and legs were secured with some thick steel, he did not seem to be bothered by that at all. He was just sitting there with an absent mind.

There was no window in that room. The walls were sound-proof, so no sound could come in, and since Tiol was only sitting there in silence, the room was incredibly silent. In that isolated room, Tiol suddenly looked at the door. That was when the door opened and Yatsubayashi came in.

“I’m here with your food.”

When Yatsubayashi came inside that room with the food, Tiol had already returned back to looking forward with an empty look.

Yatsubayashi sat in front of Tiol and used the metallic fork to feed Tiol. When he did that, Tiol opened his mouth and chomped the food down, together with the metallic fork.

Yatsubayashi looked at the fork that had lost its head and mumbled.

“I guess this means that it’s another failure, huh.”

When Yatsubayashi extended the fork that had lost its head back to Tiol, he started to eat that fork too. After that, he also ate the food that Yatsubayashi brought in as well as the metallic plate that he had used to carry that food. Yatsubayashi carefully held the plate so as not to get his hand eaten too and quickly pulled his hand back when Tiol finished the plate too.

Once he was done eating, Tiol stared at Yatsubayashi. Though he was properly looking at Yatsubayashi, there was no emotion in his gaze, it was as if he was simply looking at something near him. Even when Yatsubayashi wiped Tiol’s mouth, Tiol showed no reaction at all.

Yatsubayashi frowned and looked rather disappointed.

“Well, this is another failure for sure. I was sure that it would be a success though. His wounds are perfectly healed and it doesn’t seem like there are any bad physical side effects. But I guess the drug affected his brain, huh? I guess it means I should recalculate everything starting from its effect on the brain. Or is it that I didn’t fully clear the nanomachines that it’s now affecting him? I have no answer at all, I guess I’ll keep observing him for now.”

Yatsubayashi sighed. He then stood up and went towards the door. Before he reached for the door’s handle, he looked back at Tiol.

“Tiol-kun, you were the one who told me that you don’t mind participating in my experiment as long as I healed you. I did my best there, so don’t blame me, okay? See you tomorrow then.”

Yatsubayashi only said so and left the room with a smile. The patient beds in his clinic were filled with patients after all the ruckus yesterday. He could not just ignore them for the sake of collecting money for his own experiment, so he was busy that day. Because of that, he could not spend his time observing Tiol.

Tiol was once again left alone inside the room. The room had returned to the previous silence, Tiol once again was only looking forward with an empty gaze without saying anything. He suddenly looked at the cuffs on his hands, opened his mouth wide, and bit off those cuffs.

__*__*__*__

Tomejima was ripping his hairs out, of course figuratively, in his office in the lower district. That was when Colbert came in, Tomejima immediately looked at him and said.

“How was it?!”

Colbert looked at Tomejima’s desperate face and lightly shook his head.

“I did some investigation, but nothing comes out. I couldn’t find them nor reach them. They might as well be already dead.”

“Dammit, again, huh!!

Tomejima hung his head down again, there was slight desperation mixed in his extremely distressed face.

“Calm down, is it really that bad?”

“It’s already 10 people, you know? We basically lost 10 credits worth of people!! Just how much money do you think we’re losing right now?!”

Colbert received a job from Tomejima to collect some debts. His targets were Hunters and some ex-Hunters. Since people like them tend to cause trouble, Tomejima asked Colbert, who was also a Hunter, to collect their debts.

But those people went missing now. Although to be more precise, Tomejima and Colbert had a good guess of where they went to. They most probably got killed in that battle between the Ezont family and Haurias the other day. Their bodies might as well be mixed in one of those countless dead bodies scattered in Ezont Family's base.

Colbert lightly summed all the debts that those people had and frowned.

"Their debts don't even reach 1 billion though. You don't usually take in this kind of credits, you know."

"I really need money right now, no matter how small it is…"

"Hmm? I don't remember your company was in such a bad situation though."

Tomejima's face twitched.

"…I placed some bet in that battle, you know."

"Well, that's rather unfortunate then."

Colbert understood the reason why Tomejima looked pretty down as he smiled wryly at him.

Ezont Family and Haurias squeezed a lot of money from the businesses under their leadership to fuel their fight, they also took a big loan from credit companies like Tomejima's company promising that they would return that money with interest once they won their fight. They also promised other benefits once they took full control of the lower district after crushing the other side. That was how they half-threatened those companies to lend them money.

Indeed it would bring those companies a lot of money if either Ezont Family or Haurias won the conflict between them. But with both sides almost equally strong, it was hard to predict which one would win. Not to mention, if they did not lend their money to the group that would win later, it would cause those companies a lot of trouble down the road, so they had no other choice but to place their bets in one of them. That was the kind of betting that they were doing.

Because of that, some of the companies refused to place their bet. They chose to lend a small amount of money to both sides, although they would lose some of their money when the fight ended, they could at least keep a good relationship with whichever side won that fight. Many companies took this approach, and Tomejima was one of them.

Some of the people who decided to put their money on both sides had some connections with Viola. They were told by Viola to keep lending money to both sides to make sure that the conflict would turn into a large-scale battle. Thanks to that, both Haurias and Ezont Family were able to put out a lot of powered suits during that battle. As Viola predicted, with that much money put in to fuel that battle, it indeed turned into a large-scale battle.

Because of that, both gangs sustained heavy losses to the point that they might as well be already over. So, those who put their money on both sides lost a lot of money from that result. It could be said that they were also victims of Viola’s doing.

Colbert lightly cheered Tomejima up.

“Alright alright, it would also cause me trouble if your company goes bankrupt. I’ll go and look for them again. But don’t expect too much, okay? If we’re lucky, we might at least find their dead bodies.”

“Yeah, I’ll be counting on you. And also, take anything that you can.”

“Just to let you know though, it won’t be free, alright?”

“It depends on your result.”

Tomejima still had his head down as he lightly waved at Colbert. Colbert smiled wryly and left the room.

__*__*__*__

Sheryl was sitting in one of the rooms in her gang, Viola was sitting in front of her. Although she was smiling, Sheryl looked slightly annoyed since she had no good impression of the person in front of her. Viola was slightly amused by it as she just smiled back and ignored it.

“It’s good to know that you’re doing well, so how’s your wound?”

“I already got it treated, so it’s no problem at all.”

“I see. Well then, we’ll be in your care from now on.”

“Likewise, I’ll also be in your care, boss.”

Just like she had promised Akira, Viola came there to help out Sheryl’s gang. Although she was basically taking command of the gang, she decided to work under Sheryl. That was why she called Sheryl boss.

Although it was only on the surface, with this, Sheryl had both Akira who was a dangerous and volatile person and Viola who was a very bad person under her thumb. Such a rumour had already spread around which caused all the gangs around Sheryl’s gang to focus on her gang. But of course, Viola was the one who spread that rumour.

Sheryl looked at Viola with a stern gaze.

“Let me warn you here though, Akira asked me to keep my eyes on you. He even told me that I’m allowed to kill you if I want to. And even if it’s impossible for me, he told me to give him a reason to kill you and he would do it himself. So make sure not to try anything funny.”

Sheryl stated clearly that she could easily decide Viola’s life or death, she also did that for the sake of venting her anger at Viola. If Viola looked a bit flustered after that, it would help Sheryl feel better. But that did not happen.

“You can just drop the honorific. We’re going to work together for a long time after all, so just forget the honorifics.”

Viola smiled casually and said so. She then pushed a book-like object towards Sheryl.

“What is this?”

“My job is to help this gang. So this is where I start. It’s a list of your current resources and debts.”

Sheryl confusedly took the book and started reading it.

“I could have sent you the data that you can read with an information terminal, but I thought that you might get a better grasp of it if it’s given in the form of papers like this. And don’t worry, I’ll also send you the data later.”

As Sheryl started to read and understand the contents of that book, her face started turning pale.

“You might think that’s pretty bad, but that’s already based on a pretty naive calculation, you know? After all, there’s no interest and no deadline to pay it back. If you show it to one of those credit companies out there, I’m sure they’ll laugh at you.”

The book contained a detailed list of reward money that Sheryl’s gang should pay Akira for supporting her gang, guarding her shop, training Erio and the other children, saving Sheryl, and there were still a lot more favours that the gang had received from Akira. It showed how much Sheryl’s gang owed Akira in simple terms of money. If they were to interpret it in a bad way, it could be said that the gang was in deep debt to Akira.

“I know that people used to say there’s nothing more expensive than free stuff, but unfortunately, a lot of people out there misunderstand how much they owe other people because of that. So I translated that to money to remind you how much you owe Akira. I’m sure there are a lot of people in the gang who don’t fully understand this, ah, but of course, that’s not the case for you, right? I’m talking about other children here.”

Sheryl did her best to show a calm face as she mumbled the total number with a slightly trembling voice.

“… 3 billion and 800 million Aurum, huh?”

The biggest debt came from when Akira rescued Sheryl the other day. It cost Sheryl 1 billion Aurum. Sheryl did not have enough information there to decide whether that number was properly calculated or not.

“If you have any doubt, you can go ahead and tell me. I’ll immediately clarify it.”

Viola smiled casually, in contrast to that, Sheryl was barely able to smile back while glaring at her. Even if she found some records not properly calculated, telling Viola to lower the number also meant placing less value on Akira. Sheryl could not afford to do that and she understood well that Viola also knew the same when she provoked her.

“Ahh, by the way, I’ve sent that data to Akira. I’ll also send the new data to him if we want to make any revision, so don’t worry about that.”

Sheryl looked surprised for a split second. But her welling up anger caused her face to stiffen. Her hand clasped into a fist as she gritted her teeth.

Although Sheryl said that she had the say whether Viola would live or not, with that exchange just now, it was all meaningless. Viola was there to help Sheryl’s gang because of the deal that she had with Akira. Her job there was to help Akira get more benefits from all the investments that he put on Sheryl’s gang.

So basically, in order for Sheryl to be able to kill Viola, she had to come up with a reason that exceeded the profit that Viola was giving Akira. If she asked Akira to kill Viola, it could even be interpreted as asking him to just throw away 3.8 billion Aurum down the drain. Sheryl did not want to even imagine how Akira would react if she said that.

Sheryl smiled coldly. She could not hide her anger, so her expression was calm and cold.

“…I see.”

Sheryl noticed the change in herself due to her anger. Her anger that was blazing as if it was about to explode was replaced with extremely cold rage.

She then politely bowed to Viola.

“I know I’m lacking in a lot of aspects in terms of managing a gang. But I’ll give my best, I’ll be in your care.”

Sheryl smiled coldly there, she made her resolve that she would learn everything so that she would no longer need Viola.

“Of course, let’s both give our best together from here and on.”

Viola smiled ominously. It was as if she was saying that Sheryl would not be able to do that, and that was conveyed just fine to Sheryl.

Sheryl and Viola continued talking in that room, not too far from that room, Carol was talking with the other children while waiting for Viola. Carol had the beauty that would attract people, a figure that pronounced her beauty even more, and an augmented suit that was obviously designed to attract the member of the opposite sex. With all of these 3 factors together, she was attracting a lot of attention in the gang.

Carol smiled invitingly to the young boys there who were more or less of the same age as Akira and confirmed that Akira indeed was a special case. She was collecting information about Akira there and noticed that most of the young boys would focus on the cleavage visible from the big opening of her augmented suit, she then thought that it would have been great if Akira was that simple too.

Since Carol had a beauty that could only be found in mature women, no other girls in the gang could match her. Thanks to that, it really attracted the attention of the boys inside the gang. Even Erio could not fight back the gravity of Carol's rack forever as his gaze wandered to Carol's chest, but the moment he noticed that Alicia was looking at him, he could not help but to get flustered as he tried his best to apologize to Alicia.

Carol was using the boys in Sheryl's gang to confirm her seducing ability, she then noticed Colbert coming into the room where she was.

Colbert also immediately noticed Carol and frowned.

"Geez, that's rather cold of you to look at me like that."

"You don't even know about your bad reputation, huh?"

"Bad reputation? Just so you know, a lot of my customers give me a good review, alright?"

"I know that you often get along with that Viola and that in itself is enough to be bad news. I won't say anything bad to you or anything. But just to warn you, you should refrain from messing with this gang, it'll only win you a straight ticket to the after-life, you know."

"Oh my, I won't do something like that, right?"

Between Colbert's warning and Carol's seduction, most of the boys there took Carol's side. Carol smiled and Colbert sighed in exasperation.

"So then, Colbert, why are you here?"

"I have a small request to ask of Sheryl's gang… Well, basically it has something to do with Viola."

Colbert knew that Akira was behind Sheryl's gang. Although he did not want to get involved with Akira if it could be helped, he still came there to ask Sheryl's gang to do a job for him. It was simply because Viola told him to do so.

Although Colbert was wary of Viola, he could not afford to just cut his ties with her. Carol understood that was just how bad her friend was as she smiled amusedly.

__*__*__*__

Akira was riding his bike through the wasteland. He was heading to Kuzusuhara ruin. He finally restarted his Hunter activity after he finished all of his preparations.

The bike was not a rental bike. Although Kuzusuhara ruin was not an undiscovered ruin, it would be dangerous for him to go there with a rental bike since it would leave a record of his route in the rental bike.

Akira bought that bike since Alpha suggested him to. It was a pretty big bike designed for Hunters. It had two arms attached to its back that were connected to the bike's control device. Akira equipped those arms with his DVTS minigun and A4WM automatic grenade launcher. Its body armour was made of the same force field armour as his coat and it was controlled by the bike's control device too. Just like usual, Alpha had full control of that control device.

Akira happily rode his new bike while pacing it through the wasteland, but a question suddenly came up in his mind.

"Alpha, though it might be way too late for me to ask this, was it really important for me to spend that much money on this bike?"

"Yup. So stop questioning it already, okay? There are many places in the inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin where you can't take your vehicle, you know. So it's better to go there by bike although it's indeed a rather expensive bike for your current budget."

Akira exhausted almost all of his money to buy that bike. He even had to use his emergency savings for that too. Thanks to that, forget his augmented suit repair cartridge, he might not even be able to pay his next month's rent. He did hesitate at first, but since Alpha said that it would be dangerous to go with his vehicle, he ended up buying that bike.

"The last time I had this little money was at that time when I went to look for relics to be able to pay for the next day's room rent, huh? I need to make sure to go back home with relics this time. It'll be alright, right?"

Akira glanced at Alpha who was floating next to the running bike. She smiled confidently and said.

“Of course, just leave it to me.”

Akira lightly smiled. At the moment, he had no other option but to trust that confident smile from Alpha.

“Alright, well, I did say that I would trust you with that matter anyway.”

“Yup, that’s right!”

Akira and Alpha lightly smiled at each other as Akira went straight to Kuzusuhara ruin.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 169, Tsubaki

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After Akira arrived near Kuzusuhara ruin, he followed Alpha's instruction to take a particular route. He paced his bike around the outskirts of the ruin as if to circle the whole ruin.

"Alpha, why are we not going into the ruin?"

"If we go into the ruin, we'll have to go near the temporary front base. It's not like we can use that wide road made for sending supplies into the deeper part of the ruin."

"But isn't it easier if we just go through that road? Since it's a properly built road."

Alpha's expression was saying 'you didn't get it, didn't you?' as she shook her head.

"If you go through there, it'll definitely gather a lot of attention, you know? A young and not-so-strong-looking Hunter going back home with a lot of expensive relics. A rumour like that would definitely spread around if we do that."

Akira slightly frowned.

“I’m no longer the old me. After all, my current equipment cost me 500 million Aurum, so are they really going to still look at me as a young weak Hunter?”

“Indeed the current you have way better equipment compared to the past you, but judging from the relative danger of the places that you’re frequenting, you still look like a young boy coming into dangerous places that don’t suit your current skill. Of course, if you say that you can fight those big monsters guarding old-world facilities without my help, that would change my mind.”

Alpha said so with a challenging smile, Akira lightly frowned.

“…That would be a no.”

Akira looked a bit depressed, Alpha smiled at him as if to cheer him up while also approving of his reply. He smiled bitterly in reaction to that as he paced his bike faster. Not too long after that, once he had put enough distance between him and the temporary front base, Akira went into the ruin.

The ruin was filled with half-destroyed buildings, of course, most of the roads there were not maintained. It was not rare to find some of them semi-blocked or even fully closed by rubbles. There were only limited roads that Hunters could pass through, and that was if they were bringing vehicles designed for the harsh condition of the wasteland.

Akira was able to navigate through those difficult roads relatively fast thanks to the expensive bike that he bought and Alpha’s advanced calculation ability. Though its wheels bounced a few times against the hard rubble, its body was mostly undamaged.

Akira saw a huge pile of rubble blocking his way to the direction that Alpha was instructing him to go, so he was going to take a detour around it. But Alpha controlled Akira’s augmented suit and prevented him from doing that.

“Alpha? The way forward is blocked, you know?”

“It’s fine.”

“It’s fine…?”

Alpha took control of the bike and accelerated right into that pile of rubble. Akira was slightly thrown off-balance by the sudden acceleration but he flusteredly returned to his posture.

“It would take too much time evading all the blocking rubbles. Since you got yourself an expensive bike, let’s make the best use of it.”

“Wait for a sec!? There’s no way we can just charge through that pile of rubble!!”

The pile blocking Akira’s way forward was at least 8 metres high. Its slope was sharp enough to make it unscalable. As Akira was still flustered, his bike did not stop accelerating. At this rate, if he kept going forward, he would collide right into the rubble, and with that speed, not only his bike, it might as well danger his life too. But Alpha ignored him and kept on accelerating the bike.

Akira, who felt that his life was in danger, unconsciously used time compression. The scene in front of him slid past him at a slower pace, then suddenly, the direction of the sliding scenery in front of him changed. Alpha changed the direction of the bike, at the same time, she used small rubble on the ground to propel the bike to the sky and to the big building to its right. Akira was so surprised as he was lifted off the ground together with his bike.

Alpha forcefully readjusted the bike’s posture in the middle of the air. It then landed on the side of the big building without losing balance at all. Thanks to the bike’s exceptional shock absorption device, its tires were able to land on the building’s wall just fine.

Alpha was still in control of the bike as she paced the bike across the building’s wall, Akira was so surprised that he was barely able to do anything there. It went up until it was higher than the rubble blocking the way before it once again changed direction, went straight across the building wall while maintaining its height, and past the rubble blocking his way before heading down to the ground.

As Akira frowned seeing the ground coming closer and closer to his face, the bike bounced again and left the wall. It then readjusted its posture in midair again and landed its two wheels safely on the ground. Once again, thanks to its exceptional shock-absorption system, it was able to land on the ground barely sending any shock to Akira's body.

The bike then just went straight without slowing down. It took some time before Akira returned back to reality and looked at Alpha's confident smile.

"Aren't you glad that you got yourself a bike instead of a vehicle? After all, it would be hard to get past that rubble with a vehicle."

"…You have a point there."

Akira smiled bitterly. All the complaints that he had in his mind were erased. After all, he did not have to take a detour around that pile of rubble and was already used to doing reckless things like that. And more than anything, he actually pretty much enjoyed that.

"Want to try doing that yourself on our way back?"

"Thanks for the offer, but no. If I do that myself, I feel like I would crash into the wall instead."

"Well, that's kind of true. But it would be really convenient once you can do it yourself, you know? Should I train you to do that?"

"If it's really something that I need to learn in order to finish that request of yours, then sure… Or is that there are places that I can't go to unless I learn that trick?"

"That's a secret for now."

"I-I see."

Akira felt a bit scared that Alpha did not say no. But since she offered to train him to do that, it meant that it was possible for him to learn that manoeuvre. And when he imagined himself doing that trick on his own, he could not help but get a bit excited.

After that, Akira kept going deeper into the ruin following Alpha's instruction. He was able to go through small roads that would have been hard to go through with a vehicle thanks to his high-performance bike. Because he was able to force his way through rubbles that he would have usually gone around, he was able to arrive at the inner part of the ruin relatively quicker.

Once Akira arrived in the inner part of the ruin, he stopped his bike and looked at the scenery. Once he scanned the area around him, he then made a serious face and said.

"Alpha, this place…"

"This is the inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin. Although it's not the deepest part yet, at least we're no longer in the outer part of the ruin."

Akira could see the place where he had given up the first time he came to that ruin. The ground was properly paved, there was no crack at all. He could not find any crumbling buildings either. It was a completely different scenery compared to the outer side of the ruin where it was filled with half-destroyed buildings.

He felt a bit intimidated by the scene in front of him. The area was completely silent as if it was shrouded in a thick colourless mist, but his vision was not blurry at all. He could see clearly the scenery in front of him which should have been blurred if there was a colourless mist.

Akira looked over the city in front of him and felt something was weird about it as if it was devoid of any sign of people. Compared to the outer part of the ruin where there was still some leftover of human civilization, the inner part of the ruin felt so unnaturally empty.

“Alpha, is it really okay for us to just go straight deeper into the ruin like this? This is one of those, right? The areas that are still properly maintained by the old-world drones, right?”

“Yep, that’s exactly why it’s very clean.”

“So in short, those security drones are also roaming around this place, right? It’s not like I would get shot the moment I enter the city, right?”

“Well, regarding that, it would be fine if you just follow my instructions. That’s why, make sure not to ignore my instruction like before, okay?”

Alpha had a rather deep sarcastic smile when she said that. Akira remembered the time when he got attacked by a huge monster when he ignored Alpha’s instruction and smiled bitterly.

“Roger that, let’s go then.”

Akira once again paced his bike forward and went straight into the city that gave off an unsettling feeling.

An old-world city that still maintained its condition. Normally, anyone would get killed the moment they stepped into that city. But that did not happen. The thing besides Akira was preventing that from happening, Alpha had the ability to prevent that from happening.

As he thought that it must be because Alpha was doing something there, it helped him from being overly cautious.

It was true that it was thanks to Alpha. But in reality, it was completely different from what he guessed.

Akira looked around with full interest. The area around him was properly maintained, it was as if he was brought back to the old-world era. But with no human presence anywhere, it was unsettlingly calm and silent.

The road was wide and nothing was blocking the road, though there were also no other vehicles or bikes other than Akira’s bike. But even so, he followed Alpha's instruction not to pace his bike too fast. Compared to when he was outside the city, he was going rather slowly.

"Alpha, why do we have to go this slowly?"

"We're making sure not to go past the speed limit of this road, you see."

"Speed limit? Does that kind of thing exist in the old-world ruin?"

"Yup, so we have to properly obey it."

Alpha was speaking as if to calm down a small boy, Akira seemed to be not fully convinced by that.

"…There's no one else other than me here though, do I still need to obey the speed limit?"

"That's just how law and rule work, you see."

"Is that so? I see then."

Akira hummed, seeing that, Alpha smiled bitterly at him and said.

"If you can't accept it no matter what, just simply keep in mind that the security drones will swarm you if you break the rule. And if you force your way through them, they'll call even bigger and stronger security robots to stop you. And even if you can deal with them too, you'll have to fight those big humanoid soldiers that the Kugamayama defence squad fought in Mihazono ruin the other day. You don't want to do that, do you?"

"Yeah."

Akira nodded firmly while making an annoyed face. Although it was able to fully convince him, another question came up in his mind.

"I just thought of something though. Those mechanical monsters guarding the old-world facilities usually have that camouflaging device, right? So it's not like they are actually hiding somewhere nearby, right? After all, it's impossible to see through old-world camouflaging with naked eyes, right?

And it’s hard to detect them even with an information-gathering device. So like, are we really going to be alright?”

Alpha smiled at the worried Akira as if to calm him down.

“Don’t worry, it would be alright.”

“Is that so? Then I guess they’re not around, huh.”

Akira smiled and sighed in relief. After all, when he thought that those monsters might actually be around him and that it was just he could not see them, that in itself was scary enough. But Alpha then smiled and said.

“As long as you keep following my instructions, there won’t be any trouble.”

Akira’s face stiffened.

“…They’re not here, right?”

Alpha gave off a rather ominous smile.

“It’s not a problem.”

“Wait, they are here?”

“It would be fine.”

Akira kept telling himself that Alpha was only teasing him in order to calm his nerves.

The area that Akira was in looked like a downtown district in broad daylight except for the missing human presence, it was completely silent and filled with an abnormal atmosphere as if all the humans there suddenly vanished in one snap. But from the point of view of a Hunter, it looked like a treasure trove filled with valuable old-world relics. It could even be said that it was a mountain of relics. Every time Akira passed a building that looked like a shop, he could not help but peek inside, imagining all the valuable old-world relics that he might find inside them.

Akira thought that sooner or later, he would go inside one of those buildings, but Alpha did not show any sign of that at all as she kept pacing the bike forward. So Akira could not help but get curious and asked her.

“Alpha, I feel like we’ve been going around the same area multiple times now, are we looking for a building with expensive relics or something?”

“Well, to put it simply, yup, that’s indeed the case.”

“I see. Well, I’ll leave that to you, but like, can we stop and take a look at one of those shops? I feel like we can get expensive relics no matter which one we go to though…”

“Nope.”

“Why?”

Alpha replied casually.

“It’s not like you have any money to buy anything there, right?”

“…Buy? No, I mean like, wait, buy…?”

Akira was confused, he did not expect Alpha to say that. What he had in mind when he asked Alpha that question was to break into one of those shops, fill his rucksack with any expensive relics that he could find, and escape the building while fighting back the security drones before finally getting away from that place on his bike. He did not expect to have to pay anything with his money.

“I understand what you want to say, but that would be too dangerous. The only way to get out from this place with those relics is to bring along the city defence squad, render the security drones temporarily disabled, and get out from this place while they are still disabled. And of course, the ensuing battle would leave this place half-destroyed. You need enough firepower to turn this place like the outskirts of this ruin. Have you forgotten the reason why we have to obey the speed limit?”

Akira frowned slightly.

“Well, you have a point there, but if I can’t do that, then why are we here? It’s not like I came here risking my life just for sightseeing, you know. My only choice would be to look for a place with relatively weak security to break in, right? Isn’t that why we’re just roaming around the area?”

“That line of thinking is not wrong, but it’s better to break into a place where it’s unlikely to turn into a fight, right? Just leave that to me, you did say that you’re leaving that kind of thing to me too, remember?”

Alpha smiled and sent a rather strong gaze than usual to Akira. Akira who noticed that decided to stop saying anything unnecessary.

“…Alright. Although I don’t know what’s your plan here, I can’t afford to go back without anything. So I expect to get some relics to bring back, okay?”

“Of course, just leave it to me. You just need to make sure to follow my instructions. Don’t just go ahead and shoot even if you spot a mechanical monster, okay?”

“Wait, so they’re actually really here, huh!?”

“They won’t cause you any trouble as long as you follow my instructions.”

Akira frowned. His expression was a mix of worry and expectation, but Alpha only smiled back at him with her usual smile.

Even after that, they were still only driving around the area for some time. Akira then noticed something strange in front of him and squinted his eyes. He could see a tall building in front of him, and there was a vertical road on the side of that building.

When Akira thought that the old-world ruin was indeed a place filled with strange things, his bike suddenly accelerated. Akira raised his eyebrows in surprise.

“…Alpha, wait, are we going to climb the side of a building again? I don’t think we can do it for that road though?!”

“Don’t worry. Not to mention, you ran down on the side of a building not too long ago, remember? We’ll do that again but with a bike this time.”

The bike accelerated even more. It then went to the curved part of the road that was connecting the road on the ground and the side of that building and went straight up scaling the side of that building.

Akira looked down past his feet and into the wall of the building and frowned. He already climbed pretty high up and his bike also started slowing down, if he fell down now, it would be simply disastrous.

“Is it that the old-world roads even have a feature that allows people to drive vertically?”

“Not in this road here, this one is basically just a simple wall.”

“Just a wall!? And I’m scaling a normal wall?!”

As Akira was dumbfounded, the bike slowed down even more. At this rate, he would be falling down with his bike. As he thought so, he immediately grabbed his bike’s handlebar and raised its power. But the bike kept slowing down, and once it reached a certain speed, it stopped slowing down and continued climbing at a constant speed.

Alpha smiled amusedly at Akira who was still in a panic.

“Although the wall doesn’t have that feature, the bike has the feature to prevent you from falling over. Or to be more precise, it has the feature to stick its wheels on the surface that it’s running in order to prevent losing control of the bike when you’re driving through uneven ground. Since its wheels are sticking on the surface, you won’t fall that easily. Compared to the last time you were running on a building’s wall, this time it’s way safer, isn’t it?”

Akira sighed in relief, but he immediately pouted soon after.

“…Didn’t I always tell you to at least let me know before doing something like this?!”

“Just think of it as a training for you to keep calm at a time of emergency or when facing an unexpected turn of events.”

Alpha said so while smiling. Her expression then suddenly turned rather serious as she pointed her finger.

“Let me warn you about one thing. Don’t shoot at it and don’t show any hostility.”

Akira looked at Alpha’s expression and frowned. He then looked forward in the direction that she was pointing at and noticed that a portion of the towering side of the building was distorted. As he put up his guard, the distorted part of the building revealed a mechanical monster. That monster was disengaging its camouflaging device.

That gigantic mechanical monster had multiple legs with wheels equipped on the tip of its legs. It approached Akira and then started climbing the wall beside Akira. Its side camera revolved and was fixed at Akira. Other similar monsters appeared and did the same thing too.

Alpha lightly waved at that drone. The drone looked toward Alpha, who pointed her finger and an insignia appeared floating on the tip of her finger. All the drones there immediately focused their cameras on that insignia.

A few seconds afterwards, all of those drones looked away as if they just lost interest in Akira and Alpha. They then broke up into two groups, one group went up the building, while the rest went down the building. On their way, they reactivated their camouflaging device and vanished from Akira’s views.

Akira lightly sighed and lowered his guard. He then sent an annoyed look at Alpha.

“…As I thought, they’re actually there, huh.”

Alpha smiled amusedly.

“I didn’t say they were not. Moreover, just like I said, it’s not a problem as long as you follow my orders, right?”

Akira sighed once more before shifting his gaze forward.

He continued climbing the wall with his bike. The road eventually led to an entrance on the side of that wall.

After Akira went through another slope, his posture was back to normal and he felt slightly relieved. But he immediately spotted something that he did not expect and was astonished.

A girl in a black old-world dress was standing there. In contrast to Akira, she did not look surprised at all as if she had been waiting for him. She had a beautiful appearance but she looked at Akira with a business-like expressionless face. At least, she did not look welcoming at all.

She then spoke in a business-like tone to Akira, who had already stopped his bike.

“Welcome to the Tsubakihara building. I’m the manager of this building, Tsubaki.”

Akira looked at Tsubaki with a surprised face.

“Alpha, is that one of those projected hologram image thingies?”

“Nope, she has a real body. Though I don’t know if it’s an automaton or a remotely controlled humanoid robotic body.”

“Normally, automata are used for an external interface, but in my case, my personality is also downloaded over to this body to allow me to be seen through local connection too. So normally, you should be able to recognize me through your information-gathering device too, but since your information-gathering device has been completely rewritten, I came with this body just to be safe.”

Tsubaki was obviously looking at Alpha. Akira was surprised by that as he looked at Alpha and Tsubaki alternately.

“Alpha, not only she can see you, she can even talk to you too, huh?!”

“But she can’t hear telepathic communication between you and me, though that doesn’t seem to be the case for the telepathic communication from me to you. She can see me through the network, but locally, she can only see you. But still, to think that she would come all the way here to welcome us, I wonder if she doesn’t have anything else better to do.”

Alpha somehow looked rather displeased. But Tsubaki did not seem to be bothered by that at all.

“It’s a precaution so that I won’t get even busier later. I’ll guide you in. Over here, please.”

Tsubaki turned around and went into the building. Akira was still a bit surprised as he just stood there.

“Akira, let’s go.”

“Eh? Ah, right.”

Akira returned back to himself after Alpha reminded him. He then slowly drove through a tunnel that went straight into the building with his bike.

Although Akira was not wearing anything on his head and the sunlight was far away from his reach, he was clearly able to see the interior of the building as if it was under broad daylight. There were multiple multi-legged security drones from before roaming on the walls and the ceilings of that building. Some of them were not moving as they were loading something, while some of them were moving around at a rather high speed. Just like the drones that Akira encountered on his way, all of them had already disengaged their camouflaging devices.

These drones went past Tsubaki who was guiding Akira and also went past Akira without doing anything. But even so, Akira could not help but feel nervous. These drones did not slow down at all as they passed next to him while carrying heavy materials, it was understandable for him to get scared there.

Not too long afterwards, Tsubaki stopped, turned around, and pointed at the wall on her right. There was a ginormous imposing-looking door. The door silently opened up. Behind that thick metallic door, was a room that looked like a warehouse.

“It’s over there. Please leave as soon as you’re done with your business here.”

Akira carefully looked left and right so as not to get crushed under the passing transport drones as he went into that room on his bike.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 170, Expired Articles

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Tsubaki guided Akira and Alpha into a room that looked like a warehouse. It was a pretty wide room with a tall ceiling. There were organized shelves lined inside and each of those shelves housed old-world relics.

Akira was a bit overwhelmed by the scene when he peeked from the entrance. A normal Hunter would go crazy in that situation, but for him, it took some time to process the scene in front of him. He was more troubled than happy.

Akira stepped off from his bike and just stood there, so Alpha smiled at him and told him to start working.

“Well, she did tell us to get out of here as soon as we finish, so let’s get this done fast.”

“Alpha, can you give me explanations of what is going on here?”

“I’ll explain it to you while you’re working. It would be bad if we don’t leave this place before that girl’s mood gets worse.”

“A-alright!”

Akira started his work. He took out a rucksack from his bike and pulled out more rucksacks from within the previous one.

“That girl is the manager AI of this Tsubakihara building. Although I said she’s the manager of this building, she’s also managing the area around this building. The well-maintained state of the area around this building is mostly thanks to her. Although it’s not like she did everything herself, you can just think of her as someone who is responsible for maintaining this area.”

There were all kinds of relics on the selves, it was impossible for Akira to carry all of them back home. So he was looking around the room to choose only the most expensive-looking relics.

“Remember that we were just driving around this area since we came to this city, right? It’s just as you guessed, I was looking for a building with not-too-strict security. I was planning to choose a building with a lowered security system due to the time deterioration to look for relics there. But unfortunately, in the end, I couldn’t find a good place at all.”

There were cases made of transparent-looking material that looked like glass or plastic. The height of the case itself was only about 4 centimeters. Inside it, there were spherical objects that seemed to be made of rubber or metal. While other cases had cubes, or triangles, or even powders inside them. Alpha said that they were basically some kind of old-world information terminals, so Akira prioritized those objects to stuff into his rucksacks.

“I did consider robbing a place with relatively lower security, but as I thought, it’s too dangerous. Although I don’t think they’ll use full force just to fight a single person, I have no idea how much force they would bring out. With that being said, it’s not like we can go back empty-handed, that’s why I made a change in the plan.”

There were also fabrics stored on some shelves. Some of them looked like working attires or some kind of uniforms, and of course, all of them had an old-world design. There were also other articles that looked like something that Akira could find in the current era's shops. All of those articles including the clothing were stuffed inside boxes.

"So then I made a deal with that girl to let us take the expired articles. In exchange for that, we have to leave this place as soon as we're done with it. Although I said it so casually, it's the result of a difficult negotiation. If the amount of information that we exchanged is written in words, it might take about 100 years. Being able to make that kind of deal is one of the great things about my support, you know? Of course, normally it would be impossible to do that without me. Remember when you tried to talk with the AI manager of the Seranthal building? That time, she did not even respond to you, right? That's what normally would happen without my support."

There was also some lady underwear among the clothing articles. Although he hesitated, since they fetched a relatively high price for the amount of fabric that they had, Akira told himself that it would be the perfect relics to bring back in that situation where he only had a limited amount of space to spare and decided to take them too.

"She came by herself to pick us up because I was able to get us that deal. She said that she would only let us in if we can reach this place by ourselves, but it was no problem at all thanks to your bike. Aren't you glad to have bought that bike?"

Akira also found some underwear for men, since he thought that he could use them later, he decided to take the whole box with him. After all, he kept changing between them quickly since they got soaked with blood in no time. Some of the underwear that he found were even made of strong enough fabric to even be used as armour. But personally speaking, as long as he could wash them and reuse them again instead of just throwing them away, it was more than enough for him.

"By the way, it seems that this warehouse is actually for obsolete articles. So all of the items here are basically trash."

Akira's hands stopped the moment he heard that and he inadvertently looked at Alpha.

“Trash?”

“Yup!”

Akira once again took a good look around. There were many shelves around him, all of them were filled with relics that were still in good condition.

“So all of these relics… They’re all expired articles? All of them? And since they’re trash, they’ll be just thrown away, right?”

“Yup, that’s exactly why she allowed us to take them for free. So let’s take as much as we can.”

Although Akira was surprised, he also looked slightly conflicted. If one of these relics was found in the slum city, it would definitely cause a fight where people would get killed. And here, all of them were basically trash to be thrown away later. He could not help but find it really shocking.

“…What a huge waste. All of these relics are basically in very good condition and I feel like they’ll fetch me way more money than those relics that I got in Yonozuka station ruin. To me, they don’t look like trash at all, you know.”

“Although they’re expired articles, it’s not like they’re broken or anything. Some of them have simply expired because of the change of season. Or they are just articles that simply get replaced after a fixed amount of time. These articles are basically registered as expired articles in the system although they’re not broken or faulty. Since no one would buy them and no one would use them, they were built and then showcased for sale, and later collected for disposal–this cycle has been going on forever.”

Alpha said so in such a casual manner. But Akira felt an indescribable feeling, a mix of suspicion and something close to loneliness. He then said with a serious expression.

“…Why are they doing that?”

“Well, even if you ask me so. There are actually various reasons why they’re doing that. The core system which manages this place doesn’t question that at all although it might look meaningless to normal people. That’s why they never stop doing it. That’s also the case for most of the manager AIs too, that’s why they don’t try to stop that system. Even if there are some AIs with better intelligence that question the system, unless they have the right to change the system, they would not be able to stop that cycle either.”

“Is that so?”

“Yep, well, but of course, there are exceptions. If some AIs prioritize individual opinion above rules, they might decide to ignore the rule and apply some changes. For example, some of them might adapt to be able to trade with the people of the current era. These AIs might be the reason why some of the big companies can trade with them using Chrome. It’s even possible for some of these AIs to adapt to trade with the people of the current era using the money for the current era too, you know. Some of them might as well already be secretly mixed among the rank of the Corporate Government.”

Akira listened with full interest.

“What can I say… It’s really something.”

Alpha smiled amusedly.

“Well, if we’re talking about possibilities, that’s just how it is. And also, don’t stop there, keep moving your hands. She did tell us to leave as soon as possible, so we need to hurry up.”

Akira flusteredly returned to gathering relics again.

Once he was done, Akira looked at his bike with relics piled on top of it and murmured. The rucksacks that he used were those that could slightly expand their volumes, and Akira had filled all of those rucksacks with relics before putting them on his bike. He also stuffed the backside of his coat with the smaller relics. But even so, he actually still had some spaces to spare.

“Hmmm, Alpha, I feel like we can still carry some more relics though.”

“Nope, this is as much as you can carry.”

“But like, I can still put in some relics there, right?”

“If you carry more relics, you’ll just drop them on our way back. Not to mention, they would prevent you from moving freely during a fight. So just give it up, okay?”

Akira slightly frowned, displeased, but he then shook his head and got on his bike.

“You’re right, it would be stupid to be greedy here just to get myself killed later.”

Alpha smiled bitterly and said.

“To be honest, I think you’re already greedy enough here though. There’s no guarantee you’ll be able to save all of these relics in case we encounter some monsters on our way back home, you know? So just keep that in mind.”

“I’ll be counting on you to find a safe route so that we won’t have to go through that.”

Alpha smiled mischievously at Akira.

“Of course, I’ll do that without you asking me. But it will still depend on your luck, you see. Let’s just hope that you don’t run out of luck after we got here safely and collected all of these relics without any trouble.”

Akira smiled bitterly and slowly accelerated his bike.

When Akira exited the warehouse, Tsubaki was standing close by, waiting for him. There was no smile on her face, she just looked at Akira with a business-like and flat expression.

Akira felt awkward. Although he was already used to having people looking at him with contempt, Tsubaki's cold gaze was an unfriendly gaze for a robber who was not even trying to be discreet about it while she could not do anything against it.

Akira inadvertently bowed lightly to Tsubaki.

"…Uh, uhmm, I'll excuse myself then."

"Be careful on your way back."

"Ah, yes, of course."

As Akira was about to awkwardly walk past Tsubaki, she suddenly said.

"May I ask you one thing?"

"Uh, sure, what is it?"

"It seems that you're using all of your bandwidth for a single connection, are you really okay with that?"

"Eh?"

Akira tilted his head. He could not understand the meaning of that question, but Alpha suddenly interjected while still smiling like usual.

"It's fine. It's in order to maintain my full support for him for the sake of his safety. So it'll be fine, or more like, can you just mind your own business?"

Alpha and Tsubaki stared at each other. There was no friendliness between them.

"Akira, let's go."

"Eh? Ah, okay."

Alpha accelerated his bike before he could. Akira was a bit surprised, but he could immediately regain his balance. Tsubaki kept watching Akira as he left the building until he eventually vanished from her view.

Akira was on his bike as he drove down the wall of the Tsubakihara building at a relatively high speed. He could not help but frown as he watched the ground coming closer and closer to his face.

“Alpha, aren’t we going too fast!? I did ask you to drive safely, didn’t I?!”

“It’s far safer than getting the tire stuck on something since its sticky feature would activate if we’re too slow and that might trip the bike. This is the safest option. The ground is not too far below, so just hang on tight for a bit longer.”

“I have to say there’s something wrong with your standard of driving safely!”

Akira smiled wryly. All the questions and doubts inside his mind were erased.

The bike’s wheels kept in close contact with the building’s wall until the bike went past the curved slope that connected the wall and ground. Once the bike was on the ground again, it slowed down under the speed limit and kept going at that stable speed. Now that Akira had calmed down since he was able to safely reach the ground again, the question that he decided to just forget came back up again.

“Say, Alpha, what was she talking about when Tsubaki said something about bandwidth?”

“Oh, are you curious?”

“…Yeah, a bit.”

In order to maintain her friendly relation with Akira, Alpha was actively discouraging him from asking questions about particular subjects.

But of course, that did not mean Akira’s curiosity about those subjects was completely gone. He used Tsubaki’s question as an excuse since it was a question from a third party about the subject that Alpha had told him not to ask.

Alpha looked at Akira and decided that telling him not to ask that question might be a bad move there. So she casually smiled and said.

“You are someone who can connect to the old-world domain and you’re using that connection to download information from the old-world network. My image and my voice are both conveyed to you through the network. But the amount and the speed of information transfer through the network are not unlimited. And at the moment, all of your connection capacity is allocated for transferring information with me, that’s why she said that back then.”

“Is that something bad?”

“Not at all. It’s no problem at all. After all, I need enough bandwidth to maintain the support that I can give you. Moreover, if I take most of your bandwidth, you can maintain a high-speed connection even when you apply an information filter for the sake of your safety. Like that one, you know, remember when you met a maid girl that I couldn’t see in Higaraka residence ruin? In the worst-case scenario, that could have killed you, you know. It was because I’m putting a filter in your connection that you were safe. That’s why it’s not something for you to worry about.”

“Well, that does sound like it’s no problem at all, but then why did Tsubaki say that?”

“I bet it’s a matter of individual opinion. You do know that I can control your body by controlling your augmented suit, right? Like how some people hate that, there might be people who don’t want their bandwidth to be used for just one connection. It’s the same for the connection filter too. I think she was talking about that.”

“Hmmm, is that all?”

Though Akira understood from Alpha's explanation, he did not feel like that was enough of a reason for Alpha to interject as she did back then. When he said that, Alpha smiled faintly at him and said.

"This might be just a guess from me, so it's not like I want to say anything bad about her. But if I may add something, she might want you to open some bandwidth that she can use to connect with you."

"Why?"

"If she can connect with you, she'll be able to talk through telepathy with you too. That way, she would be able to make a deal with you without telling me. The reason why I interjected is simply to avoid that. To put it simply, it was so that you won't cheat on me."

Alpha said so and smiled mischievously at Akira, who winced back when he saw her expression.

"C-cheat, huh…"

Alpha came closer to Akira's face and smiled amusedly.

"I trust that you would say no even if she offers you 10 billion Chrome and performs other services for you to just forget the request from this girl whom you can't even touch. But it still doesn't feel right to me, even more so when you do that in secret."

Alpha came so close to Akira that if she had a body, he would be able to feel her body heat from that distance. So Akira inadvertently pulled his face back, he then smiled bitterly and said.

"Don't worry. I'll still prioritize your request. After all, I already owe you a lot until now. I have no plans to just ignore that."

"Is that so? Thank you, I'm really happy to hear that."

Alpha smiled as if she was really happy, she then returned back to her usual posture.

Akira tried to calm himself down as he shifted his eyes forward. He then thought.

[Does this mean that Alpha still hasn't fully trusted me yet? Well, I did ignore her warning and went to raid a big gang's base, I even almost got myself killed fighting in a battle that I could have avoided. So I guess that's to be expected, huh? I guess I have no other choice but to properly do my Hunter job, get better equipment, give my best in my training, and regain some of her trust.]

Akira said so as he made his resolve and decided to stop worrying about it for now.

He was actually being tricked there. Although Alpha did not lie, she also did not tell everything to him.

As Akira kept his connection bandwidth solely for Alpha, it was slowly turned to suit Alpha's connection. Although at the moment most of Akira's bandwidth was still general-purpose bandwidth, it was only a matter of time before all of them were modified for Alpha's special use. Alpha did not say anything about that to Akira.

In the first place, Akira was the one who gave Alpha permission to modify his bandwidth. Of course, he did not know that himself when he did that.

It took a lot of power to change a contract that had been signed and Akira did not have such power at the moment. No one could tell for sure whether he would ever get the power to do so before he could accomplish Alpha's request, or even if that kind of power existed in this world in the first place.

__*__*__*__

Once they left the area maintained by Tsubaki, the scene returned back to an abandoned city with rubbles and half-destroyed buildings scattered everywhere. Akira lightly sighed and felt slightly relieved when he saw that.

“It might be weird to say but I feel much calmer in this place, although, technically speaking, it’s still in the inner part of the ruin.”

“Well, the inner part of the ruin actually extended over a wide area after all, and it’s not like there’s any clear indicator that separates the inner and the outskirt of the ruin. But if we say that the area further in than the forward base is an area where monsters which normal Hunters can’t handle roam around, I guess it’s safe to say that this is already the inner part of the ruin. Though I’m sure it would change when the forward base finishes building a road to go further into the ruin though.”

Akira then hummed.

“And they’re already in the middle of building that road, right? If I’m not mistaken, Elena-san and Sara-san are working on a request related to that… If things are going smoothly, that road will eventually go all the way to an area like the one with the Tsubakihara building, right? Won’t that be dangerous?”

Akira thought that if the road extended that far, those powerful big drones with camouflaging devices might backtrack that road all the way to the forward base, and that would be disastrous. In the worst-case scenario, forget the forward base, those monsters might even come all the way to Kugamayama city.

“I’m sure the City Management has also thought about it too. I’m sure they’ll do something like dispatching the city defence squad or calling back those Hunters who are originally working in much more dangerous places… I’m sure you’ll get called for that too sooner or later.”

“And I’ll say no to it. This time I won’t be taking any request from the City Management ever again.”

Akira looked extremely displeased, Alpha who saw that only smiled at him mischievously. Akira had no plans to be sent to the hospital again after all.

Alpha’s expression then changed to a serious one, at the same time, she augmented Akira’s views.

“Akira, we have company.”

“Roger that. Well, in the first place, I didn’t expect to get back home without encountering any monsters after all.”

Akira casually said so as he switched his mind to battle state. He let go one of his hands from the handle and reached for his CWH anti-material rifle. That was when Akira’s relaxed face turned stern.

Akira could see multiple signals from the monsters chasing him from behind in his augmented vision. At first, when Alpha warned him, it was only one signal, but it immediately went to 4, then to 8, and now it was already 20.

“…Aren’t there too many of them?”

“They’re a swarm of weapon dogs. But I don’t know if it’s a huge swarm or if it’s an amalgamation of multiple swarms.”

Akira remembered his past experience the moment he heard the word weapon dog. They were monsters that he could not fight against back then when he went into Kuzusuhara ruin with nothing but a pistol. Even the one that he was barely able to defeat was the one that was faulty.

But he was no longer the same from back then. He had more firepower now, a better augmented suit, and more support from Alpha. The current him should be able to take care of that swarm just fine. He thought that it was a good chance to confirm how much he had grown since then as he looked at the first weapon dog. But he frowned when he saw that weapon dog.

“…Isn’t that weapon dog bigger than usual?”

“They originate from the area near the inner part of the ruin, after all. They’re basically different to their smaller siblings that you can find roaming around the outskirt of the ruin.”

Akira thought that those weapon dogs would only be equipped with some big guns that normally won't be used to fight people. But the weapon dogs in front of him had cannons, mortars, rocket launchers, heavy machine guns, and big bodies powerful enough to support all of those guns.

"Akira, we'll be running away as fast as we can. I'll take full control of the bike, so you just try to shoot their heads. And also, make sure to hold on, it might get a little rocky."

"Roger that!"

Akira aimed his rifle behind, at the same time, the bike's arms also started to move too. The A4WM automatic grenade launcher and DVTS minigun fixed on the ends of those arms were properly aimed at the incoming weapon dogs. Akira focused his aim on one of the weapon dogs and pulled the trigger.

The CWH anti-material rifle had enough power to even destroy a tank, while the grenades from the A4WM automatic grenade launcher had enough destructive power to destroy the rubbles, as for the DVTS minigun, it could turn normal monsters into minced meat in no time. Those 3 guns started shooting at the same time.

Sounds of explosions mixed in between the weapon dogs' howls. The cannons that could destroy a tank, the missiles that could destroy buildings, and heavy machine guns that could easily pierce a thick metal, all of those rifles on their backs started shooting at Akira.

The lonely wasteland was swallowed with sounds of explosions and fire in a snap.

Akira's bike blazed through the ruin, Alpha used her advanced computation skill to predict where those rain of warheads and incoming bullets would land and nimbly controlled the bike to slip through the openings between them.

The explosions from Akira's A4WM automatic grenade launcher were slowing the monsters down while his DVTS minigun was shooting down the incoming missiles.

The missiles that got shot veered from their original aims and hit the buildings, destroying them. Alpha nimbly manoeuvred left and right through the falling rubbles. When the road forward was blocked, she ran the bike on the walls of the building to get past those rubbles.

The weapon dogs ignored the rubbles blocking their way forward as they used their powerful body to break through those rubbles. Akira did try to make some turns and used buildings to get away from the incoming bullets, but it did not seem like he was able to get away from the weapon dogs that were chasing him with a speed unsuitable for their sizes.

Akira was aiming from a situation that was far from ideal. His aim swayed left and right following the bike's movement. Not to mention, sometimes it ran on the side of a building's wall too. In that chaotic situation, he only gathered his focus to its utmost level when he was about to take a shot, as he compressed his time perception to its limit, he carefully aimed his rifle inside a world that was almost completely frozen in time before pulling the trigger.

Although the special bullet's firepower was reduced the further the distance it travelled, it was able to deal a deadly injury to the head of the weapon dog that it hit since those weapon dogs were weaker than a tank. The weapon dogs that had lost their command centres went limp and just dropped dead on the ground.

Akira let out a long breath before he moved to his next target. But he was taken aback by what he saw, the weapon dogs that he had shot down slowly started to move again. They slowly stood back on their feet and aimed their weapons at him.

"Alpha! Those monsters are still alive even after I shoot their heads!?"

"Akira, calm down. It's just because something else outside that swarm is controlling them remotely. It still doesn't change their weak point, which is their heads."

“So that kind of enemy is here too, huh!?”

“If you only destroy their control device and leave their bodies mostly undamaged, they can still be used for fighting if something else takes control of their bodies. It might be some kind of system to make sure that they can still fight even after losing their control device. Akira, reload!”

The bike’s arm extended its DVTS minigun next to Akira. The arm did not have an automatic reloading system. Although it was using an extended magazine, it did not take much time for it to run out of ammo when used for continuous shooting.

Akira hurriedly reloaded a new magazine, once he did that, the DVTS minigun returned its aim at the incoming swarm and started shooting again. It did not take that long before his A4WM automatic grenade launcher also needed a reload. Akira kept alternating between reloading new magazines and shooting the swarm.

Alpha’s shooting was more focused to suppress the enemies, while the killing shots were executed by Akira with his CWH anti-material rifle. The special ammo for the CWH anti-material rifle was not cheap, every time Akira loaded a new magazine and threw away the empty magazine, he felt like he was throwing away a bundle of money. So he could not help but complain there.

“There are so many of them and they’re too strong, what’s going on here? We didn’t encounter any of them on our way here, right? So why are there suddenly so many of them on our way back? And here I thought my bad luck was finally gone when we didn’t meet any monsters on our way in and were able to collect all of these relics without much trouble.”

“It must be because you’re carrying relics now. They must have reacted when their sensor detected someone carrying a lot of stolen goods with him.”

Akira did not stop shooting as he replied.

“Stolen goods? But these are expired articles and we had the permission to collect them, right? Though I can understand the system looking at Hunters as robbers, that’s not the case this time, right?”

“That might be true for the mechanical monsters under the management system of the city, but that might not be the case for the monsters roaming the wasteland, you know? I’m sure that there are a lot of other faults in their programs too. But with that being said, it’s indeed suspicious to see someone carrying this much luggage through the ruin.”

“So that’s why they started shooting at me, huh? What a huge pain in the neck!”

“If you understand it now, it would be great if you can stop complaining and focus more on the fight.”

“You’re right. I feel better now to know that it’s not because of my bad luck.”

Akira smiled bitterly and said so as he returned back to shooting the incoming weapon dogs.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 171, Tsubaki's Decision

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was still fighting the weapons dogs which chased him in the middle of the Kuzusuhara ruin filled with half-destroyed buildings.

The weapon dog's firepower was overwhelmingly above Akira. They kept spewing bullets, missiles, and warheads that easily blew the buildings around them to smithereens.

Alpha used the full mobility of Akira's bike to evade the incoming warheads and bullets. Akira could feel explosive wind scraping off his skin, he sometimes had to dive into the smoke while shooting down the weapon dogs that seemed to be endless.

The numerous weapon dogs had more firepower, more stamina than him. Both Akira and Alpha were desperately holding on against that fierce onslaught. Akira slipped past the raining bullets, warheads, and missiles with the help of Alpha's advanced computational ability and by using the environment around them. At the same time, he was sniping the weapon dogs' weak points while Alpha was shooting down the incoming missiles.

The fierce fight that was even changing the contour of the ground in that area was finally coming to an end. Both sides were starting to run out of ammo and that led to Akira gaining the upper hand.

The weapon dogs were using ammo that they produced with their organs. After shooting all of those missiles and warheads, even with the automatic resupplying organ and advanced old-world technology, they still needed some time to refresh their ammo. Not to mention, Akira was prioritizing shooting down the weapon dogs that were carrying a lot of ammo.

Even if those weapon dogs that had exhausted their ammo ran as fast as they could to chomp at Akira, they could not catch him on his bike. And with the fewer weapon dogs shooting at him, Akira did not need to do too much evading. Alpha utilized the full power of the bike to accelerate forward in a straight line to widen the gap between them.

Now that it had come to this, it was impossible for them to catch up. Akira did not slow down as he left the weapon dogs as well as Kuzusuhara ruin behind him.

Once Akira left the outskirts of the ruin and stepped into the wide wasteland again, he stopped his bike, turned around, and looked at the ruin behind him while still sitting on his bike.

“…Did we get away?”

Alpha smiled to reassure him.

“Yup, we completely got away from that swarm. They originated from the inner part of the ruin, after all, even if they widen their activity range, they won’t go outside the ruin’s outskirts. So I’m sure they won’t chase you outside the ruin. And even if they do, the City Management would definitely dispatch the defense squad to clean them up.”

Akira leaned on his bike as he was pretty tired after what he had gone through. He then sighed in relief and said.

“…That was tiring. But we were able to somehow get away from them. Well, that was really something.”

“Good work there, or so I want to say, but we can’t exactly relax yet before we get back to the city, okay?”

“I know, but still, at least let me take a short break here.”

“Geez, just a short break, alright?”

Akira lightly nodded and sighed as if to expel all the tiredness from his body. He was leaning on his bike, using the bike to fully support his body, and looked around, that was when his gaze wandered at all the relics on his bike.

Those were the relics that he was able to bring back from that magnificent city. Although they were expired articles, Alpha told him that there was no problem with those relics. If that was true, they should be able to fetch him quite a lot of money. As he thought so, he inadvertently raised his expectation and could not help but smile.

But then his bike suddenly accelerated. Its wheels, which could spin individually from each other, spun as fast as they could. The wheels gripped the ground strongly and immediately accelerated the bike to the side.

At the same time, Akira’s augmented suit moved on its own to grab on his bike so as not to get thrown off. His augmented suit helped him against the assault on his body from the high-G manoeuvre as he quickly accelerated away from that place.

Akira activated his time compression by pure reflex and asked Alpha in panic.

“Alpha, what’s going on?!”

“The break is over!! We have an incoming enemy!”

Something exploded behind him. The shockwave from that explosion spread around and swallowed Akira, who was trying to run away from that explosion.

Akira jumped out from the smoke of that explosion. Thanks to his forcefield armour coat, he was able to get away just fine. His bike was also undamaged. But unfortunately, one of his rucksacks was blown away due to the shockwave and was thrown into the air.

Akira could not help but glance at the flying rucksack. It eventually landed on the ground and was badly bent.

“My loot!? Although I’ve worked so hard to carry them all the way here!??”

“You can save that for later!!”

Alpha yelled and pointed her finger at the wasteland. Akira glanced in the direction that Alpha was pointing with a stern face. But he could not see any monsters over there.

“I don’t see anything though!! Are they shooting from so far away that I can’t see them?”

Right after he said so, his face suddenly turned surprised. A part of the wasteland scene in front of him was blurred, and from there, a huge mechanical monster appeared. Although it looked like a weapon dog, its dog-shaped body had no visible organic parts. It was fully mechanical and a big cannon was perching on its back.

“Optical camouflaging, huh?! Wait for a sec, why is that thing here? We’re already outside the ruin, you know?”

“That’s a pretty powerful optical camouflaging. And it’s from the wasteland, not from the ruin.”

“How can you tell?”

“If it’s from the ruin, I should have been able to detect it. I’m using your information-gathering device to detect enemies while we’re outside the ruin, that’s why I was late to detect that monster.”

Alpha paced the bike straight in that big monster's direction. Akira understood that she had decided to fight that monster rather than running away from it, so he immediately reached out for his CWH anti-material rifle.

"Akira, use anti-force field ammo."

Akira smiled bitterly as he changed magazine. He bought that ammo as a trump card for emergency only, he did not expect to use it again this quickly.

"…Geez, I only bought this ammo as a lucky charm, you know."

Alpha smiled at Akira to cheer him up.

"Oh my, it's exactly thanks to that ammo that we can get out of this place alive, you know? So here is where you should seriously feel thankful for it, right?"

"That's just a play on words… It just happened to be like this, I'll leave it as that."

Akira lightly smiled and took aim with his CWH anti-material rifle. His bike accelerated even more. In order to avoid the monster's aim, it approached the big monster in a zigzag path. A big warhead flew past Akira and exploded right behind him.

Every time the bike made a sharp turn to evade the incoming warhead, his body was whipped to the side together with his bike. Alpha was also in control of the bike's force field armour, so she used that to make a turn that would have been impossible to execute at that speed. Akira used his augmented suit to force his body against the inertia while aiming his rifle.

"Akira, let's use your blade, so get ready."

"Is that monster that strong? Why is a monster this strong here? Isn't it just strange?"

“Since it’s there in front of you right now, it doesn’t really matter. You should be thankful that we are lucky enough to at least have the chance to put up a fight.”

“You have a point there.”

Akira smiled bitterly, he still had his CWH anti-material rifle in his left hand while his right hand reached for a blade in his breast pocket. It was nothing but a handle, he gripped it firmly and pointed it away from his body. Silver metallic liquid extended out from that handle and formed a long blade, 3 meters to be exact. It was not something that people would use against other people. Once it reached its full length, it started to glow with a faint blue light.

Akira still had his blade extended on his side as he slipped under the incoming warhead. He then gathered all of his focus and aimed his CWH anti-material rifle.

“Now!”

The anti-force field ammo flew out the CWH anti-material rifle’s muzzle. It hit the monster’s head and released a flash of blinding light.

The monster quickly calculated the trajectory of the incoming bullet and focused its force field armour to protect its head. Thanks to that, it was able to withstand that shot which would have been able to easily destroy a tank. Although the backlash threw its huge body off-balance, it sustained no damage. But of course, it lost its force field armour protection temporarily after receiving that shot.

While that monster lost its footing, Akira quickly closed the distance between them. He went past besides that big monster as he swung his blade at it. The blade buried its sharp edge into the monster’s metallic body and the bike immediately accelerated to push the blade through the monster’s body, fire sparks burst around the cutting edge of the blade together with a sharp stinging sound of metals being sliced.

The bike drove past the mechanical monster, it then made a U-turn and stopped. The blade in Akira's hand turned into dust and was carried away by the wind.

"Did that do it?!"

Akira looked at that metallic monster with a stern face. The monster that had lost its control centre slowly fell to the ground.

Alpha smiled victoriously and said.

"Yep, that should do it. Once again, you did well."

Akira let out a big sigh. He looked at the blade, of which only its handle remained, and smiled bitterly before throwing it away.

"One expensive anti-force field ammo and one old-world blade. I even had to use two of my trump cards and was only barely able to defeat that thing, huh."

Akira once again let out a big sigh. That blade was one of the relics that he got from the Tsubakihara building. He had decided to save it for his own use instead of selling it, that was why he put it inside his breast pocket instead of his rucksack. Although he still had some spares, it did not change the fact that he had used one so quickly.

Alpha smiled and said in a bright tone to cheer up Akira who looked slightly bummed out.

"A win is a win. So cheer up, okay? Let's pick up that rucksack and go back home."

Akira raised his eyebrows in surprise.

"Pick up that rucksack? The relics in it are not broken after it got blown away and landed on the ground that hard?"

"Like I said before, although they're expired articles, they're not faulty or broken. Old-world relics are pretty robust, you know. So I bet they're just fine. Moreover, even if they're slightly damaged, they are still precious old-world relics, they'll still fetch you some money."

Akira beamed up. He thought that those relics were gone for good after being smacked into the ground like that. So he happily went to pick those relics up.

Akira picked up his rucksack as well as the relics that were scattered on the ground when that rucksack was blown away. After that, he climbed on his bike while carrying that rucksack on his arm. He left the driving fully to Alpha as he focused on keeping the rucksack under his arm. Although it was not easy, he held on in that position while heading back to Kugamayama city, leaving the corpse of that big monster behind.

__*__*__*__

Inside the Tsubakihara building, the automaton Tsubaki, the AI manager of that building, was mumbling.

"He took it down, huh."

Tsubaki was watching Akira's fights closely, both when he fought the weapon dog swarm and when he fought the big monster. She was observing Akira through the network connection with the monsters that attacked him.

"Although it's not enough to fully grasp his real strength, I believe that he's good enough to consider."

Alpha had made a deal with Tsubaki to let Akira take the expired articles. During that negotiation, although it was mostly affected by the difference in power between Alpha and Tsubaki, Tsubaki mostly made her decision by considering the amount of damage that it might cause inside the area under her supervision in case a fight occurred.

If letting him take the expired articles was enough to send him back, then there was no need to cause any unnecessary fight. That was the biggest reason why Tsubaki accepted that deal. But seeing that from a different light, it also meant that if Akira was weak and if Tsubaki could kill him without sustaining much damage, then she would have done that.

Putting aside the difference in their ranks, if Alpha had the gut to threaten her by claiming that Akira was stronger than he actually was, Tsubaki was thinking of answering that with a rather extreme action. The weapon dog swarm and that big mechanical monster were sent to fight Akira for the sake of checking Alpha's claim.

Judging from the result, including the info that she gained from Alpha, Tsubaki decided that at least for now, Akira was worth considering, both for the better and for the worse.

__*__*__*__

Akira originally planned to immediately sell the relics that he got from the Tsubakihara building. But Alpha stopped him. She told him to be careful about it in order to avoid getting strange rumour out, or if he could not avoid making rumour, at least to keep that rumour to a minimum. After he returned home, Akira put all the relics that he carried back in the warehouse and made sure to finish the usual maintenance for his equipment before finally taking a rest.

On the next day, Akira put some relics that were relatively in good condition into his rucksack and headed to the wasteland on his bike. He first went to Higaraka residence ruin and spent some time training there before taking a long detour back to Kugamayama city and finally went to Katsuragi to sell those relics.

That day, just like usual, Katsuragi was waiting in his trailer that doubled as his shop. When he spotted Akira coming on a bike, he obviously had a rather displeased look on his face and said.

"Akira, huh? Are you here for medicines and ammo again? What's going on with your Hunter job? To be honest, I really hope you would come to me to sell relics sometime soon, you know."

Katsuragi obviously sounded disappointed, but even after hearing that, Akira casually replied as if it did not bother him at all.

“That’s exactly why I’m here today.”

Katsuragi’s displeased face immediately brightened up with a merchant smile.

“Oh!! Really?! Finally!!”

But he immediately frowned.

“…So, where are the relics?”

Akira took out a small rucksack and showed it to Katsuragi, whose face immediately returned to disappointment as he sighed.

The last time Akira visited Katsuragi to sell relics, he brought a big rucksack filled with relics to the point that it would be hard to carry that rucksack without the help of an augmented suit. That was why Katsuragi was expecting at least the same amount of relics again this time, but contrary to his expectation, Akira brought a rather small rucksack and it was far from being filled with relics. So he could not help but feel disappointed.

“Is that everything…? Well, it doesn’t matter then, come in.”

Akira and Katsuragi went into the trailer and into the break room reserved for staff. They sat face to face with a table between them. Katsuragi then said in a rather unmotivated manner.

“Well now, let’s take a look. Bring out the relics.”

Akira casually pulled out relics from inside his rucksack and lined them on the table in front of him. It was six transparent box cases with a spherical object inside them that looked like they were made of metal or rubber. They were old-world information terminals.

Katsuragi who seemed to be not interested at all up until now froze up. His eyes then widened in shock before he squinted his eyes with suspicion.

“T-these are… No, wait, can it be…? Akira, where did you get these from?”

“Where? Old-world ruin of course.”

“That’s not it, I mean which ruin to be more precise?”

“That’s a secret.”

“A secret…?”

Katsuragi was surprised by that reply and had a conflicted look on his face. Seeing that, Akira lightly frowned and looked displeased.

“If you say you can’t buy them unless I tell you where I found them, I’ll just sell them somewhere else. I did take these relics to you first as I promised, so I won’t take any complaint from you.”

Seeing Akira start putting those relics back into his rucksack, Katsuragi stopped him in panic.

“Wait wait wait wait wait! Wait there, okay?! Don’t put them back! I’ll get them checked first, so just leave them there! I’ll bring you some coffee too! So just enjoy the coffee while you wait!!”

Katsuragi went to make coffee and placed it in front of Akira. He then brought out a special device for inspecting relics and started inspecting the relics in front of him closely. Akira was trying to look calm while sipping his coffee and observing Katsuragi.

Katsuragi put on a monocular magnifying glass on one of his eyes and looked closely at the relics, while doing that, he casually threw a question at Akira.

“Akira, what do you think these relics are?”

“Expensive-looking relics.”

“Expensive, huh? Just how expensive do you think these are?”

That was when Alpha interjected.

“Akira, no need to hold back.”

“1 billion Aurum.”

Hearing that, Katsuragi could not help but laugh.

“No no no, although these are indeed old-world information terminals, 1 billion Aurum is just too big no matter how you think about it, you know? There’s no way they cost that mu-“

Katsuragi stopped midway when he realized Akira was staring at him. There was a slight suspicion and contempt in his stare.

“You were planning to buy them cheaply if I had said a low price, weren’t you?”

Katsuragi smiled as if to play ignorant, but he could not completely fool Akira. Normally, Katsuragi would never make such a mistake. The price that Akira suggested was too high that it threw him off-beat.

“Of course not. It’s just that we can’t get a good deal that we both can accept unless both of us have at least some knowledge about these relics that you’re trying to sell, you see. That’s why I was just trying to make sure you know a few things about these relics.”

“Really now?”

“Geez, don’t be like that, if I offer to buy these relics with a price that’s way above your guess, that in itself would be suspicious for you too, right?”

“To be honest, I have no complaint if you’re going to buy them at a higher price than I expected though. So then, are you done inspecting them yet?”

“Be patient. These might be worth more than I expected, you see. My main job is not inspecting relics, so I can’t really say for sure how much they are worth without inspecting them closely. To be honest, it would be great if you would leave them here for a few days, is that okay with you?”

“No, that’s not okay.”

Katsuragi slightly frowned, he then said as if to calm Akira down.

“Just a few days should be fine, you know? It’s not like we’re strangers after all, right? I can assure you that it’s better if you get these relics properly inspected. I can even use my connections with a relics inspector acquaintance to have him write an inspection certificate for these relics, you know? As I said before, inspecting relics is not my main job, so it’s definitely better to have a real pro check them, don’t you think so too?”

But Akira shook his head.

“Still no. Sorry to say this, but I don’t trust you that far yet. I want to avoid the problem in case you replace them with cheaper relics after I leave them with you just to get you to tell me later that they are actually cheap relics.”

“Geez, what a worry-wart, it will be fine, I tell you.”

“It’s your own fault for frequently doing or saying something untrustworthy, like what you did just now.”

Katsuragi lightly laughed and looked away. Seeing that, Akira lightly sighed.

“Well, personally speaking, I don’t think you would do something like that though. But with that being said, I can’t really tell where these relics would go once I leave them to someone else. It’s just that I simply can’t really trust a friend of a friend of a friend, you see. But of course, if you can promise me to take responsibility and pay me 1 billion Aurum in case if anything bad were to happen, I won’t mind leaving them with you.”

Katsuragi smiled wryly. As a merchant who often traded with Hunters, he could understand where Akira’s attitude came from.

“As expected, I can’t go that far, but still…”

Katsuragi hummed. It was true that his main job was a merchant, not a relic inspector. So of course, he lacked the knowledge and devices to do a proper relic inspection. After thinking for a while, he then came up with a suggestion.

“How about if I call a relic inspector whom I know to come here?”

“If you’re going to inspect these relics in front of me, you can do whatever you want.”

“Alright!! Just wait for a bit here then!!”

Katsuragi pulled out his information terminal and immediately started preparing.

Not too long afterwards, multiple relic inspectors came to the trailer, all of them were the relic inspectors that Katsuragi called. They then used their inspection devices, which looked exaggeratedly huge with a huge link to each device as they immediately started their inspection.

Akira was sipping his coffee with a calm face, although, to be honest, he was a bit surprised by what was going on.

“For some reason, it seems it’s being blown out of proportion though. They seem to be taking a very close look at those relics, well, those are mechanical relics, after all. I wonder if it got broken when it got blown off back then.”

Alpha replied with her usual smile.

“It’ll be fine. Just keep calm and show some confidence that those relics are really worth that much. If you show weakness here, they might rip you off, you know?”

“A-alright!”

Akira sipped his coffee while trying to calm himself down, he was doing his best to show confidence there.

While the other people inside that room were still inspecting the relics, Katsuragi and another guy stepped back and went to the deeper part of the trailer. They then started conversing while whispering to make sure that Akira could not eavesdrop on them.

“Katsuragi, is that boy the one who brought in those relics?”

“That doesn’t really matter. Just make sure to do a proper inspection of those relics. So, how is it? Are they not fake?”

“I can’t really say for sure since I can only carry relatively low accuracy inspection devices with me, but from the result up until now, I think they’re not fake and they are in a pretty good condition too. If I’m being strict here, the cases are a little bit bent, but that should not affect the articles inside them. So then, where did that boy get those relics?”

“Geez, give it up, will you? Can’t you just open the case and take a closer look at them?”

“Some of those cases will break its content when not opened with the right method, you see, and that’s doubly true for articles that can only be contained inside a container. For example, those articles in the form of powder. I don’t want to be held responsible if we open them and break their contents. That aside, why won’t that boy tell you where he got them from? Is it because he’s just a carrier from another shop or something and those relics were actually found by another Hunter? Do you have any good guess where he might have got those relics?”

“Just drop it already. I only asked you to inspect the relics that one of my customers brought in. Isn’t that enough already? If you keep pestering me with unnecessary questions, I’ll have you leave, you know?”

Katsuragi said so and glared at the other guy. So the other guy clicked his tongue and decided to stop pursuing that subject.

After that, they continued talking in secret about the result of the relic inspection. Once they reached a conclusion, Katsuragi sent the people that he called in to inspect the relics out. He then sat facing Akira with the relics lined between them and smiled at Akira with a merchant's smile.

"Sorry for the wait, the inspection is done. So, about the price though, I know that you want me to pay you on the spot. But even if you bring relics to the Hunter Office, they sometimes only transfer the money the day after, or in some cases, it might even take a few weeks. So just keep that in mind and listen to me, okay?"

"Alright, so then, how much is it?"

Katsuragi smiled and said.

"60 million Aurum, what do you think?"

Akira's face slightly turned stern. He then frowned and stared at the relics in front of him.

"Don't just fall silent, tell me if you're okay with that price or not."

Akira was actually trying his best not to show his surprise on his face, he did not expect those relics to be worth that much. That stern gaze on those relics was actually because he was so surprised that he inadvertently looked at them with a mix of suspicion.

But for some reason, maybe because he was slightly desperate, Katsuragi who saw that thought that Akira was doing calculations if that was a good price or not. Akira suddenly extended his hand, in reality, Akira was just going to take a closer look at the relics, but Katsuragi thought that Akira was going to stuff them back into his rucksack.

"Whoah there! Wait, let's think carefully about this, okay? It's 60 million Aurum, you know?! 60 Million!! I'll at least let you know this, even if you bring them to the Hunter Office, at most, they'll only pay you 50 million Aurum. I'm sure it won't go close to 60 million! Although in place of that your Hunter Rank would go up, I know that you don't really care about that, right? If you're looking for money, just sell them to me."

Akira did not say anything. He only looked at the relics in his hand and Katsuragi alternately.

“Moreover, if you bring them to the Hunter Office, they’ll pester you about where you got those relics and whatnot. That’s the same if you try to sell them somewhere else. You don’t want to tell anyone where you got these relics, right? If it’s me, I’m willing to buy them from you without asking where you got them, and I can guarantee you that I won’t leak anything to anyone. I know that this is a good deal for you, so just sell them to me, yeah?”

Akira still would not say anything. Katsuragi started to get even more desperate.

“Alright alright!! I’ll buy them for 70 million Aurum but with one condition! As expected even I can’t offer you more money than that!! If this is not good enough for you, I’ll drop this deal, you know!!”

“One condition?”

Katsuragi was slightly relieved seeing that Akira finally gave a positive reply. Although he calmed down, he still had a mix of desperation in his merchant smile.

“Although I’ll buy them for 70 million Aurum, I can only pay you 30 million Aurum. So for the rest, I’ll give you 40 million Aurum store credit. After all, I know that you would just use all of them for medicines, right? So I’m sure that it’s a good deal for you too. I don’t mind if you want to use it for my other goods, and if you need something else, I can also put an order for you. Of course, you’ll have to store some money for that order though. And also, if you ever find similar relics again, make sure to bring them to me first. That’s the condition.”

Akira was pretending to be thinking when he was actually trying to calm himself down. Katsuragi was nervously waiting for Akira’s reply. In the middle of that strangely tense mood, Akira opened his mouth and finally said.

“…Alright, I’ll take that deal.”

“Nice!! I’ll transfer the money right away, so you should check if it properly reaches you.”

Katsuragi immediately finished the transfer before Akira changed his mind. Akira checked the transfer and confirmed that it indeed reached his account.

“I received the money, that’s it then.”

Katsuragi sighed with a big smile on his face. He quickly brought out a strong-looking case and carefully transferred the relics into that case before handing it over to the relic inspectors that he sent outside the trailer. When he returned, he had a wide smile on his face, it seemed that he also got a good deal with those relic inspectors.

“That was a good deal. Now then, it’s my turn now. What do you need? Is it more medicines? Wait for a bit here, I’ll bring it out.”

Katsuragi went to the warehouse and returned back with a box of medicines and placed it on top of the table. The box also contained not the usual 2 million Aurum per box medicine that Akira usually bought from Katsuragi.

“This is my recommended medicine. I ordered these expensive medicines especially for you. It’s 5 million Aurum per box.”

“5 million, huh? Isn’t that a little too expensive?”

Akira frowned, but Katsuragi smiled as if it did not bother him at all.

“Well, it’s originally for Hunters who usually work further to the east after all. So that price is pretty normal out there. But I can guarantee it, it’s a high-quality medicine. Like I said, I ordered them especially for you. To be honest, as someone who’s selling medicines to you, I’m a bit worried about how you spent your money only on medicines, you know? I’m sure you can understand that, right?”

“…Well, can’t really say I don’t.”

Akira occasionally used a lot of medicines to the point that some people thought he was trying to be a superhuman. Although he also had started taking drugs to clean up the nanomachine residue in his body, he still had not done that yet. He was planning to take one after his next ruin expedition.

Katsuragi nodded to affirm Akira's guess.

"Thought so. So that's where this medicine comes in. These are specially made for Hunters and its producer put extra effort into keeping the nanomachine residue to a minimum. So even if you consume a lot of them in a short span of time, it should only leave a small amount of nanomachines in your body. Not to mention that it's highly effective. So you don't have to consume too much of it in one go and the nanomachine from this medicine can stay active for a relatively long time. It's the perfect medicine for you. This time I only ordered 2 boxes, but you should buy them. You have 40 million store credit, so there's no need for you to be overly frugal about this kind of thing that might save your life."

"Alright, I'll take them."

"Certainly!! I knew that you would buy them!"

"By the way, what were you going to do with them if I did not buy them? It's not like anyone would buy that 5 million Aurum per box medicine around this place, right?"

"But of course, there's you, no? Well, what can I say, my merchant instinct is telling me that you'll definitely grow powerful enough to be able to buy this kind of medicine just fine."

"I wonder about that."

Katsuragi said so smugly and Akira just sent a gaze at him with suspicion.

Katsuragi was not lying. But it was not like he had no plans at all, he had already prepared plan B to send those medicines to another city through his connection in case Akira would not buy them. This was one of the results of his talent as a merchant.

In the end, Akira bought 2 boxes of 5 million per box medicine and 5 boxes of 2 million per box medicine. On top of that, he also placed an order for 2 boxes of that 5 million per box medicine. So he was left with 10 million store credits that he saved in case he was going to buy something later from Katsuragi.

Once he was done with his business there, Akira returned back to his bike and drove away. Katsuragi saw him off and mumbled.

“To be honest, I was thinking of cutting my ties with him and Sheryl’s gang if he wasn’t going to bring me relics soon. But still, I didn’t expect him to bring something like that. Not to mention, Sheryl seems to be turning into a rather prospective customer too. Is it that my luck as a merchant is getting better lately? I guess this is a good time to take a risky gamble, huh?”

Katsuragi had a big dream to join the ranks of the Corporate Government and issue a currency under his name for the territory he ruled. And finally, he felt like he spotted a way to make his dream come true as he smiled widely.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 172, Selling Relics and Reaction From Doing So

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

On the next day, Akira took a small number of relics with him again as he went out to the wasteland. He took a long detour to Higaraka residence ruin, spent some time training there, and then went back to Kugamayama city taking another long detour.

When he arrived back in Kugamayama city, he immediately went to see Katsuragi to sell his relics. But strangely enough, his trailer was not in its usual place that day.

“Is he taking a break today? Or did he change place?”

Alpha casually replied.

“It seems that Katsuragi is in Sheryl’s base right now.”

“…I see.”

Of course, Akira wondered how Alpha knew about that, but he reminded himself that it was nothing strange for her. So he just set that aside for now, got on his bike and headed to Sheryl's base.

Akira was taken aback when he arrived at the front of Sheryl's base. The base was under huge renovation involving the base itself and the area around it.

Inside one of the rooms in the base, Sheryl, Viola and Katsuragi were in the middle of a conversation. That was when a young boy from the gang knocked on the door.

"Boss, Akira-san is here."

"Alright, Katsuragi-san, is it okay if we stop here and take a small break?"

As Sheryl said so politely, Katsuragi smiled teasingly and said.

"Of course, we can even continue it tomorrow if you want. I'll just leave so you can take your time getting closer to Akira, both for your sake and for my business' sake, yes?"

Sheryl gave a dry smile.

"Thank you for your concern."

As Katsuragi saw that, he once again thought that Sheryl had really changed into someone hard to deal with. His merchant instinct was telling him that the current Sheryl was not someone he could underestimate.

The young boy then awkwardly said.

"…Uhhh, it seems that Akira-san is actually here for Katsuragi-san…"

Katsuragi raised his eyebrows.

"Me?"

When Akira came to the base, Sheryl always thought that it was for meeting her. So the moment she was proven wrong, the shock caused her smile to freeze for a sec. She then noticed Viola who could not hold back her laughter. It was obvious that Viola had completely read her mind, so Sheryl could not help but pout a little.

The young boy realized that he had just soured Sheryl's mood. He sounded rather scared as he used guiding Akira as an excuse to leave that room.

Viola was still trying to hold back her laughter as she said.

"If you get offended that quickly, your men will hate you, you know. As the boss of the gang, you should be more composed, yes?"

Sheryl regained her calm and smiled back at Viola. Their stares at each other, clearly showing the difference in their ranks.

Katsuragi looked away from Sheryl, excusing himself thinking that it was a matter between people in Sheryl's gang and he had nothing to do with it.

Akira entered the room and sat across Katsuragi. Sheryl sat next to Akira, while Viola sat next to Katsuragi.

Seeing how Sheryl was sitting happily next to Akira, Katsuragi was amused at how fast Sheryl's mood changed, but he did not show it on his face. He put that aside for now and said.

"So then, Akira, I heard that you wanted to meet me. So, what is it? The goods that you ordered haven't arrived yet and if you want me to bring out my trailer in case you want to buy something, I can't really do that right now. I'm taking a break today from that one, you see."

"How about buying relics then?"

"Well, I don't mind doing that, but make sure to bring something that might fetch a lot of money, yeah? I'm not really free that I would deal with cheap relics during my holiday, you know. But, of course, if you bring something like yesterday, that would be a different story."

Katsuragi said so as a joke. Finding an old-world information terminal was not an easy thing, and even more so to find them in a good condition.

Because of that, he could not help but question his eyes as Akira lined up similar relics like yesterday in front of him.

Katsuragi inadvertently mumbled.

“…You got to be kidding me!”

Akira lightly frowned.

“If you have any doubts, you can go ahead and inspect them closely.”

Akira said so casually that Katsuragi had a surprised look plastered on his face. Viola found it surprising and smiled amusedly. Sheryl was the only one who did not know that those were old-world information terminals, so she found no reason to be surprised. But even so, she could understand from Katsuragi and Viola’s reaction that those were expensive relics.

Katsuragi had both of his hands on his head, both for the better and for the worse. He did not expect Akira to bring invaluable relics twice in such a short time. There was no mistaking it, this was a very golden business opportunity for him.

But Katsuragi had limited capital available to use. He at least needed one week to find corporations looking for this kind of relics, choose where to sell those relics, negotiate a good deal with that corporation, before finally converting those relics into cash money. So the relics that he just bought yesterday had not been converted into cash money yet.

Those were relics that would definitely bring in a lot of money if he bought them, but unfortunately, at the moment, he had not enough money to buy them. To be honest, he wanted to avoid having to let that opportunity slide just because he did not have enough money to buy them right now. But he needed extra resolve to work up the courage to borrow money in order to put his bet on those relics when there was no guarantee they would sell. But if the credit company judged that it was unlikely for him to pay back the debt later, they might use that to take advantage of him and set a high interest. And if Katsuragi could not come up with enough money to pay that debt when the deadline came, then he would lose the bet and everything else along with it.

"…I want to call some people again to inspect those relics for now, are you okay with that?"

Katsuragi decided to set aside the matter with his money at the moment. After all, if those relics were actually not in a good condition, then there was no need for him to worry about money. While at the same time, it would also give him some time to compose himself.

People called by Katsuragi were inspecting the relics that Akira brought that day in the same room. This time, they were using bigger devices compared to yesterday. After all, this time Katsuragi contacted better relics inspectors.

When the relic inspectors saw the people inside that room, they had a rather conflicted look on their faces. But some of them seemed to quickly grasp what was going on.

Viola was already famous for her bad reputation around the city. Akira was the rumoured young boy who made a full show of his power during the huge battle the other day, and although he looked weak, he actually was a powerful Hunter. Then to top it off, Sheryl, who was already rumoured for having those two dangerously volatile people under her control. With all of those 3 people in one room, all the relic inspectors present thought that there was no surprise for them to find a way to procure those valuable old-world information terminals.

Although they only saw Akira as just a young boy the other day, seeing how he was together with Viola inside that room, reminded them of a certain piece of information and decided to treat Akira differently from now on.

They had also heard Sheryl was investing a lot of money in order to restart selling relics in her base again. So they thought that the reason they were called there today might have something to do with it. If those relics were something that Viola procured, then it was nothing weird for them to be in such a good condition. The relic inspectors there thought so as they continued checking the relics.

Akira was sitting there, watching the relic inspectors working while talking with Sheryl, who was on top of him. In the middle of talking about reopening the relic shop, Sheryl said that she was doing a huge renovation for its sake. That was when a question popped inside Akira's mind.

"Sheryl, now that you mention it, it seems that you're doing a large-scale renovation of this place, where did you get the money to do that?"

"Ah, well, about that…"

Sheryl smiled and was about to explain when Viola suddenly interjected.

"In order to help turn this gang into a profitable gang, I decided to invest 1 billion Aurum into this gang."

Sheryl smiled at Viola, covertly telling her to stop running her mouth, but Viola ignored that and continued.

Once the gang started reopening the relic shop, it would be the main income for the gang. Because of that, they needed to renovate the interior of the gang in order to provide more security for the shop. The special room for storing those expensive relics was remade into something similar to a huge safe box. They also installed some defensive equipment to help even amateurs defend certain important points. Sheryl was also planning to sell relics that were entrusted to her by the other people too. So they made sure to be prepared for that too. Viola explained all of those things to Akira.

Akira looked slightly surprised but also a bit weirded out at the same time.

"But still, 1 billion Aurum huh. Didn't expect you would do something like that."

"Well, I did tell you before that I'm pretty rich, remember? Moreover, it's something that I have to do in order to make this gang powerful enough to be able to pay its debt to you. After all, with its current income, it won't be able to repay its debt to you even after a thousand years. The gang needs to grow big enough so that it can use 10 billion Aurum to earn 11 billion Aurum and get 1 billion Aurum profit from the transaction. Well, of course, I couldn't invest 10 billion Aurum right from the start, so I started with only 1 billion Aurum. And it's not like we spent all of that 1 billion Aurum right away after all."

Akira seemed to still have some doubts in his mind.

"But still, 1 billion Aurum is a huge amount of money. Is it really normal to invest that much money like this?"

Viola looked slightly surprised.

"Oh my, I'm doing my best here to fulfil my promise to you, you know? So like, you don't have to say it like that, yes?"

"Well, that's true, but still…"

Akira awkwardly winced back, Viola smiled and continued.

"Please think of it as me having absolute confidence in my own skill. And also, just to get this straight, it's a loan. So it's not like I gave that money for free."

Akira himself had no plans to say anything bad about someone who was trying her best to fulfil her promise to him. Moreover, if he was really able to get that 3.8 billion Aurum that he thought to be nothing more than an excuse for Viola to get involved in Sheryl's gang, that in itself was a good thing for him. Not to mention, Viola lent her own money, not his. So Akira decided to stop worrying about it.

"You have a point there, sorry about that."

"I'm glad that you can understand."

Akira lightly smiled, Viola replied with a light smile too. That was when Sheryl suddenly tightened her hug.

“I’ll give my best too.”

“Eh? Ah, yeah, sure, give it your best.”

“Yes!”

Sheryl replied back firmly, she then sent a glare to Viola who was smiling teasingly.

After they finished inspecting the relics, Akira immediately went back home, leaving what to do with those relics to Katsuragi and Sheryl.

Originally, just like before, Katsuragi offered to buy those relics for 60 million Aurum. But suddenly Viola interjected and made an offer to buy those relics too. Then from there, they had some debates on who to sell those relics to.

Both Viola and Katsuragi pressured Akira to sell his relics to one of them. So in the end, Akira decided to auction it starting from 60 million Aurum in 1 million Aurum units. If both of them were offering the same price, Akira was planning to sell them to Katsuragi since he made the offer first. And so with that, he made Viola transfer the minimum 60 million Aurum first and quickly left Sheryl’s base.

On their way back, Alpha asked Akira a question.

“Akira. Though it might be too late for me to say this, are you sure you’re okay with leaving them alone? After all, Katsuragi and Viola might manage to lower the price as much as possible in their negotiation with Sheryl, you know?”

“Judging from how Katsuragi gave me store credits instead of cash money yesterday, he might not have the money to buy those relics. So from that point of view, I was at least able to get 60 million Aurum out of those relics. And if their negotiation leads to more profit, it’ll motivate them to get along more. So I don’t think it’s a bad idea.”

Adding the money from yesterday, Akira had earned 90 million Aurum plus those expensive medicines. So he had nothing to complain about.

After Akira left the base, Katsuragi and Sheryl were having a negotiation. During that negotiation, Sheryl had the upper hand since Katsuragi did not have much money.

Katsuragi had made a plan to have his branch inside Sheryl's base and invested some money in Sheryl's gang for the sake of that plan. Moreover, Sheryl had also ordered a lot of equipment and defensive devices for the gang from Katsuragi. So Katsuragi had also spent a good portion of his money to put those orders in. Because of that, he did not have much money in hand and he had a disadvantage during the negotiation.

Of course, Viola did not let it slide and pushed Katsuragi into a difficult negotiation.

[Don't tell me that Akira sold those relics to me yesterday for the sake of probing my current financial situation? No, it can't be… Right?]

Katsuragi put extra effort during that negotiation, but when he looked at how Sheryl was acting and how Viola was smiling like usual, he could not help but feel anxious.

Sheryl kept coming up with demands that were cutting close to the limits that he could accept. To be honest, he was feeling anxious having to face it while thinking that Sheryl was slowly turning into another Viola as he was doing his best trying to fight back those offensive moves from her.

__*__*__*__

On the next day, Akira went out to Higaraka residence ruin again, and just like last time, he was searching for relics there which also doubled as training for him.

Akira was being careful not to encounter any monsters or other Hunters during the training. He also did some training with his bike without Alpha's support, or spotting places for relics where Hunters would normally miss. He was doing his best in his training by following Alpha's instructions.

Akira stood in front of a dilapidated mansion and sighed. He looked slightly annoyed at Alpha.

"Alpha, as expected, I didn't find anything valuable, you know?"

"That's normal. After all, if you can easily find valuable relics here, Hunters would still frequent this ruin. That's why this place looks abandoned."

"Well, that's true, but still, I'm not here for rubble, you know? What can I say, uhh… It's not that encouraging when I can't find any good relics…"

"This in itself is a good training for hunting relics. If you don't do this seriously, it would be pointless. So just get over it and put your back on it. You did promise me to do this training seriously, remember? So do it earnestly, okay?"

"…Alright."

With a light sigh, Akira changed gear and restarted the training again, but more seriously this time.

His training for hunting relics continued, he closely checked all corners of the mansion. If the interior of the mansion seemed relatively okay, he would check all the furniture and move them around to check for secret rooms. He did not forget to use his information-gathering device to look for secret rooms too.

In case if the mansion was mostly run-down, Akira would move aside the rubble and check the interior in case if the rubble buried a secret safe or something similar. He also checked the furniture using his information terminal, and if he found any hollow space, he would break the furniture to see if there was anything inside it or not.

Akira had been doing that since two days ago. But even after three days, he did not get anything valuable. Of course, it was not like he did not get anything at all, but for a Hunter who had now spent 500 million Aurum for his equipment, it was not worth the hassle.

At first, Akira was diligently and seriously doing it. But after some time, if it was not for Alpha's order, he would have started cutting corners.

Akira held a cracked plate in his hand and stared at it with a stern face. He looked slightly displeased as he said.

"I wonder if this thing might be an expensive relic. Like that thing, you know, that handkerchief that turned out to be an expensive article when I brought it to the Hunter Office. I wonder if this plate can be actually an expensive relic too."

"That's mostly based on its material since it's an old-world nanomaterial. If you want to check the material of that kind of tableware, you can just lightly knock it and analyze the sound using your information terminal."

Akira lightly knocked the plate, of course, he could not tell if it was made of expensive material or not.

"…Alpha, I know that judging it by myself is also a training for me, but can you help me with this one?"

"I can only tell a limited amount of info based on your information-gathering device. But from what I can get, it's made of usual ceramic."

"So?"

"You can get a small amount of profit by selling that for 100 Aurum in a street stand. If you still have some doubt, you can try bringing that to Katsuragi."

Akira did not say anything back, he just threw that plate away. If that was good enough for him to bring back home, he would be bringing a lot of relics back home from that ruin. Not to mention that Katsuragi would definitely take it as a bad joke.

Alpha smiled wryly and said.

“If you learn how to quickly check for relics in this ruin, you’ll be able to efficiently hunt for relics in the other ruins. So make sure to keep doing it seriously.”

“I know. Diligent training is the shortcut to success, right?”

“Yup, exactly.”

Akira got back half of his spirit, so he made up the other half with bravado and returned back to training. He continued looking for relics for some time after that, but in the end, his training ended that day with almost zero results again just like the other days. He looked slightly tired as he got on his bike and drove back to the city.

After Akira left Higaraka residence ruin, some Hunters arrived at the ruin bringing few other people with them. One of them frowned and looked doubtful as he said to his friend.

“Is this really the place? It has been quite a long time since all the relics from this ruin were carried out, right? Though I’m sure there are still some relics here, I feel this would be nothing short of a pointless endeavour.”

“Like hell if I know. It’s an order from the boss to inspect this Higaraka residence ruin, especially for places where other Hunters are also searching. Even if we can’t find anything, we still can get some money by reporting back the result from our inspection. So just stop complaining already.”

“You have a point there. We were paid to come here…”

The Hunters present were paid by someone to come there, so they decided to focus on their job and started searching the ruin.

When Akira returned back to the city, he went to his house and took a box full of relics to Shizuka’s shop. Unbeknown to him, Elena and Sara were hanging out in Shizuka’s shop at that time.

When Akira entered, they froze for a few seconds and just stared at each other without saying anything. As things started getting awkward, Elena smiled to exorcise the awkwardness and said.

“Akira, long time no see.”

“Ah, yes, long time no see.”

“I heard from Shizuka that you’re starting your Hunter job again, so how is it going?”

“Eh, ah, it’s going pretty well.”

“I see.”

Elena looked a bit troubled on how to continue from there as she threw a friendly smile at Akira. But behind it, she actually felt relieved that she saw no sign of contempt, or alertness, or hostility from him. Sara, who was also smiling awkwardly until now, looked relieved seeing Akira’s friendly reaction.

Shizuka smiled as it seemed there was no need to worry about their friendship and welcomed Akira.

“Akira, welcome. Are you here for ammo again today?”

Akira’s face immediately turned slightly serious.

“No, I’m here to sell relics today. I remembered that you said you can buy fabric relics from me, so I’m here with those relics today. This is it.”

Akira placed a box filled with relics on top of the counter. Shizuka opened that box and checked the content. Elena and Sara also peeked at the content of that box. Shizuka, Elena, and Sara were amazed when they saw what was inside. That box was filled with lady’s underwear, and of course, all of them were old-world relics.

Elena and Sara could not help but hum in amazement. It’s a common reaction for Hunters when they saw a huge amount of expensive relics. There was no feeling of awkwardness although the one who brought in that huge amount of lady's underwear was a boy. But that was exactly because Elena and Sara were Hunters.

Shizuka took one of the underwear out of the box and checked it. It seemed to be in excellent condition without any damage. But something else surprised her, its design was rather daring.

In her surprise, she made eye contact with Akira and ended up blushing, which was very very very rare of her. Seeing that, Akira who was trying his best to make a poker face could not help but blush too.

It was not like Akira was fully indifferent to what he did there. He knew that he would be flustered if he let it bother him, that was why he was trying his best to just ignore it. He was there solely to sell relics, so he was sure that Shizuka would react accordingly and there was no need to be overly concerned about it. He kept telling himself that in order to keep his calm.

But since Shizuka gave a reaction that he did not expect, Akira could not hide his surprise and started feeling embarrassed too.

"Ah, uhh, I think I promised to bring this kind of relic here if I find them. So, yeah, here I am."

"I-I see. Well, I too remember that we did have that kind of conversation before, yup."

Akira and Shizuka smiled at each other, trying to avoid the subject. Looking at that, Elena and Sara seemed slightly surprised.

Shizuka put the underwear in her hand back into the box and closed it. She then intentionally tried to change the mood by saying.

"Akira. It's rather difficult to inspect this kind of relic, you see. Though I did say that I would buy them from you, it's not like I'm an expert in this. So if you're okay with it, can you leave them here? I'll have them inspected and get a good deal to sell them. But that would mean you'll receive the payment later when everything is done."

“Yes, I don’t mind.”

“Alright then, I’ll take care of the rest.”

Shizuka said so as she moved the box behind the counter, out of everyone’s view. The only thing left was the lingering awkwardness from what just happened.

Silavin: Akira, you sly dog.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 173, Choosing Rifles

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Even after Shizuka stored the relic box out of sight, there was still some awkwardness left in the air. So Akira tried to change the mood by getting into the real reason why he came there that day.

“Shizuka-san, I actually want to consult about buying a new rifle. Is this a good time?”

“Sure!”

Akira slightly hesitated.

“…I actually want to look for a particular type of rifle, you see. But this might sound crazy, so if it does, please just forget about it.”

Shizuka frowned but immediately broke into a smile.

“I won’t be able to tell unless you let me know first. So you can just go ahead, no need to hold back. It’s also one of my jobs to cope with any requests that my customers ask me. Though I don’t know whether I can find something that would satisfy you or not, I’ll at least give my best effort to not betray your expectation.”

Akira looked relieved as he nodded, he then started to explain his wish.

After listening to Akira's wish, Shizuka hummed. It was indeed an unreasonable request.

A rifle that could rival the power of the CWH anti-material rifle with its special ammo, with the ability to shoot in rapid succession like a DVTS minigun, and could shoot grenades just like the A4WM automatic grenade launcher. Then to top it off Akira also wanted that rifle to be able to do long-range precision sniping too, and all of those features to be packed in a small-sized rifle. Although he was okay as long as he could use it with his current augmented suit, he wanted it to be as light as possible too.

"As I thought, there's no rifle that good, huh…"

Akira himself understood that he was saying unreasonable things. When he saw Shizuka hum while looking slightly troubled, he decided to take back what he said. That was when Shizuka said with still a slightly troubled face.

"If you ask me whether such a rifle exists or not, the answer would be yes."

"It does?"

"Yes. There are actually many people who are looking for such a versatile rifle. So some companies actually manufactured such rifles and are selling them in the market, although, I'm sure they only do that because there's demand for that sort of rifle. But personally speaking, I don't recommend you to get such a rifle…"

"Is that so? I'm sure it would be really helpful to have such a rifle though."

Akira looked rather confused. Seeing that, Shizuka's expression turned slightly cloudy, which was very rare for her. She then explained as if to emphasize the disadvantage of such a rifle.

"Because all those features are packed into one, such a rifle is usually exorbitantly expensive. Moreover, although it can do all of those things, its overall firepower is less when compared to a normal rifle of the same price tag. Of course, there are those with enough firepower to rival normal rifles. But with the better firepower, their prices also increase exponentially."

"How big is this price gap?"

"In your case, for a rifle that's basically an amalgamation of CWH anti-material rifle, DVTS minigun, A4WM automatic grenade launcher, and DSS sniper rifle, it will cost about the sum of all of those rifles with some zeros trailing."

"I-I see, it's really that expensive, huh?"

"Yup, with that kind of awful price-to-performance ratio, I can't really recommend that kind of rifle."

Shizuka started by pointing out the price disadvantage of such a rifle. Seeing that it was enough to make Akira rethink it, she then continued adding more reasons in order to discourage him from buying such a rifle.

"Not to mention that you'll need a special set of skills to be able to effectively use that kind of rifle compared to when you use individual rifles. So, you'll take more time mastering a single multi-type rifle compared to mastering multiple single-type rifles."

Akira frowned even more. Shizuka then added one last detail as the last push.

"And even if you learn how to master it in a relatively short time, you'll have less freedom and firepower compared to if you're using 4 different rifles. Like I said before, compared to 4 people having one rifle each, using one multi-type rifle definitely offers less firepower."

Akira nodded. Although on the surface, Shizuka's expression was saying that she felt guilty for not being able to comply with her customer's request, deep inside, she was hoping that with this, Akira would change his mind.

Sara then suddenly interjected casually.

“Say, Akira. If you want a rifle for sniping, you can just buy a sniper rifle, right?”

“No, I’m already carrying around CWH anti-material rifle, DVTS minigun, and A4WM automatic grenade launcher. So I thought that it would be hard for me to move if I carry another rifle, you see…”

“Now that you mention it, you did bring a lot of rifles with you back in the Seranthal building. Even I limit the number of rifles that I carry to two at most.”

Sara smiled wryly, Akira replied back with a bashful bitter smile.

“Well, uhh, to be honest, if it’s possible, I want to use all the rifles I buy. It would be such a waste to just let them sit in my vehicle after I bought them after all. What’s more, there’s nothing bad with having more firepower. All of my rifles have their different uses and it’s not like I can use any of them in place of another. But, it’s not like I can carry one more rifle, so I just thought that it would be great if there’s a gun with all functions from the other guns packed into one.”

“That’s kinda true, but still, normally you won’t carry each and every type of rifle just because each of them has a different use. If you’re planning to go to a ruin where you would need that kind of firepower, you can just invite us to come, you know? After all, we did ask you to come with us back in Mihazono ruin. Although it’s not like we can always come with you anytime you invite us since we have things to do too. But if you invite us to come, we might be able to fit it into our schedule… Or at least, Elena will, right, Elena?”

Sara just realized that she was talking for both herself and Elena without asking Elena first. So Sara sent a glance to Elena remembering that she was a little bit finicky about changing her schedule. So, it might really annoy her if Sara suddenly changed their schedule without her consent first.

Elena smiled, it seemed that what Sara said did not bother her at all.

“It’s alright. We did ask you to accompany us when we went to the Seranthal building in Mihazono ruin after all. I don’t mind shifting the schedule a bit if you invite us.”

Sara sighed in relief. Elena saw that and smiled bitterly at her, and then turned to Akira and smiled at him too.

“So there you have it. If you need more help, you can ask us anytime.”

“Thank you very much, I’ll ask for your help when I need it.”

Akira lightly smiled and bowed at Sara and Elena. Shizuka then smiled and made a suggestion to Akira.

“So then, Akira, what’s your plan? If you’re going with Elena and Sara, as I thought, you won’t need that rifle. You can just choose to bring rifles to complement Elena and Sara’s equipment. So instead of buying a multi-type rifle, you can just buy a sniper rifle, you know?”

“Ah, thank you, but as I thought, I still want to get a multi-type rifle. I feel like I would cause Elena-san and Sara-san trouble if I suddenly impose on their schedule, after all. Uhh, what can I say… I often decide things pretty randomly, forget deciding what to do depending on my mood of that day, I sometimes even make decisions based on my mood at a given moment. I also often get involved in incidents that I didn’t expect at all, so it would be great if I have a multi-type rifle that can do anything in that situation. So, as I thought, it’s better for me to still get a multi-type rifle, can you help me with that? Although it might be weird for me to say this since I’m the one who asked for help, I’m not sure that I even have enough money to buy one.”

“…I see, I’ll keep my eyes for any good deals then.”

Shizuka looked sad for a split-second. But before Akira could notice it, she immediately replaced it with a smile. And since it was a request from her customer, it’s not like she could just ignore it.

“So then, Akira, how much is your budget for this rifle?”

“1 billion Aurum is my upper limit.”

Akira said it without much thinking. But when he noticed that Shizuka raised her eyebrows and looked at him with widened eyes, he flusteredly shook his head and said.

“No, it’s not like I have that much money with me right now. It’s just that I haven’t really decided on a precise amount as the budget for that rifle. I just thought it would help me if I know the price and the quality of the rifle that I can get with such a price beforehand even if I’m planning to only buy that rifle after saving some money.”

“I see, in that case, is it okay if I ask you why you come up with that number?”

“Back then when I went to Mihazono ruin with Elena-san and Sara-san, I got 500 million Aurum from that request. So I thought that I would just double that amount for now.”

When Akira thought that he was able to get 500 million Aurum from last time, it made him think that 1 billion Aurum would not be out of his reach. Judging from the way he reacted, Shizuka figured that he put 1 billion Aurum as the upper limit to understand how good an equipment he could get with that amount of money, he did not think that he would be able to get and then use that much money anytime soon. Shizuka was slightly relieved when she understood that.

“Ahh, I see, so that’s what you meant, huh. That did surprise me for a bit, you know.”

“I’m sorry. But well, when I think about it, if I have 1 billion Aurum, I feel like I’ll spend it on a new augmented suit and other extra equipment instead, so it might be weird when I put that as my budget limit… Not to mention I did spend 500 million Aurum to buy that bike too. Although it’s not like I regret spending that much money on that bike, when I think about it, I still have to buy a vehicle too. It also surprises me for a bit, I never thought that the day would come when I have 500 million Aurum and I still don’t have enough money to get everything I need.”

Akira looked slightly conflicted and smiled bitterly when he said that. Shizuka only replied with a smile. After that, he stayed there for a bit, talking about how Hunters spent their money together with Shizuka, Elena, and Sara.

As their conversation continued, the subject then changed to Hunter's equipment. That was when Akira remembered the fact that one of his rucksacks was damaged, so he decided to buy a new rucksack while he was there.

The rucksack that he bought was a very robust rucksack designed to offer protection for its contents. Although its volume could expand greatly, it could also be folded to save spaces when it was empty. It was one of the expensive items that Shizuka had in her stock. It cost 3 million Aurum per bag and Akira bought several of them.

But before Shizuka processed it, she asked Akira once more just to be extra sure.

"Well, I know that you have enough money to buy them and I'm sure that Hunters would at least spend that much when they have to carry expensive relics, but are you really okay with it? You can buy cheaper ones, you know?"

"Yes. There was one time when I lost all my relics inside my backpack and something also happened recently that really made me worry about the relics inside my rucksack. So I'm planning to replace some of my rucksacks with stronger ones just like these."

Akira looked at his new rucksacks and smiled happily. He lost 40 million Aurum worth of relics back in the Seranthal building. And on his way back from Tsubakihara, he was about to lose a whole rucksack worth of relics too. So compared to losing those relics, these rucksacks were rather cheap. That was why he could not hold back his smile.

Now that he had finished his business in Shizuka's shop, he immediately went back home, leaving Shizuka, Sara, and Elena behind.

Sara waved lightly at Akira as she saw him off with a smile. But once he left, her expression turned serious as she immediately started talking about something that she could not bring up while Akira was around.

“But still, where did Akira get those relics?”

Although Sara believed Akira might as well just tell her if she asked him, in the end, she deliberately held herself back from asking that question. A source where a Hunter could find expensive relics was extremely important for Hunters. If she wanted to ask that question, she needed to be pretty close to Akira first.

To be honest, Sara was sure Akira was not that much of a stranger to her that it would anger him had she asked that question. But given what happened between them recently, Sara decided to be more careful for the time being.

Sara actually also wanted to apologize to Akira for the other day, but Shizuka stopped her. Apologizing to Akira now might backfire and remind him of what happened back then. So if she wanted to apologize, Shizuka advised her that it might be a good idea to wait for some time until he was not bothered anymore by that matter.

Elena recalled what Akira had bought and made a guess.

“A few high-quality rucksacks and 2 anti-forcefield bullets, huh. Akira did not hesitate at all when he bought those. So, basically, he knows for sure they would be useful to him. Though it’s only my guess, maybe he has found another undiscovered ruin.”

Elena then frowned.

[If that 1 billion Aurum is not based on the money that he got from Mihazono ruin but from his guess of how much money he can get from that undiscovered ruin… Then if he bought those anti-forcefield armour bullets because he knows that he’s going to use them to fight such powerful monsters there… Although he did say that he would ask us for help if he needs it, judging from his reaction, I'm not sure that he would really ask for our help…]

Last time, Akira casually told Elena and Sara about Yonozuka station ruin back then when it still had no name yet. But this time, it did not seem that Akira would do the same thing again if he really had found a new undiscovered ruin. Leaving aside the possibility that his trust dropped after what happened last time, the location of Yonozuka ruin also quickly spread among other Hunters after he told Elena and Sara. So Elena thought there was nothing strange for him to be more cautious this time.

[In the worst-case scenario, even trying to ask him this time might cause him to get suspicious of us trying to probe information from him. As long as he does not bring up the subject himself, we need to be careful not to touch on it. Though to be honest, it would be great if he would invite us to go to a prospective ruin since that way we can regain back his trust by working with him again…]

Last time, Elena and Sara invited Akira to go to Mihazono ruin thinking that it would be a light ruin exploration, but out of the blue, they got that sudden request to go to the Seranthal building which then turned into a fierce fight. Even now, Elena was not sure if Akira thought that it was worth the trouble or not. It was fully expected for someone to be cautious or even to decline an invitation from someone else that he or she did not trust. And it was doubly true when it came to Hunter work where they put their lives at stake too.

As someone who was used to handling negotiations, Elena tried to objectively evaluate herself from Akira's point of view. But with her feelings and wishes getting in her way, she could not help but make a stern face.

Shizuka looked at Elena and Sara. Both of them could not be said to be in a good mood, though she could guess why both of them looked rather troubled.

"Elena, Sara, about the relics that Akira brought here today. If both of you have the time, can you girls help me out? Of course, I'll also look for potential buyers, but can you help me out if you know someone who might buy them? If they sell well, it'll be easier for me to recommend expensive equipment to Akira."

Sara lightly smiled.

"Of course, I might even buy some from you. After all, I always wanted to get some extra spares."

"Just so you know, there's no discount."

"I know. Don't worry, I'll buy it at a higher price than the market price. After all, it'll still be cheaper than buying them from the other traders."

Elena smiled and jumped in too.

"In that case, I should look for a merchant who would buy them at a higher price to pull the market price up."

"Elena? We're friends, right? It's okay for me to expect some help from you, right?"

"But of course. It'll still be cheaper than buying them from the other traders, right? I can use that buying price as a trump card to raise the selling value of those relics when I negotiate with the other traders."

Sara and Elena exchanged mischievous smiles.

Looking at them, Shizuka also smiled as she thought.

If Elena and Sara did something to increase the value of Akira's relics, and if she let Akira know about it, it would help Elena and Sara regain his trust. It should also help lower the hurdle for Akira to ask for their help which in turn should change his mind about buying that multi-type rifle.

Shizuka did not lie when she discouraged Akira from buying a multi-type rifle. But she also did not tell him the biggest reason why he should not buy that rifle. And that reason was once Akira mastered how to use that rifle, it would be less likely for him to ask for other's help.

Akira wanted equipment to help him face any situations. He desired multi-function equipment because the thought of having other people to cover for his weakness never crossed his mind.

For Akira, other people were either enemies or not enemies, but never allies. He did not expect others to help him. That line of thinking was carved deep inside his mind and Shizuka noticed it.

Even if Akira helped someone, it was very likely that he did not expect that person to give anything back. But that was not out of kindness, or selflessness, or good virtue. It was simply because the concept of one hand washes the other had no place in his mind. So Shizuka predicted that he would be quick to abandon other people. The concept of relationship to him was completely one-sided, something that he only entertained out of his selfishness.

Shizuka hoped that one day Akira would find someone who would mutually help one another. It could be herself or anyone else, she honestly did not care who it might be.

__*__*__*__

On another day, just like usual, Akira went to Higaraka residence ruin again. And just like last time, he was there to training his skill in detecting enemies and sneaking around the ruin and effectively searching for relics in a ruin.

If it was not for training, there was no real motivation for Akira to do something so tiring in that ruin. So at first, he was not that excited with the training, but it did not take long for Akira to switch gears and start taking the training seriously. But this time, there was something different, Akira looked around and slightly frowned.

“…Alpha, don’t you think there are more people than usual today?”

“You’re indeed right about that, Akira. Let’s gain some distance from them before starting to look for relics again.”

“Thought so, alright then.”

In the middle of the training, Akira regularly checked his information terminal to look for enemies and other Hunters while avoiding them. He was also being careful so they would not be able to detect him. Although he had been doing that all this time, today, there were many occasions where he was passing close to other Hunters or monsters. Because of that, today’s relic hunting proceeded slower than usual.

“The relics in this ruin are already mostly depleted, right? So why are they coming to this ruin?”

“I bet they are here because of some kind of rumour saying that a Hunter found some expensive relics in an unlikely ruin.”

“…That’s me, isn’t it?”

“Yup.”

Akira made a stern face and did not say anything for a few seconds. He then went back to his bike that he parked not too far from him and hopped on it.

“Alpha, let’s head back for today. There’s something I want to check.”

“Sure.”

Akira then left that ruin. After he was gone from that place, other Hunters who were scanning his position appeared. They then started searching carefully at the places that he had searched.

When Akira arrived back at Kugamayama city, he immediately headed to Katsuragi’s trailer. Katsuragi, who was waiting in his trailer just like usual, noticed Akira parking his bike not too far from him.

“Akira, huh. Ah, right, the medicines that you ordered just arrived. Are you here for those medicines today? …- Wait, don’t tell me that you’re here with more old-world terminals.”

“I’ll take the medicines, and also, there’s something else that I want to ask you.”

“Oh, what is it?”

Akira then told Katsuragi what happened that day in Higaraka residence ruin. About the Hunters who were flooding a ruin that should have no more valuable relics anymore, how it was obvious that those Hunters were watching and following him, and how he was suspecting that it was because of Katsuragi’s doing.

But Katsura casually replied.

“Yeah, no surprise at all.”

“No surprise…?”

Akira was surprised. He did not expect Katsuragi to say something that sounded as if he just admitted his involvement. But seeing Akira’s expression, Katsuragi exasperatedly explained.

“Just so you know, I never told anyone else that you brought those old-world information terminals to me. Just think about it, if I do something like that, other Hunters would definitely steal those relics from you and it would end up bringing less profit for me. After all, that would mean you would bring fewer relics to my shop, you know.”

“Well, you have a point there, but…”

Akira did not look fully convinced, so Katsuragi sighed and continued.

“Thought it might be weird for me to be the one saying this, but it seems that you underestimated the effect of bringing those relics to me twice.”

“Effect? But I’m just normally selling relics though?”

Katsuragi sighed again, there was a mix of exasperation on his face.

“Good grief! Although you’re already stronger than those common Hunters, you’re still a beginner in terms of Hunter knowledge and experience, huh?”

“Well, sorry about that.”

Akira looked slightly offended, to which Katsuragi gave a big smile.

“Very well then, it would be a huge pain in the neck to have one of my main customers doubt me. So I’ll give you a long detailed explanation here.”

Katsuragi and Akira went into the staff room in Katsuragi’s trailer, and just like last time, Katsuragi prepared some drinks and put them on the table between them before they sat face to face across the table. Katsuragi then immediately started his explanation.

The information terminals that Akira brought to Katsuragi were of very good condition. Those relics were hard to find among the ruins around Kugamayama city, but even so, a low ranking Hunter like Akira was able to get his hand on those relics, twice no less.

If it was only once, it could be dismissed as just luck. But since Akira brought them to Katsuragi twice, it opened up to a whole variety of possibilities. After all, it opened up the possibility of a narrative that it did not matter whether Akira found them at first out of pure luck or because he worked super hard to find those relics. But Akira, who did not know their worth, did not expect them to be that valuable the first time he brought them to Katsuragi, and so he decided to go look for those relics again for the second time.

It might hint at the existence of another undiscovered ruin. After all, it was a normal thing to find similar relics from around the same ruin.

“Those relics inspectors that I called saw you sell those relics twice themselves. Although it would still be a guess, it was enough for some people to make their moves. Those relics are just simply that valuable, you see. But to be honest, I find it strange for them to react this quickly just from that. I bet you sold your relics in another place, right?”

“…Those were just old-world clothing. It should not have anything to do with this.”

“Too naive! Expensive relics are still expensive regardless even if they are only just old-world clothing. Though I’m sure they’re nowhere as expensive as old-world terminals, it does not change the fact that you brought expensive relics 3 times in a row.”

“…But it’s still strange for them to follow me just because of that. They should not know where I sold my relics and what kind of relics that I sold.”

“Again, too naive! I don’t know where you sold your relics, but if that shop has some connections with the Hunter Office, it would be nothing strange for that information to quickly spread around. Or more like, those shops which partnered with the Hunter Office could use your Hunter Code to track the type of relics you sell. As a matter of fact, those people who want to avoid that sell their relics to shops that have no connections with the Hunter Office. I thought that you’re only bringing relics to Sheryl’s place or to me because you want to avoid that too, but that doesn’t seem to be the case, huh?”

“So that’s why, huh…”

Akira regretted his own blunder, but he was also relieved at the same time. After all, it meant that it was unlikely for Shizuka to leak that information herself. Shizuka shop was most likely partnered with the Hunter Office, so he bet his deals with Shizuka were registered into the Hunter Office since she was obliged to do so. And someone must have sniffed on that information afterwards. With his suspicion now gone, Akira cheered back up.

“But if that kind of information is always registered in the Hunter Office, won’t that make those Hunters wanting to avoid it stop selling relics to those shops?”

“High ranking Hunters can ask the Hunter Office to put an extra lid on that information. Of course, it’s only available for those high ranking Hunters with special privileges. By the way, what is your Hunter ranking?”

“If I’m not mistaken, 29.”

Katsuragi looked a bit surprised as well as exasperated.

“Those powerful equipment with such a low Hunter Rank, it won’t be strange for people to call you a fraud.”

“…Fraud, huh?”

Akira smiled wryly. Most of his strength was fully relying on Alpha. So he thought that low Hunter Rank was suitable for his real strength without Alpha’s support.

Katsuragi then continued his explanation.

The reason why those Hunters stopped back-tracking Akira’s activities only up to Higaraka residence ruin was simply because that was the result of them putting up a net based on how far a low-ranking Hunter of ranking 29 could normally go. That way, they could narrow down their guesses without having to keep their eyes on Akira. Although it took some money, it was nothing compared to the money that they could get from those old-world information terminals.

As Katsuragi explained to him, Akira started to understand the effect of him selling those relics.

“Well, I guess that’s the gist of it, huh. If I have to add something, there’s also a good chance those relics inspectors that I called also leaked that information. But even so, that would not be my fault. I did ask for your permission first before I called them and you gave me your approval after all.”

“I know, I will not blame you about that at all.”

Katsuragi gave a big nod, he then casually said.

“…So then, are you here to buy anything today?”

Akira opened his new rucksack, pulled out his relics, and lined them on the table. This time, it was 6 old-world information terminals. When Akira was done, Katsuragi could not hold back his joy and laughed heartily.

"…Including the old-world clothing, this would make it 4 times in a row, right? If it wasn't you, I would have gotten suspicious at this point, you know."

"It's not like I'm forcing you to buy them."

"Geez, don't say that. So then, did you get these in Higaraka residence ruin? Do you think you still can find some more of these relics there?"

Akira replied instantly in such a casual manner.

"I have no obligation to tell you anything."

Katsuragi tried his best to hold back his laughter.

"My bad, my bad, I'll at least ask you this again, is it okay if I call some relics inspectors to check these relics?"

"No need to ask me that again, you can go ahead and just do that."

Katsuragi could not hold back his laughter as he proceeded to make a call. After that, he bought those relics from Akira for 70 million Aurum. Thanks to the small adjustment to his capital that he did beforehand, he had no problem paying that amount of money this time.

Katsuragi did not lie there. Although he did not leak the information that it was Akira who sold those old-world information terminals, he was actually spreading information that he had some connections with a Hunter who could get such a valuable relic. For a merchant like Katsuragi, having a connection to a competent Hunter brought him a lot of benefits. After all, having a mere rumour of such a thing out in the public was enough to pull up his revenue.

Though Akira did not give a straight answer to Katsuragi's questions, he also did not lie there. Even if Katsuragi misunderstood him thinking that Akira actually got those relics from Higaraka residence ruin and there were still similar relics that he could find there, it would not cause any trouble for him. Not to mention, Akira was not that close to Katsuragi that he would go out of his own way to fix that misunderstanding.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 174, The Gang's Children and Their Side Job

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The next day, Akira went to Higaraka residence ruins yet again. He was sitting on top of his bike as he looked over the surprising current situation of the ruin. To be more precise, he did expect that to happen, but he did not expect it to be this big.

"Yup, there are so many of them today."

Alpha had her usual smile plastered on her face. It was unclear whether she fully expected that to happen or if she simply did not care.

"That's true. There are quite a lot of them today."

That day, many Hunters gathered in that ruin. Some of them brought their vehicles and even huge trucks too. There was even some heavy machinery on-site.

"I bet they're here because of that rumour. But still, didn't expect them to be this many."

Of course, at that point, Akira understood why Alpha made him train in that ruin for these past few days. It was to make sure that those Hunters would think those relics that Akira gathered from the inner part of Kuzushara ruin's Tsubakihara building were originally from Higaraka residence ruin.

The reason why he kept taking a long detour to and from the ruin as well as why he had been doing training to look for relics in that ruin and why he was only selling relics little by little, all of them were for the sake of twisting the rumour in case if the rumour of where Akira got his relics came up.

"I guess these guys will be looking for relics that don't even exist in this place until they decide to give up, huh…"

Akira thought about those guys that kept looking around the place meaninglessly and felt a bit sorry for them. But with that being said, he had no plans to correct that wrong rumour at all. So instead, he mumbled something else as if to make excuses.

"…Getting correct information is really important."

Alpha did not seem to be bothered by that at all as she smiled amusedly and said.

"It's nothing for you to worry about. The ability to gain the correct information is a very important skill for a Hunter and they don't have that, that's all there is to it. Moreover, with this many people looking around, maybe one or two of them will really find some valuable relics."

"Is that so? But this ruin is already exhausted of any valuable relics, right? So like, is that even possible?"

"There might be places that no one has checked yet. When they say that this place is already depleted, it does not mean that there are no longer any valuable relics in this place, it only means that looking for relics in this place isn't worth the trouble. And with this many people here, they might really find something. Also, those guys are carrying high-quality information-gathering devices, so that will also increase the chance for them to actually find valuable relics. But with that being said, of course, even if some of them find valuable relics, I'm pretty sure that they'll still end up in the red."

"Then how about you, Alpha? Can you easily find that kind of relic in this ruin?"

"I'm sure I've said this before, my detection ability is greatly reduced when I'm outside Kuzusuhara ruin. If you still want to give it a try, you should buy a very expensive information-gathering device first. Though I'm sure you still can't expect too much even if you do so."

"…Hmmm, you're right. I'll think about getting a better information-gathering device."

After he said so, Akira started thinking about something else.

[Now that I think about it, I met Alpha back in Kuzusuhara ruin, and back then she said that I was able to gather those relics from the Tsubakihara building because she made a deal with the AI manager of that building. As I thought, there must be some kind of connection between Alpha and Kuzusuhara ruin…]

Now that he realized it, he also noticed that it should have been obvious from the get-go. But he knew nothing more than that and he felt like Alpha would scold him if he tried to ask her. So Akira decided to push that curiosity to the back of his mind and just shook it off from his mind for now as not to drag him down.

"So then, are we still going to do relic hunting training for today? Looking at this situation, I don't think this is a good time to train here though."

"You're right, let's just head back home for today."

Akira made a U-turn with his bike and headed back to the city. Although some of the Hunters there saw that, it did not stop them from searching the ruin. As a matter of fact, some of them even started looking more diligently since they thought that the rumoured person decided to head back home because he could not afford to get close to the location where he found those expensive relics with this many Hunters around.

As the rumours spread further, more and more Hunters came to that ruin and it did not seem that it would slow down anytime soon.

When Akira arrived back at Kugamayama city, he went straight to Sheryl's base. He received a text message from Colbert on his way back saying that Colbert was looking to meet him in case he was free and was around. Though judging from that message, it did not seem that Colbert was expecting Akira to really come.

Though he could just ignore it, since he decided to cancel his training in Higaraka residence ruin, Akira had some free time now and by coincidence, he was also somewhere close to Sheryl's base. So Akira decided to visit the base.

In his mind, he had no reason to go to meet Sheryl unless she had business with him and he would not go as far as to readjust his schedule just to go to meet her. He went to Sheryl's base only when he had some free time. For Akira, Sheryl only mattered that much. But lately, that line of thinking had been slightly affected by Sheryl pleading with him. Though he had not realized it yet, there was no mistaking that he would be shocked if he noticed this change.

Akira was guided to a room inside Sheryl's base. Colbert, Revin, Erio, and some of the other children from the gang were already inside that room. Colbert was so surprised when he saw Akira enter the room.

"Akira, didn't expect you to actually come, you know?"

Akira looked slightly offended.

"What are you even talking about? You're the one who asked me to come, didn't you?"

"I did. But you didn't even reply at all, so I thought that you wouldn't come, you know. Well, just calm down for now. It's my loss, you see."

“Your loss?”

Colbert smiled wryly there as he pushed the money on top of the table to Erio’s side. Those were the money that Colbert and Revin bet, and since Akira actually came, Erio and the other children won the bet.

To be honest, Erio also wanted to put his bet on Akira not coming. But when Revin brought up Akira’s relation with Sheryl, people would get suspicious of him and it would damage his position if he also put his bet on Akira not coming. So he ended up putting his bet that Akira would come.

Revin seemed really frustrated. Although it was not a huge amount of money compared to the amount of money that he was regularly earning, for someone who had a debt to pay, losing a bet that he thought he would win still hurt.

Colbert only smiled bitterly at his loss, while Erio and the other children were flustered by the large sum of money, or at least that was the case from their point of view, that they just won.

Akira sighed, he looked even more annoyed.

“I see now, so you guys are betting whether I would really come or not, huh. Don’t tell me that this is the reason why you called me.”

“Of course I won’t be calling you for something this trivial, you know. I’ll explain the rest, just take a seat for now.”

Colbert noticed Akira’s annoyance and tried to calm Akira, who was still unhappy. Nonetheless, Akira still took a sit.

“So then, what is it?”

“I’m just wondering if you can help them if you have some free time.”

Colbert pointed his finger at Erio and the other gang children as he started his explanation. Erio felt a bit awkward there.

For the past few days, Colbert had sought help from Erio and the other children in that gang for a certain job. To be more precise, Colbert made a request to Sheryl and Sheryl was lending Erio and his friends to Colbert.

The job that they were talking about was to find dead Hunters who still had debts. The slum extended across a pretty large area, the battle in Ezont Family's base the other day had left the area filled with dead bodies. Their job was to take a picture of the dead bodies using their information terminal to check if they still have debts left or not. And if they found dead Hunters with debt, they would need to put that dead body inside a body bag and bring them to the creditor companies.

As for those dead bodies with no debt, they would just leave them be. They would not even take the corpse's belongings since not only it would slow them down. It might also put Erio and the other children in needless danger if they did that.

There was an unwritten rule in the slum city that a corpse's belongings belonged to the gang that owned the territory where that dead body was found. But with the Ezont family destroyed, no one was in control of that territory, thus the rule there followed the law of the wasteland.

But with that being said, it was not like they could just take those belongings and bring them back home. It could be seen as Sheryl's gang trying to take over that territory with no owners after the last gang that owned it was destroyed.

Of course, the equipment left behind could be turned into quite a lot of money when gathered, and if they followed the first-come-first-served principle, various gangs would try to be the first to gather those equipment which would then lead to fighting and robbing each other. So in order to prevent that from happening, the gangs were in the middle of a discussion. Anyone who tried to steal a start there would face all the other gangs that were interested in the matter.

Erio and his friends had accepted that job from Colbert to look for dead debtors while trying to keep themselves from harm by not touching the dead bodies' belongings.

After Akira listened to Colbert's explanation up until that point, he suddenly asked Colbert a question.

"So you want me to help them do that, huh? It sounds like too much work and it's not like you need me for that job, right? I'm sure Erio and the other children are enough to do that job, no?"

Colbert shook his head.

"That's true for those dead bodies outside Ezont Family's base, but that's not the case for inside the base. For those dead bodies outside the base, we don't have any trouble as long as we don't get into a fight with the other gangs or the people who live around the area. But when we want to get inside the base, there's a good chance that we have to deal with the other Hunters who are aiming for the loot inside. After all, the quality and the amount of loots left inside that base is on a different level compared to outside the base."

Ezont Family was a huge gang. So of course, they left a lot of valuable items in their warehouses. Not to mention, there were destroyed vehicles, tanks, and powered suits scattered inside the base too. Many were killed in that base from that battle and the equipment that they left were mostly high-quality equipment. All of them could fetch a lot of money from the point of view of slum residents.

So, in short, it was as if an old-world ruin suddenly appeared right next to the slum, and to top it off, that ruin was relatively safer since it was not guarded by monsters. All the equipment that was left scattered inside that base were like relics that were free for the taking. There was no surprise that some Hunters and ex-Hunters immediately made their moves to secure those loot.

"The air in that place is completely different, including the skillset and knowledge needed to avoid fighting there. I would say that place was much closer to an old-world ruin rather than a part of the slum city. We're mostly done with checking the dead bodies outside Ezont Family's base. That's why we're planning to go inside the base next, but it's not safe for Revin and me to bring Erio and the other children into that base. That's why I'm wondering if you might give us a hand."

"You can just leave the children behind and go there by yourself, no?"

"Well, that's the plan if you won't come. But of course, if we can't bring Erio and the other children, then I can't pay any reward to Sheryl's gang. I'm sure you know that you can't let them keep relying on your money. It's better to get as much money as they could when they have the chance to make sure that they'll be able to be independent of you, don't you think so too? Isn't that why you're training them too, no?"

Akira looked unsure.

"If I help you, then how about my reward?"

"Sorry, but I can only pay you the same amount of money. I'm actually doing this because I'm getting paid by someone else, you see. If you want more, you should discuss it with Sheryl's gang and see if they would share some of the money that they get with you. Basically, you, I, Revin and Sheryl's gang will get the same amount of money for taking the job. You can keep anything that you pick, but just remember not to forget your real job."

Akira 'hmmed' again, Colbert looked slightly surprised there.

For a Hunter like Akira, the money that he could get from that job was nothing more than spare money. If Colbert told Akira in detail how much he would earn from taking that job, there was a good chance Akira would refuse to take that job. But contrary to his expectation, Akira seemed to be seriously considering taking on the job.

Though Colbert did not understand what was going on, it seemed that there was a chance Akira would take that job. So he decided to give a little more push. Although he was not expecting much when he called Akira to come, it would be helpful if Akira would actually come with them.

“Since you came here, it means that you’re free right now, right? You should come with us. If we don’t get real Hunters among us, the other people might look down on Erio and the other children, you know.”

“Real Hunters?”

Akira looked confused, it seemed that he did not understand what Colbert was talking about. Seeing that, Colbert pointed at Erio. Akira also looked at Erio but he still could not understand.

Alpha then jumped in to explain.

“Akira, look closely at them. Although they don’t look exactly like you, don’t you think they look similar?”

Erio and the other children were wearing black attire along with a black coat.

“Now that you mention, that’s kinda true. So, what about it?”

Akira still did not get it, Alpha smiled bitterly as she exasperatedly said.

“…So in short, they’re trying to disguise themselves as you so that other people won’t mess with them.”

Erio and the other children were disguising themselves to be Akira since Akira could not come often ever since he restarted his Hunter job. Fortunately, not many people knew Akira’s face, so from afar, people could easily mistake those children as Akira and that was enough to keep them safe.

Akira finally understood what Colbert was talking about. But even so, he still found it weird. So he then made a serious look as he said.

“Erio, I don’t mind going with you, but, I won’t be protecting you. I’ll do my job properly but I won’t do anything more than that. Since I have nothing else to do, if you’re okay with that, then I don’t mind going.”

“That’s more than enough, thank you very much.”

Although from their conversations it seemed like they asked Akira to come without asking for Sheryl's permission first, it did not seem that Akira was angry about it. So Erio sighed in relief.

__*__*__*__

Back in Yatusbayashi clinic, Yatsubayashi was making a troubled face in his clinic room.

"Another failure, huh. Wait, not really, it's not a complete failure."

The display device in front of him showed the video of Tiol escaping his experiment room. Tiol ate his restrains to free himself, walked slowly towards the door, and tried pushing the wall with his left hand.

After that, suddenly, something exploded, leaving a big hole in that wall. Though his left arm was blown off too, Tiol did not seem to be bothered at all as he left the room through that hole.

Yatsubayashi watched that video multiple times, zooming and replaying some parts of the video to check it closely.

[If my guess is correct, it seems that his gunpowder producing organ is working fine. Did he produce the gunpowder from the restrain that he ate? I used robust restrains that is used to restrain people with enhanced body. It's not the same as eating a fork, so how exactly did he do that…?]

Yatsubayashi took some time making various guesses while looking at that video. After he gathered his thoughts, he finally stopped the video and changed into a map of the lower district. There were red dots displayed on that map.

[The trackers are working as they should. But the bomb that I planted in his head would not explode. Did the nanomachine that reached his brain also dismantle the bomb? Or is it that he dismantled the trigger? I have no idea at all. I do want to check it, but it doesn't seem that he'll return back anytime soon. He even tried to escape. I'm not sure if he still has any shred of reasoning left, but it did not seem like he's going back to Sheryl's base either. It seems that he's just roaming around the same place.]

Yatsubayashi mumbled.

"Tiol-kun, what are you exactly doing there?"

Tiol's tracking device was showing that he was roaming around the same area that was not too far from the slum since yesterday.

__*__*__*__

Akira finished his preparation and headed to Ezont Family's base. The garden of the base was still laden with the leftover of the battles from the other day, except for a small change.

Akira looked slightly surprised as he saw the scene in front of him. Colbert noticed that Akira had a sharp stern look as if he was looking at his enemies.

"Akira, what's wrong?"

"No, it's just that I don't see the tanks and the powered suits from that battle."

During the battle, the Ezont family and Haurias sent out their powered suits. When Akira escaped that place, it was still filled with destroyed powered suits and tanks. But they were nowhere to be seen now.

Colbert sighed in relief.

"Don't scare me like that. Of course, people took them away first since they can be exchanged for money."

"People who?"

"Maybe one of those Hunters. I bet they took them away even if they had to rent some heavy machinery. I heard that they even fought against each other over the loot, you know. Well, it only took a few days for them to carry everything away, so I’m sure things have calmed down by now. That’s also the reason why I can bring myself here. After all, I would hate to get involved fighting over the loot.”

Akira nodded, he was amazed at how people actually did carry all of those big and heavy wreckages out from that place.

Colbert looked at the nervous Erio and the other children and warned them.

“We’ll be searching this place now, but let me remind you this. Don’t shoot without our permission and refrain from even grabbing your rifles. It might cause a fight. Got it?”

“Y-Yes!”

“Alright then, let’s go.”

They then entered the base and started checking the dead bodies.

They continued their work. Akira, Colbert, and Revin searched for the dead bodies using their information-gathering device. Erio and the other children then checked those dead bodies. If any of them had any outstanding debts, they were put in a body bag and carried outside to the people from the credit companies who were waiting not too far outside the base.

Erio and the other children were already used to seeing dead bodies, but couldn’t hold well when they looked at the badly dismembered corpses. Every time they saw a mutilated corpse, they could not help but wince.

“Say, Erio. Akira-san was here, right?”

“Yeah, I heard that he came here to rescue boss. Though I don’t know the details, I heard that he fought pretty fiercely.”

“So in short, some of these corpses might be the ones that Akira-san killed, right?”

“Probably, yes. What’s wrong with that?”

“…No, it’s just that, we’re borrowing these rifles from that Akira-san right now, right? When I think that these rifles are powerful enough to create these dead bodies, it’s just that, you know, carrying them around like this is pretty scary.”

Akira lent his CWH anti-material rifle, DVTS minigun, and A4WM automatic grenade launcher to Erio and the other children. If Akira was carrying all of those alone, it would definitely make him stick out from the rest and render the other children who were disguising as him useless.

Although those rifles were pretty heavy, Erio and the other children at least figured how to carry them thanks to the exoskeletons that they were wearing. Naturally, they wore those because they thought that it would be hard for them to carry the cyborg corpses. So they had decided to get some exoskeletons from Katsuragi beforehand.

Hunters regarded exoskeletons as something inferior to augmented suits. After all, it was not designed for high-speed manoeuvre during combat. At most, it was only used for carrying heavy goods. Because of that, they were sold at a relatively cheap price and Sheryl’s gang was able to buy multiple of them.

Erio made a face saying that he could understand the other boy’s feelings.

“Those are anti-monster rifles for Hunters. I guess this is what would happen when they’re used against normal humans.”

“To be honest, I always thought that we could explore the old-world ruins one day if we keep taking that training from Akira-san. But it’s filled with monsters that we can’t defeat unless we have these kinds of rifles, right? So like, I can’t be so sure anymore now…”

The young boy sighed and looked discouraged. Erio tried to cheer him up with a light smile.

“Shouldn’t it be fine if we just go to the ruins with less danger?”

“You might be right, but where exactly?”

“Like Higaraka residence ruin, for example. It’s already pretty deserted and there are not that many monsters there…”

Erio suddenly stopped there, the young boy frowned and found it weird. Erio remembered the last time they accompanied Akira to Higaraka residence ruin, they were attacked by a swarm of monsters.

Erio then said as if to convince himself.

“…No, that was a special case. Normally, something like that would not happen. Not to mention, there are those general-purpose requests for new Hunters too. It should be alright if we start from those relatively easy Hunter jobs, and then we can gather better equipment from there. That Revin guy did say that it’s much easier to explore dangerous ruins when we have new and better equipment after all…”

“Wait, isn’t that guy in big trouble from the debt that he’s racking from his equipment and ammo?”

“Aah, but Akira-san and Colbert-san are not having trouble with debt, right?”

“If I’m not mistaken, Colbert-san had both of his hands eaten by monsters and Akira-san once got sent to the hospital after almost getting killed though. Something like he had to pay 60 million Aurum for the treatment…”

They went silent. Although they had big dreams of becoming Hunters, when they thought about the Hunters around them, it reminded them of things that they did not want to go through as they sighed almost simultaneously.

Although the other children looked discouraged, Erio then said in a good mood as if it did not affect him at all.

“I won’t give up though. I’ll get stronger, earn a lot of money, rent a house, and live with Alicia.”

The other boys smiled wryly and looked at him with a slight mockery.

“So this is the power of a guy with a girlfriend, huh? I want one too.”

Erio and the other children tried to shoo the dark mood there with silly talks as they continued their job.

Silavin: Isn’t that just normal? I mean… even without a girlfriend, you would want what is best for yourself no?

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 175, The Mansion's Monster

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira and his companion finished checking the corpses outside the mansion, so they moved to check the corpses inside. Since no one took care of the corpses, the mansion was filled with them from the last battle. The floor, as well as the walls and the ceilings, was still dyed red with blood.

Akira and the other Hunters felt nothing at all when they were welcomed with such a scene as they stepped into the mansion. But that was not the case for Erio and the other non-hunters, they looked obviously distraught.

A short check was enough for them to find a room filled with dead bodies inside that mansion. The people who came beforehand had no interest except for the loot, so they just piled the corpses in one place to clear the way for them. Colbert decided to start working in that room.

As one of the many people who were responsible for that, Akira, did expect to find something like this. But he also noticed something that he did not understand when he saw all the corpses there. Alpha noticed it.

"Akira, what's wrong? If you regret fighting in that battle, it would be great if you can hold yourself back from doing something like that next time."

“No, that’s not the problem. I just thought with all of these corpses and blood, this place doesn’t smell like blood at all.”

“Oh, about that, huh. There are reasons for that, you see. The cyborg, for example, doesn’t rot even after they die. While the medicines that they use sometimes also contained an anti-rot drug. It is also said that the colourless mist of the eastern district prevents the smell from spreading. Well, it’s basically the same reason as to why the corpses out there in the wasteland don’t smell.”

“So that’s the reason, huh?”

“Although most of them are in a bad shape, they’re basically the leftover after that battle. Fortunately, most of them still retain their original shape, it should at least help Erio and the other children to identify those corpses.”

“Now that you mention it, that is kind of true.”

Akira nodded as he understood what Alpha was saying. After that, he immediately lost interest in that subject. Although there were other things that were out of place, he did not notice any of those.

While Erio and the other children were checking the corpses, Revin was checking the equipment those dead corpses left behind.

It did not matter if it was a powerful rifle, or if it was mostly destroyed, it was nothing more than wreckage. Of course, Revin could fix them, but its worth would still be greatly lowered. As for the augmented suits, although they were expensive, most of them were readjusted for personal use. So it would be worthless to resell them. Not to mention that he would need a good connection for selling them too, otherwise, he would not be able to sell them at a good price, and to top it off, taking them off from the corpses were too much of a hassle.

That was why Revin was separating the augmented suits from the rifles that were easier to check if they were badly damaged or not. Thus easier to predict how much money they could fetch from selling them. Colbert, who noticed him, looked sternly at him.

“Revin. Didn’t I tell you that you’re free from doing that as long as you don’t forget the real reason why we are here?”

“Don’t worry. With this many corpses around, we’ll have to wait for a bit until Erio and the other children finish checking all of them. I’m just using the waiting time for something more productive here.”

“If you have free time, you should help them in checking the corpses or help to keep eyes on the surroundings.”

“Don’t worry, I’m doing that too.”

Although Revin was answering lightly, he was still sorting the loot with a rather serious face. Since these were not old-world relics, they had no obligation to bring them to Katsuragi. Furthermore, he did not have to spend bullets to gather them. He needed to get money from wherever he could in order to repay his debt.

Colbert also knew Revin’s situation. Because of that, he held himself back from saying anything more after letting out a big sigh.

Akira was watching the surroundings when a question came up in his mind.

“Colbert, I feel like we already found and carried quite a lot of bodies, are they really that many?”

“Hm? Well, it’s not that many if we’re talking about the debtors for the company that paid me. But the boss of the company, Tomejima, seems to have discussed it with the other companies to share information. So in short, we’re also searching for the debtors of those companies too. That’s why there are a lot of them. Also, there are not that many people who are interested in doing this job.”

“Is that so? Why is that?”

“I don’t really know the details, but the recent rumour is that someone found pretty expensive relics from a rather unexpected ruin. So I’m sure they are more interested in that rumour.”

Of course, in the case of Colbert, he still had not completely recovered from the trauma after both of his hands were eaten by monsters during an expedition, that was why he was not interested in that rumour. As for Revin, he could not go hunting for relics because of the deal he had with Katsuragi.

“…I see…”

Akira looked away and just stopped their conversation there.

Colbert noticed it, but he did not dig too deep. He believed that it was understandable for a Hunter like Akira to at least have some interest in such a rumour.

Akira suddenly looked at the door into the room. Colbert followed suit and saw two men enter the room. Revin stopped sorting the loot the moment he noticed them.

Those guys walked toward Akira and Colbert and casually said to Colbert.

“Well now, isn’t it Colbert? What a coincidence meeting you here.”

Colbert lightly laughed.

“Peppa, huh? Why are you here?”

“Nah, I just came to say hello since I heard that you’re here. Moreover…”

Peppa looked at Akira, Erio, and the other children as if to evaluate them before lightly laughing.

“I see that you’ve really splendidly fallen now, to think that you’re earning money by taking these brats with you. You’ve really stopped being a Hunter, huh. But like, isn’t it hard living without hunting for relics?”

“I can say the same to you too. Seeing you here means that you have nothing better to do, right? Or is that you’re here to scavenge the dead Hunters? Well, for a Hunter like you who can’t get any good relic even when you get into the ruin, I guess it’s not a wrong course of action though.”

“You bastard…”

After that short exchange, Colbert was still calm like usual, while Peppa looked slightly offended.

The guy who came with Peppa, Bosch, interjected and stopped Peppa.

“Peppa, cut it out.”

Peppa clicked his tongue and stopped prodding Colbert. Colbert snorted and looked exasperatedly at Bosch.

“Bosch, you should keep him properly under your leash, isn’t that your job?”

Bosch lightly smiled, it was an honest smile for his old friend.

“Don’t say that. It was your job in the first place, wasn’t it? I’m already giving it my best, you know?”

“Humph, though that might be true, that is your job now. So I have nothing to do with that. I know that we’re acquaintances, but you should stop him from picking a fight like that. It’s dangerous.”

Colbert and Bosch had a friendly air around them.

“So then, Colbert, what are you doing here? Don’t tell me that you’re here to pick up the loot from these corpses.”

Bosch caught Revin who was sorting the loot as if there was nothing to worry about. Peppa looked mockingly at Revin.

“I’m here to search for dead debtors. These other guys are here to help me out… And also, just leave that guy alone. He’s in big trouble from debts, you see. As someone who is also here to keep my eyes on him, I can’t really bring myself to tell him to stop, you know?”

After Colbert said that, Bosch could not help but frown.

“You’re still doing work for those creditor companies, huh?”

“…Well, I have my reasons too.”

“I know it’s not my place to say this, but if you get yourself too comfortable working inside the city, you might not be able to return back to doing Hunter job, you know? You already have both of your arms healed. Honestly speaking, I think it’s a good idea if you go hunting for relics once in a while as a rehabilitation.”

“I know…”

Colbert was a little bummed from that rather harsh but indeed true advice from his friend.

__*__*__*__

Tiol was munching the corpses inside a room. He ate the cyborg bodies whole together with their mechanical parts. He easily lifted the mechanical body up with his left hand and put them inside his mouth.

His left hand was no longer of a human hand. To be more precise, a huge gun grew out from his left shoulder. As he ate more and more cyborgs, the gun on his shoulder grew longer and bigger. Eventually, once it grew out into a complete rifle, it detached from his shoulder and fell to the ground.

There were already other parts on the ground. Small arms were growing out from some of those parts and those arms suddenly started moving. They were dragging themselves toward each other and reassembled themselves into something that looked like an autonomous turret monster.

The newly made turret walked away and lined up beside the other autonomous turrets that were made before it. There were already a few dozen autonomous turrets lined up inside that room.

Tiol, who was eating metals without saying anything, suddenly stopped and looked away. Although he was looking in the direction of a pile of dead cyborgs, he was actually able to see past that pile and through the wall behind it too.

He then turned at the small mechanical monsters in front of him as if he was giving them a command. After that, all of the small mechanical monsters immediately sprung into action. They removed the wreckages blocking the entrance to that room and left the room.

Tiol only silently watched the small mechanical monsters leave the room. Once all of them were out, he started eating the Hunter corpses and their equipment again.

__*__*__*__

Akira was keeping his eyes on his surroundings which doubled as training for him while talking with Alpha. But when he noticed a small change in his information-gathering device, his expression immediately turned stern as he shifted his focus to check that signal more closely.

But before he could do that, Alpha suddenly warned him.

“Akira, there are monsters.”

“Monsters? Not Hunters?”

“Either that or it’s a group of non-human cyborgs that are moving in an organized manner. It’s up to you to think which one it is.”

“Alright, I’ll go and get back my rifles from Erio and the other children.”

“There’s no need to do that. Since we have them here, how about we get them to fight too? After all, it’s not like you’re here to protect them anyway.”

“Are they going to be okay?”

Akira was a bit surprised by that suggestion from Alpha, but she replied with a smile that was filled with confidence.

“I’ll take command, so it’ll be okay. Meanwhile, you should try to face them without my support as a training.”

“Roger that!”

Akira reloaded armour piercing ammo into his AAH and A2D assault rifles.

Erio and the children were using the same goggles that they used for training. The goggles itself was nothing special, but even so, it could be used to communicate with each other in short-range. That was why they were also using those goggles outside of training.

Instructions suddenly appeared on the displays of those goggles in a similar manner as if when they were in the middle of that training. Erio and the other children were surprised and looked at Akira the moment they noticed those instructions. But when they saw Akira hurriedly readying his rifle and repositioning himself, they also flusteredly started moving out following the instructions on their goggles.

Colbert noticed that change and readied his rifle. He then looked at Akira with a stern face and threw a question at him.

“What’s going on?”

“Monsters. Get ready.”

Colbert, Bosch, and Peppa immediately checked their information-gathering device, but their devices did not show anything suspicious. But even so, Colbert, who knew Akira well, immediately prepared himself to face the incoming monsters. Of course, Bosch and Peppa could not hide their confusion. Peppa looked at Colbert with obvious doubt.

“Don’t tell me that you believe that brat.”

“You do you. Don’t go complaining about other’s decisions just because you can’t make your own.”

Peppa clicked his tongue and repositioned himself too. Bosch smiled bitterly and followed suit. It was not like both of them believed in Akira, but they believed in Colbert who believed in Akira.

Colbert noticed that Revin was still sorting loot and shouted at him.

“Revin!! How long are you going to keep doing that? Get yourself ready!!”

Revin sighed annoyedly.

“Why in the world are there monsters in this place? I only came here to help you since I thought that I would be able to earn some money without spending any bullets, you know?”

“In that case, feel free to fight those monsters with your fist. I know that you’re using an augmented suit, right? You should be at least stronger than normal humans.”

“Dammit! If I end up in red again because of this, then there will be no meaning in coming here.”

Revin mumbled as he also got himself ready.

Everyone there had repositioned themselves to welcome the incoming monsters. They were waiting beside the big holes on the walls and the door to that room to set up an ambush for those monsters.

Erio and the other children were posted on defensive places, they were waiting with bated breath. They were using the wreckage around them to help them support the rifles that they borrowed from Akira while waiting for Colbert’s signal to start firing.

Erio, who was carrying Akira’s DVTS minigun, could see the monsters crawling behind the covers in his goggle’s display. When an instruction to blow them away together with their covers came up, he quickly pulled the trigger. The repeating sound of the DVTS minigun echoed through the room.

The DVTS minigun unleashed a barrage of bullets that easily pierced through the weak covers and demolished the mechanical monsters hiding behind them. Since it was equipped with a part to help fix it to the bike’s arm, even Erio who was not using an augmented suit could withstand the kickback and control the minigun to some extent.

But the overwhelming firepower that was eradicating the monsters could not eradicate the fear of a battle. Erio gritted his teeth and pushed his fear to the back of his mind as he continued cleaning the rest of the monsters.

As for those who did not have enough firepower, Alpha gave them instructions to help them compensate their firepower with the type or the amount of ammo that they used. Thanks to that, Erio and the other children were somehow able to maintain the upper hand.

Akira was facing monsters not too far away from Erio and his friends. Since it was also training for him, he had to guess the monsters' weak points and aimed carefully at those points without Alpha's support nor his time compression.

Akira slightly peeked out from the room's door and shot at the small monsters that looked like a small self-moving portable armour plating. It did not take that many bullets to stop them from moving. But he could not tell if that was enough to actually kill the monster, so he made sure to put in a few more bullets until its armour was riddled with holes and its control unit was obviously destroyed.

Another monster suddenly jumped aside from behind the monster that he just turned into a pile of wreckage and shot at him. Akira pulled back and evaded that shot without any trouble. Although his coat could withstand a few shots, he decided to fight as if he did not have that protection since it was training.

Akira had the upper hand although only slightly. He also understood that if he had Alpha's support, he would have been able to clear up those monsters in no time.

Although he felt that he was getting better than his past self, he also felt his strength was still lacking.

When Akira kept his eyes on the wreckage that the monsters used as a cover, the equipment on his head scanned for the enemy's movement and worked together with his information-gathering device to predict the enemy's position behind that wreckage. Thanks to that, he was able to see the prediction of where the enemies were located on the display of his headgear.

Akira confirmed that the monsters were not aiming at him, so he quickly jumped out from his cover and released some shots at those monsters. The monsters that got shot bent and finally stopped moving after a few shots.

The information-gathering device that he was using at the moment was the information-gathering device that came as a set with his expensive augmented suit, because of that, it was a rather high-quality information-gathering device. Its detection sensitivity was more or less as good as Alpha's detection ability, but of course, its quality and accuracy also depended on how close those monsters were to him.

Every time Akira gained a new skill, or knowledge, or pieces of equipment, it reminded him of how abnormal Alpha was. And that was also the case this time.

But he reminded himself that he was in the middle of a battle, so he pushed anything unnecessary off his mind and shifted his focus to a question that he had about the current situation.

"Alpha, where are those monsters coming from? These monsters are not the usual monsters that one can find around the city, right?"

"You're right. And it's unlikely for these monsters to have come from the wasteland too. If I have to make a guess, maybe one of these monsters that has a self-building feature got inside the mansion and used the wreckages scattered around this place to replicate itself."

Akira frowned.

"…Alpha. This is included in your support, though it might not be a question that I should ask during training, at least tell me how many of them are there. I have no plans to keep fighting these monsters like this if they're still replicating themselves somewhere."

"Don't worry, there are not that many of them out there and I don't detect any reinforcement either. In the first place, if the situation here gets dangerous, I'll have you escape from this place."

"I see. Glad to hear that."

Akira looked relieved, so he shifted his focus back to fighting.

Colbert and the other Hunters were fighting the monsters in another place. Although the monsters there were strong enough to pose danger to new Hunters, Colbert and his friends were no new Hunters. Not to mention, one of them even took debt to get better equipment, so they had no trouble fighting those monsters.

Peppa glanced at Akira and the other children during that fight and was flabbergasted. He thought that those children were only useful for carrying the corpses, but they were performing pretty well during the battle.

"Colbert, what the heck is with those brats?"

"They're from a gang that I have some connections with."

"Gang? A Hunter gang? I know that Drankam is putting more incentive for young Hunters, but I haven't heard of any other gang doing the same though?"

"Nope, it's just a gang from the slum."

Peppa took another look at Akira and the other children there. Erio and his friends were fighting following Alpha's instruction, so they were moving around pretty well. As for Akira, he was putting some restrictions on himself since he was taking that battle as training, so he was moving relatively worse than usual. Because of that, Akira seemed to be performing as well as Erio and the other children, at most, Akira only seemed to be slightly stronger than the other children. Or at least, it was hard to believe that he raided Ezont Family's base all alone just the other day.

"Don't tell me that you're training these children to make sure that your skill won't rust even if you don't go to the old-world ruin?"

"Save that for later, we're in the middle of a fight right now. You're taking this too lightly, you know. Don't tell me that you've been only going to safe ruin since I left and now you're back to your old sloppy way of thinking?"

"Heh, look at you running your mouth like that."

Peppa laughed at Colbert's light jab as he started fighting harder to show off his skill to Colbert. He shot down and turned multiple monsters into scrap metals in a short time. Seeing that, Colbert just smiled while providing Peppa with support fire.

They maintained the upper hand during that fight and it did not take long for them to defeat all the incoming monsters.

Erio and the other children saw a notice saying that the battle was over on their goggles, after that, all the other extra information on their displays immediately vanished. They looked so relieved after they were finally released from the gripping nervousness during that battle. Some of them sighed in relief, some of them lightly laughed, some of them cheered, while some of them sat on the ground, tired.

Erio also sighed in relief while also feeling happy that it had ended. As he was basking in the happiness at the fact that he had survived and the sense of self-confidence since he was able to perform well during that fight, his eyes wandered to Colbert and Akira.

Akira was perfectly calm. Colbert and his friends were also calm. They looked as if they just finished taking care of something trivial. Revin even had already returned to sorting the loot. Watching it reminded Erio of the differences between the Hunters and the non-Hunters there, all the excitement that welled up inside him immediately got shot down.

“…Well, it is still a win.”

The fact still held that he had participated in that fight as well. Erio told himself so as he nodded.

Colbert checked the destroyed monsters.

“They are not the security drones of this mansion, right? The heck are these monsters? We’re here just to check the corpses, you know. No one told me that we have to fight these… things… Wait, by the way, Bosch, why are you here? You’re not here for looting the corpses, right?”

“Yeah, we’re here because of a request to check this place. Depending on our report, the City Management might decide to burn this place up.”

A big mansion might be turned into a nest for monsters, not to mention that the bodies inside it provide food for those monsters, thus the City Management could not just leave that mansion be. They sent requests to check the area to decide whether they had to send people to clean the place up themselves or they could trust the resident around it to take care of that place.

Bosch sighed.

“Although it’s an easy job where we just need to look around, it would be bad if we don’t do our job properly. Colbert, if you have some free time, you should help us too.”

“Nah, we are leaving. It’s not a place for these children to loiter around. Not to mention, no one told us we’re going to fight monsters just for checking the corpses.”

“I see. Well then, we’ll go back to our job too… Ah, by the way, because of that request, we’re also taking that general monster-hunting request too. How about you?”

“Nope.”

“I see, which means that we’re the only one who will get money from killing those monsters, huh? If you don’t like that, give me your Hunter code later. I’ll put your name in that general monster-hunting request too. If you get nothing for the rest of the day today, then it means that all the rewards will be sent to us. Later then, Peppa! Let’s go!”

Bosch called Peppa as he stood up and left. Peppa followed behind him while sending an unfriendly gaze at Colbert.

“Later then, former Hunter! If you can fight that well, you should get yourself back out there.”

Seeing Peppa did not forget to leave a bad message before leaving, Colbert just smiled bitterly at him.

Akira who saw that exchange then casually said.

“Thought this might be too late, acquaintances?”

“Yeah, we once belonged to the same Hunter team. Well, I did leave that team, after all, I guess it’s no surprise that they don’t like me. But that’s all there is to it. Well now, let’s go back home… Revin!! We’re leaving!! I don’t care if you want to stay here, but just so you know, we won’t wait for you, alright?!”

Revin stopped sorting the loot and flusteredly packed the loot he chose. Erio and the other children also flusteredly got themselves ready to leave that place.

While on the other side of the mansion, Tiol suddenly stopped eating and stared at the wall. To be more precise, he was looking in the direction where Akira fought the monsters he sent. Tiol could see past the walls and look at the scene that was unseeable with normal eyes.

A weird language that was not used by humans appeared on Tiol’s augmented vision. It said ‘total annihilation’, ‘overwhelming difference in firepower’, and ‘pulling back was advised’. Tiol understood that as his expression turned to displeasure.

Tiol then turned and looked in a different direction. He then aimed his left hand that was turned into a big sized rifle at that wall. A loud bang echoed as he released a shot that tore down multiple layers of walls. It even went all the way outside the mansion.

Tiol went through that hole and left the mansion. He then ran through the garden and vanished into the wasteland.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 176, The Sphere Of Understanding

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was enjoying the bath back in his house. Usually, he would lean back on his bathtub to let his soul melt into the warm water, but that was not the case that day.

In his augmented view, Akira was seeing the information of multiple rifles floating in front of him. He was basically browsing the rifles that he could buy with 1 billion Aurum. Shizuka sent the list of the rifles that she recommended and all the additional data of those rifles was gathered by Alpha through the network based on the list from Shizuka.

Each rifle had an extra explanation beside it containing a small annotation that Shizuka added for each rifle, the ammo type compatible with that rifle, and the price of each rifle written in big characters…

Akira stared at that information and hummed.

"…They are all equally expensive."

Alpha, just like usual, was also taking a bath together with Akira, then said.

“That’s a given. Considering how many features each rifle has, not to mention that the small market demand preventing corporations from mass producing them. In the first place, when you go for expensive but better rifles, it’s normal for their cost-performance ratio to get worse.”

“In that case, if I focus more on the cost-performance ratio instead, what kind of rifle can I get?”

“The first rifle that comes into mind would be the AAH assault rifle. That rifle is basically mass-produced in the eastern district after all, so its price is incredibly cheap considering its performance. You were able to buy it when you were just a novice Hunter and it has served you very well up until now, no?”

“Now that you mention it, that’s kinda true. It’s indeed a cheap yet very useful rifle. I guess it’s no surprise there is a big fanbase for that rifle.”

Akira then shook that off from his mind and continued browsing the rifles. But to be honest, all the available options in front of him prevented him from making any meaningful progress. Although the price alone was enough to make him hesitate, Shizuka also added a note listing the summed up prices of the individual rifles that basically had the equal amount of functions of each multi-type rifle that he was browsing.

The reason why Akira was doing that by himself was because Alpha reminded him that being able to choose suitable equipment based on his ability was one of the important skills for a Hunter. But with all the available information flooding his brain, Akira kept ‘hmming‘ without being able to make any decision.

Alpha suddenly stood up, the water droplets that ran down her silky skin only served to enhance her already beautiful body. She then took a few steps and grabbed one of the rifles, or at least the image of it, that was floating in the air. That big gun, which was shown there as a price comparison for the other guns, looked extremely heavy. But since both Alpha and that gun were nothing more than images, mass had nothing to do with both of them.

Alpha, who was standing naked showing off her beautiful body, did not suit the excessively big gun that she was carrying. But she then started taking aiming stances as if to show some examples to Akira.

“For example, what do you think about this gun, Akira?”

Just like usual, Akira was not bothered by her naked body. Heck, he was not even tempted to look at her naked body as he was focused on the gun that she was carrying, evaluating it.

“That’s out of the question, of course, I won’t choose that gun. Even putting the price aside, I still would not choose that gun. Though it does look powerful, it looks super heavy. I know I have an augmented suit that would help me carry that gun, but still, it’ll definitely impede my mobility. I feel like it would crush me the moment my augmented suit runs out of energy.”

“If you’re worried about the weight, this is actually pretty light, you know. It’s made of a high-quality metallic nanomaterial that is durable but light. Moreover, it would automatically expand its force-field the moment it shoots to reduce the kickback. So its weight should not give you any trouble.”

“Ohhh, it even has that kind of feature, huh? But that would mean it’ll consume energy packs on top of its original ammo, right?”

“The higher the firepower, the stronger its kickback. So a lot of powerful guns are actually consuming energy packs in order to soften their kickbacks, you know.”

“Hooo.”

Akira nodded, he looked simply amazed by that gun, but even so, he then still shook his head and said.

“…Even if that’s the case, the answer will still be a no. It’s too big for me to carry around and I don’t think I can take that gun with me through narrow passages in the ruins. Or more like, I want to buy a multi-type gun to reduce the number of rifles that I’m carrying, so buying that big gun will defeat the purpose as to why I’m looking for a multi-type gun in the first place.”

Alpha smiled, nodded, and then threw that gun away. The gun flew in the air for a few seconds in a beautiful arc before disintegrating.

“Yep, that’s basically how you do it. You should start by eliminating the rifles that you obviously won’t choose. You can’t make any progress if you just keep ‘hmming’ there without making any decision, right?”

“Hm, you’re right, I’ll do that.”

Akira started discarding the options that he obviously would never take just like Alpha suggested him. When he already discarded about 90% of his options, Shizuka suddenly called him. So he asked Alpha to let him pick the call through her.

“Akira speaking.”

“It’s Shizuka, do you have some time?”

“Sure, what is it?”

Akira once picked a call from Shizuka when he was in the middle of a tense negotiation with Shijima, so him being inside the bath right now did not stop him from picking up that call.

Shizuka was calling Akira regarding the relics that Akira brought to her the other day, basically, about selling the lady’s underwear old-world relics. Shizuka did not forget to put emphasis on how she was able to get very good deals thanks to Elena and Sara’s help.

“So then, I ended up making deals with multiple traders. But some of them are offering 50% more money if you would tell them where you got those relics, so, what’s your plan here?”

“I see, I’m sorry but I can’t give any information regarding that. Even if they’re offering to buy the relics for 100 times the price, I still can’t tell them that information.”

“I see, alright then.”

Akira sounded a bit apologetic when he said that, so Shizuka also immediately stopped pursuing that subject. But because of that, Akira found it a bit weird.

“Eh? Is that really okay? I’m pretty sure those traders will keep pestering you though…”

“Don’t worry, I’m a merchant too, you see. So I have to prioritize my own customer.”

Akira smiled faintly.

“Thank you very much. But still, I didn’t expect them to offer an extra 50% just for telling them where I got those relics. Is it normal for this kind of information to be expensive?”

Akira thought that it was for the case where there were other Hunters who were looking for information where those relics come from, so those traders are offering an extra 50% in place of the information fee for buying that information. But Shizuka replied with something that he did not expect.

“It might be to allow them to sell those relics at a higher price, something like a brand-fee.”

“Brand-fee?”

“Yup. Brand-fee, basically they can reel up the price of a high-quality article by putting a brand on that article. After all, depending on the brand, even the same kind of article can have a completely different prices range. If they know where those relics come from, they can investigate which old-world company produced them or which old-world company sold them. And if it’s from a popular company, more people would want to buy it with a higher price tag.”

Akira was listening closely to Shizuka’s explanation with full of interest. It was a different aspect of selling relics compared to the explanation that he heard from Katsuragi.

“And to top it off, there are people who sell imitations of this kind of relic, you see. There are many ways Hunters can do that, one of them is to make an imitation using the current era’s technology, put it in the ruin, get Hunters to ‘find’ them as an old-world relic in that ruin, and then get a normal trading company connected to the perpetrator to buy it and resell it as an old-world relic.”

Akira then thought, no one would be crazy enough to go all the way to the Tsubakihara building to place fake relics, but it would not be strange for someone to do that in Higaraka Residence ruin. And right now, Higaraka residence ruin was flooded with Hunters. Although Akira and Alpha were the triggers of the rumour that caused it, there was also a good chance someone actually intentionally spread that rumour even more.

“But like, it should not take that long for those fake relics to be found out, right? After all, the reason why old-world relics are valuable is because they’re created using some amazing technology that we can’t replicate yet even now, no?”

“That depends on the type of the relic. Of course, it would be difficult to fake high-tech mechanical relics, but that’s not exactly the case for fabrics. Not to mention, if the Hunters demand to make the deal on-site, merchants can only make a relatively cheap offer based on a short inspection, so a fake relic with a good appearance should be enough to trick those merchants. In the first place, it’s not an easy thing to decide the value of relics even for those specialists. So if they know where those relics come from, they can easily decide whether those relics are fake or not without the need of inspecting those relics first. After all, relic inspections are not free, you know.”

Akira smiled bitterly thinking that there might be some Hunters who brought back fake relics from the Higaraka residence ruin.

“What can I say… It seems that selling relic is not that simple, huh?”

“Yup, that’s why people tend to get suspicious when they make deals regarding relics. I’m sure there would be people who will get suspicious of you too. So when that happens, just keep calm and handle it calmly, okay?”

“Okay, I’ll be careful.”

“Well, we ended up talking longer than I planned, so yep, later then.”

Akira dipped back to his bathtub and lightly sighed.

“…There are a lot of things that I still don’t know out there, huh. Alpha, to be honest, did I ever bring back fake relics?”

“Not really, although, it depends on how you define fake relics.”

“Define?”

“For example, let’s say that someone from the old-world era made a fake article, will it make that article a fake relic according to this era or not? Or is it solely decided based on whether it’s made during the old-world era? Which in that case the fake article from the old-world era would be a not-fake relic in this era. So yep, it’s not that simple.”

“I see, you’re right about that. It really is not that simple, huh.”

Akira kept thinking about the definition of fake relics while enjoying the bath, but it did not take that long before that thought dissipated into the warm water too.

⎯⎯⎯*⎯

Inside a slightly high-class clothing store located in the Kugamayama lower district, Kashua, the manager of the store where Sheryl once shopped in the past, lightly sighed.

That other day when a Hunter with enough money requested a refit for an old-world dress, effectively throwing its value as an old-world relic, came to her shop, her little sister who was talented in refitting dresses completed that request with amazing results. Thus, there was no surprise that Kashua was expecting that story to spread around and lure in other customers with at least that much money as that particular Hunter. So in order to prepare her store for it, she decided to order some high-quality goods. But unfortunately, that type of said customers never appeared.

Although it did not exactly put her book in red, the high-quality articles stuffed back in the warehouse were putting some pressure on her. Fortunately, Kashua could get someone to buy them bit by bit thanks to her talent as a seller, but it would take some time before she could sell all of them.

Kashua then mumbled.

“What a blunder…”

Sheryl and Akira praised the refitted dress that much, so although Kashua did not get more customers after that, she could at least expect Akira and Sheryl to come there again sooner or later. Or at least, that was what she had thought, but unfortunately, that was not the case too. Kashua was in the middle of lamenting her current situation that could not be further off from her expectation.

Suddenly, someone entered the store. The bell fixed on the store’s door rang to let her know that she got some customers. Kashua immediately changed her expression back to her usual seller’s smile and headed to the door to welcome her customers.

They were several young boys and girls led by a lady. The lady did not seem to have any trouble with her dress, while the young boys were donning suits that looked like augmented suits. But the young girls were using rather shabby dresses, or at least, that was the case from Kashua’s point of view.

Looking at that, Kashua was not sure whether to ask them to leave or not, but the moment she noticed some familiar faces among those young girls and boys, she could not help but raise her eyebrows. She then immediately replaced her surprised face with a big smile as she welcomed them.

“Welcome! Welcome! Thank you very much for visiting our store!!”

They were Akira and Sheryl’s gang.

Starting from Sheryl, Alicia, and the other officers, the girls from Sheryl’s gang started to look around the store. A few of them were looking really nervous, the rest, excited. After all, it was a rather high-class store that some children from the slum would normally never be able to visit. They had their eyes sparkle with excitement from the dresses lined up inside the store that they never even dreamt of using. The only girl who was taking it calmly was Sheryl.

While not too far from them, Akira was sitting together with the other boys from the gang on the tables provided inside that store. Viola, who was looking around the store with the other girls until now came to that table and sat next to Akira.

“Well, this place is pretty good for a store in the lower district. I didn’t expect you to know a store like this.”

“It’s not like I’m that knowledgeable about the stores around this place, I just picked this store since it had some good reviews when I was browsing through the network.”

“Oh my, and that was enough of a reason for you to request refitting an old-world dress that even cost you 1,500,000 Aurum in this store? I’ve never thought you’re someone who would splurge your money like that.”

“That money is the money that I earned, so it’s up to me how I use that money.”

“Geez, it’s not like I’m criticizing you or anything, I just thought that was unexpected of you.”

Viola was actually prodding Akira for a reaction to guess if he actually was just simply that lax regarding money or he did that because he was that invested in Sheryl.

But Viola was not able to get any meaningful information from there. Of course, she could never have guessed Akira only did that in order to check his own fashion sense.

That was when Kashua approached Akira with her seller's smile. She was working hard recommending dresses to the girls until just now. But she decided to go to Akira since those girls, who did not have enough money to buy any of those dresses, always came up with excuses to refuse her offer. Since Kashua thought that it would be meaningless to keep pushing in that direction, she recommended the girls to explore the store on their own and shifted her focus to the people who seemed to have the capital to spend.

"Akira-sama. Is there any kind of dress that you want to get for your companions? We'll be happy to comply with any of your requests."

"Uhhh, even if you ask me that…"

Alpha smiled bitterly and interjected.

"Akira, I'm pretty sure she means to know how much you are planning to spend today. It seems that she misunderstanding that you'll be paying this time too."

"Ohhh, I see."

Akira then glanced at Viola.

"You might want to ask that question to Viola instead, I'm just here as an escort today."

Viola turned at Kashua and lightly replied.

"I'll leave it to you. For now, just go ahead and recommend them dresses that you think will suit them the best based on your fashion sense."

Kashua's smile, which was saying she hoped to get a more concrete answer, stiffened.

"Certainly, but still…"

“Don’t worry, though it might be rather rude for me to say this, I don’t think you have any goods that might make me worry about my budget, you see.”

Kashua’s smile twitched in reaction to Viola’s rather rude remark. But Viola’s next sentence completely overwrote it.

“If you’re still worried unless I give you a number, well, just come to me again if the total cost seems to be going above 100 million Aurum.”

“O-one hundred million Aurum?”

Kashua was barely able to hold back her shock, Akira then exasperatedly said.

“You would even spend that much money only for clothes, huh?”

Kashua did not even have the leeway to feel offended by that rude remark from Akira. After all, from the way he said it, it sounded as if Viola actually had enough money to pay that much amount of money.

“Oh my, I didn’t expect that to come from someone who spent 350 million Aurum on his suit.”

“This one is an augmented suit. It’s not like one of those common clothing, you know?”

“You spent that money for something that you want, similar to me this time, so it’s the same. Just like how you use that to help you earn money from the old-world ruin, we’ll use these dresses to earn money through making business deals. And just like how it’s difficult to explore a ruin without the suitable equipment, it’s hard to get a good business deal without the proper dress.”

Akira frowned and smiled wryly. Though he understood that argument, he actually did not want to admit it, and that was shown on his face.

“Hmmm, when you put it like that, that’s true, but still…”

“Moreover, it’s not like it’s a one-use thing, and I don’t think that it will go anywhere near 100 million Aurum either. Not to mention, if I buy the dresses plus the accessories in a bulk, I can get a cheaper deal for every piece of dress and accessory compared to when I buy them individually. And personally speaking, I don’t think it’s weird to spend that much money on appearance.”

“Is that so?”

Akira only said so and stopped pursuing that subject further, to be more precise, he just dropped that subject there. Although it might be cheaper than buying the dresses and the accessories one by one, it did not change the fact that the total price was still huge and that Viola would be spending another big bulk of her money on Sheryl’s gang. After all, Akira knew very well Viola was not someone who would spend her money meaninglessly.

Kashua was even more shocked hearing that exchange where Viola and Akira were casually talking about using hundreds of millions of Aurum. Viola who noticed that threw a rather provoking smile at Kashua.

“So there you have it, you don’t have to worry about our budget. But of course, if you can make me worry about the budget, then you’re more than welcomed to do that. Well, to be honest, when I heard that you did a really good job refitting a certain dress, I had my expectation up. That’s why I prepared that much budget beforehand, you see.”

To put it another way, Viola was basically saying that she had lost that expectation from Kashua’s store. Hearing that, Kashua tried her best to prevent her face from twitching and gave Viola a hearty smile.

“Although I don’t know if the goods in this store might satisfy you or not, I’ll give my best to answer your expectation. And if you’re interested in the dress that we refitted, please, by all means, consider refitting one of your dresses in our store. We have an employee whom I can recommend and I’m sure that she’ll be able to answer your expectations. So please wait here for a bit.”

Kashua lightly bowed and left Akira and Viola. She then went to the backroom and finally removed her seller's smile.

"Celene!! Time to work! Get yourself ready, quickly!!"

A lazy voice replied from inside the room.

"Onee-chan, it's too soon for a shift change, isn't it?"

"Just change to something that you can present in front of customers! We have some refitting jobs for you to do!"

"If it's about refitting the clothes that you bought last time, just get the measurement data for the clients and I'll do the refitting later. You can handle that much right, Onee-chan? Or is it that the client is asking for a rushed request?"

Celene sighed as she stepped out from inside the room. But the moment she saw how her sister looked very lively there, Celene could not help but to get weirded out by that.

"Uhhh, did something happen?"

"Damn right! Like hell I would let her look down on my store!! Celene, get out there and take the refitting orders! The client said that there's no need to worry about the budget, she even said that she has a 100 million Aurum budget! This is a good time for you to show your skill that you always refuse to sell cheaply!! So get out there and show them what you are made of!!"

"1-100 million Aurum…?"

"I'll be pulling out my reserved stock too!! There's no need to worry about the budget if it's my store, she said. Like hell I would let that slide!! I'll definitely get her to worry about her budget!!"

Celene was a little overwhelmed by her sister who just could not calm down. But since it was a chance for her to put out all her skill without worrying about money, she immediately started to prepare herself to get out on the floor.

Kashua who reacted very well to that light provocation from Viola started to get to work. And as Viola schemed, Kashua was giving her best service that normally a first-time customer would never get.

Kashua introduced Celene to Viola before taking a refitting order for Sheryl and Alicia. After that, they decided on the specifics and the details of that order as well as choosing the material to be used before Kashua asked them to come to the workshop to get their measurement.

Alicia nervously glanced at Erio as if to hope that he would accompany her. Erio noticed that and asked for their permission to accompany Alicia. Seeing that, Alicia smiled happily while slightly blushing.

Sheryl also sent a similar glance at Akira. But Akira only glanced back at her, looking a bit confused, and barely made any reactions at all. So in his place, Viola showed a reaction by holding back her laughter. Before Sheryl left with Celene while looking slightly disappointed, she did not forget to send a glare at Viola.

Viola lightly laughed and turned to Akira.

“I know Carol said this once before, but Akira, you really need to learn how to treat a girl right. If I’m not mistaken, you’re in the middle of learning that, no?”

“Oh, shut up!”

Viola smiled at that thorny reply from Akira, but in the back of her mind, she was thinking about a lot of things regarding his reply.

Viola realized that it might be interesting to see how Akira would react if she brought up Shizuka or Elena or Sara, but before she could say anything, she kept the lid closed on that curiosity. Back then when she messed with Sheryl, she ended up with a hole in her chest. So if she actually mentioned Shizuka, Sara, or Elena here, this time she might not even leave as much as a piece of herself behind. Viola at least understood that much.

In order to keep her curiosity contained, Viola kept telling herself that even if she really wanted to test it, she would need to set up a better situation first to do that.

While Viola was in the midst of her thoughts, Kashua approached Viola and placed a box that looked like a jewellery box on top of the table. She then said with full confidence to Viola.

“Although this is something that we would only offer to loyal customers, since you have given us the chance to offer you our best service, I’ve come with this special piece of goods that might suit your fancy. So please, by all means, have a look.”

Kashua opened the box and showed female undergarments inside it. Viola who saw that looked slightly surprised and hummed in amazement which Kashua found very satisfying.

“So, how about this piece of clothing article?”

“Not bad at all.”

“Thank you very much.”

Besides Viola and Kashua who were smiling at each other, Akira curiously glanced at that underwear and Kashua noticed that.

“Oh, is there anything wrong?”

“Ah, it’s nothing, I just thought that it looks really expensive.”

“It’s indeed an expensive piece of clothing, but I can guarantee its quality. It’s an old-world relic that would normally be sold only inside the wall. It’s very rare to find this kind of article outside the inner wall. Our store was able to procure it only by using our special route.”

“Ahh, I see. It’s a very valuable piece of relic, huh?”

“But of course, after all, it’s valuable enough for the people inside the wall to compete for it.”

Kashua felt a bit offended since it sounded as if Akira was questioning the quality of her product. For someone who had spent hundreds of millions of Aurum for his equipment, Akira should have the ability to judge the quality of a relic. Kashua could not accept if he looked down at her prized possession, but it seemed that it was an unneeded worry from her side as she patted her chest in relief. She then continued by ardently explaining her prized goods.

Akira only lent his ear to that explanation as his brain did not register anything while he glanced at that female undergarment.

“Alpha, about that…”

“Yup, that’s one of the relics that you brought to Shizuka’s shop.”

“Thought so.”

“Judging from the material and the identification code that can’t be checked with naked eyes, it doesn’t seem to be a fake relic.”

“… I see.”

To be honest, Akira only glanced at it since he thought that the relics he brought back from the ruin seemed to have actually gotten sold somewhere. But after listening to Alpha’s explanation, he was a bit surprised and a little bit scared on how Alpha could even tell that much.

The only reason that it caught Akira’s interest was simply because he felt like he saw it somewhere before. But then Alpha seemed to be able to inspect that piece of relic down to the things that could not be seen with naked eyes. Although Akira himself did not understand why there was any need to know that far.

Akira understood that Alpha knew a lot of things about himself, but he never thought badly of it. Or at least, he did not let that bother him until that time when Tsubaki said those words to him back in the Tsubakihara building.

The manager of Tsubakihara building, another similar existence as Alpha which he could recognize, warned him about something that Alpha was doing to him.

[…But well, I guess it's too late to worry about that right now.]

Akira said so to himself and just forgot about it. After all, everything that he had received from Alpha up until now, including the support and all the help from her, was enough to outweigh that worry.

Viola noticed that slight change from Akira and tried to probe him.

"Akira, what's wrong? Though I think it's normal for you to get interested in this kind of thing, you should be careful or you would look suspicious, you know?"

But Akira replied casually.

"Well, I'm a Hunter after all. It doesn't matter whether it's a female undergarments or anything. As long as it's an old-world relic, it's only normal for me to be interested, no?"

"That's true, but I heard that you just gave one to Sheryl the other day though."

"Oh shut it! It doesn't really matter, does it? It's my relic and I'm free to do what I want with it."

"But of course."

Viola said so and smiled amusedly since Akira looked away as if to avoid answering that question. But from there, Kashua at least noticed that her prized goods had some kind of connection with Akira, of course, she could not recognize anything further than that.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 177, A Request To Readjust Hunter Rank

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira made a promise to Kibayashi to meet up with him in front of the Kugama building. The first time Akira saw that tall and huge building that was stuck into the inner wall, he was utterly amazed by its majesty. But after all this time, he already got used to it, which also signified his growth.

Akira was happily waiting for Kibayashi. At first, Kibayashi only said that he had something he needed to talk about with him, but then Akira said to at least treat him to a meal or something, and now they promised to meet up in front of the Kugama building. Akira could not help but get a bit excited.

Kibayashi appeared right on time. They then went into the Kugama building and into a restaurant on the first floor before picking a seat randomly.

“You can go ahead and order anything you want. I’ll put it on tab anyway and it’s not like I’m paying for it either. So feel free to choose from the most expensive ones first.”

“Eh? Ah, sure…”

Unlike Kibayashi who was in a very good mood, Akira seemed rather disappointed. Kibayashi smiled amusedly at that.

“What’s wrong? Were you expecting to go to a high-class restaurant or something? That’s out of the question, you know. Although the City Management would pay for it, it’s not like I have an unlimited budget. Unless it’s for a negotiation with a high-ranking Hunter, they won’t let me spend that much money, you see. But if you tell me that you would treat me, I don’t mind going somewhere else, you know?”

Akira silently browsed the menu as he started looking for the most expensive dishes that he could order there as if he had some grudge against Kibayashi. Kibayashi who saw that could not help but find it amusing.

After they finished placing their orders, Akira immediately cut to the chase.

“So then, what is it you want to talk about?”

“Actually, there are a lot, but I guess I’ll start with the investigation first.”

“Investigation?”

“You do know that there was a huge fight in the slum not too long ago, right? So why exactly were you involved in that battle?”

“In the first place, why does it sound like it’s already a given that I was involved in that battle?”

Akira tried to play ignorant, which might be because he was a bit annoyed after his expectation of getting a good meal was completely missed.

But in reality, Akira himself did not deny that he had killed many people and fought fiercely in that battle. He also knew that the Hunter Office preferred Hunters to behave nicely and he did something that deviated from the Hunter Office’s preference. So a part of him was telling him that there was no reason to proactively talk about that subject with the Hunter Office.

Kibayashi then pulled out his information terminal, clicked some buttons, and put it on top of the table. Akira looked at the video playing on that information terminal and frowned. Kibayashi smiled happily seeing that Akira reacted as he predicted.

“Well, although it’s actually a secret videotape, it’s not that big of a secret. And since you’re involved in this incident, it should be fine.”

Kibayashi’s information terminal was showing the video of Akira fighting a black powered suit.

“In all honesty, I’m really glad to find that you’re as reckless as ever. I had a good laugh the first time I saw this record, you know?”

Akira lightly ruffled his head.

“How did you get this video?”

“I only got it from my superiors, and I have no idea how they got it. Someone might have been recording you from afar using a telescope or something from above the wall. Or it might be from some secret cameras planted somewhere that coincidentally recorded this video. Well, either way, I bet the City Management has something to do with it.”

Akira let out a big sigh, he had a given up face as he started explaining to Kibayashi.

Kibayashi listened closely to Akira’s explanation. After that, he said to Akira as he tried his best to hold back his laughter, which obviously he was not doing very well.

“U-Uh, s-so, I get it that you went there to save your girlfriend. It’s not that strange for people to be moved by love, especially for a young boy like you. B-But still, no kidding here, did you really fight that powered suit just to kill a pickpocket? Are you okay in the head? Ah, don’t take this wrongly please, I’m actually complimenting you here, you know? After all, your action and line of thinking are as reckless as always and I really like it.”

Akira looked obviously annoyed.

“Just so you know, it’s not like I did that because I wanted to.”

“Y-yeah, you’re right.”

Kibayashi then laughed hard again. Before he continued, he noticed that Akira was pouting and thought that it might affect the thing that he was about to bring up next. So he tried his best to calm down.

“Well, I get why you’re in that place now. Personally speaking, I respect your decision, so you have my condolences, that must have been hard… Geez, can you stop pouting like that? That aside, I’m sure you do know that the Hunter Office puts their effort into cultivating good manners among Hunters, so it would be troublesome if there’s a Hunter who can win against a powered suit only with an augmented suit and is willing to do that just for money. After all, there are quite a lot of Hunters out there who are talented in fighting other people but could not do well exploring the ruins. So it’s our duty to give them jobs that would help to keep public order while at the same time keeping them away from doing anything that might disturb it.”

“Is that so? So you’re basically here to give me a job as security or something, huh?”

“Calm down. There, the meals are here, so let’s calm down and enjoy the food for now.”

Kibayashi extended his hand to the food in front of him, Akira also did the same although he still looked annoyed.

Akira’s mood was getting better as he continued eating. Although it was not a meal from a high-class restaurant, it was still a good meal. So every time he brought a spoonful to his mouth, his mood was slowly getting better and better.

Kibayashi closely monitored the change in Akira’s mood before bringing up the next subject.

“Now then, since we’ve filled our stomach, let’s get to the main topic.”

“Huh? That one just now was not the main topic?”

“Yup. But I can’t really say that it’s not related to the main topic at all. The main reason I wanted to meet you is to talk about a certain request. Well, although I said ‘to talk about’, it’s actually something close to compulsory. So, let me apologize beforehand. As long as you don’t want to pick a fight against the City Management, I recommend you not to refuse it.”

Akira slightly frowned and was obviously alerted. Kibayashi smiled bitterly in an effort to calm the situation down.

“You don’t need to be that alert. I actually like you quite a fair bit, you know. So I won’t give you any weird requests. And also, although I said it’s compulsory, normally, most of the Hunters would be more than happy to accept this request, you see. After all, it’s a request to help you readjust your Hunter Rank. Basically, it’s a request to boost your Hunter Rank.”

“Boost my Hunter Rank?”

“Yup… Let me ask you this first, you do know your current Hunter Rank, right?”

“If I’m not mistaken…”

Before Akira was able to pull his Hunter Rank out from his memory, Alpha interjected.

“It’s 30.”

“Hm? Wasn’t it 29?”

“The relics that you brought to Shizuka the other day got you to 30.”

“I see.”

So after that short pause, Akira said firmly.

“It’s 30.”

Kibayashi obviously looked exasperated since Akira took that weird pause before he answered.

“Good grief, there are not that many Hunters out there who can’t immediately give their Hunter Ranks when asked. You really don’t care about it, do you? No wonder why people thought you’re faking your Hunter Rank.”

“It doesn’t really matter, does it?”

“If it really didn’t matter, we won’t be talking here and now about raising your Hunter Rank, you know? Since this is a good chance, I’ll explain the rest to you regarding that matter. So listen carefully.”

To Akira, who still looked slightly annoyed, Kibayashi started explaining about the matter of Hunter Rank and the request that he was about to ask Akira.

The strength of the Hunters in the eastern district was represented by their Hunter Ranks. Of course, Hunters of the same Hunter Rank did not mean that those Hunters were equally strong. There were many other factors that defined one’s strength such as their equipment, experiences, and their talents or preferences. Although it was impossible to make sure that Hunters with the same rank had the exact same level of strength, the Hunter Office tried its best to readjust the Hunter Rank as a good indicator for Hunter’s skill.

The Hunter Rank was also a good thing for those who submitted requests for Hunters such as for bodyguards or escorts. Since that way, they could decide which Hunters to employ and how much reward to offer those Hunters based on the difficulty of the monsters that they might encounter and their Hunter Ranks.

Other than that, Hunter Ranks were also used for so many other things such as transferring Hunters between cities, deciding the level of difficulties and danger for different areas, or recruitment into private military companies. The accuracy of the Hunter Rank system was an important thing for the eastern district that was filled with Hunters as well as the Hunter Office and the Corporate Government that was ruling over the eastern district.

But with that being said, there were very rare cases in the eastern district where some Hunters showed abnormal strength that was far from their Hunter Rank. The ranking system would only grow worse if they left those Hunters alone which might lead to a full breakdown of the ranking system.

The ranking system was highly valued and the Hunter Office held the sole rights to calculate, decide, and assign that ranking system. That was the power of the Hunter Office as well as a way for the Hunter Office to assert control over those Hunters.

“So that’s basically the gist of it, we want someone like you with a big gap between your Hunter Rank and your real strength to get your Hunter Rank to a more suitable number. But with that being said, it’s not like we can just pull up your Hunter Rank either. That’s why we dispatch this request in order to readjust your Hunter Rank. You get it now?”

“I feel like I get it but not exactly at the same time…”

“Just accept the request. Or is it that you have a reason why you don’t want to get a higher Hunter Rank?”

“Not really, if I have to say anything here, I prefer you pay me in form of money instead of Hunter Rank.”

Kibayashi sighed exasperatedly, but he also seemed to understand where Akira came from.

“Ahhh, you’re that kind of Hunter, huh? Normally, you can get better rewards if you have a higher Hunter Rank, but sometimes there are Hunters like you who don’t really understand that. But well, you tend to work alone and you put your time mostly into hunting relics. So I guess that’s to be expected, huh”

“Is that so?”

“Normally Hunters work by forming teams, and when they do, they usually decide their share of reward or who has the higher position in the team based on their Hunter Ranks. Not to mention that some of the high-difficulty high-reward requests only accept Hunters with high enough Hunter Ranks. That's why many new Hunters work so hard to raise their Hunter Rank. Moreover, sometimes some corporations would even sponsor high ranking Hunters too, that's also one reason why Hunters tend to be desperate when it comes to their Hunter Ranks."

Kibayashi glanced at Akira to check his reaction. Though Akira seemed to properly listen to him, he still showed no interest at all.

"To be honest, Hunters who often deal with hundreds of millions of Aurum tend to put extra attention on their Hunter Ranks though. So, do you have any interest in it?"

"Well, even if you say so. That request for boosting Hunter Ranking, since most of its reward is in the form of Hunter Rank, I bet it doesn't give me much money, assuming that it gives me any at all, right? Honestly, monsters won't get scared of me just because of my Hunter Rank anyway, so I don't see any point in taking that request."

"You like it or not, I need to have you take that request. Well then, let's start talking about the details. I'll try my best to get a deal that can satisfy you too, so you can just go ahead and tell me your demand. If you're willing to take a reckless request, I might be able to get you a request with a huge amount of money, you know?"

"No thanks. As I've always told you, I didn't do all of that reckless stuff because I wanted to."

Kibayashi looked at that really annoyed Akira and found it amusing.

"In that case, I can set up a deal that warrants you a huge amount of money in case something unexpected were to happen. So that you can use as much ammo and other expendables as you want. It's you we're talking about here, so I can pretty much expect something crazy to happen."

Akira held himself from saying anything back. He knew very well that it did not matter what he said, it would not be enough to convince Kibayashi.

After that, Akira had a difficult discussion with Kibayashi about the details of the request. When they finished, the sun had already set.

__*__*__*__

As Akira took a good warm dip in his bathtub back in his house, he looked back at his discussion with Kibayashi about that request.

“Alpha, I know it’s too late to say this, but is that really alright?”

“Let me ask you this instead, do you have any problem with that request?”

“Not really, or more like, I don’t really get the whole thing.”

To be honest, Akira did his best thinking about what he should ask for during that discussion. But even so, he himself understood that he was so not skilled in that aspect to the point that he would not be able to spot any mistakes in case he made any during that negotiation.

“In that case, since we have come this far, we can only look back and reevaluate after you’re done with that request. This will be a good experience for you too. Personally speaking, I think it’s not a bad deal since they’ll pay for the medicines, ammo, and other expendables.”

“You’re right, it really helped me out during that request to the underground city after all.”

Akira remembered back then when he had to compensate for the lack of his strength by shooting out CWH anti-material rifle’s special ammo. Both when he fought a swarm of Yarata Scorpion and the relic thieves, Alpha’s support alone was not enough to win those fights. That was just how pivotal using that ammo was.

“Now that I think about it, I really did pretty reckless stuff back then. It’s as if I’m compensating for the lack of my strength with money, and to top it off, it’s not even my own money.”

“Yep, so let’s use that advantage to our best this time again. Let’s stock up powerful ammo and buy our safety, and of course, with other’s money again this time.”

Alpha smiled when she said that, Akira smiled back at her.

“Though to be honest, because they’ll pay for my ammo, I feel like it would give such a sight if I use that money to buy a whole lot of CWH anti-material special ammo to use with my DVTS minigun.”

“That’s a good idea, let’s do that!”

“…Huh? That’s obviously out of the question, isn’t it? That special ammo can’t be used with DVTS minigun, right?”

Akira frowned, he was surprised by that reply from Alpha, but then Alpha smiled smugly and said.

“It would be fine as long as you’re using a powerful enough gun that can withstand the rapid-fire of such a powerful and expensive bullet. And since we’re in the middle of choosing a new gun, you can just put that as an additional condition for your new gun, right?”

Akira’s view was augmented with the info of multiple types of guns just like last time. Then Alpha discarded all the rifles that could not withstand rapid fire using such CWH anti-material rifle special ammo.

“That pretty much narrows our options.”

“Indeed, do your best to do the rest then.”

“Roger that!”

Akira started browsing and choosing rifles again while still enjoying his bath just like last time. And Alpha stood next to him with a smile, just like usual.

⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯*⎯⎯

On the next day, Akira let Shizuka know what was going on and asked for her help. He also did not forget to place his order for the rifle that he decided to get after a long selection process as well as for the ammo to use with that rifle. There was no guarantee that Shizuka had the type of ammo that he was looking for in-stock and even if she could order those ammo, Akira thought that it would cause her a lot of trouble if she placed such a huge order just for his sake. That's why he decided to put in his order sooner.

After they finished, Shizuka then worriedly said to Akira.

"I understand what's going on and of course I'll help out too, but, are you alright? Although they'll pay for it, buying this much ammo will definitely cost a lot of money, you know. In the worst-case scenario, they might take it as harassment."

Akira replied with a serious face.

"Kibayashi, the guy that I had a discussion with regarding this matter did give his approval… To be honest, I was thinking if they refuse to pay because of that, I might be able to use it as an excuse to refuse their request though. Even if something were to happen after putting that order in, as long as I keep them without using them during the period of preparing for that request, it should not cause any trouble."

"I see that you've given a thought about this. Alright then, I'll put in the order with a deposit payment, okay?"

Shizuka started working on the documents for placing that order. Just like last time, she also submitted the id code for that request to make sure that the deposit payment would be forwarded to that requester address. There were cases where the order was stopped because there was trouble during the settlement of the payment. Normally, Shizuka did not really care whether the payment would go well or not, but this time, she made a small wish for some kind of trouble to happen. But unfortunately, the payment went through just fine.

"Yup, it went well. To be honest, from the shop's side, I should be happy that my customer has no problem paying for the goods bought in my shop, but…"

She smiled bitterly, Akira also replied with a bitter smile.

“Well then, please process the equipment too. Of course, since it’s not an expendable item, please process it separately. To be honest, even if it gets processed as an expendable item by mistake, I hope it doesn’t really get turned into an expendable item.”

“Honestly speaking, I don’t think normal Hunters can get such a request unless they’re from the front line though.”

Shizuka then processed the rest of the deal. The payment went through just fine as it was withdrawn from Akira’s bank account.

“Thank you for your patronage. I’ll let you know when it arrives. I’ll give the ammo together with the rifle.”

“Alright.”

Akira replied casually, but Shizuka stared back at him with a rather serious face. He found that a bit weird. Shizuka then left the counter and stood in front of him before giving him a hug.

Although Akira was surprised, he just silently let her hug him. Shizuka then gently caressed Akira’s head.

“…I’m sure that it won’t be easy, good luck and give your best out there. But make sure not to force yourself, and make sure to return back alive. Okay?”

Akira lightly smiled.

“Alright.”

“Good answer.”

As Shizuka let Akira go. Both of them smiled at each other, slightly embarrassed.

Shizuka once again had a worried look on her face. Akira had already left her shop, so she was all alone in her shop.

The reason why she looked worried was because of her intuition.

Akira once took a request in which the cost of all his expendables was paid by the request giver. He then returned back with a lot of money and used it to renew his equipment. Up until that point, Shizuka was also happy for him.

But in exchange, Akira lost all of his equipment and almost got killed. He even had his augmented suit completely wasted and he had to get hospitalized too. There was no mistaking it, he had to go through a very dangerous situation. Shizuka at least knew that much.

This time, the request that Akira took was a request to raise his Hunter Rank. It was a request that the City Management personally dispatched for him. Though it was not a request that he could refuse, the situation now and then was not the same. If it was a good chance to let others know Akira's real strength that they had always looked down on until now, then it was something to be happy about. It could be taken as a request given to the Hunter as goodwill from the City Management and it should not be something that was overly dangerous.

Moreover, she did warn him not to do anything reckless. Judging from how he responded, it should at least prevent Akira from doing anything too dangerous. As a matter of fact, Akira himself actually did not want to take that request. So he should not put himself in danger just for the sake of raising his Hunter Rank. Or at least, that was what she thought.

Shizuka tried to abate her worry by reminding herself about those facts. She then wished that everything would be fine. She had her own life to think about, and the shop that was important to her to take care of, so she could not just sacrifice everything to support Akira. But making a wish was free of charge. That was why she wished for Akira's safety as she hoped that her intuition would be proven wrong.

After all, her intuition was telling her that her wish would not come true.

Silavin: Any Asian should understand the culture of the best kind of money is the one paid by the government. Honestly, if the Hunter Office did not cap the expenditure, I would literally start buying grenades to throw at ants.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 178, Hunters Who Stood Out

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

With the destruction of the two reigning gangs, a large chunk of slum city was immediately thrown into a vacuum of power. Bosses of medium-sized to small-sized gangs gathered together to discuss that very matter right now. Their main focus was what to do with the territory left by the two destroyed gangs.

Of course, they could not afford to use military power to fight for that territory. But in order to keep their right over that territory, they could not afford to just back out either. Thanks to that, they could not come to a consensus even after a long and difficult discussion.

But if they kept this up without coming to any kind of conclusion anytime soon, the City Management might decide to just burn down that territory. After all, there was already a rumour spreading around saying that the mansion itself was occupied by monsters. With the time going against them, the members of that discussion could not afford to keep dilly-dallying, and the sense of pressure caused them to slowly compromise, although, it was still not enough for them to come to a consensus yet.

“Geez, let’s just decide on something. Just split that territory equally to the gangs neighbouring it, isn’t that good enough?”

“Heck no! If we go with that method, you’ll get a huge chunk of that territory. Even my gang had also lent those two gangs a lot of money and we can’t retrieve them back now. I won’t accept it unless we get enough territory to compensate for that amount.”

“Breaking that territory into pieces will only cause more trouble later.”

“Even the bases and the buildings are pretty valuable for us. Hunters might have no interest in them, but we can use them to earn more money. I’m sure you guys want them too. If we keep bickering like this, the City Management will burn them sooner or later, you know?”

“If you take the base, the area around the base will automatically become yours too. So how are you going to split that? I bet you’re planning to take that base for yourself, right? Like hell I will just let you do that!”

The bosses of each gang were debating and bickering for the sake of their own profit, loss, pride, greed, and standings. If any of them backed down, it would cause them more trouble later down the line. But if any of them forced through their own desires in this situation, it would be the same as picking a fight against the rest of the other gangs. The discussion went back and forth without making any meaningful progress.

Then one of the bosses from a medium-sized gang, who didn’t want this to go on forever, made a suggestion.

“If we only divide the territory among the gangs which participated in that battle, that would be the remnants of Ezont Family and Haurias, and that newcomer. But with no one from the Haurias nor Ezont Family here, that means everything will go to that newcomer. If we go with that method, I want to at least listen to the newcomer’s opinion first.”

Everyone in that room turned to the newcomer, and that newcomer was Sheryl.

Sheryl had come to that place with Viola and Carol. Viola and Carol stood behind Sheryl's seat as if they were officers under Sheryl's gang.

As the bosses from the other gangs directed their gazes at Sheryl as if they were trying to send a telepathic message to her, Sheryl just smiled and said.

"In that case, would it be okay if I take everything?"

No one expected Sheryl to say something as preposterous as that, half of the people there looked at her with widened eyes as they froze in place. The silence slowly shifted into whispers, and then whispers into chatters. While they were mumbling about those unexpected words from Sheryl, one of them shouted.

"Everything?! Are you kidding me?!"

Sheryl did not wince back at all, she only looked back at that guy with her usual smile and replied.

"I see, in that case, how much of that territory may I take?"

"W-well, even if you ask me…"

If that guy said a concrete number there, the other bosses would definitely turn at him. As he was unable to say anything, another guy interjected.

"Even if you take everything, there's no way you can manage the whole territory all by yourself anyway. Use common sense here, will you?"

"You're indeed right. Shijima-san, I'll leave the territory that I get to you, so will you please manage them for us? If yes, then I'll only take the territory that Shijima-san can manage, is that good enough for everyone? Shijima-san, we can talk about the details like how are we going to split the profit and the cost for maintaining that territory later."

Although Shijima was already surprised when Sheryl suddenly brought up his name, he was even more shocked by her suggestion. With everyone's attention focused on him, Shijima felt slightly overwhelmed, but of course, he did not show any of that on the outside.

One of the bosses there calculated how big the area that Shijima's gang could manage with their current power, and his face turned grim as he realized that there was a good chance another gang would try to wrestle that territory from Shijima later if they did that.

"Wait a sec. Why did you suddenly say that? Or more like, why Shijima? If you need someone else to manage that territory, you can pick any other gang, right? Did you guys make some kind of agreement beforehand or something?"

"Not exactly. But during the discussion with Akira from the other day, we promised him to get along with Shijima-san's gang and he hasn't told me to abandon that agreement either."

The moment Sheryl brought up Akira's name, all the gang bosses there showed various reactions– fear, alert, interest, doubt, mockery–all of them had different reactions to Akira's name.

One of them who looked down at Akira raised his voice and questioned Akira's real strength while wording it out as if he was asking for others' agreement.

"Akira, huh? He's that Hunter supporting your gang, right? I've heard about him too. In the first place, I don't know how much the rumour that I heard about him is true. Don't take me wrongly though, I'm not saying that he's weak or anything. But I bet those rumours have something to do with that girl behind you."

Everyone looked at Viola. Although only some of them were obviously suspecting Viola, everyone could agree that the chance of her involvement was not zero.

Viola had her usual provocative smile as she pulled out her information terminal and operated it. Immediately afterwards, a notification reached the information terminal of the other people in that place. Since it was obvious that it was from Viola, everyone checked their information terminal and noticed that it was a video file.

The moment they played that video, everyone was dumbstruck. It was a video of Akira fighting a black powered suit. Murmurs started to ripple as they expressed their impression of that video.

“Damn, what the heck is wrong with this boy…”

“This guy fought a powered suit with nothing more than his body, huh? Wait, no, he’s using an augmented suit, but still…”

“Wait for a sec here, he’s winning? Are you kidding me…?”

The video was like a collage of multiple short shots, but it was enough as proof that Akira was a real maniac.

One of the bosses there could not hide his shock as he asked Viola.

“Can you prove that this video is not fake? For all that we know, you might have faked this video.”

Viola smiled at him as if to mock him and challenge him.

“If you can’t trust me, you can try to investigate it yourself. Although it’s a confidential video, it’s not a huge secret. So you should be able to get the same video with a little effort, you know?”

The guy who asked that question was convinced that it was not a fake video from that exchange. Or at least, he understood that the City Management even trusted that video too. Although he was not that convinced compared to the other people present, it was enough to shut him up.

Another guy then turned to Sheryl again, he still was not able to fully recover from the shock as he said to her.

“…Leaving that Hunter aside, I still think it’s too much for you to ask everything, no?”

Sheryl could not fully hold back her smile.

“True, but I have no reason to refuse that proposition either. Not to mention, I have some debts that I have to pay Akira too. So if I can take the whole territory, I’m planning to turn some of them into money. After I formally receive that territory, I’m thinking of selling some of them to the other gangs. After all, I did something similar with Shijima-san before.”

“Debt, huh. How much is it exactly?”

“About 4 billion Aurum.”

Murmur rippled through the room again.

“…4 Billion? Is this some kind of joke?”

“I can assure you that it’s not. The one who calculated that debt is Viola.”

After Sheryl said that, everyone sent a hostile gaze to Viola. Viola only smiled back at everyone in response to that. Judging from that reaction, everyone had the same thought, Viola must have done something dirty to get Sheryl into that debt.

One of the guys there had a really troubled look, he was surprised by the difference between the information that he had gathered beforehand and the information that he received just now. But even so, he still tried his hardest to think of a way to make this occasion into a profitable one for his gang.

Akira was strong enough to fight a powered suit and was invested enough in Sheryl that he would go to rescue her himself. Then to top it off, he was crazy enough to raid one of the biggest gang’s base just to kill a pickpocket. This opportunity was basically a good chance for Akira to get back the 4 billion Aurum that he had lent to Sheryl. So considering how much animosity they would earn from Akira if they tried to contest for that territory and preventing Sheryl from paying back her debt, it might be not a wise thing to be greedy, at least not for now.

After he made up his mind, he decided to change his method of trying to get his hands on that territory.

“I’m fine with it if you want to let the other gangs take care of that territory, but it doesn’t have to be Shijima, right? Though you said you want to get along well with Shijima’s gang, to be honest, I don’t think you can get much profit from that, am I wrong?”

“Well, that’s true.”

“Thought so!”

That guy smiled and glanced at the bosses from the other gangs that his gang was going along relatively well with. All of them immediately gave their approval when he did that. Thus an alliance was formed in order to take a part of that territory management right from Shijima’s gang.

“…In that case-”

When that guy was about to continue, Sheryl interrupted him while making a troubled face.

“But again, other than Shijima-san, I know no one else who has negotiated with Akira, forced him to compromise, and even made him pay up some money.”

Everyone present immediately turned to Shijima. Shijima was barely able to maintain his calm. With him unable to say anything back, he noticed that some of them were obviously misunderstanding him there, so he just looked away to evade that subject. But Sheryl continued.

“Ah, but I don’t mind if any of you want to discuss it with Shijima-san to manage that territory with him. That way we’ll be able to manage a wider area after all. So I would be more than happy if any of you want to do that.”

Everyone exchanged looks with each other. Though a few more people were swayed, it was not enough to conclude their discussion.

“…Let’s take a short break here.”

“…Good idea.”

Since no one objected, they took a short break from the discussion as they started leaving the meeting room. But of course, no one was actually taking a break, they only left the room since they wanted to discuss something that they could not discuss there.

Shijima was the first one to leave the room. He understood very well that it would be bad if the other gangs swamped him. He believed that he should take some distance from the other gangs for now and contact Viola, who he bet had her hands on this behind the scene.

Sheryl, Viola and Carol were the only ones left inside that room. Sheryl let out a long sigh, she looked rather tired. Viola was talking with Shijima through her information terminal not too far from Sheryl. Carol, who was also standing close to Sheryl, looked at her and smiled amusedly.

“Carol-san, is there anything wrong?”

“Hm? It’s nothing. I just thought that if Viola had a little sister, she would look just like you.”

“…Please stop with the jokes.”

Carol could not hold back her giggle seeing how Sheryl obviously hated that idea.

After that, the meeting continued pretty smoothly in one direction. Although there was a bit of disagreement, they finally agreed on a consensus, and Sheryl’s gang was able to gain a lot of profits from that conclusion.

__*__*__*__

Akira was riding his bike through a major road inside Kuzusuhara ruin. This road was built by Kugamayama city and it went all the way to the forward base deep inside the ruin. Even now, the road was guarded by those who were also properly maintaining it. After all, it was an important road for the sake of exploring the ruin.

After the long negotiation with Kibayashi that lasted until the sunset, the rank-up request that Akira accepted from him was to take Hunter jobs around that road. To be more precise, it included hunting monsters and relics, patrolling and gathering information, as well as accepting SOS requests. Basically, it was a rather lax request where Akira was basically free to do whatever he wanted.

But of course, there were also some requirements that Akira had to do. Any relics that he gathered during that request should be sold to the relic exchange office in the forward base, he had to hand over all the information that he gathered, he should not ignore the SOS request he received, and he had to prioritize cleaning up any monster swarm that he found near the road. In exchange for paying his ammo and his other expenses, Akira accepted those conditions.

“Well, it’s great that I’m basically free from doing anything I want as long as I stay near this highway, they’ll also pay for my ammo too. But seeing from their perspective, it means that even considering the fact this request is made to boost my rank, this request is actually so dangerous to the point that they agreed on such a condition.”

Alpha lightly added.

“This road basically cross past the patrol route of that big monster that attacked you the other day. So judging from that fact, this place is actually pretty dangerous, you know.”

“Is that so? Wait, that means that they had to fight that monster when they secured this road, huh? That’s pretty amazing, I wonder how they managed to defeat that monster?”

“I bet they dispatched a lot of tanks and powered suits along this road to fight that monster. If they can maintain the route between the front-line and the back-line, it’s not that difficult for the city defence squad to defeat a monster of that level. That’s exactly why the City Management poured their money in order to maintain this road. Look, they’re still working on this road even now.”

Alpha pointed at the side of the road. When Akira looked in that direction, he could see some people working on rebuilding the abandoned buildings around the road into protection walls. There were also some people barricading the small side roads to prevent monsters from using them.

“Although I’m sure that there’s no need to say this, they must have cost a lot of money. Though I’m sure that they only do that because they expect to get enough profit from this road… I heard that Kugamayama city was built in order to explore the Kuzusuhara ruin, but I see now, there is no wonder why they decided to build a whole city for something like that.”

Old-world relics were extremely valuable goods in the eastern district. Akira himself tasted a glimpse of how much money these relics could bring him and he could not help but feel slightly amazed by it.

There were multiple checkpoints guarded by powerful guards along that road and the distance between one checkpoint to another was fixed. These checkpoints were equipped with powerful defences and powerful portable walls in order to stop the invading monsters in case those monsters broke through the first line of defence.

In one of those checkpoints, Akira was showing the terminal on his arm to one of the guards. That terminal was lent to him from the forward base and it was of the same type as the one that he had got during the request in Kuzusuhara underground city forward base. He was told to use that information terminal during this request too and it also doubled as a pass to go through the checkpoints. Normally, Hunters would have to pay when they wanted to use that road and a terminal was also there to collect the payment. But during this request, Akira was exempted from that fee.

The guard connected his terminal to Akira’s terminal, he then slightly raised his eyebrows and looked at Akira.

“Ohhh, so you’re Akira, huh?”

“Yes, I’m Akira, what of it?”

The guard frowned and checked up on Akira, he then smiled.

“Nah, everything is good. You can pass, good luck out there.”

Akira just ignored that guy and passed through the checkpoints. But a little later he remembered something and seemed a bit bothered by it.

“Alpha, what do you think was that?”

“No idea. Let’s just forget about it and keep going. It’s not that important that you would go back just to check it, right?”

“Well, that’s true, but still…”

“I bet it’s just that they’ve heard about you or something. It might be just that they have seen that video from Kibayashi or heard about your involvement in that incident.”

Alpha smiled just like usual, but in contrast to that, Akira frowned and said.

“Wasn’t that supposed to be confidential?”

“Those guys are from the City Management, so it won’t be strange if they know, no?”

“…Give me a break. I don’t want people throwing requests at me using that battle as a basis.”

“You’re not obligated to accept them even if they do. But if something like that were to happen again, you can just fight enough to fulfil your contract and run away.”

“You’re right, I’ll do that.”

Akira then shook that thought off of his mind and focused on the road in front of him.

One of that guard’s friends came to the guard when he saw him taking an unusually long time to check Akira’s identity through the checkpoint.

“Is there something wrong about that boy?”

“Nah, it’s nothing. It’s just that he was the Hunter we talked about when we were out drinking yesterday.”

“Is that kind of Hunter really so rare?”

“Rather than at him, I’m more interested in the guy who’s interested in him. It’s that Kibayashi, you know.”

“Ahh, I see now. I feel bad for him since he’s still young…”

That guard nodded. His mixed feeling toward Kibayashi and the Hunter that Kibayashi was interested in was fully shown on his face.

Kibayashi’s love for reckless Hunters was well-known, but strangely enough, it was a highly effective method to identify young Hunters with rare talents. Most of the great Hunters tend to be blinded by the glory as they went out chasing for that glory only to be swallowed by the wasteland. But a small number of those Hunters were able to get a hold of that glory and return back alive.

Even if his bad habit sometimes caused trouble with triple-digit rank Hunters, with his connections to all the Hunters working in the front line, Kibayashi was treated as an important person. Thanks to that, the City Management and the Hunter Office had their eyes on him. That was exactly the reason why Akira was able to get such benefits like all his ammo expenses paid by the City Management.

“So then, is he the lucky one? Or the poor one?”

“No idea. He’s still alive and kicking for now, so I guess he’s the lucky one. But with that being said, it won’t be strange if he turns into the unlucky one anytime. Honestly, I wouldn’t want to be in his situation if I were him.”

“Couldn’t agree more to that. I don’t want to die too, after all.”

They then laughed and returned back to their guard duty.

Not too long after Akira went down that road, he noticed that the scene around him had been completely changed as if he had passed some kind of boundary. Rubbles were scattered around him, he could see powered suits patrolling the area, and not too far in front of him, there were City Management staff working on a huge wall. Although that area was already secured by the City Management, it was not an area where normal workers could work in. There were even corpses of dead monsters left in the area too.

Akira stopped his bike and thought about where to go from there.

“Now then, what to do from here?”

Alpha made a suggestion to Akira.

“If you want to take part in a huge fight, you can continue along the road and join up with the other Hunters in the front line.”

“No thanks!”

“In that case, if you want to do relatively safer work of gathering relics, you can go to one of those buildings around the area. Some of them might have been already secured beforehand which means any expensive-looking relics might have been carried out from them. But if you look more carefully, you might still be able to find some valuable relics left.”

“Hmm, I don’t feel like doing that either. I have no plans to do anything reckless, but I don’t feel like searching a place that doesn’t seem to have any valuable relics left either… I guess I’ll just drive around while checking if there’s any place that seems to still have some expensive relics left inside.”

“Just to make sure, you’ll do your best during this request without my support, right?”

“Yeah, if I keep defeating monsters effectively without using many bullets thanks to your support, I feel like people will start to get weird expectations of me again. So for the time being, I’ll try doing this request on my own to check my own real strength and to make people understand that I was able to defeat that black powered suit because of luck instead of skill. I'll rely on your support only when it's really needed."

Alpha smiled and lightly poked at Akira.

"In that case, this will be the perfect chance to check the result of all your training up until now. I'll be staying beside you to see how far you can go without my support."

Akira lightly smiled back at her.

"Roger that, I'll give my best shot."

"If I don't see much improvement, I'll increase the difficulty of your training, okay?"

"If you make it any harder, my limbs would fall off, you know?"

"It's a good thing that you bought that 5 million Aurum medicine, isn't it?"

In contrast to Alpha who was smiling amusedly, Akira seemed a bit concerned as he paced his bike. He then turned into one of the side roads and went through alleys between buildings to search the ruin.

While at the same time, Yatsubayashi was sitting in his private room while making a troubled face.

"This is not good at all…"

The big display in front of him was showing the signal from the tracker implanted inside Tiol. It also showed other information along with Tiol's position. At the moment, Tiol's signal was coming from Kuzusuhara ruin.

"The bomb inside him should have exploded after a fixed amount of time. Did he dismantle that too? Or did he completely devour it…?"

Yatsubayashi actually did not really care that much about Tiol's life. He thought he could just retrieve Tiol's corpse after he died somewhere, that was why he was not that pressured to take care of Tiol right now. But now it was starting to get worrying.

Tiol's signal was showing that he was staying somewhere next to the main road made by the City Management that went through the ruin. In case the guards captured Tiol and did a close investigation on him, it might link back to Yatsubayashi.

"Yep, this is not good at all. Maybe I should do something to retrieve Tiol back. But still…"

Yatsubayashi then thought about some of the negatives that might happen if he took the initiative to retrieve Tiol. Although leaving Tiol alone might cause him a lot of trouble, considering how much benefit he could get if he was able to retrieve Tiol back, he honestly did not want to let Tiol roam around freely.

"What should I do…"

Yatsubayashi could not make any concrete decision. After a long thought, he decided to make a compromise.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 179, Mechanical Armoured Spider Bug

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira continued searching the ruin. The inner part of the Kuzusuhara ruin expanded through a wide area and it was still quite a distance away from the deepest part of the ruin. But even so, compared to the outskirts of the ruin, the buildings were not that dilapidated, and the condition of the area was not much different compared to the deeper part of the ruin.

Alpha was floating horizontally next to Akira as if she was lying on top of an invisible bed.

“Akira, you’ve been driving around for some time now, are you not going to check one of those buildings?”

“I just thought that I should check the structure around this place first. That’s for the sake of registering buildings that seem to have expensive relics too. By the way, is it true, it’s better to aim for big buildings?”

“Hmm, I’m not really sure about that. Larger shops are easy to spot, so I feel like other Hunters would be searching such a building first. In that case, you might only end up with a small number of relics instead. What’s more, big buildings like that tend to be guarded by relatively powerful monsters. So all in all, it might not be a good choice.”

“I see.”

Akira nodded, then something came up in his mind.

“…Wait, isn’t this considered as support from you?”

Alpha smiled mischievously at Akira.

“I won’t count a small silly talk like this as support. If you really want to do this without my support at all, it might be better if I remove my image and voice too. But I just thought that you would be lonely if I do that, right?”

“Well, thanks for being considerate.”

Akira smiled wryly.

In the middle of searching the ruin, Akira suddenly stopped his bike and looked around him.

The large building next to him seemed like it had been chomped by something big. Next to it, there were multiple corpses of greedy crocodiles together with the leftover of what seemed to be the defensive equipment of that building. Other beast-like biological monsters were feasting on those wreckages.

One of those monsters suddenly noticed Akira and stopped eating, but it immediately lost interest in him and returned back to its meal.

After watching that for a few seconds, a certain word came up in Akira’s mind: ‘food chain’. It was a word that he had learnt from Alpha’s class. He always thought that he would not be able to see for himself the meaning of all the words that he learnt in Alpha’s class, but that did not seem to be the case.

“…A living organism that started as a creature that eats buildings instead of grasses…? Nah, that can’t be.”

“Hmm, they might be the monsters produced by facilities with self-readjusting food chain preservation function in order to clean up the city.”

“No no no, it would be meaningless for them to be eating the building then, wouldn’t it? And even if that’s true, then why would they even go as far as to fight the defensive equipment just to eat that building?”

“They might need to eat fresh rubble in order to be able to harvest the energy pack implanted into one of those self-repairing buildings. So basically, for them, the buildings are like fresh meat while the already destroyed buildings are like rotten meat.”

Akira listened to Alpha’s explanation with full interest.

“...Is that so?”

Alpha smiled, amused.

“No, that’s just my guess.”

Akira frowned and looked slightly annoyed, but Alpha did not seem to be bothered by that at all as she kept smiling like usual.

“I don’t mind if you want to talk about how the world works, but don’t forget that we’re in the middle of a job right now. If it still bothers you that much, I can reserve some time to give you an extra lesson about the monsters living in the old-world ruins. Though it won’t be detailed to the point that you would be able to use that knowledge in real Hunter jobs. Do you still want to do it?”

The very same question was also in active research in the eastern district. Any pieces of knowledge that the researchers could get from that research would then be used to help them to pinpoint the nests and the production facilities of those monsters as well as their distribution around the eastern district.

“No thanks, at least not for the time being.”

“I see.”

Akira interpreted Alpha’s smile as telling him to stop dilly-dallying and get back to his job, so he once again operated his bike and left that place.

After Akira left that place, an abnormality happened in one of the dead greedy crocodiles. An arm suddenly burst out of its strong scales.

The owner of that hand forced itself out of that greedy crocodile after he tore a hole in that carcass.

The other monsters in that area quickly focused their attention on Tiol and attacked him. Though Tiol only looked emotionlessly at those monsters, his right arm already swung at their heads while his left arm, which was in the shape of a cannon, was already shooting at them. It did not take long for him to destroy all the monsters attacking him. Once he was done, he immediately vanished into the deeper part of the ruin.

Akira once again stopped his bike. But this time, it was not because something piqued his interest.

"…Alpha. Unless my eyes are tricking me, there is a swarm of Tank Tarantula right?"

The roads and buildings in front of Akira were crawling with spider-like monsters, some of them had metallic skeletal frames while some of them had concrete-like bodies. Although some of them were unarmed, most had cannons growing on their backs. And their length ranged from barely 1 metre to all the way past 3 metres.

Akira's expression turned stern. But Alpha was smiling like usual as if it did not bother her.

"Those are a swarm of spider-type armoured insects. Classification-wise, they're similar to the Yarata Scorpion."

"…So they're not Tank Tarantulas?"

"Tank Tarantula is the name of a bounty monster, so it doesn't refer to a type of monster. But if one of those spiders eat enough food to grow abnormally big and go through an abnormal evolution, there's a chance that it'll grow, evolve, or maybe mutate into something similar to that Tank Tarantula."

Akira thought for a bit before he decided not to avoid them. He let go of the bike's handle on the right and grabbed his rifle.

"Are you going to fight them? I don't see there's a need to fight them though?"

"I don't want them to turn into a swarm of Tank Tarantulas later just because I leave them alone now. And that's still my stance. Even if the possibility of something like that happening is very small, I should be prepared. What's more, this is a good chance to test my new equipment. After all, I'm free to use as many bullets as I want this time. I'll fight without your support first, but if things are getting bad, I'll need your support."

"Alright. I'll stand back and watch this time, so you can go ahead and give it your best shot."

Akira looked at the gun in his right hand and smiled bitterly.

"Though to be honest, rather than my skill, I think you'll have a better look at my new equipment and all the free ammo that I'm going to use this time."

At first, Akira was looking for a multi-type rifle that could shoot out grenades like his A4WM automatic grenade launcher, but he later decided to take that requirement off. After all, a rifle and a grenade launcher were basically two different things, so putting them into one gun caused the cost of that gun to skyrocket.

So in the end, he aimed for a gun that could do long-range sniping and continuous firing on top of being compatible with a wide range of ammo. After checking all the guns that Shizuka recommended within his budget and searching for the best gun among them, Akira decided on an SSB multi-weapon rifle.

SSB multi-weapon rifle was an amalgamation of DSS assault rifle, DVTS minigun, and CWH anti-material rifle. Its total length was just a little longer than an AAH assault rifle and shorter than a CWH anti-material rifle. It was compact enough to be used with one hand. It was also equipped with force field armour technology to reduce its recoil, thus effectively reducing its kickback and increasing its accuracy. But in exchange, it actively consumed energy packs to power its force field armour. The stronger ammo that Akira used, the faster it would burn through its energy pack. So, although it had so many features, one of its drawbacks was how much he had to pay for using that rifle.

Akira then used the rest of his budget to buy modification parts for that SSB multi-weapon rifle and his A4WM automatic grenade launcher, which totalled 200 million Aurum. And he still had to buy ammo, energy packs, and other consumables on top of that.

As he aimed his SSB multi-weapon at the spiders, Akira frowned, worrying if his new equipment could perform as well as he expected; considering all the money that he had splurged for it. The spiders immediately noticed him and tried to swarm him. The spiders with cannons on their back aimed it at Akira and started shooting at him.

Akira pulled the trigger, his SSB multi-weapon rifle was loaded with a magazine filled with ammo that was as expensive and as powerful as CWH anti-material rifle special ammo. Although the kickback from that ammo was nothing to scoff at, thanks to the recoil suspension system of the SSB multi-weapon rifle, Akira barely felt anything. Inside his extended time perception, Akira was extremely surprised, but of course, that did not stop him from aiming at the spiders in front of him. Even in that extremely extended time perception, he could feel multiple bullets leave the barrel of his rifle. The moment that bullet reached its target, it showed no mercy and blew its target to smithereens.

Akira was surprised by its firepower as he swept through the swarm. Although it reduced the intensity of his barrage, it was more than enough to pierce and kill the spiders. Akira biked up to the top of the scattered metallic wreckage of the dead spiders mixed with the rubbles and other things while he kept shooting at the spiders.

The falling warheads from the spiders bombarded Akira, but he was able to evade them with the speed of his bike as he turned left and right to disrupt their aimings. While at the same time, he was also circling the swarm, releasing a few shots every time he spotted that swarm from the openings between buildings.

Every time Akira passed through a crossroad, multiple warheads would be immediately released in his direction from the spiders both on the ground and on the buildings. But he accelerated his bike to slip through those warheads, or sometimes, he would compress his time perception to its limit in order to evade them, while leaving the spiders chasing him behind. He then sometimes stopped his bike to lay and wait, and immediately released a barrage the moment that swarm made a turn on that crossroad.

Akira kept circling the swarm while shooting at them. Every time he made a full round, the radius of the swarm got smaller and smaller. Akira prioritized shooting at the monsters with weaker-looking bodies made of a mix of brittle mechanical parts and flesh, thus leaving only the strong armoured spiders behind. He also shot down all the spiders that were latching on the building walls as they smacked down right to the ground.

Right about when the size of the swarm was halved, Akira finally ran out of ammo. But even so, he kept aiming at the swarm.

Akira had also equipped his SSB multi-weapon rifle with a guiding beam. Thanks to a rather extreme modification part that he had bought, he managed to add a mini-missile launcher on his A4WM automatic grenade launcher fixed on an arm behind his bike. And that guiding beam was able to work together with that missile launcher.

Akira fixed his aim at the relatively strong looking spiders. When he did that, the information display on his goggles marked those spiders. That was when he pulled the trigger and released multiple missiles from behind him straight to those spiders.

The small-sized missiles floated for a while as if they were fixed in that positions, but then, immediately, some of them went overhead, drew a perfect curve before raining down at the spiders from above, while some of them travelled parallel to the ground following the guiding beam from Akira’s rifle with a huge momentum before colliding with the spiders from the side. With the missiles coming from above and from the front, the explosions immediately devoured the spiders.

When the aftermath of that explosion subsided, the swarm left nothing behind at all. Only a larger sized monster that led the swarm was left in the middle of the destroyed swarm.

That monster, which looked like a pseudo Tank Tarantula, started to move. Part of its body opened up, exposing pods behind them, and released multiple mini-missiles that immediately hunted for Akira. Akira, who saw that, could not help but frown.

But he immediately accelerated his bike and jumped straight into one of the buildings near him. The missiles that were chasing him were not smart enough to pursue him as they collided into the wall of that building. As each explosion took a part of that building away, the missiles dug through the building and caused it to crumble down. Akira forced his way through that building on his bike and jumped out from the crumbling building. The building behind him crumbled down and made a loud sound as it fell to the ground.

The pseudo Tank Tarantula released another barrage of missiles. The missiles filled the sky before raining down on Akira. But before those missiles flew downward, Akira quickly compressed his time perception and reloaded a new magazine into his SSB multi-weapon rifle.

Multiple anti-forcefield armour bullets flew out from the rifle’s muzzle in rapid succession. The bullets ripped through the air and hit the Tank Tarantula right on its head. The bullet was even powerful enough to pierce through its head all the way to its torso, making a mess of that monster’s inside.

The Tank Tarantula exploded from inside, engulfing its big body in flames before blowing up into small pieces. With the mini-missiles losing their guidance system, they just flew straight down to the ground and exploded. Once all the missiles had exploded, silence returned to the ruin.

Akira heaved a big sigh.

“…I somehow got through that.”

Alpha smiled and praised him.

“Good work, that was not bad at all.”

“Thanks, but still…”

Akira’s happy face was decorated with a bitter smile.

“…Normally this would leave me with a big loss.”

Akira started to calculate the total cost of the ammo he spent in that fight but he immediately decided to stop before he could come up with the precise number. He then told himself that he would refuse to pay for the ammo that he used that day no matter what.

Suddenly a call reached his borrowed terminal.

“This is the commander from the forward base. Number 14, are you there?”

“Number 14 here, what is it?”

“Your terminal sent a data pack showing that there was a huge fight over there, what happened?”

“Oh, just monsters. There was a swarm of monsters that I had to fight.”

“What’s your situation right now? Do you need backup?”

“That won’t be necessary, I’m just done with that fight. I’ll be heading back to the forward base now for resupply.”

“Alright, got it.”

The call ended there, Akira then smiled wryly and said.

“I see, it was a pretty big fight, enough to warrant a check from them, huh? Alright then, let’s end here for today. I’m pretty sure I already worked hard enough for the day. So let’s head back home.”

“Oh my, you’re heading back early today.”

“No no no, I already worked hard enough for today, you know. Even putting aside the amount of money that I used today, I’m pretty sure eradicating that swarm is good enough for raising my Hunter Rank… Probably.”

Alpha smiled mischievously.

“So in short, this will basically take a little bit more time, huh?”

“Yup!”

Akira lightly smiled and just ignored Alpha as he turned his bike toward the forward base’s direction.

There was actually a different type of monster mixed in that swarm of spiders. Although that unit was not that strong, it was pretty durable.

So, even after all of that fighting, that unit survived. It made sure Akira left that place before sending some data. Once it had done its duty, it deactivated and went limp.

The next day, Akira was placing some orders in Shizuka’s shop. Shizuka could not help but to make a worried face after she took in that order from Akira.

“You went and used quite a lot of ammo on your first day, did something happen?”

Although Akira was happy that Shizuka was worried for him, he also did not want to make her worry as he smiled at her and said.

“It’s nothing too bad. I made sure to compensate for my skill with expensive ammo so that I won’t be in any danger. Thanks to that, it was not that hard of a fight. Although, it would definitely leave me in red if it was a normal monster hunter request. Well, basically I’m buying my safety with someone else’s money, but since that’s how it is for this request, I’m planning to keep doing that.”

Shizuka smiled bitterly.

“Well, you’re really contributing to my shop’s sales and if you say that you’re not having any trouble at all, then I have nothing to complain about. Although, I wonder who’s getting into trouble because of this.”

“That would be the person who overestimated my skill, and that is not my fault.”

Akira smiled mischievously, seeing that, Shizuka could not help but giggle.

Shizuka then finalized the payment, and just like last time, it went through without a hitch. After that, she turned to Akira and said to him with a serious face.

“…It went through without trouble again this time. At this rate, don’t you think that it should be alright for you to get more expensive stuff?”

Although he did it because he had to fight a swarm of monsters, it did not change the fact that Akira leisurely used ammo while ignoring its total expense. Although his contract allowed him to do so, there was no mistaking that he would receive some complaints later. Even more so when Kibayashi did not even ask why he needed that money before approving payment.

Akira himself also wondered why he was allowed to do that, he wondered if it was because it was normal for Hunters working around the ruin to use that much money, or if there was another reason for that.

“Although these are only consumables, it would still take some time for the orders to arrive when you order this many, and it’s doubly true for expensive goods. So it might be a good idea to place an order for some extra now.”

“Ah, thank you but I will have to refuse, at least not for today. I just placed an order now. I’ll think about it again after I receive it.”

“I see, well, good luck and be careful out there. Don’t lower your guard just because you’re free to use as many bullets as you want, okay?”

“Of course!”

Akira then spent some time talking with Shizuka before taking his goods and leaving the shop. Judging from how he seemed to be absolutely confident in being able to return back alive, Shizuka thought that whatever happened yesterday was not that much of a problem.

Akira once again took his bike to the inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin. That day he had no plans to hunt for monsters, instead, he went to search the buildings around the highway, hunting for relics.

After he spent some time looking around, he decided to just go to one of the buildings there. He parked his bike in front of that building, but before he went in, he looked at his A4WM automatic grenade launcher fixed on the backside of his bike and was unsure whether it was a good idea to bring it or not.

“…I guess it’s better not to take that with me, huh.”

Since he upgraded his A4WM automatic grenade launcher with a mini-missile launcher, its size had grown pretty large. Though he still could take it with him, it was pretty much as big as a tank cannon, and of course, bringing a tank cannon with him would hinder his mobility.

In the first place, grenade launchers and missile launchers were not something to be used inside a closed space. He was able to do so in the past thanks to Alpha’s support, but now that he was cutting himself from that support, it would be dangerous to bring them along with him. Not to mention, it was a hassle to put it back again once he removed it from the bike’s arm. So he decided not to bring it along with him.

That was when Alpha suddenly interjected.

“Akira, you can actually take that bike inside too, you know?”

“No no no, there’s no way to do that, right? Like, how am I going to take it up the stairs?”

“That’s when technologies come in. You can just step off from the bike when you want to search narrow places. Moreover, there’s no guarantee that your bike will be fine when you return back from searching the building, you know? Well, in the end, you’ll be the one to do everything though, so I won’t force you. But this is like another test for your luck, do you want to still go through it?”

Akira could still park the bike somewhere hard to see, put a camouflaging sheet over it, and pray that monsters would not find it. But with Alpha scaring him, he could not bring himself to take that option. He did not say anything back as he returned to his bike and turned it on while Alpha was watching him with a smile.

The inside of the building was actually pretty wide, thanks to that, Akira could ride his bike inside, albeit only slowly.

From Akira’s point of view, the inside of the building was in a weirdly bad condition. Although the walls, the floor, and the ceiling seemed brand new, everything else inside that building was withered. It was as if someone was using that newly made building as a garbage dump.

Akira looked around inside that building unsettlingly.

“I picked this building because of its outer look, but I guess this place is a dud, huh?”

“The auto-repair function only repairs the building, not the furniture or any objects inside it. So I guess the cleaning and replacement system inside this building must have been long deactivated.”

“I guess I’ll at least look around.”

Akira chose a random room, parked his bike in front of that room, and searched the room for any expensive-looking relics.

When he opened the door of one of the shelves there, he found a dusty machine inside it. As Akira tried to dust it off, it broke into pieces and fell apart. So he threw away anything that was left on his hand before moving on.

When he tried to pull a drawer, the handle went off and the whole drawer crumbled down, spilling the sand and the dust inside it and leaving only the handle on his hand. Akira threw that handle away and moved on.

He then spotted something that seemed to be a display case made of something that looked like glass. When he tried to lift it off to check if he could carry that back, the glass shattered and the whole case fell to pieces.

Akira frowned.

“Everything here is pretty much broken. This thing is still an old-world relic, right? So why is it this brittle? Even the plate that I found back in Higaraka residence ruin was not this brittle, you know?”

Alpha smiled and explained to Akira as if to calm him down.

“Although they’re made from the old-world era, not all of them were made to stand for a long time. And just like how your SSB multi-weapon rifle depends on energy packs, these things might have been designed to run on energy too, you know. So it’s understandable for them to deteriorate the moment they ran out of energy. But of course, this is nothing more than my guess.”

“…I see. Well, if that’s really the case, then we can’t do anything about it. Let’s just look for relics that seem durable.”

Up until now, Akira had wondered multiple times as to why Alpha knew that much about the old-world era. He had a lot of guesses based on his limited knowledge. But lately, one of his guesses kept sticking to his mind, the guess that Alpha was from the old-world era too.

Both Seranthal from the Seranthal building and Tsubaki from the Tsubakihara building were also from the old-world era although they were nothing more than AI for managing those buildings. Not to mention, Tsubaki had a body, it seemed that she was also acquainted with Alpha. Alpha also did say something along the line that she could get a corporeal body if Akira completed her request to explore a certain ruin.

So then, the real question would be what exactly was Alpha? Of course, Akira could not ask that question to Alpha himself since he would risk losing too many things by doing that.

Thus Akira pushed that question to the back of his mind as he continued searching for relics.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 180, Old-World Equipment

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira finished searching the fourth floor, but he still could not find anything valuable yet. Though he tried taking some relics which were in relatively better condition, all of them were turned into sand when he opened up his rucksack again to put in more relics later. So he decided that it was meaningless to keep doing that.

Akira sighed, slightly bummed out.

“I always thought that I should be able to at least find some expensive relics since we’re in the deeper part of the ruin, but it doesn’t seem to that easy, huh.”

Unlike Akira, Alpha still had her usual smile.

“Well, we’re still around the main road made by dispatching a big army. I’m sure that they already collected all the easy-to-spot expensive relics.”

“But still, that building you showed me the first time we met still had quite a lot of relics, right? Although the direction is not the same, that place was more or less of the same distance from the city, you know? So I thought I should be able to at least find some expensive relics here too.”

“The distance and the danger are different. Thanks to the properly maintained road, it’s an easy thing to send people to this place, you can’t afford to compare that place to here. Not to mention, that place was still patrolled by huge monsters, so only a limited number of Hunters managed to reach it.”

“Is that so?”

“If you want to find a lot of relics, you should look for buildings that other Hunters haven’t searched. I’m pretty sure you can find a lot of relics if you go past the front line, you know? Want to try to do that instead?”

“I wouldn’t go that far either though…”

Akira did think so too, but the front line was already guarded with powered suits. There was no doubt the area beyond it was highly dangerous. Of course, since he was free to use as many bullets as he wanted, he could just force his way there. But he also thought that there was no need to be that reckless, at least not for now.

“Well, for the time being, I’ll hunt for relics and monsters around this area.”

As he said so, Akira also kept reminding himself that he promised Shizuka not to do anything reckless.

Akira continued looking for relics in that building. Although he had reached the seventh floor, he still got no meaningful result. He forced his bike to go up the stairs and finally reached the eighth floor and noticed that it was different compared to the other floors downstairs.

The floor was filled with big snails, some of them were 1 metre long. Its shell was made of metal and a small-sized cannon was perching on its back.

“So, what’s your plan now? If you have no plans to collect money by hunting monsters, I don’t think there’s any need to fight them. We also could not find any good relics up until now, so, want to head back instead?”

“No, I’ll kill them and continue searching this building. Since there are monsters on this floor, I’m sure other Hunters who only came to take a quick glance of this place wouldn’t have tried to search for relics past this floor. So basically, there’s a good chance I still can find some relics ahead.”

“I see, good luck then.”

Akira stepped off from his bike and aimed his SSB multi-weapon rifle from under the shadow in that hallway. He aimed his rifle carefully and pulled the trigger, the bullet flew and pierced a hole in that snail’s shell.

The moment that happened, the snail pulled back its soft body as if to hug the floor while its small-sized cannon immediately targeted Akira. Akira quickly pulled back his body, the warhead flew past him, struck the wall and created a small explosion.

“Its cannon is not that powerful either.”

“With that being said, it does not mean you can afford to take that shot, okay?”

“I know.”

From that short exchange, Akira thought that the enemy was not that strong and it seemed he only needed a few shots to take it down. But after he took a few shots at that snail, he could not help but frown. All his shots did hit that sail, but the bullets only ricocheted off its shell. The same thing happened even after he did that 5 times. Every time the bullets hit that snail, a flash was released from its shell.

Akira was amazed by what was happening as he evaded the warheads coming at him.

“It suddenly turned hard. And also, that light, it is due to the kinetic energy conversion to light from the force field armour, right?”

“That seems to be the case.”

“So I have to kill it quickly before it can notice me, otherwise its shell will harden, huh? What a pain!”

Akira calmed his breathing and immediately jumped out from behind the cover. He compressed his time perception to its limit, aimed his SSB multi-type rifle at that monster, and pulled the trigger, aiming for the same spot as accurately as possible with each shot.

The combination of his compressed time perception, the recoil compensator of his SSB multi-type rifle, augmented physical capability from his augmented suit, and all the hard work that he had done from his training, allowed him to release rapid-fire with surgical accuracy. Thanks to that, all the bullets that he shot hit mostly the same location.

Even the powerful force field armour of the snail could not handle that. The bullets blew a hole through the snail’s shell and ricocheted inside the snail’s shell, destroying its innards. Not to mention, the snail had retracted its body into its shell, thus immediately killing it. It then leaned and rolled over with a low rattling sound.

“Alright then, well, although I was only able to kill it thanks to all the bullets that I consumed, a win is still a win. But still, I didn’t expect monsters with force field armour to be loitering around this place. I guess that’s normal when I’m this deep, huh. Maybe Kibayashi allowed me to use that much money because he knows that it would be this dangerous.”

Akira felt happy that he was able to defeat a relatively strong monster on his own. But Alpha immediately shot it down.

“Unfortunately, that might not be the case. This snail is not a strong monster. Judging from its strength, the spiders that you fought the other day is stronger.”

“That might be true for the big spider leading that swarm, but that’s not the case for the smaller ones, no?”

“Not really, that’s also the case if you compare that snail with the smaller spider.”

Akira raised his eyebrows. He then asked.

“…Is that so? But the smaller spiders had no forcefield armour, you know. The snail is stronger no matter how you look at it, right?”

“Akira, there are many monsters which are stronger when they are in a certain condition. The snail is basically one of those monsters and this situation is the condition where it is strong. You can actually defend yourself from bullets just like that snail if you spent your energy to temporarily increase the strength of the force field armour on your coat.”

“Even if that’s true, it’s not like I can keep up that level of force field armour for so long, right?”

“I bet that snail is taking the energy from the building. It might be harvesting that energy so it can’t move in the meantime. If that’s the case, then it won’t be able to use its force field armour outside the building, that might be the reason why you don’t see them outside.”

“…Is that a guess?”

“Yep. But again, if that snail can use such a powerful force field armour that is even able to block a bullet that’s as power powerful as CWH anti-material rifle special bullet anywhere, it would have been roaming outside the building and the City Management would have put some effort in eradicating them.”

Akira nodded.

“Well. Considering that its shell becomes that strong if I don’t kill it while it hasn’t noticed me, honestly speaking, it’s actually a pretty troublesome monster…”

Akira hung his head low. Not only did he give his enemy a chance to turn the situation to its advantage, he then forced himself to defeat that monster in that situation just to misevaluate it, thinking that it was a strong monster and got ahead of himself because of that.

He then realized that Alpha was smiling at him amusedly and raised his head.

“It doesn’t really matter, a win is a win. Moreover, I bet other Hunters who came here before me thought that it was too much of a hassle to defeat that monster and left without searching this floor. So there’s a good chance I might find some expensive relics here.”

“You have a point there. But I’ll at least let you know this. There are still multiple similar monsters in this building, so make sure to get them without getting noticed, okay?”

“Roger that, let’s go!“

Akira sounded a bit desperate when he said so as he continued exploring the ruin.

The exploration itself went well. As he expected, Akira encountered some snail monsters again, but he was able to take them down without getting noticed. There were also times when there were multiple snails so that he could not take all of them down at the same time, although he got some of his shots deflected by their hardened shells, Akira then would open up some distance to wait for their shells to soften back before shooting at them again.

Thanks to that, he was able to quickly defeat all of the snails although he had a hard time fighting the first snail that he had met. Akira himself realized that fact as he smiled wryly.

Although the exploration went well, he still could not find any valuable relics. He had already reached the twelfth floor but still ended up with nothing. Akira stopped for a bit as he heaved a big sigh and said.

“Still nothing, huh? Although, it’s also weird that there are fewer of those bad relics too.”

“Those snails might have eaten them.”

“Good grief…”

Knowing when to give up was also an important skill for a Hunter. Akira knew that too, but he could not shake off the feeling that he might be able to find something if he continued searching that building, thus preventing him from making that decision. Furthermore, he had to fight those troublesome snails to be able to reach that place, so it would be such a waste to give up here. As he continued searching the building, he eventually finished the second last floor of that building, the 19th floor.

Akira sighed again and said.

“…Alpha. I know that this might be counted as your support. But since I’ve come this far, tell me if I missed any expensive relics behind.”

“Nope. Based on my sensor, I didn’t find any good relics either.”

“So, this place really has no expensive relics, huh… If I still can’t find anything on this floor, then it would mean this building is a dud although it’s such a big building. I wonder if I have no talent in this.”

Alpha smiled and lightly cheered up the discouraged Akira.

“Sharpening your sense for such a thing is not easy. I believe that piling up experience is the only way to do that.”

“That’s true, but still…”

Although Akira understood very well that his ability to hunt both relics and monsters was significantly lowered without Alpha’s support, he thought that he should be able to at least manage something. But it seemed that the reality was not that kind.

“Moreover, we still have the last floor left, it might be too quick to decide that this place is a dud right now. Don’t give up and do your best to the very end.”

“…You’re right.”

Akira thought that getting discouraged there would not help him with anything, thus he shook it off his mind and continued the exploration.

The last floor only had a long hallway that connected the stairs to a door. Akira went through that hallway and stepped off from his bike in front of that door. But when he tried to open it, the tough door would not budge even with the power of his augmented suit.

“It won’t even move, why did they make this one door so strong? All the other doors downstairs were easy to open.”

“That might be simply because the snails downstair sapped their energy and make the doors brittle.”

“Which means that there should be no snails on this floor then. Well, I guess we’ll know soon enough once we get in…”

Akira turned up his augmented suit’s performance to max, ignoring its energy consumption, and tried to open the door. But again, the door did not budge at all.

Akira, who started to get annoyed, aimed his SSB multi-weapon rifle at the door. If he barraged that door with anti-forcefield bullets at that range, he thought he should be able to destroy that door no matter how strong it was. But at the same time, he also hesitated using bullets made to kill monsters for something like that. Although he did not pay for those bullets himself, it did not change the fact that he would be using more of those expensive bullets although he still had no meaningful results up until now. It would be no surprise if he received some complaints from Kibayashi later. Akira still had his rifle aimed at the door without being able to bring himself to pull the trigger.

That was when Alpha smiled bitterly at him and said.

“Akira, if you want to destroy the door, you should use the blade instead. There’s no need to use expensive bullets for a target that doesn’t move even when you’re up this close.”

Akira looked surprised and smiled wryly. He then took out the blade that he had forgotten until now. It was the blade he brought back from the Tsubakihara building.

Akira's body suddenly started moving on its own. Of course, it was Alpha controlling his augmented suit. He then took a stance as a blade extended out from the handle in his hand.

"Alpha?"

Alpha suddenly started providing support to him again. Akira looked at Alpha in surprise, but she ignored it.

"This much is fine, right? Let's hurry up and open that door. After all, it would be a bad idea to waste the energy left in that blade."

Akira smiled bitterly and matched his body movement with his augmented suit's movement.

With the help of Alpha's support, Akira swung the blade with the skill of a swordmaster. The blade sliced through the thick metallic door as if it was not there in the first place.

After he executed that slice, Akira took a breath before retracting the shape part of the blade. A few seconds later the pieces of the door fell back and made banging sounds. Seeing how the door was cut clean, Akira could not hide his amazement.

"This blade is as sharp as usual. I somehow can understand why those Hunters, who are able to get their hands on this blade and are able to use it freely, choose to fight monsters in close range."

Alpha frowned, which was very rare for her.

"Don't do that, okay? Although I also train you on how to use that blade, it's basically melee training that includes hand to hand and close-range shooting. It's not so that you would specialize in fighting in close range with a blade."

“I know.”

Akira only said so and stopped pursuing that subject. But in reality, many Hunters tend to specialize in a single type of weapon when they got their hands on powerful weapons, even more so when that weapon was an old-world weapon. After all, due to its abnormally high performance, there were times when that weapon saved them during unlikely situations, thus increasing their trust in that weapon.

When Akira entered that room, he immediately stopped, surprised at what he found inside that room The whole highest floor consisted of a single room. That room had a pure white ceiling, wall, and floor. Although there was no window in that room, it was bright enough for Akira to see clearly. It was big, seemingly limitless, and the boundary between the ceiling, wall, and floor was blurred. It really threw Akira’s sense of distance off.

“Alpha, this is…”

“A room designed for 3D projection or augmented reality. The white floor, ceiling and wall are to remove any needless information from getting into your views. The whole room itself is equipped with some kind of projection device.”

“What can I say… This room feels really weird.”

Akira’s vision was filled with the colour white no matter where he looked. When he looked down at his feet, it gave an impression that he was floating. The same conclusion could be seen from the data gathered by his information-gathering device as if it was malfunctioning.

The moment Akira noticed the reading of his information-gathering device, he tensed up since he understood that he was in a situation where he could not rely on his information-gathering device. It was as if he was in the middle of a thick colourless mist.

“Alpha, though I should have done this sooner, let’s end the training here. Help me get a better reading of this room.”

“Oh, are you giving up?”

“Yeah, I’m giving up.”

Akira replied firmly as if he was not bothered by that light provocation from Alpha. He understood that it would be difficult for him to search that room on his own. Alpha smiled happily at him and said.

“Not holding back is sometimes a good thing. Alright then.”

Alpha then enhanced Akira’s vision, he could see lines drawn on the white spaces in front of him. Those lines formed squares in regular intervals, helping him regain his sense of space. The room no longer seemed to be limitless and he could recognize the real width of that room.

Now that Akira had regained his bearing, he also regained his calm. He then walked to the middle of the room and looked around the room before heaving a big sigh.

“…Still nothing. So in the end, this place is a dud, huh?”

“Well, things like this happen from time to time. Let’s just move on.”

Alpha smiled and said so to cheer him up. Akira regained some of his motivation thanks to that. Although he still had his head hung low, Akira made a 180 degrees turn to head back to the exit.

But in the next moment, he quickly pulled up his rifle and aimed it at the person in front of him out of pure reflex. The person in front of him looked somewhat familiar to him as that person looked emotionlessly at Akira.

“Long time no see.”

Akira frowned and asked her a question to confirm his guess.

“…Uhhh, Tsubaki-san… Right?”

“Yes. I have no wish to be hostile to you, so please lower your rifle. Although this body is just an image that can’t be hurt with bullets, it’s still rude to have that rifle pointed at me.”

“I-I’m sorry.”

Akira flusteredly lowered his rifle. When he did that, Alpha immediately interjected. She was obviously not happy.

“So, why are you here?”

“I have something I want to discuss with you.”

Tsubaki said with a flat voice as she looked at Akira with her emotionless face.

Alpha looked at Tsubaki with an obviously unfriendly look.

“I’m sorry but we’re busy right now. If you have anything you want to talk about, you can tell me later.”

“You’re not the one that I want to talk with though.”

“It doesn’t matter, do you really think I would let you step over me?”

Alpha’s expression turned even more hostile with each sentence she said. But Tsubaki just ignored it. Akira was really troubled about what to do there.

Tsubaki once again shifted her gaze back to Akira.

“Are you okay with that?”

“Eh? Uhh, well…”

Akira was overwhelmed by the sharp gaze from Alpha and the cold but meaningful gaze from Tsubaki. He understood that both of them were pressuring him to choose between them. But the confusion prevented him from deciding. But after a short confusion, although it did not seem that he was fully okay with it, Akira finally said.

“I’m in the middle of doing a request from Alpha, so I can’t accept another request right now. Although it might be something that I can do while doing the request from Alpha, I can’t really tell right now. I don’t know what you want to discuss with me, but whatever it is, please say that to Alpha first.”

Alpha smiled widely and Tsubaki shrugged, still with her emotionless face.

“I see, in that case, I’ll excuse myself here. We shall meet again when the chance presents itself.”

Although her body was nothing more than an image, Tsubaki turned around and was about to leave the room when she suddenly turned back again as if she just remembered something.

“By the way, since you won’t talk with me, I have no obligation to help you. I hope you would do something about the security drones posted in this place in order to prevent people from intruding into this building yourself.”

Tsubaki only said so before vanishing. Akira was still not fully recovered from the confusion when his augmented suit suddenly started moving on its own. Alpha controlled Akira’s augmented suit to run toward the door as fast as it could.

“Alpha!? What’s wrong?!”

“We need to get out of this place as fast as we can!! So hurry up!!”

Akira managed to match his movements although he was caught off guard. But the next moment, he saw his bike flying in his direction from the door into that room.

A white humanoid robot had kicked Akira’s bike and left it tumbling on the ground. The white humanoid robot did not have a mouth, or eyes, or hair. It looked like a naked cyborg body covered in white.

Akira immediately shot at that robot, but that robot planted itself on the ground instead of evading it.

When those bullets hit its robotic body, it sunk into the robot's body and caused a small ripple over its surface.

Akira did not expect that at all, but that did not stop him from moving. He kept shooting accurately at that robot with the help of Alpha's support. And just like last time, the bullets were absorbed into the robot's body and caused a ripple on its surface. The ripple accumulated and caused its body to bend in a strange fashion.

Inside his compressed time perception, Akira shouted through telepathy.

"Alpha! What the heck is that!?"

"It's a body made of material adjusted for augmented reality or 3D projection. I'm sure it's one of the building's equipment, though I don't know if it's autonomous or it's being controlled remotely."

"Equipment?"

One of the wall partitions inside that room opened and exposed the robots behind it. Some of them were white robots, while some of them were donning old-world design maid and butler outfits. They were giving Akira a warning.

"Warning! In order to maintain safety in this building, the security drones are allowed to use force and permitted to kill. Please show your identification information immediately."

The same thing also happened from the wall partition near the entrance and the wall partition on the opposite end of the room.

"Unable to confirm the identity. Interpreting this action as an effort to hide identity. Increasing the severity of the action in order to secure the situation. We will not be responsible for any injuries during the suppression, surrender is advised."

The robots surrounded and closed in on Akira.

"Repeat. In order to maintain-"

The white robot body eventually could not take the barrage any longer. The shockwave from the bullets pushed its body backwards, dragging its body across the floor. Some of the bullets pierced its body and destroyed its inside. Its white outer body mixed with the pieces of its mechanical innards as they were scattered on the ground.

“Finally, got one! Why are they that durable when their bodies seem so soft?!”

“That’s also a kind of force field armour. It basically has the same mechanism as the snail’s shell.”

“The same? Although its body is that strong?”

“I’m sure that difference comes from the fact that those snails are sapping energy from this building while that robot is one of the building’s equipment right from the start. But putting that aside for now…”

The robots started to swarm Akira. Some of them were coming at him from the direction of the door, it was already impossible for him to break through them.

“Akira, get yourself ready, we need to do something reckless.”

“Alright!!”

Now that Alpha had control of his augmented suit again, Akira movements improved. He was more precise, faster, and much more powerful. Akira himself desperately matched the movement of his body with his augmented suit in the middle of the slow-moving world of his compressed time perception.

Akira ejected the magazine from his rifle in his right hand and threw it into the air. While it was still in the air, he quickly pulled back his right hand and pulled out a magazine filled with a mix of anti-forcefield armour rounds and high powered armour piercing ammo and threw it into the air too. With both his rifle and the new magazine in the air, Akira grabbed his rifle again and reloaded that new magazine in one smooth swipe.

While at the same time, his left hand reached back to his 5 million Aurum per box medicine, opened its lid with the gripping power of his augmented suit. He quickly brought some pills to his mouth while making sure not to let the pills fall off his hand. Then he reached for his blade's handle and detracted its blade.

Akira's left and right hands moved together at the same time. After that, he kicked the robot in front of him and started shooting with his right hand and slashing with his left hand to carve a way towards the door.

The anti-forcefield armour bullets that were shot from close range had enough firepower to blow the robot's torso clean off its limbs.

While the blade on his left hand that he swung with such power and speed was able to cleanly cut off the robots even after they braced themselves for the incoming blade. Akira cut them in half, throwing its upper half up in the air while its lower body rolled over on the ground. But his blade did not stop there as it sought for its second target. But unfortunately, it was not able to break through the second robot's force field armour, it was only enough to throw it off-balance. After that single strike, the blade could not handle the burden and crumbled into dust.

The robot in front of Akira received his kick with both arms. Although it was able to push the robot slightly back, it was not enough to damage the robot's body. Akira was momentarily stopped in place, the robot behind him immediately took that chance to swing a chop from behind while the robot in front of him also shifted its posture to deliver a counter.

Akira used the robot in front of him as a support to jump up and rolled on the air to evade the chop from behind him before landing both of his feet on the ceiling. He then immediately turned off the recoil compensator of his SSB multi-weapon rifle and started shooting at the robots, the kickback from his rifle made sure that his feet were firmly planted on the ceiling as he jumped to the side across the ceiling to evade the incoming punches and kicks from the robots under him.

The robots tried to attack him while he was running across the ceiling. With the help of forcefield technology, they had no problem pursuing Akira even when he was upside-down running on the ceiling.

Akira kept shooting as he quickly pulled out another blade and started fighting the robots up close just like when he was on the floor– shooting, cutting, and kicking them. But since he was only able to maintain that posture because of the kickback from his rifle, he was not able to move freely, and with the robots coming at him from his head, Akira was having trouble fighting them.

The robots had Akira surrounded as they came at him from all directions. Akira was still compressing his time perception, in that world that was running in slow motion, he could see clearly the robot parts that were scattered in the air and every single attack that was coming at him. He understood that he would not be able to block all the incoming attacks, but even so, he did not give up and still desperately fought with his best.

Inside that world where everything almost stood still, Akira could see the killing blow coming for him, but he also noticed something else behind that robot. A swarm of missiles coming in his direction from behind the robots.

After Akira's bike was kicked down, Alpha controlled it to get it back up and emptied the missile in the missile launcher fixed on his A4WM automatic grenade launcher. The explosion from those missiles blew the robots away together with Akira since they were in an enclosed space.

Akira smacked down to the floor and coughed out blood, dyeing the white floor red. His body was assaulted with pain and the medicine that he took beforehand had run out of its effect.

When Alpha launched all the missiles, she guided them herself and had made all the calculations of their explosion radius. Thanks to that, Akira was spared from the worst shockwave of those missiles. Not to mention, the output of his coat equipped with forcefield armour was turned up to max for a short time, thus suppressing the damage on him to a minimum.

Since Akira could not even lift his finger on his own, Alpha controlled his augmented suit to take out some medicines and shove them into his mouth.

He swallowed that medicine together with some metallic-tasting blood that was left in his mouth.

Akira swayed left and right as he pushed himself back up. The robots that were still functional also did the same. Even some of the robots that had lost their head could still stand back up. Akira who saw that smiled wryly and said.

“Good grief, just how robust can these guys be? You guys should just stay on the ground after losing your head, you know.”

“I believe that they’re controlled remotely from somewhere close by. I bet they’re partially autonomous and remotely controllable.”

“I see, I also fought against similar monsters before. So they’re basically based on the same mechanism, huh.”

“Just a little more before we can escape this building, so hang on.”

“Got it!”

Akira got a little desperate as he grabbed his rifle back.

After that, Akira was able to maintain the upper hand. Alpha provided a suppression fire using the DVTS minigun fixed on his bike while he was also shooting at the robots from beside the bike. Although some of the robots were still functional, they were damaged and their movements were significantly slowed. So they were unable to surround Akira with their current speed.

Akira shot down the last robot. Its head and body were pierced with the bullet as it got blown back into the pile of its dead comrades. The empty magazine was automatically ejected from his SSB multi-weapon rifle. Akira crouched and picked that empty magazine up, imagining how much money he had used in that fight and smiled bitterly. He then threw that empty magazine up to the air.

Alpha had a big smile on her face and praised Akira.

“Good work there. Although I did give you some help, you have become pretty strong.”

“Thanks for the compliment.”

“Oh my, you don’t sound happy.”

“It’s not like I did that with my own power. Moreover, even after I almost got killed just now, I still don’t have any expensive relics to carry back. This is not good at all.”

“What are you talking about? There’s a pile of relics just over there, no?”

“Where?”

Akira tilted his head and frowned, Alpha was pointing at the pile of dead robots.

“Although they’re already destroyed, it doesn’t change the fact that they’re old-world relics. They’re pretty strong although they’re not battle robots, so I’m sure they can at least get you some money.”

Akira raised his eyebrows, but it was not because Alpha told him that they could fetch him some money.

“…They are not battle robots?”

“If my guess is correct, they’re just for serving guests. Although, I believe being able to peacefully secure a rampaging guest is also an important functionality for such robots.”

“You do know that I almost got killed fighting those robots, right? I think they also said something along the line ‘permitted to kill me’ or something? And you say they’re not battle robots?”

“They basically said that to let you know that even if they get you killed in the process of securing you, they won’t be held responsible for it. So it’s just to warn the guests that even with the technology of the old-world, such cases are not impossible. Moreover, if they’re really designed for battle, they would have carried more weapons. Since they came at you unarmed, it basically means that they’re not made for combat.”

“…I see.”

Akira was reminded of how abnormal the old-world things were, thus deepening his misunderstanding about the old-world.

After that, Akira stuffed the dead robots into his rucksack and returned to the forward base. When he emptied his rucksack in the forward base, the receptionist winced back and was wide-eyed.

Akira sighed as he thought that he should have left that building sooner.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 181, Humanoid Monsters

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After Akira sold the robots that he destroyed in the forward base, he took a break in the base's cafeteria. Thanks to the medicines that he had taken, his wound had already been fully healed and he was not physically exhausted, but the medicines did not help with his mental stress at all. He had decided to end his day, so he was sitting there looking absent-minded.

That was when Kibayashi appeared. Kibayashi happily took the seat in front of Akira without asking Akira's permission and smiled at him. Akira frowned, knowing that it would be nothing but more trouble.

"What now?"

"Don't be so cold. It's just that since I see you haven't returned back home yet, there's something I want to ask you here, you see."

"Ask me? Just to let you know, I won't be paying for the ammo, alright?"

Akira said so clearly right from the start with a stern face. Kibayashi smiled wryly at him and said.

“Don’t worry about that. Just because you got your terminal destroyed during your duty, it’s not like we’re not going to pay for the ammo you used during that time.”

The information terminal that Akira got from the temporary base always sent the signal of his location, but the moment he entered the highest floor of that building, his signal was cut off due to the feature of that room. Then the explosion from the mini-missiles finally completely broke it. Because of that, the temporary base did not know anything about his encounter with Tsubaki, and of course, Akira had no plans to tell Kibayashi about that at all.

“It’s nothing complicated. The robots that you brought in are all completely destroyed though, couldn’t you bring them in a better state?”

“No.”

“I see. Got it. That’s all I wanted to ask you.”

Akira looked surprised, he did not expect Kibayashi to back down that quickly.

“Is that all?”

“Yeah, that’s all. Like I said, I do like you. I have no plans to keep pursuing that subject just to sour your mood, alright? Not to mention, you’ve entertained me enough. You crushed a swarm of monsters on your own on the first day, and today, not only you brought back a lot of old-world relics, you even secured a whole building too. Just so you know, normally speaking, you’ve done splendidly up until now.”

“Like hell if I care about that. In the first place, it’s nothing normal the moment you offer to pay all of my consumables.”

“I said so with that considered too. But that’s just so you.”

Kibayashi smiled amusedly at Akira’s abnormal reaction.

After that, Akira and Kibayashi talked for a bit more about the request and the situation around the road.

Akira’s current request did not have a clear finish line. It would continue until Akira’s Hunter Rank reached the point where it was suitable for his strength, while the request itself did not clearly state what that Hunter Rank would be.

But Kibayashi already told Akira that he had entertained him enough, so Akira thought it should be fine to end the request there. But when he asked Kibayashi about that, Kibayashi said that it was not up for him to decide and he had no idea either what was the opinion of the people from the upper echelons about that matter.

Akira did find that a little surprising as he thought of using as much ammo as he wanted without caring about effectiveness since someone else was paying for it. That way, he would be able to quickly rank up until his request was deemed finished regardless of the opinions of the others.

__*__*__*__*__

Tiol was eating the wreckage of humanoid monsters inside a dilapidated building in Kuzusuhara ruin. But those were not the humanoid monsters that Akira destroyed, Tiol destroyed those monsters in another building.

The white room was filled with the echo of metallic wreckage getting crushed. Tiol himself was badly injured from the fighting, but his injuries were slowly healing as he was feasting on the dead monsters.

Suddenly Tsubaki appeared in front of Tiol.

“Good afternoon!”

Tiol immediately stood up and took a fighting stance as he swung his right arm to rip off Tsubaki’s head. Unfortunately, Tsubaki was no more than an image, so Tiol’s hand went through her effortlessly.

“That was rude.”

Tsubaki immediately vanished. Tiol quickly turned and lunged in a direction where there was nothing at all. But from his point of view, he could see Tsubaki standing there.

But from Tsubaki's point of view, the world was running so slowly as if it was completely paused. Inside that slow-moving world, Tsubaki looked closely at Tiol and mumbled.

"He can recognize me both through augmented reality and through network image too. I see."

Tsubaki then said with a flat emotion.

"Stop!"

Right at the next moment, Tiol's body suddenly froze in the middle of lunging at Tsubaki. The inertia allowed his body to proceed forward but the gravity prevented him from staying afloat. So, he just crashed down to the ground and rolled over as if his whole body was petrified into stone.

"Safety leash command number 721 works as intended. Which means that it's based on the nanomachine inside one of those biological monsters, huh. I don't know who did this, but it's pretty impressive. Unfortunately, that person was not able to override the control command. Wait, no, it might be some kind of mutation because of the nanomachine put inside his body in order to trick the friend-or-foe identification system… With too many conflicting nanomachines in his body, it instead might have caused a system failure."

There was no one else other than Tiol in that room, but he could see all kinds of information displayed in his views as Tsubaki walked toward him. Unauthorized connection, unable to prevent connection, failed shutting off the connection, identified administration from area 844, individual outside the administration right, detected unauthorized hacking, hopeless difference in strength, zero winning chance, advised to run away immediately. Tiol registered all of those notices that appeared in his views, but they did not help his situation at all.

Tsubaki suddenly vanished again from his view. She then reappeared again as an image as she extended her hand to his head.

“He wouldn’t even listen to what I have to say. So I’ll ask you instead. I’m sure you’re also having it hard with such an unstable system, right? I’ll give you the reward upfront, so don’t worry.”

The information notices in Tiol’s views suddenly changed. Unauthorized connection, unable to prevent connection, failed shutting off the connection, rebuilding control system, readjusting administration structure, rebuilding connection, rebuilding finished.

Tiol could move his body again as his body relaxed while he was still lying on the ground. After a few seconds, he slowly pushed himself up and stood in front of Tsubaki.

“I’ll leave the rest to you then.”

Tsubaki smiled faintly and vanished. The only notice left in Tiol’s views was an order from Tsubaki. With his assigned duty to secure the area starting, Tiol immediately moved out following that order.

__*__*__*__

Yatsubayashi had a stern look on his face as he eyed the displays in front of him.

“…What just happened?”

The display showed information sent from Tiol, and that information stream was already fully stopped. Among the last information sent by Tiol, there was a piece of information that really piqued Yatsubayashi’s interest.

Yatsubayashi actually was thinking of a plan to take care of Tiol before it caused extra trouble to him, but with this, he decided to change his plan. His curiosity completely outweighed his rationale as he readjusted his plan accordingly following curiosity.

__*__*__*__

Akira once again visited Shizuka to replenish his stock. Shizuka looked worriedly at Akira as she said to him.

“Akira, this will be pretty expensive though, are you sure?”

Akira nodded with a serious face.

“Yes. After thinking about it one more time, I thought that it’s safer to do this and I should be able to end this request faster this way. So please continue with the order.”

Akira completely readjusted his order. This time he ordered multiple mini-sized energy packs and high-grade repair cartridges, both of them were expensive consumables. On top of it, he also ordered a huge amount of powerful anti-forcefield armour as well as mini-missiles that could be used with personal-sized missile launchers.

Shizuka proceeded to place the order. Akira and Shizuka waited silently for the confirmation, but this time, the order was rejected.

“As I thought, it won’t go through, huh?”

Akira seemed slightly relieved. Suddenly a call from Kibayashi reached him.

“It’s me. It seems that an expensive order just came in, and it’s from you, just wanted to make sure that it’s not some kind of mistake or something. I’ve sent you the information to your information terminal, so go ahead and check it.”

“I did, it was really from me and it was not a mistake.”

Unexpectedly, Kibayashi replied in a rather good mood.

“You bought quite a lot this time, enough for the financial division to contact me, you know?”

“I need them to be able to fight safely. If you’re going to tell me to cut that out, just so you know, that’s basically my real strength. That way I won’t need to keep doing this request, right?”

“Hm? I’m not calling you for that. There, the payment went through.”

“Even that got approved, huh?!”

“It was just a notice due to the size and the cost of the order. I’m sorry but once you receive that order, bring them to the forward base for safekeeping. But don’t worry, you can still use them anytime. I’ll send you the specifics later.”

“The repair cartridges are for my augmented suit, so I need them back home.”

“I see, you can take the cartridges home then. I’ll tell the guys above myself about that.”

“A-Alright!”

Akira was a little surprised that his order went through so smoothly. Kibayashi, who noticed it, laughed.

“I did tell you that your performance is far above the norm, remember? So this much demand will go through just fine, although, it’s partly because of my influence too. You should be more confident in yourself, you know? Until next time then.”

At the same time Kibayashi closed the call, a notification confirming that the order got through reached Shizuka and Akira.

Akira smiled bitterly. He knew very well the gap between his real strength and the strength that he acquired due to Alpha’s support. Although he kept working hard to close that gap, he could not lie that every time he noticed his growth, he also noticed how significant Alpha’s support was.

[…Well, although I basically forced my way through with expensive bullets during that fight against the monster swarm, I won that fight on my own. So even after adding that with those robots that I destroyed with Alpha’s support, it should at least lower the total evaluation from Kibayashi. So it should at least be a little better.]

Akira' bitter smile was a mix of half-mockery and half-compliment toward himself. But he then noticed Shizuka looking at him worriedly as he flusteredly said.

"Ah, uhh, well, what can I say? It seems that the order should go through just fine."

"Akira, don't get too reckless, okay?"

"I know. It's exactly so that I can fight safely that I put in that expensive order."

"I see. It's good that you're calm about this, but be careful not to get your guard down, okay?"

"Yes!"

Akira firmly nodded, Shizuka replied with a smile.

Shizuka understood that Akira said so knowing fully well he was cornered into a situation where he had no other choice but to be reckless. While on the other hand, she also understood that hounding Akira about it would not help his situation at all, so she held back herself from saying anything more than that gentle reminder. Akira took her warning to heart and told himself not to unnecessarily jump to danger.

Akira once again took his bike to Kuzusuhara ruin. It had been a few days since the last time he went to Kuzusuhara ruin. During that time, he had repaired his augmented suit, carried his supplies to the temporary forward base, and got himself to the best state before going.

Alpha was floating beside Akira as if she was sitting in an invisible car. She was donning a battle suit with a daring old-world design as her long silky hair was flailing in the air, blown by the non-existent wind.

"Akira, what's your plan for today?"

“Let’s see. I might as well search one of the buildings for relics again, but I don’t want to fight monsters like last time.”

Akira glanced at Alpha’s outfit and thought.

“That is an old-world battle suit, right? Since we’re this deep into the ruin, I wonder if I can find some of them somewhere around.”

“I can’t really say you can’t, but it would be hard to find. Let’s say that you did find one, what’s your plan with it?”

“If there’s no problem with the size, I’m planning to use it for myself, old-world relics are fundamentally advanced stuff after all. I do know that I’m obligated to sell all my relics by contract, but I’m sure I can get it back after paying some money, or at least, I’ll put some effort in doing so.”

Alpha smiled mischievously and pointed at her own battle suit.

“This suit is for girls though? Are you really going to use it? Well, I can understand if you do since it’s a high-quality battle suit.”

Akira could not hold back his laughter the moment he heard that.

“Why does it even come to that? I’m talking about when it’s a battle suit for guys, of course.”

“Then what if you only find battle suits for girls?”

“I’ll sell them, then use the money to buy one made for guys.”

“What if you’ll be wasting a lot of money if you do that instead of using it? Of course, ignoring the design aside.”

Akira looked conflicted for a split second, but he immediately made his decision.

“I’ll think about it when that happens. We don’t know if I can find any of them around here in the first place anyway, right?”

Alpha smiled amusedly.

“Indeed.”

Akira noticed from the beginning that Alpha was only poking fun at him, but at the same time, he also thought that it would not be strange if she knew. Akira heaved a big sigh as he thought that he wasted his energy on that conversation.

“Alpha, at least help me choosing which building to search this time.”

“Oh my, you’re relying on me right from the start for today, huh?”

“I have no plans to spend so much effort on a dud like yesterday. I understand that choosing the right building to search is also a part of my training, but let’s put that training aside for some other time. My training menu for today will be searching for relics inside a building.”

“Alright then, over here.”

“That was fast!?”

Akira could see a particular route highlighted in his enhanced views as he paced his bike following that route.

When Akira arrived, he looked confusedly at Alpha.

“Here?”

Alpha smiled confidently and nodded.

“Yup!”

“…Alright.”

Akira once again shifted his gaze to the location in front of him. Akira could see a tall torn down building that looked closer to a mountain of rubble in front of him. Since it fell over the other buildings around it, they all piled into a single huge mountain of rubble.

“…So basically, I need to find relics under this mountain of rubble, huh? Well, I might find something if I try, but still…”

“Not exactly. To be more precise, you need to find the door to a certain room buried under this mountain. Some buildings usually have their important rooms built extremely strong as if they’re safe boxes, strong enough to keep intact even when the building itself falls over. We’ll be looking for that room. I’ll help you find the entrance, after all, you’re technically outside the building until then.“

Akira used his high-performance bike to climb the rubble mountain. He then stepped off from his bike where she pointed out and put a camouflaging sheet on top of his bike. Once he was done hiding his bike, he used his information-gathering device to check the area around him. Due to the layers of rubble preventing his information-gathering device from scanning further down, it was difficult for Akira to find the hole into the mentioned room. Thankfully, besides his information-gathering device, he also had Alpha.

Akira used his augmented suit to move aside the rubbles under him as he eventually found a door and wall that seemed to be from a hallway of some sort. He went down to that door and forced it open before peeking inside the room. The room was pitch black when he peeked in with a light. As he looked down to the base of that room which was originally a part of the sidewall, he could see all kinds of things scattered there. He then carefully proceeded into that room.

The room itself was pretty wide. Since it was laid sideways, that width was translated directly to depth. Akira used tables and other furniture fixed to the floor of that room to slowly climb down.

“What can I say… It feels weird when the inside of the room is oriented differently than it should.”

Alpha was floating around in the air freely as she smiled amusedly and said.

“Oh my, you’ve been climbing up and down so many rooms up until now, you should’ve gotten used to it at this point, no?”

Akira looked back to his experience.

“Like hell I would get used to that.”

“Oh, but you should. Be careful with your footing.”

Right at the next moment, the table that Akira was using as his footing swayed before it was sent tumbling down to the base of the room. He was only barely able to jump to the next table.

“…You could’ve told me sooner!”

“Weren’t you doing this on your own right now?”

“…That’s true, but… Alright alright.”

Akira decided to stop himself from throwing any complaint at Alpha who was smiling amusedly at him as he moved to the next footing.

When Akira reached the base of the building, his eyes were wide open. The base of the building was filled with piles of old-world relics. Though some of them were already destroyed, others were strong and durable relics. Akira started stuffing his rucksack with any expensive-looking relics that caught his eyes.

When he finished filling his rucksack, Akira looked up. The exit seemed to be located far away from him now.

“…I know it’s already obvious, but I have to climb back up now, right? I should’ve at least brought a rope with me.”

“You can just get one and return back here again later.”

“Again, you should’ve told me sooner.”

“But you’re on your own this time, right?”

Alpha smiled amusedly, he replied with a conflicted bitter smile.

Akira had climbed down the building with his augmented suit and climbed up a building with his bike, so somewhere in the back of his mind, he thought that he should be able to figure out something when the time came. That was why the idea of bringing along a rope never passed through his mind.

Akira worked really hard and somehow was able to get out of that room. Sometimes he used 2 blades, one for each hand, to scale up the room, sometimes he had to heavily heartedly leave some relics behind since he could not go through with his backpack full. He basically paid in full for his mistake of not bringing a rope with him that day.

After that, Akira returned back to the forward base and sold his relics there. He did not forget to immediately buy a rope too.

__*__*_*__

It had been 2 months since Akira started the request to get his Hunter Rank up. But his request had still not ended. Even after he kept ordering bigger and better supplies, all of the payments for his orders went through just fine.

Originally Akira thought that at most it would last for about a month. So that day, he was venting his frustration in Shizuka’s shop. Elena and Sara who saw that could only smile bitterly at him.

To be more precise, Akira was venting his frustration there because Elena and Sara encouraged him to. They tried to prod him to share his situation, and, if possible, to offer him their help in order to mend their relationship back.

But even Sara and Elena did not expect that Akira was frustrated because he was forced to take a request to boost his Hunter Rank though he did not want to. And even after he thought he got his Hunter Rank high enough, that request still continued. Any normal Hunter who worked hard day and night to get their Hunter Rank up would be furious if they heard that.

Sara looked rather impressed with Akira.

“But still, a request to increase Hunter Rank, huh? Although I’ve heard about it before, this is the first time I see someone actually get one. Although it’s to be expected considering how strong you are, it’s still pretty impressive.”

Although Sara was giving him an honest compliment, Akira felt a bit guilty. He knew that the impression of how strong he was probably came from Alpha’s support and not his own skill. Because of that, rather than looking honestly happy about it, Akira made a conflicted expression.

“…Thank you very much. But depending on how you look at it, it might be because they put too much faith in me. Right now, they’re forcing me into places that are originally too dangerous for a Hunter like me.”

Elena noticed that and changed the subject.

“Getting not too excited and staying vigilant is a good thing. In my case, if I ever get such a request, I feel like I would get too excited and make a blunder instead, but It seems that’s not the case for you. That in itself is pretty impressive, you know. I guess I need to learn more from you about that.”

Akira slightly blushed from that compliment. Sara pouted a bit at how Akira reacted differently to her compliment. But in order to distract herself from that feeling, she quickly circled behind Akira and rubbed his head while sticking close to him from behind.

“S-Sara-san!?”

“I’ll do that too. Though I don’t think that I’ll ever get such a request. Being too humble might annoy people instead, you know?”

“I-I didn’t mean it…”

“I know. It’s just a silly talk from a narrow-hearted girl. But I just want you to be careful since there are a lot of people like that out there.”

“O-Of course!”

Though Akira was surprised, he did not resist. As a matter of fact, he enjoyed it. Seeing that reaction from Akira, Sara smiled satisfied. Both Shizuka and Elena who saw that could not help but giggle. Of course, Sara noticed them, but she only pouted a bit while trying to hide her embarrassment and enjoying Akira's reaction.

They then talked about other things too. At some point, Akira found something that Elena said interesting.

"Humanoid monster, huh?"

"Yes, it seems that there are more and more people getting attacked by a humanoid monster near Kuzusuhara ruin lately. To be more precise, the location is around that highway."

"Uhhh, is it one of those things? That one where the City Management treats a strong criminal as a monster…"

"I don't know the details. That might be the case, or not. It might be an autonomous robot that went on a rampage. Or maybe someone controlling the augmented suit of a dead Hunter like back then in the Seranthal building. The details about the incident itself are still unclear. The City Management itself hasn't released anything else other than a warning."

"Whether it's a strong criminal or a monster, basically there's something that looks like a human attacking people around the ruin, right?"

"Yup, exactly. The only thing that we know right now is that it looks like a human instead of a monster. You should be careful too, as a Hunter, it tends to dull our reaction when the opponent looks like a human."

If it was a monster, Hunters could immediately decide to kill it. But when it was a human, they would often hesitate, and more often than not, that hesitation brought about a fatal consequence.

"Okay, I'll be careful."

Akira said so firmly, seeing which Elena smiled happily.

When Akira left the shop, Sara frowned and said.

“Say Elena, I wonder if Akira really hates when people evaluate his skill highly.”

“That might be true. If I’m not mistaken, he said something similar to that back then in the underground city too.”

“Now that you mention it, he did. Why do you think that is the case?”

“No idea. I’m sure he has his reason for that… But whatever it is, I’m sure it’s not something pleasant. Sara, although I’m sure there’s no need for me to tell you this, but you need to be careful not to poke at him too much.”

“I know… This is difficult.”

Although the other day Akira saved them despite there being nothing that he could get out of it, he also did not hesitate in cutting off their ties. At the moment, they somehow still managed to talk normally with each other. Sara had no idea whether it was because of something trivial or deep, or if it was due to Akira’s principle in life or simply his opinion.

Sara had no plans to let go of the thread that she worked hard to preserve and sighed as she thought of her friend whom she was not sure how to treat.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 182, Yatsubayashi's mobile clinic

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

On the next day, Akira once again had a talk with Kibayashi in the temporary's base cafeteria, and just like usual, he looked pretty annoyed.

"So, don't you think it's about time I'm done with this request?

"Good grief, there are not many Hunters out there who want to end their rank up request themselves, you know?"

"Don't know, don't care!"

Kibayashi smiled wryly. He found it amusing that he said his real feelings instead of negotiating with Akira and thinking how amusing it would be if Akira challenged an even fiercer battle than before, but he remembered to do his job to at least try to calm Akira down.

"I've been telling you this every time we meet, I don't have the right to decide that. But well, at least I'll let the people above know that you don't want to keep doing this request, though I can't really say for sure what they think about it."

Akira sighed, Kibayashi immensely enjoyed his reaction.

“Now then, just like I said, I’m here because there’s something I want to talk about with you. It’s about the cost of your supply that you keep bringing up as a form of harassment.”

Akira’s expression immediately turned stern.

“No, I won’t pay for them. If you’re telling me to pay even a part of it, you can go ahead and cancel the request.”

“Well, it might be weird for me to say this, but because of that condition, the credit you get from selling relics and hunting monsters are significantly reduced. You’ll get more rewards back even if you only pay a small part of it, you know? So are you still fine with that?”

“Yeah, I still won’t pay.”

Akira showed no chance of negotiation for that matter. Seeing that, Kibayashi gave up trying to convince him.

“Alright, got it. I’ve at least notified you. Although it’s because of the contract, the money you’re spending on supply is actually a bit too high. So, I just wanted to let you know that there’s a way to solve that. To be honest, it’ll be faster if you just pay a part of it, but if you don’t like that idea. So let’s do something else instead. First option, you can work under our order for the time being, that would include following the orders of the other commanders from the City Management.”

“What are you going to make me do this time?”

“It hasn’t been decided yet. Well, I’m pretty sure it’s for something like patrolling, guarding, or securing a part of the ruin. So basically, you can camouflage that exorbitantly high supply cost for one person as the team expense. Like I said, the request itself is basically close to compulsory, so at least you can make this much compromise, no?”

“What’s my other option?”

“Limiting your activity to only a certain area where no one would complain if you spend that much money for your ammo. To be more precise, it would be the area past the end of the highway, or in another word, the frontline. Although most of the Hunters working there make sure to bring along their powered suit, I’m sure it’s no problem for you since you’ve won against a powered suit even without using one, right? Personally speaking, I recommend you take this option instead of the first one.”

Kibayashi smiled with full expectation, in contrast to that, Akira obviously looked annoyed.

“…Do I have any other options?”

“Nothing, if you have any good ideas, feel free to let me know.”

“…I’ll take the first one.”

“Roger that. Well then, I’ll take care of the administration. I’ll let you know once I’m done and you’ll get the next order sent to your information terminal later, so you can just follow that instruction.”

Kibayashi stood up and was about to leave when he glanced at the sighing Akira and smiled.

“You can tell me anytime if you want to change your mind.”

“Sure sure.”

Although Akira sounded as if he just gave that reply without thinking about it at all, that was enough to make Kibayashi leave that place with a big smile.

Seeing how Akira replied back so apathetically there, Alpha could not hide her smile.

“Personally speaking, I also recommend the second option though.”

“Why?”

“For the sake of your growth, it’s better if you fight strong enemies.”

“…Give me a break.”

Akira thought that he got this request because he fought that black powered suit back in Ezont Family’s base. For him, it was nothing but a pure coincidence. So honestly speaking, he wished that the City Management would understand that it was not his actual skill. He did not want people to think that it was because of his real strength when it was actually thanks to Alpha’s full support.

While at the same time, Akira himself had no wish to take it easy for his training, but on the other hand, he had no plans to be jumping into dangerous places where he might not be able to survive without Alpha’s support. So he was thinking during this rank up request to just raise his rank high enough to reflect his real strength when he had no support from Alpha. He honestly wanted to avoid doing anything that might disrupt that plan.

Akira did not think of all the hard battles that he had gone through because of pure coincidence, and it was simply because he did not have enough self-awareness.

__*__*__*__

Akira rode his bike coursing through Kuzusuhara ruin. After a few days, a notice reached his terminal right after he arrived at the forward base. That notice contained an order for him to guard a clinic plus the location of that clinic, and its coordinate was basically deep inside the ruin.

At first, Akira thought that it would be a clinic temporarily erected inside a dilapidated building or something, but the coordinates that he received smacked right in the middle of the road with no building around. Akira thought it was weird and once again checked the coordinates when he noticed it was moving. And so, currently, he was chasing that moving clinic.

Akira had to fight monsters along the way too, but he eventually was able to catch up to it. There was a big white trailer parked on the road close to the frontline. It was a big armoured trailer and its big back door was wide open. Akira stepped off from his bike and peeked inside the trailer, there he saw Yatsubayashi treating some injured Hunters lying on a patient bed.

“If it’s just a light injury, wait there for a bit. And if it’s a bad injury, wait there for a bit as well. If it’s an emergency, I don’t mind treating you now, but it’ll cost you more.”

“Uh, I’m actually here as an escort, is this the right place by the way?”

Yatsubayashi stopped, his hand was still holding a weird, or more like, suspicious tool as he looked at Akira and made a suspicious smile.

“It’s you, huh? Welcome to Yatsubayashi clinic, Kuzusuhara ruin branch.”

He finished treating the Hunter in front of him and handed over a cloth soaked in blood to that Hunter.

“That’s it. I don’t mind if you want to keep using the bed, but it won’t be for free.”

“…You’re going to charge me for that? It’s fine, isn’t it? It’s not like anyone is using it anyway.”

“No. I would need to move the bed in case of an emergency. So you’ll have to pay me money even if you just want to lie on that bed.”

“…Alright alright.”

Due to his injury, that Hunter could only slowly drag himself off from that bed before he put that bloody cloth back on and left the trailer. After taking a few steps away from that trailer, he put his butt down to take a short rest.

Akira frowned and said to Yatsubayashi.

“You’re not going to take that man back to the forward base?”

“Sure, if he wants to and if I accept that request. Of course, it won’t be free. Just to warn you though, don’t escort him back without my permission. It’s not like I’m telling you not to do that no matter what, but if you do that, you’ll have to pay for the cost. So just be careful about that.”

“Why would I have to pay when I’m the one escorting him back?”

Akira seemed to be extremely confused there, but then Yatsubayashi casually replied.

“Well, that’s because you’ll be doing work outside of guarding this clinic, which is your main job at the moment, you see. Not to mention, you won’t be able to guard this clinic while you’re escorting that guy back to the forward base. So it’s a given that you would have to pay, no?”

Akira seemed to understand that argument although he also looked exasperated at the same time.

“That sounds to be a huge pain in the neck.”

“That’s just how it is.”

Yatsubayashi only casually said so while cleaning up his medical tools.

Akira was not alone, there were other Hunters who were assigned to guard the clinic too. But since Yatsubayashi actively moved around his clinic to pick up his patients, those escorts usually spread out not too far away from the clinic. Once they entered areas with a lot of monsters where Hunters even sent SOS requests, Akira and the other escorts spread out to clean up the monsters while carrying any injured Hunters back to the mobile clinic.

Akira with his incredible (bad) luck spent his days fighting swarms of monsters and carrying injured Hunters that he saved back to the clinic. Although the injured Hunter was so badly injured to the point that he was barely able to move his finger, he was still fully conscious. Maybe it was because of something that he prepared beforehand to make sure that he would not faint even during an emergency.

That man had a pale face as if all of his blood was sucked out of him, but his pale face was not because he had lost that much blood.

“Whoah!! This bill is too much no matter how you look at it, isn’t it?! I know that stuff in the wasteland is more expensive than usual, but not this expensive!!”

Yatsubayashi just laughed that off and casually replied.

“That is a wasteland fee plus a ruin fee. Considering how dangerous this place is, it’s normal to be that expensive, no? I won’t force you to pay that, but if you’re not going to pay it, good luck going back to the forward base on your own.”

“Shrewd bastard…”

That man was only barely able to escape certain death, so he had no energy left to drag himself back to the forward base. But if he splurged his money on treatment there, it would definitely affect his Hunter activity later.

Of course, there was nothing more valuable than one’s life, but considering the debt later and what kind of debt hell that he might face, sometimes, death was the better choice. That man knew that fact very well as he was at loss on what to do there, seeing that, Yatsubayashi smiled suspiciously at him and pulled out a container filled with green liquid.

“Well, I can understand your predicament. Better the treatment, higher the cost. But wait! If you take this medicine that I made, you can get the same healing power with one-tenth the price, you know!! So, do you want to try it?”

The Hunter glanced at the glowing green liquid and frowned. But the 90% less cost would really reduce the effect of treating his injury there on his money, which in turn would reduce its effect on his future activity as a Hunter. Although it was not a formal one, Yatsubayashi was trusted enough by the City Management to be asked to work in the forward base, so there was no way he was a fake doctor. The Hunter eventually came to a decision.

“…I’ll pay everything, so I’ll take the usual treatment.”

Yatsubayashi looked disappointed.

“…If you’re willing to take my medicine, I’ll escort you back to the temporary base for free, you know?”

“Just give me the normal treatment.”

Yatsubayashi lightly clicked his tongue and started treating that Hunter’s injury. He then lightly said to Akira.

“Good grief, these guys are no fun. You did use my medicine and had no trouble at all, right? It was alright, right?”

“Don’t ask me.”

“You too, huh? It’s such a waste to refuse using such an effective healing medicine that I worked really hard to make just because of some superstition, you know. Geez, this world is really no fun at all.”

Seeing Yatsubayashi begrudging talk while still attending to his patients, Akira thought that he could understand some of Yatsubayashi’s feelings, but at the same time, he could also understand the feeling of the Hunters who hesitated to put that glowing green liquid into their bodies. So Akira decided not to say anything there.

The location of Yatsubayashi’s mobile clinic was fully trackable from the information terminal lent by the temporary base. Because of that, Hunters who were badly injured that they would not be saved if they went all the way back to the forward base’s clinic would often opt to go to Yatsubayashi’s clinic. Other than that, sometimes, some Hunters who were fighting strong monsters also came to that clinic for help to fight those monsters. Either way, these Hunters would also bring along the monsters chasing them when they headed to the clinic. It was Akira and the other escorts’ job to take care of those monsters.

As long as there were some Hunters looking to be treated in that clinic and as long that it seemed there would be more patients coming, the moving clinic tended to stay in one place. The sound of Hunters and Yatsubayashi arguing could be heard coming from inside the trailer.

Akira found that weird as he said.

“Alpha, we’ve been staying here for some time now, what do you think is happening?”

“This area is already pretty close to the frontline. With stronger monsters prowling this area, I bet there are more injured Hunters around here, so they might think that there’s no need to move the trailer away for the time being.”

“If that’s the case, we could’ve come and camped in this place right from the beginning, right?”

“Even if you tell me so, there’s nothing that I can do about it. If you’re still worried, you can just ask Yatsubayashi instead.”

Akira thought that Alpha had a point there. But he was not that bothered that he would go to ask Yatsubayashi, so he just continued watching the surroundings instead. When the day started getting dark, Akira went to talk to Yatsubayashi and got permission to end his job.

Back home, Akira was enjoying the warm bath while thinking about all the monsters he fought that day.

“What can I say… They gave me this option since I’m spending too much money on supplies, but now that I think about it, putting me there will only make me spend more money on supplies, right? Is this really alright?”

Compared to before, Akira spent way more supplies that day. Since Yatsubayashi often drove his trailer straight to dangerous areas, Akira had more encounters with monsters compared to when he was free to move on his own discretion.

Alpha was sitting on the lip of the bath with her legs crossed, she moved the tip of her leg around as if to play with the warm bathwater.

“I think it’s not something for you to worry about. The clinic only moves based on the instruction from the City Management after all. Moreover, that might be nothing but an excuse.”

“Excuse?”

“Yep, an excuse to send you to more dangerous areas. The complaints from the upper echelons about you spending too much money on supplies might be true, although it might not be that big of a trouble, it was enough as an excuse. The two options that Kibayashi gave you, he might have given you those options just because he wanted to get you as close as possible to the frontline. The clinic only moved around the areas pretty close to the frontline and the battles going on there are pretty much as dangerous as the battles that you’ve gone through lately. So he might be just using that as an excuse to send you as close as possible to the frontline, hoping to see you doing some reckless stuff.“

“If that’s the case, then he really got me good this time…”

Alpha suddenly moved around her crossed legs, Akira’s eyes were drawn to that movement by pure reflex. She then stood up on the border of the bath while Akira was still looking up at her.

Alpha lightly smiled at Akira who was looking at her with a rather suspicious gaze. She then jumped, made a beautiful arc, pulled a full spin in the air, and plunged into the warm bath as if her body immediately melted into the water.

Alpha then popped out from the water as if she just popped out from a deep pool before moving next to Akira. Akira watched that sequence of action with slight amazement, but he was more exasperated than amazed.

“What was that?? This is a bath, not a pool, and it’s not that deep.”

“I just feel that lately, you are showing less interest in my body. I just thought of showing my beautiful body to you in a different way. So, how was that?”

“Normal.”

”Geez, you’re as indifferent as ever although you’re in front of this beautiful body. You’ve really gotten used to this luxury, huh.”

Alpha smiled amusedly at Akira who looked even more exasperated than before. But behind her mind, she thought that it was still too early.

When she jumped into the bath in her swimsuit, Akira unconsciously moved his body as if to evade an incoming attack. And when he did that, there was actually another reason as to why he moved his body away.

__*__*__*__

Back in the forward base, Yatsubayashi had parked his clinic in the parking lot as he was looking through the data that he got inside his clinic.

That data contained all kinds of information used by the City Management to check how far they had secured the area for the sake of building the safe route into the ruin. It included things like the countless information terminals spread inside the ruin by the City Management, the data from the information terminals lent to the Hunters, and data from radars in vehicles.

Yastubayashi was given permission to analyze that data using the help of his connections. Even if the device to broadcast the information all the way back to the slum city was broken, with his skill, although it was difficult, it was not impossible to search for the particular wave signal produced by the nanomachines inside a certain body. With that, Yatsubayashi continued keeping a close look at the damage caused by the humanoid monster that was getting famous lately.

The reason why Yatsubayashi opened his mobile clinic was in order to search for Tiol without raising any suspicion. He only charged the Hunters a lot of money for his treatment and proactively answered SOS requests simply to avoid looking suspicious.

After Yatsubayashi finished analyzing the data, he then said with a sharp gaze.

“…I bet he’s preparing himself behind the frontline… Which means, maybe over here?”

The map of the ruin on his display also showed Tiol’s track as well as a big line. The line was drawn over one of the crossroads used in the main highway as if to create a blockade.

The line was basically the frontline and the area behind that line was an unknown world from the City Management’s point of view, and Tsubaki’s building lay deep behind that line.

＿＿＿*＿

That day also Akira was instructed to escort Yatsubayashi’s clinic. He rode his bike into the ruin while checking the location of the mobile clinic. That was when he noticed something.

“He’s going pretty deep today. Basically just right after a turn on that crossroad, huh.”

Alpha smiled rather provocatively as she pointed her finger forward.

“If you keep going forward, you’ll be passing the front line, you know. Do you want to take a detour and look around?”

“No thanks.”

“If you hate escorting the clinic that much, it might be a good idea to instead work around the frontline. After all, it’s not like this chance when you can use as much ammo as you want without worrying about the cost would last forever. So this might be a good chance to have a peek at the situation in the frontline.”

“No. I heard that Hunters would bring their powered suit with them there, so it’s not a place for someone like me to take a detour and look around. Not to mention, I promised Shizuka-san not to do anything reckless.”

“Is that so? Well, I won’t force you.”

Alpha smiled like usual to Akira, betraying the fact that she just said something as preposterous as suggesting taking a detour in the land of death to him.

Akira lightly sighed.

[I'm sure she wants to tell me to stop fighting the small fries and go for the bigger fish so that I can become stronger as soon as possible. Now that I remember, she also said something along the line that this is a good chance to check my current strength… I guess I'm still way too weak to be considered strong enough for Alpha, huh. She did say that she'll consider it if I can defeat that big mechanical monster on my own.]

Akira had no wish of wasting his time either. But with that being said, he had no wish to train until his limbs fell off either. That was why he had no plans to go charging headfirst into dangerous places that might get him killed in order to gain experience. Although it might be the fastest method to become stronger, he did not want to fight monsters that Hunters would normally fight using powered suits. Of course, he would do the best he could in order to do that request from Alpha, but that did not mean he would do anything for that sake either.

Akira had a conflicted feeling as he smiled wryly and took a turn at the next crossroad.

He did not realize it, there was another reason why Alpha recommended him to go to the frontline even after including his bad luck into consideration.

But then, the fact that Alpha did not stop him from going to that clinic even if she had to force him, showed that she was still looking down on his bad luck.

When Akira arrived and looked around the situation around the clinic, he could not hide his surprise. The clinic was surrounded by more Hunters than usual, and these Hunters were not injured. But with that being said, they were just too many of them if they were the clinic's escorts.

Among those Hunters, Akira caught some familiar faces. When he noticed Elena and Sara, Elena and Sara also noticed him and smiled while lightly waving at him.

Akira was a bit surprised when he heard from Elena that those Hunters were basically the reconnaissance team sent to scout the area.

“I always thought that building the secure route only means to simply secure the area deeper and deeper to the ruin, but it seems it’s not that simple, huh?”

“It’s not exactly wrong. But the reason why the City Management builds the secure route and maintains the highway to the ruin is all for the sake of harvesting relics located in the deeper part of the ruin. That’s why when they want to expand it further in, they’ll have to send a reconnaissance team first to give a quick check of the area ahead. Not to mention, many Hunters won’t even go to a location where they have no information at all, that’s why it’s also for the sake of encouraging those Hunters. And if we find out there are good relics to get, even when it’s in a dangerous area, the City Management might consider increasing the budget to secure that area. That way the Hunters who usually work further to the east might come to help to secure the area too.”

But of course, the Hunters sent as the reconnaissance team would have to explore that area without any prior information about it. Sara had her armour bulging out because of that preparation to explore such a dangerous place, she made sure to refill his nanomachine stock up to the full capacity. She showed off the size of her chest that she was so proud of to Akira while smiling at him. It was not that hard for a girl to know where the other person was focused on.

“I thought that you’re here for the reconnaissance request too, but that doesn’t seem to be the case, huh. But since you’re already here, how about joining the reconnaissance team? The scouting itself is Elena’s main job, so I’m here as her escort today. If you want to come too, you’ll be also escorting Elena. We’re planning to explore the area carefully and we’ll immediately retreat back if things get dangerous, so I think it’s a rather safe request and we can get quite a lot of money from it.”

But Akira apologetically replied.

“…I’m sorry. I’m happy that you invited me, but I’m here as an escort for the clinic. So I can’t take your offer.”

“Oh? If I’m not mistaken, you said that you’re basically free to do what you want for that request, right?”

“From a discussion with a guy called Kibayashi, it seems that I’ve been spending too much money on supplies, so I have to do this so that the City Management would allow me to keep using that much money. Then from there, I got assigned to escort the clinic.”

“Is that so? That’s really unfortunate. Well, I guess even though it’s for getting your rank up, it’s not like they can spare you an unlimited amount of money, huh.”

Sara said so with a disappointed face. But then Elena made a suggestion.

“…I feel like they might let you change to the reconnaissance team with a little negotiation though, but of course, not right away. So I guess we have no other choice but to give up that idea this time. We’ll have a briefing first about the area that we need to explore, so we need to go soon. Good luck to you, Akira.”

“Yes, ah, feel free to contact me if anything happens during the exploration. It’s also my job as the escort for the clinic to get out and pick up SOS request after all.”

“I see, I’ll be counting on you when that happens.”

“Akira, see you later then.”

Akira lightly waved and saw Elena and Sara off.

Although Alpha was smiling like usual, there was something else running in the back of her mind. Personally speaking, she did not want anything else that might affect Akira’s course of action anywhere around him, and that was doubly true when he was in such a dangerous place.

“Akira, just to warn you not to go out on your own just to check on them, okay?”

“Hm? Of course.”

“…You’re pretty obedient this time.”

“I have no plans to abandon the request that I accepted first. I did refuse their invitation because of the same reason, remember?”

“Yep, and that’s great to hear.”

Alpha smiled happily since she identified that as Akira’s honest opinion about that matter. But at the same time, she also knew there was no telling how far he would go to stay by his decision. If he had always kept all his promises, Alpha would not be this doubtful of him.

After that, Akira focused on guarding the clinic, but this time there was not that much for him to do. Thanks to the reconnaissance team that took out the monsters ahead of them, there were not that many monsters left near the clinic. Because of that, even when he patrolled around the clinic on his bike while keeping his eyes on the sensor, he did not find any signals from monsters.

Akira continued guarding the clinic while feeling slightly worried. If things continued like this, he felt like Alpha would recommend him to work near the frontline again, either that or she would push him harder for his next training.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 183, A Swarm of Young Boy Robots

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Yatsubayashi was charging a crazy amount of money to the Hunters brought to his clinic.

Thanks to the first aid done to his head, that Hunter was able to stay conscious even after he was gravely injured. The expensive treatment cost was enough to make his face go pale though. He did try to bargain, but Yatsubayashi wouldn't budge at all.

"No, no money, no treatment. You need to pay first."

"C-can you at least cut me some slack for that one?"

"Good grief, if you're that healthy, I bet you can get yourself back to the forward base. You can ask your friend to carry you there, I'm sure you'll get there without dying. But well, with that injury, I bet you'll either get a prosthetic or a cyborg replacement though."

"I want to keep my body the way it is, since you said that your treatment would still enable me to still stay the way I am, I came to you."

Indeed they could take a regenerative treatment to grow back their lost limbs that would normally need to be replaced with a prosthetic or cyborg body, but that kind of treatment was more expensive than replacing them. Furthermore, there were not many Hunters out there who would become a cyborg out of their own volitions. No matter how strong a cyborg body was, there were still unique advantages to keeping a flesh body, and this Hunter wanted to keep his body.

His friend then jumped in.

“Can you at least do something about it?”

“We can get this done right away if you’ll pay in his place.”

“Don’t be crazy, we don’t have that much money. It’s not like we can use our health insurance too, right?”

“Sorry but my clinic is not a corporation’s clinic, so I don’t really accept health insurance. And there’s a limit on how much the Hunter Office would be willing to lend you to pay for it too. Not to mention, their lending limit is extremely low for a small individually ran clinic such as mine.”

That guy then sighed and rubbed his head with one of his hands. Although he had no plans to abandon his injured friend, it did not change the fact that he did not have any way to save him either.

Moreover, it was not like he was going to die if they decided to take him back to the clinic in the forward base, though, he would be living with prosthetics and incur debt for that medical treatment. In the first place, this was an injury stemming from the occupational hazard Hunters faced. It could happen again. That thought discouraged them from paying the cost of Yatsubayashi’s treatment no matter what.

Seeing that, Yatsubayashi hid his real intention as he made a suggestion to those Hunters.

“Well, I can understand that you want to save your friend. And I’m a doctor, you see. But if I treat his injury here for free, it’ll only give me a lot of trouble later down the line. That's why, I have a suggestion here, instead of paying me with money, how about you pay for the treatment for your friend by helping me with a certain job?"

"Job? What kind of job are we talking about here?"

"It's basically a kind of emergency rescue request, you see. Of course, it'll be a secret one though."

Yatsubayashi started explaining the aforementioned job with a suspicious smile. To put it simply, those Hunters only needed to go to a certain location to rescue a certain Hunter and bring him back to Yatsubayashi. Although it sounded simple, it sounded as if it had a lot of hidden intent behind it.

"Why should this be a secret anyway? Moreover, I checked my information terminal and it doesn't seem like there's any SOS request from that location though?"

Yatsubayashi smiled at that question.

"Well, that's because that Hunter doesn't want to have a record of this happening left in the Hunter Office, you see. Basically, he's one of those Hunters who do not wish for the Hunter Office to be informed of an SOS rescue request that he had submitted. Other than protecting his reputation, it's also to save money. After all, if you needlessly ask for SOS requests, your insurance bill will go up, you see. That's the same for the treatments in hospitals and clinics too. What I'm saying here is that if you treat your injuries in my clinic, I can help you make sure that it won't leave any record in the Hunter Office, the catch is that you can't use your insurance though. Other than that, well, maybe his reputation among his colleagues and gang? To put it simply, he wants to say that he didn't get in any trouble, he just randomly met some Hunters in the wasteland and those Hunters arbitrarily helped him without even being asked."

"I see, so basically you're accepting that kind of request under the table, huh. But still, you're willing to give him free treatment just by saving one Hunter, this is too good to be true, you know?"

“Are you kidding me? Of course, it won’t only be once. I’ll have you do that for me multiple times until I judge you’ve worked enough to pay for the treatment cost.”

“…I see.”

The Hunters nodded and looked at Yatsubayashi with a stern gaze. They thought that Yatsubayashi was planning to use them and charge them with more bills every time they returned back with more injury.

“If you’re going to take that request, I’ll get him treated right away. I won’t do something as cowardly as postponing his treatment until you work enough for me. So, what do you think? Am I nice or what? Well, I won’t force you though, so it’s still up to you.”

Putting it from a different point of view, it also meant that Yatsubyashi gave no space for negotiation, and the wounded Hunter also started begging his friend. So in the end, the other Hunter clicked his tongue and took that offer.

Elena and her reconnaissance team proceeded deeper into the ruin. Their main job was to harvest the information gathered by the small information-gathering device spread beforehand inside that ruin while retrieving and replacing those small information-gathering devices owned by the City Management. The accessibility of the site with a vehicle, the number of monsters in that area, and the number of rubble and their material found around the area, all of this information was enough to judge if a site was worth exploring or not.

The members of the reconnaissance team were free to search the inside of a building. They were even allowed to gather relics. Even if it might disturb their main duty of scouting the ruin, the relics that they gathered could also be used to judge if that part of the ruin was worth securing or not, not to mention the information that they brought back, also took note of the difficulty and the danger of that building. As such, no one stopped them from doing so.

Elena scanned her surroundings while driving her vehicle slowly. Sara stood ready next to Elena, guarding her, but she was also eyeing the buildings that seemed to be containing expensive relics.

“Elena, can we just like, you know, go and take a peek?”

“No. We will only take a route that this scouting vehicle can go through, so we won’t be searching the inside of any buildings. Didn’t we agree on that right from the start?”

“I know, but still…”

“I can understand your feelings, but no. There’s a good chance something will attack this vehicle when we’re away searching the inside of a building. We have almost close to no information about this area, so I can’t really guarantee the safety of this vehicle when we’re gone. Or more like, we’re exactly here in order to gather that information, no?”

Hunters who tend to work alone or in a small group often left their vehicles behind when they searched the inside of a building. But of course, no one could guarantee that their vehicles would be still in one piece when they returned. Elena and Sara had more than enough experience with losing their vehicles in such a manner.

Of course, they could just get more Hunters with them and have some of them guard the vehicle when they were gone. But with more headcounts, each of their shares would also reduce. There was also the possibility of the Hunters guarding the vehicle running away abandoning the Hunters inside the building when monsters attacked them. So it did not change the fact that it would still be a gamble in the end.

The only thing that the Hunters could do was to increase their winning chance with all kinds of methods that they could find. Getting stronger, working with a team, deepening their trust with the other team members, emphasizing the loss in case someone betrayed them. If they did not do that, they would end up as one of those lost Hunters with broken dreams who could not return back from the wasteland.

But Sara seemed to be not fully convinced by it, seeing which Elena gave another reason to convince her.

“If we get ourselves into trouble and send out an SOS request, Akira might come to answer that request, you know. That would really erase our dignity and his trust in us as his senior Hunters, you know. Although, I’m not even sure that we still have those two things even right now.”

Sara frowned and sighed.

“Alright. I still want to stay as the senior Hunter that he can rely on, after all. I’ll hold myself back.”

Sara suddenly turned obedient, seeing that, Elena could only smile bitterly.

“Honestly, I really hope you would be this obedient when your best friend warns you though.”

“That’s that, you know. It’s like we’re one soul, so hearing you warn me like that is like giving myself a little scolding. So it’s much more likely for me to just ignore it, you see. Just like how it’s more likely for me to get selfish when I’m alone.”

“Is that so? In that case, then I’ll be doing that too when I’m pondering about something.”

Elena and Sara lightly smiled at each other before returning back to watching their surroundings.

Not too long after that, Elena, who was keeping her eyes on her sensor, suddenly stopped her vehicle and tilted her head.

“Elena, what’s wrong?”

“It’s nothing in particular. It’s just that when I checked the data, I found something interesting. The sensor caught multiple signals of something that looked human.”

“They might be other Hunters exploring this area, no?”

“Possibly, yes. It’s just that there’s something bothering me.”

Some of the signals were possibly from the monsters. Judging from their positions and the signal that the fact that they seemed to be coming from something with a humanoid shape, Elena could not shake off her bad feeling. After all, if some of those signals were from monsters and some others were from Hunters, they were close enough to notice each other.

As such, they would have started fighting by now. There were many types of monsters that ignored Hunters who had even stepped into their territories. While on the other hand, most of the Hunters would rather avoid having to fight all the monsters that they encountered. There were many reasons for them not to fight each other.

But Elena remembered a certain rumour, specifically, about a humanoid monster that prowled the Kuzusuhara Ruin. Her sharp intuition was telling her that this was it although she did not have enough evidence that supported it.

Elena thought for a bit before she stepped on the gas. But she made sure to change her direction, away from it.

“Sara, we’ll be changing our scouting area. It might lower our area coverage and the information accuracy that we can get, which in turn might lower our reward later. Sorry but please just let this one go.”

“Don’t worry about it. I’ll leave making that kind of decision to you. So let’s just continue this safely.”

Sara lightly smiled, she seemed to be not bothered at all by that. Seeing how Sara fully trusted her, Elena’s stern face slightly softened.

–x–x–

A certain Hunter named Sonoda grumbled as he strolled in the middle of the ruin.

“Another dud, huh?”

Sonoda was one of the Hunters forced to work for Yatsubayashi to help the treatment fee for his Hunter friend. He came to the location where there should be someone who needed help but did not want to send an SOS request. But when he arrived, that person was nowhere to be found and there was not even a since remnant of a fight, and this had happened multiple times now.

Sonoda called Yatsubayashi using his information terminal to complain, but Yatsubayashi just replied casually.

“It’s not a proper SOS request to the Hunter Office after all. It’s also not clear who’s the issuer of that request, heck, not even I know. So, it could be just that there are some people who played a prank on you. Well, I’ll at least put in some words with those that informed me of that request, so I hope you would work the best as you can for your part. Don’t worry, even if you don’t get to find anything, I’ll still count your work. I’ll send you the next location.”

After Sonoda ended the call, he received the location of his next target. He clicked and put his information terminal back into his pocket.

“Good grief, these guys are sending us to the deeper part of the ruin like it’s nothing! Alright guys!! To the next one!!”

“Alright… Hm? Wait, it seems that there’s someone over there.”

“Oh, the target ran over there, huh? Let’s get him.”

Sonoda led his group to the location where that signal came from. It came from the first floor of a building not too far from them. They moved slowly and carefully into that building and spotted a young boy standing in a dark hole in the wall not too far from the door.

“Is that the guy? Hey, are you alright? Where’re the monsters? Did you run away to this place? And are you alone?”

That young boy reacted to Sonoda, but it was not in the form of words for communication.

“The current area is under a lockdown. Due to the emergency situation protocol, the security system is allowed to kill any intruders. Please give your identification information…”

Sonoda immediately raised his rifle and barraged that young boy, pushing him all the way to the wall from the shockwave. Sonoda’s teammates immediately jumped in to support him. The young boy lost his head and all of his limbs were torn apart.

Sonoda quickly told them to retreat.

“We’re running away!! Let’s go!!”

“W-whoa, I only shot to help you since you started shooting first though, was that alright?”

“You didn’t notice it yet?! That young boy is not the rescue target!! It’s the one that attacked the rescue target!! Retreat now!!”

Sonoda and his friends quickly left that building when another sound came from the dark hole behind them.

“…Unable to identify. Immediately changing to restraining protocol…“

“Get in the vehicle!! We’re retreating back to the clinic! Something bad is coming, I know it!”

Sonoda retreated back as fast as he could while barking orders to his team.

The limbs that were torn off from the young boy were scattered on the ground. His arms from elbow down were completely turned into rifles. It was not like a rifle fixed on a prosthetic arm, it was more like rifles that were growing out from those arms. Its body seemed like it was layered with armour in a glance, but it was not armour, it was countless layers of metallic scale.

Another young boy emerged from the darkness. He took the gun lying on the ground, the leftover limb of the other young boy and started chasing after Sonoda and his men.

While around the same time, Akira was bored guarding the clinic when a notice reached his information terminal. The coordinate written in that notice was around in the direction where the reconnaissance team went.

Akira thought for a bit before he hopped on his bike and paced it.

Alpha frowned.

“We don’t know for sure if Elena and Sara are there, there’s no need to go there yourself, no?”

“Accepting SOS requests is also one of my duties, right? Though it’s true that it’s a little bit further away from the clinic.”

Alpha frowned even more. Akira thought that it was a bit surprising as he said.

“…Well, I do know that since it’s an SOS request, there’s a good chance that I’ll find a troublesome swarm of monsters, and I admit that I do really want to help them if Elana-san or Sara-san are the ones that got into trouble. But at least let me do this much, alright? There are not that many monsters around, so I should be able to get my rank up faster instead of just guarding the clinic, right?”

“Just don’t get too deep into the ruin, alright?”

“Hm? Yeah, sure.”

Akira thought that it was weird since, in order to get stronger and to gather as many experiences as he could, it was better if he was actively taking SOS requests and that Alpha would have preferred it. But since it seemed that it might sour her mood if he said anything there, he just kept his mouth shut and paced his bike faster.

Akira drove his bike to its max speed. He was fully relying on Alpha’s support without holding back. After all, he felt that he would slow down if he tried controlling the bike on his own and he had no plans to arrive late. Due to Alpha’s advanced driving skill, the bike could sway nimbly left and right evading the rubbles scattered on the ground without losing much of its momentum.

Not too long after Akira went out, he detected some signals from monsters. He quickly shifted his focus to the source of that signal, with the help of Alpha's support, he could clearly see a group of monsters, but from that distance, they looked like small dots. The moment he noticed the monster swarm, Akira frowned. It was a swarm of weapon dogs blocking his way forward.

"So those were the reasons for that rescue request, huh. I would rather run than chagrin right at it."

"Want to withdraw then?"

"No."

As Akira was thinking about what to do from there, he could see a vehicle suddenly jumped out, running away as fast as it could. The backside of that vehicle was half open and there were people there desperately trying to fight back the incoming monsters, Akira could at least tell that much.

Right after it jumped out, that vehicle immediately turned and drove right toward Akira. The sharp turn almost threw the whole vehicle into the air, but it was able to regain its balance thanks to the advanced driving skill of its driver while still shooting the monsters behind it and keeping its speed.

"That must be the rescue target then. Thank goodness, it seems that there's no need for me to jump into that swarm."

"Well then, let's pick him up and head back". By the way, how reckless are you willing to go today?

Alpha was smiling challengingly at Akira, but he only replied with a bitter smile and said.

"Not more than what's needed."

"Alright."

Akira’s hand that was grabbing the steer suddenly dialed up the power bar and violently accelerated the bike, just right on time before warheads rained down right where he was a few seconds ago. The explosions sent shockwaves and left craters on the ground.

Under the raining warheads, Akira aimed his SSB multi-weapon at the weapon dogs blocking his way and started shooting, ignoring the amount of money that he spent just for that barrage. The missile pods fixed into his A4WM automatic grenade launcher were also joining that barrage.

The bullet storm swallowed the frontline of the incoming weapon dog swarm. Although the distance between them dampened some of the bullets’ momentum, they still tore through the weapon dog’s bodies. Their big bodies with a cannon perched on them quickly turned into huge chunks of obstacle, but the bullets also tore through them and ate through the swarm’s defense.

The backside of the swarm was hammered by the mini-missiles. Thanks to the guiding system from Alpha, they struck accurately at the weapon dogs’ cannons, igniting the black powder inside their body and resulting in a big explosion. Thus shredding those weapon dogs into small pieces.

As the vehicle filled with Hunters went past Akira, he immediately pulled the brake, made a U-turn, and once again pulled down the accelerator. The special function of the bike that helped its wheel to stick on the vertical wall prevented it from flying off. The powerful inertia assaulted Akira’s body, but he was able to endure it with the help of his augmented suit. Even as he was driving off, Akira kept on shooting at the weapon dogs, using the recoil to accelerate his bike even faster.

As Akira was trying to catch up with the vehicle in front of him, he received a short-distance call from his information terminal. It was a call from Sonada who was waving at him from the backside of the vehicle in front of Akira.

“You’re the Hunter who came to my rescue, right? Thanks for the help.”

“It’s good that you’re alright. To be honest, I was thinking of retreating when I spotted that weapon dog swarm. It’s a good timing that you pulled yourself out from that.”

“That was a close call. With that many cannons, if it was not because of you taking away some of the heat, they would have wiped us out. And here I thought we have really run out of luck when those weird things attacked us, but I guess we still have some luck left, huh.”

“Weird things? Do you mean you didn’t send out that SOS request because of that weapon dog swarm?”

“Yeah, it was because of those…”

Akira noticed something weird on the side of the vehicle.

“Hey, someone is latching on the side of your vehicle? Didn’t you get enough time to take everyone inside?”

“What!?”

Sonada peeked out from the backside of his vehicle and pulled out his gun at that ‘someone‘ latching beside the vehicle without showing any hesitation. The barrage peeled that small boy off from the vehicle as he tumbled on the ground. Akira who saw that could not help but to raise his eyebrows.

“Wha-!? why did you do that!?!”

“That thing is not friendly!! It’s an enemy!! We sent that SOS request because we got attacked by those things!! I bet they are one of those humanoid robots posted to guard the ruin or something…”

Suddenly a small boy with a face similar to Tiol landed on that vehicle with a bang, violently rocking the vehicle and leaving a big dent on its armour.

“Warning. Detecting resistance, arresting targets…”

The small boy stopped his formal warning midway and his expressionless face twitched. Hostility replaced his face and he immediately jumped off that vehicle and lunged straight at Akira.

Although Akira was surprised by that sudden turn of event, he did not miss a beat as he aimed his rifle at that young boy and shot him down. But that did not stop him, the young boy immediately rose back up and started chasing Akira.

Akira could not help but be surprised to see the young boy chasing him. Although that bullet was powerful enough to rip through the weapon dogs, it was not enough to pierce through that young boy.

“Is it one of those dolls that I fought with the other day? I didn’t expect to find them outside a building.”

“Akira, leave the guessing for later and focus on the fight. It’s not done yet, more of them are coming.”

Akira aimed his SSB multi-weapon up with a stern face, there were multiple of those young boy dolls jumping at him from the buildings to his left and right. Some of them had 4 normal limbs, some of them carried rifles, while some of them had their whole arms turned into guns. Some of those dolls had open bodies, exposing the mechanical parts inside them, some of them even had 3 arms attached to their bodies.

Akira compressed his time perception and shot down the enemies in front of him in turns following Alpha’s instruction. But that did not end all of them, although some of them plummeted straight to the ground and turned into scrap, and some of them were thrown off and crashed to the building near them and stopped moving. But of course, there were also those with stronger bodies which rose up again after getting shot down before they started chasing him.

Sonada’s vehicle was powerful enough to drive through the bad ground, but even so, the small wreckage spread here and there prevented them from going too fast. Not to mention, if they made a small blunder and managed to get the vehicle to roll over, it would spell the end for them. So they drove even slower than usual, slower than the dolls chasing after them with their super-human strength.

Although they were fighting back the dolls chasing them, the distance between them was slowly narrowing, and their number was not getting smaller at all.

The young boy dolls jumping out the buildings left and right straight at Akira also had their guns and cannons aimed at him. Alpha controlled the bike to keep making evasive manoeuvres to get away from their aims. Due to the continuously moving bike and the bad ground, Akira had to maintain his compressed time perception while aiming his SSB multi-weapon at those dolls. He followed the instructions shown in his augmented vision, displaying the order of the enemies that he had to shoot down. The bullets that he was using should be able to easily turn normal monsters into minced meat.

The flying powerful bullets ripped the dolls into pieces, spreading their flesh and mechanical parts into the air. But the ones with strong bodies would only slam to the ground after their momentum was killed by the bullet just to rise up again.

The backside of Akira's vehicle released a pack of mini-missiles. Some of them hit the dolls that were still in the air, while some of the missiles went straight at the dolls chasing Akira. The explosions from those missiles sent a violent gust of wind right at Akira, but he planted his body firmly with the help of his augmented suit so as not to get blown away from that shockwave.

Akira then noticed something troublesome and frowned.

"Say, Alpha. It's just my feeling though, but like, aren't those dolls focusing on me? Or more like, they're only attacking me, right?"

"If you want to leave one of them alive in order to confirm that, then you don't have my permission."

"Like hell I would do that!"

“If you have no plans to just abandon those people behind, then just take this positively, at least they won’t be attacking those Hunters while you’re around, right?”

“You have a point there.”

Akira then banished that thought and any other unneeded things inside his mind to the void.

Another batch of mini-missiles was launched from the backside of the bike. They drew a huge arc on the sky and went for the dolls chasing from behind. The dolls with guns immediately tried to shoot some of the missiles, causing several explosions in the air.

But even after that, the rest of the mini-missiles were able to reach them and blow them away. Akira looked slightly relieved watching those explosions, but his face immediately tensed up again. Those mini-missiles were not enough to stop those dolls from chasing him.

“That did cut their number down, but there are still quite a lot of them left.”

“Akira, bad news here, that was the last batch of mini-missiles.”

“And here I thought I carried quite a lot of them. It starts to scare me to think how much I spent in this fight alone.”

Akira took his DVTS minigun off from his bike and replaced it with the automatic reloading system for the missiles since it has no mini-missiles left to load. The ammo expense from that battle was nothing to laugh at.

Akira aimed his SSB multi-weapon and started shooting again. The SSB multi-weapon was spouting out powerful bullets as if it was a minigun. Once he emptied his rifle, he loaded another magazine and started shooting again. He told himself that he did not care if Kibayashi complained about the expense later on as he kept burning through his ammo reserve.

But even so, the incoming dolls did not seem to be letting off at all and his ammo reserve was getting smaller and smaller. Akira could not help but start feeling nervous. Right in the midst of it, Alpha said something that he could not ignore.

“We at least got out of the most dangerous part now. I’ll need to go for a bit, so do your best yourself for the time being, okay? I’ll give the bike’s control back to you.”

As the bike suddenly swayed, Akira flusteredly took control of the bike back.

“Wait for a sec, you need to go now?!”

“I just need to take care of a small business. I’ll be back in a minute or two.”

“Small business?! Right now? In this situation?!”

In contrast to the panicking Akira, Alpha just smiled and pointed her finger.

“Don’t worry, like I said before, we already got out of the most dangerous part.”

Alpha immediately vanished right after that. Akira quickly shifted his gaze forward and saw Yastsubayashi’s mobile clinic coming right in his direction. He could also see the Hunters guarding the clinic standing by near it as well as the Hunters that were a part of the expedition team.

The mobile clinic was originally an APC, so it had rifles and other weapons equipped. Those weapons immediately started shooting, half of the other Hunters around that clinic also started reacting. After Akira went past the clinic, he spotted Elena and Sara, so he turned his bike toward them.

Elena noticed Akira and threw a smile at him.

“Akira, it seems that you’re having a hard time there. Are you alright?”

“Ah, uh, yeah, I’m okay.”

Sara then worriedly said to Akira.

“This Hunter by the name of Sonada keeps broadcasting SOS requests, so you came to rescue him, huh? Are you alright? Did you get any injury? If you’re tired, you can take a rest in the back.”

“Ah, no, I’m fine. Although I’m a little tired, I still can move.”

“I see, don’t push yourself too hard. Since we’re around this time, it would be a waste not to rely on us when you have the chance.”

Sara said so and smiled gently at Akira, who blushed and seemed to be flustered.

“In that case, I don’t have much ammo left, so is it okay if I stay close to you?”

Elena smiled and said.

“Of course. It has been quite a while since the last time we fought together. If you want to use my information terminal too, come closer and I’ll do the adjustment.”

“Yes please.”

Akira smiled happily as he said so. After he finished his readjustment, he then fought the dolls together with Elena and Sara.

The other Hunters that were guarding the clinic and the Hunters from the expedition team knew well of the danger that they were going to face, thus they came well prepared with a lot of ammo. Of course, the bullets that they had prepared were suitable for the danger of the requests that they had accepted that day.

After that, they took their time cleaning up the dolls chasing Akira and Sonada as well as the weapon dog swarm that came not too long after those dolls.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 184, Tiol Wakes Up

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After cleaning up the rest of the monsters, Sonoda and the other Hunters were taking a rest while getting their injuries looked after.

“So, how’re your injuries?”

“No problem. Although that guy is a cunning greedy bastard, his skills are top-notch… Anyway, sorry for getting you into trouble back then.”

Sonoda gave a serious apology, but his teammates replied with a small laugh.

“That’s what it means to work as a team, no? So don’t worry about it. Furthermore, he treated our injuries for free. Though, to be honest, I’m still bothered by the fact that he looked rather happy when he told us so. But it’s way better than getting told to pay because we failed the request.”

Sonoda and his team lightly laughed off their fairly serious situation as they continued chatting.

“…But still, although it’s a good thing that we got saved by it, I didn’t expect the clinic to come for us. I really don’t know what that guy is thinking.”

“So, where is that Yatsubayashi guy now?”

“No idea, I bet he’s out there looking for the other injured Hunters or something.”

“And leave the clinic just for that…? Well, I guess it doesn’t really matter, huh.”

Sonoda and his team laughed, celebrating their survival.

While on the other site, Yatsubayashi was checking the units that the Hunters had just defeated with a wide grin. He was dissecting a young boy robot using his suspicious-looking machines. He took a unit that still had its body relatively intact and opened its head with some kind of tool, he then pulled out something from its head and smiled.

“Transmitter device. But this isn’t mine, it’s some kind of imitation, huh?”

Yatsubayashi could not hold back his smile.

“…Then these are… All of these are primitive terminals, huh. It should only be able to do low-level autonomous action. In that case, are these some kind of makeshift remote control? I see. But still, he shouldn’t be able to reach this level only by eating monsters with this kind of function. Tiol-kun, it seems that you’ve gotten yourself some old-world knowledge, huh. Honestly, I’m so envious of you. Well, I guess I didn’t come all the way here for nothing.”

Yatsubayashi actually did not come there to pick up Sonoda and his team. He was only chasing a signal that might have come from Tiol. The reason why he did not wait until the situation calmed down was simply because he could not hold himself back. Also, depending on how bad the situation was, the City Management might order them to retreat.

That was also the reason why Yatsubayashi sent Sonoda to that place. He faked the SOS signal in order to dispatch Sonoda to investigate the area.

Yatsubayashi looked at the head scattered around him and laughed.

“In case you’re listening, I’m more than happy to welcome you if you show yourself, you know?”

Of course, the heads did not give any reply at all.

＿＿＿*＿

Inside a white space, Alpha was standing face to face with Tsubaki. Alpha had a displeased face as she was sending a stern gaze at Tsubaki.

“I’m waiting for your excuse.”

Tsubaki replied back flatly with an unfriendly face.

“I have none.”

Alpha’s face turned sterner and her gaze colder.

“So basically, you’re picking a fight with me, correct?”

Tsubaki suddenly started oozing an ominous aura.

“I don’t think I’m being that hostile to you. If you want me to apologize, I shall apologize. If it’s needed, I’m even willing to swap places.”

Alpha and Tsubaki just stared at each other in silence. Due to their accelerated time perception, their moment of silence was actually longer than it seemed. Alpha opened her mouth first.

“…I’m here to hear your excuse regarding the subject under me and the subject under you trying to kill each other.”

“First of all, in order to keep the safety of the region under my supervision, what I did was just a rewrite of the system configuration of a unit that had unstable software based on one of the security drones defending my area. So to be more precise, that unit is not under my supervision. It just picked the subject under you as its target by chance when it tried to follow its software to protect the region that it's responsible for. Well, I did not specifically tell it to not attack the subject under you, but again, I have no obligation to do that in the first place."

"Is that so?"

Alpha seemed to have accepted that excuse and her stern face slightly relaxed. Tsubaki also toned down her intimidating aura. Now that the mood had returned to the point that they were able to negotiate calmly, this time, it was Tsubaki's turn to complain.

"I'll at least give you this warning. Even if it's someone under your supervision, I will have to take him out if he steps into my territory without the proper permission. So keep that in mind."

"Sure, I'll be careful."

Alpha only said so with an emotionless face before vanishing.

Hearing that, Tsubaki's face distorted with displeasure.

"…Good grief, what a pain in the neck!"

Then Tsubaki also vanished from that white empty space. Now that there was no one inside that space, the space itself vanished shortly after.

__*__*__*__

Since Akira had almost used up all of his ammo, he asked Sara and Elena to accompany him back to the forward base. He set his bike to run on autopilot to follow the vehicle as he hopped into Elena and Sara's vehicle.

Akira was enamored by the scene of his bike running just fine without anyone riding it. Sara, who saw Akira like that, smiled and said to him.

"Although it's a common feature for advanced bikes made to explore the wasteland, when you look at it, it looks like a ghost is riding it, doesn't it?"

"Ghost, huh. You're right."

“Talking about ghosts, Akira, have you heard about them? There’s an urban legend in Kuzusuhara ruin about a beguiling ghost.”

“Yeah, more or less. Although I don’t know the details, it’s about a ghost that uses old-world relics as bait to lure Hunters and kill them, right?”

Since Akira had some guesses about that rumour, he could not help but make a conflicted face. He then continued.

“…Well, putting the ghost aside, it’s nothing rare for Hunters to get killed when they try to go to the deeper part of the ruin for relics.”

Elena, who was driving the vehicle, jumped into their conversation.

“It seems that in the past that urban legend had a completely different content.”

“Is that so? What did the rumour say in the past?”

“Honestly speaking, I don’t know for sure since there are a lot of different versions of it. Some say that it’s nothing but a rumour spread by Kugamayama City Management in order to scare Hunters from going to Kuzusuhara ruin. At that time, there were still a lot of good relics around the outskirts of Kuzusuhara ruin. So it might be a rumour spread to keep Hunters away from the ruin except for those Hunters employed under the City Management.”

Akira was listening closely to Elena’s story when Alpha suddenly swooped down from the sky and sat next to him.

“I’m back!”

“Welcome back. That took some time, I thought you said that you would be gone only for a bit.”

Alpha smiled mischievously.

“Oh my, you were missing me that much? I’m happy to hear that.”

“…It’s just that your interpretation for ‘a bit’ is different than mine.”

Akira only said so and dropped the subject there. Alpha just smiled like usual.

__*__*__*__

There was a certain room inside the forward base designed to prevent any type of information leakage, it was mainly used by those of high standings. Inside that room, Inabe, the head of the forward base, was sitting face to face with Sheryl and Viola.

Although Inabe was being careful with Viola, he was not taking her seriously. He was also looking down on Sheryl.

“So then, what is it? It’s pretty impressive for you to manage to get a connection to contact me, but if it isn’t worth my time, I’ll leave right away.”

Viola took out a certain old-world relic and placed it in front of Inabe. Inabe looked at that relic and smiled mockingly.

“So?”

“And this is the result from the appraisal. It’s from the Kurogane Corporation. Since I was using a backdoor, it has no Kurogane insignia on it. But what’s written here is the actual result from them.”

Inabe took the document handed over by Viola and skimmed it.

“It’s the old-world terminal from an unknown source that everyone was talking about not too long ago, huh. Are you trying to bribe me with this? What a joke!”

Inabe looked pretty calm while still eyeing the relic. Looking at that, Viola said with a wide smile.

“It seems that your investigation is not going well.”

Inabe’s expression immediately turned serious.

“…What do you mean by that?”

“You’re free to interpret it any way you want.”

“…Where did you hear that from?”

“I might be just making blind guesses, you know.”

The more Inabe’s face turned sterner, the wider Viola’s smile got.

Building a secured route into the inner part of the ruin starting from the forward base was a serious endeavour and the City Management placed significant effort into doing that. So of course, there were many people interested in it which caused infighting between different factions.

The one who was responsible for the planning was Yanagisawa. Since the construction and the maintenance of the forward base was doing fine, as well as the relic collection around the secured route, Yanagisawa was cementing his standing among the interested parties. Of course, it was not a good period for the people who were against Yanagisawa.

If there was anything that they could use to reproach Yanagisawa, it would be the fact that he was so focused on extending the secured route instead of collecting the relics around the secured route. The factions who were against Yanagisawa did not let that slide as they kept using that as an excuse to criticize him.

When someone got assigned to watch over a territory with expensive relics, of course, that person would gain a considerable amount of influence too. It was possible to disrupt Yanagisawa’s position using such a method. That was why Inabe spent a lot of his resources investigating the area under his supervision.

But unfortunately, he did not get a good result from that investigation. The weapon dog and humanoid monster swarm that he discovered practically forced him to stop the investigation, and he was unable to find any expensive relics.

When the area under his supervision proved to be pretty dangerous and without any worthwhile relics, the City Management had no reason to keep investing in it. At this rate, the City Management would completely stop its investment and Inabe would lose all the money that he had already invested in that territory as well as his influence among the competing factions. In reality, he was getting nervous.

When he saw the relic that Viola brought with her, Inabe thought that if that relic could be found in his territory, it would definitely kick up the value of his territory. At least, it would be enough to solve his current trouble, buy him some time, as well as bring in some money for him to get more resources. Thus luring in more potential investors.

Inabe's gaze naturally wandered to that old-world relic.

[…To be honest, I'm sure I can make it sound as if this relic comes from the area under my care. But I've heard all kinds of rumours about this woman. Moreover, even if I can do that, I only have one relic here. It's far from enough in order to increase the value of my territory…]

While Inabe was still contemplating what to do, Viola put her hand on top of that relic and slid it close to herself. Inabe's expression turned slightly sterner. Viola then pulled out the same type of relics and lined them on the table.

[…W-well now, if there are this many, it should be enough, but… It's this woman we're talking about here… There are already so many people who met their demise after getting involved with her…B-but, they do say that she never lies…]

Inabe made a conflicted face which was a mix of his hope, expectation, doubt, and desire. His expectation that this might be the way to his bright future started to bud.

Viola watched Inabe’s reaction with a smile. She then said to Sheryl in a blatant act.

“Boss, it seems that Inabe-san is not interested. I’m sorry, it’s my fault.”

“I see, alright then.”

Sheryl stood up calmly and lightly bowed to Inabe.

“Inabe-sama, thank you very much for your time today.”

“W-wait!!”

Inabe thought that Sheryl was not faking it and she was really about to leave, so he could not help but stop her by pure reflex. It gave him the final push.

“…Sit down, what do you want in exchange?”

Viola waited for Sheryl to sit back before she answered that question with a smile.

“We are running a relic shop, that’s why we want you to help us get old-world relics.”

“You said that as if it’s an easy thing to do, or is that you already know there are many people interested in collecting relics?”

“It’s not like we want you to get us all the expensive relics out there. We just want you to share some of the relics you collected with us. You can at least do that much, right? We will also pay for them, of course, we won’t be stingy with the rate.”

Inabe started to question his decision. But since he actually had already made his mind, although he might hesitate, what he was doing there was nothing more than trying to find more excuses to accept their demand.

“Alright, I’ll do it.”

“We have a deal then.”

Viola sent a glance to Sheryl, who understood what Viola meant with that glance as she slid the relics on top of the table to Inabe’s side.

Inabe’s gaze shifted to Sheryl. There was already no mockery reflected from his eyes. Sheryl was wearing the dress that was refitted in Kashua’s shop. Celene had the chance to work on that dress without worrying about the budget at all, thanks to that, her rare talent transformed that dress into something that emphasized Sheryl’s natural beauty while also giving her an aura of dignity. This time, Viola had some say during the refitting of that dress.

“By the way, what is your relationship with Viola?”

“My business partner and I’m her boss. That’s all.”

“…I see.”

Inabe looked at Sheryl and Viola. One of them was a suspicious woman that he knew well, while the other one was a suspicious girl that was new to him. He placed a mental note to be careful with both of them.

Sheryl, Viola and Inabe stayed there for some time to talk about the details after that. That was until one of Inabe’s men came and gave a report.

“Excuse me, I’m here with the report regarding the humanoid units.”

“Go ahead.”

“In short, they are not of humanoid robot type. To be more precise, they’re closer to biological monsters like the greedy crocodile.”

“So?”

“We can’t expect to earn much money from them.”

“…I see.”

Inabe sighed. If they were one of those old-world humanoid drones and the facility that manufactured those drones was somewhere nearby, it might become a good source to lure investors to invest in that territory. Although Inabe did not expect much when he ordered for the investigation, it was still disappointing that it did not give a good result.

“They’re still in the middle of the investigation even now. The research division is asking for more samples if possible.”

“Give them as many samples as they want.”

Viola suddenly interjected.

“Is it one of those humanoid monsters from that warning?”

“Yes. We still don’t know for sure if it’s a humanoid robot that someone made, or if it’s a Hunter preying on other Hunters, or if it’s something from the Nationalist, or maybe it’s just your normal humanoid monsters. That’s why they only limit it to a simple warning so as not to spread needless fear. Well, with this, we know for sure that they’re actually monsters. We put all the samples for the investigation in the warehouse. If you’re interested, we can go and take a look now?”

“Good idea, let’s go.”

Inabe raised his eyebrows.

“What are you planning to do with them? They’re not robots, so they’re just like weird looking corpses. Or is it one of your hobbies?”

Viola smiled mischievously.

“Well, it’s more like I enjoy seeing others get flustered when they believe that I will turn down their offer.”

Inabe sighed exasperatedly and scoffed.

“Haaah, you’re as bad as the rumour says, huh.”

“Don’t say anything unnecessary if you don’t want people to use it against you. It’s something that you should keep in mind as a negotiator. Right, boss?”

“Don’t ask me.”

Sheryl said so in a rather unfriendly way. But Viola only replied with her usual smile. Seeing that exchange, Inabe really had no idea what was the relationship between them.

“Well, if you want to see them, you can just go ahead and take a look. I’ll take you there.”

Sheryl followed Viola and went with Inabe to the forward base’s warehouse. Although she had no interest in the monster’s corpses, it was not like she could do anything if she was left behind alone. Moreover, it was better for her to go with them to make sure that she would not leak anything unnecessary.

The warehouse also housed a lot of the collected old-world relics. It was filled with gigantic shelves, the relics were placed on those shelves in a random manner.

Sheryl was a bit overwhelmed by what she saw there, Viola then leaned in and whispered to her.

“Although they’re cheap relics, normal people won’t be able to get permission to enter this place, you know? Aren’t you glad?”

“Wasn’t this your original aim?”

“Well, I wonder.”

Sheryl was a little irritated since it seemed that Viola was toying with her. But since it was true that it was not something that she could see everyday, she shifted her focus to the relics around her.

In one corner of the warehouse, there were pieces from the humanoid monsters that Akira and the other Hunters had defeated. They were kept in some kind of vacuum container. They were in relatively good conditions, their faces were visible through the transparent bag looked mostly unharmed. While for the ones that were in a bad shape, they were piled into a small container.

Inabe, who had guided Sheryl and Viola there, glanced at it and sighed.

“If they were old-world humanoid robots, it would have been a treasure trove.”

Viola also glanced at it with a slight interest.

“You’re keeping them in a relatively safe container.”

“Yeah, I’m sending them to a research corporation that I have some connections with, so I need to make them at least presentable. Although that short investigation revealed that they’re nothing but scrap, I might get a different result if I get a specialist to look at them. Someone actually brought in old-world humanoid robots from the ruin you see, and they fetched quite a lot of money even though they were already mostly destroyed. So I’m hoping if these things can fetch the same price too, you see.”

While Viola and Inabe were having that conversation, Sheryl was listening to them while looking at the container bag. That was when she noticed something, her eyes were fixated on the face under the container bag and thought that it looked familiar to her.

“…Tiol?”

Sheryl checked the faces in the other bags too and found out that all of them looked similar, which was strange. Although she suspected that he had something to do with them, she could not think of anything.

Inabe noticed Sheryl’s weird reaction and lightly joked.

“If you’re interested, do you want to take one of them home? Of course, you’ll have to pay for it though.”

“No thanks.”

“Thought so.”

After that, Inabe realized that he had allowed some outsiders to stay for a rather long time inside that warehouse. So he suggested that they leave the warehouse.

As they left, one of the humanoid monsters that still had some of its energy left looked at Sheryl. Since it immediately ran out of energy right after that, no one noticed it at all.

__*__*__*__

Tiol was drifting inside his dream space without any awareness.

Yastubayashi had healed Tiol by injecting nanomachine extracted from one of the ruin drones. It was an experiment to check if it would trick the old-world monsters’ IFF. If it worked, Hunters would be able to explore the ruin without the fear of getting attacked by monsters.

But it ended in failure. As a matter of fact, the nanomachine even invaded Tiol’s brain and affected his consciousness. But in the end, it was nothing more than an unstable system. It then picked random transmissions from around him and solely followed the vague command coming out from that bugged system when he ran away from Yatsubayashi’s clinic.

After that, he worked as a security drone as he hid in one of the dilapidated mansions and took out monsters that the system deemed to be illegal. He was moving as if he was being controlled by a bugged program.

The nanomachines that Yatsubayashi injected continued to evolve even now. It took in the nanomachines of the mechanical monster and the peculiar features of the biological monsters that Tiol ate, thus modifying his body to the point where strange-looking parts were growing out from his body and he was able to completely reconstruct his own body.

But it did not end there, he then met Tsubaki and received some help from her too. Tsubaki basically reconstructed the system inside his brain and claimed that he was one of the old-world's security drones.

Although his mind and body were completely altered, surprisingly enough, he was doing pretty well. He was actually happy now that he had gained power that he could not even start to imagine back when he was living in the slum. He was also enjoying himself fighting other monsters and Hunters using simple remotely controlled robots that he created. Although he had even forgotten his own name at this point, he did not really care.

As he continued acting as the ruin's security drone, one of his robots encountered Akira. Of course, he, himself no longer remembered Akira at all. But when he saw the footage sent from one of his robots, a certain order, or desire to be more precise, surfaced from deep within his mind.

His thought of winning a wonderful reward after he was able to kill Akira was already rooted deep inside his mind, but the directives from his security system software pushed that desire aside. Tiol fought hard against that directive and eventually was able to order all of his robots to attack Akira.

In the end, he was not able to take out Akira, but his consciousness that was able to resurface stayed in that state.

And then, through one of his robots that had already lost all of its fighting power, he saw and heard Sheryl mumble his name.

Even after he got his body and mind completely altered, when he saw Sheryl and heard her call his name, Tiol was once again captivated by her. Right at that moment, the strong emotion stemming from deep within him caused the system to reconstruct a part of his consciousness.

Tiol finally opened his eyes and found himself inside a room of a dilapidated building. Although he had an emotionless face, he said with full of resolve.

"I am Tiol!"

One of the terminals was alerted of Tiol. But as he glared at it, he was able to hijack its chain of command and make it obey him.

Tiol understood that he was still one with the system. Although he had regained his consciousness, he was still under strict restriction from the system. Forget returning back to Kugamayama city, at the moment, he could not even leave the territory that he was assigned to. Of course, he could not go and meet Sheryl in this state.

“What should I do…? Ah, right! I can use her!”

Tiol jumped out through the building’s window with his superhuman strength. He then landed from the height that would kill a normal human with a loud bang and ran toward his goal.

It was one of the rooms inside a weathered building. That room was badly damaged and no longer completely covered in white. After he entered that room, Tiol screamed as hard as he could.

“Come out!! I know that you can show yourself! And I know that you’re listening!! I even know from where you’re observing all this time!!”

Tiol screamed while looking around the room, but he heard nothing else other than the echoes of his own voice.

“Show yourself!! If not, I’ll tell the Hunters about your existence!! And I’m not bluffing here!!”

Tsubaki’s image suddenly appeared inside that room. She looked displeased and had a cold look.

Tiol spotted her and ran at her while shouting.

“There you are!! Get the restriction that you installed in my head off! Otherwise…!”

“Stop!”

With that one word, his whole body came into a sudden halt, ignoring his wish. Tsubaki then walked towards Tiol, who could not move at all, with mild contempt plastered on her face.

“You really have no manners, how unpleasant. And you have lost your logical mind too. I know that you’re excited after gaining so much power, but do you think that I’ll accept your demand just because you’re shouting it?”

Tsubaki stopped and stood next to Tiol, she then extended her hand toward his head.

“Our deal is that I will fix your bugged system and you’ll guard the area that I assigned to you. If you don’t like it, I don’t mind reverting your system back. You can just go ahead and unconsciously rampage until the day you die like a feral beast or a bugged machine for all I care.”

Tiol felt like his mind was being messed with while he fought back as hard as he could. He squeezed all of his might to try and push off Tsubaki’s hand with his immobilized body. When he did that, although it was only slightly, his body actually moved and swiped her hand off his head.

Tsubaki raised her eyebrows.

“I see that you can fight the system to some point, huh… You may move now.”

Tiol could feel something that was restricting his body was lifted off. He immediately jumped away from Tsubaki. His face was reflecting desperation, fear and terror. He was breathing roughly while glaring at her.

Tsubaki seemed to be contemplating something for a few seconds before she said with a cold smile.

“I’ve changed my mind, I have an offer to you.”

“An offer?”

“Yes. Since it seems that you’re not willing to continue guarding the area that I assigned to you, I’ll have you do something else for me. If you can do it, I will lift as much restriction as I can from your system using my permission. I will also forgive your rudeness just now. So, what do you say?”

“…W-what do you want me to do?”

Tiol asked the details of Tsubaki’s demand and could not help but be surprised.

“…You’re telling me to do that?”

“I won’t force you. But if you refuse, I will have to take back what I gave you.”

If Tiol refused, he would return back to being a feral beast rampaging pointlessly in the wasteland. Basically, he had no other choice in this situation.

“A-alright, I’ll do it.”

“We have a deal then, I’ll be counting on you.”

Tsubaki smiled faintly before vanishing. Right after that, Tiol’s face twitched.

“…Goddammit! I just need to do it right?!”

Tiol’s scream echoed through the room.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 185, Exceptional Monster

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Deep inside the Kuzusuhara ruin, Tiol was having his meal, or to be more precise, collecting more resources. His face was filled with pain.

Tiol ate all kinds of weird things, like the wreckages of dead monsters, carcasses of dead biological monsters, rubbles from buildings, Hunters along with their equipment.

He did not really care that much back when his consciousness was still a part of the system. But now that he had regained his consciousness, he also regained some of his humanity. As such, he could not help but get bothered when he ate raw meat, scrap metals, and rubble. He would have chosen to eat rotten leftovers given the chance, but this was torture that surpassed common sense.

If he let the system take over, it might be easier for him. But if he misjudged how much of his consciousness was to be relinquished to the system, there was a chance that his mind would be once again drowned by the system. Tiol, who understood that very well, made sure not to cross the dangerous line while harvesting resources.

Every time he took a bite of the carcass, it sent an unpleasant sensation throughout his body. Every time he tore off a metallic scrap with his jaw, he could not help but feel terrified of himself for being able to do it. He kept telling himself that he had no other choice but to do it in order to replenish his ammo and to reach his goal. He cursed the situation that he was in as well as everything that led him into that situation.

Tiol's body changed in response to his feelings. The hatred inside him broke a part of the system restriction, allowing him to break through the limit on his body. Thus turning him into a giant, powerful, and vicious monster.

His hatred fueled his desire for power. Even if he constructed a lot of those simple robots that he could remotely control, Akira would be able to destroy them single-handedly. And even if he also brought along a swarm of weapon dogs, they would be taken care of by the other Hunters. In order to reach his goal, to defeat Akira and those Hunters, Tiol needed more power. And for the sake of gaining that power, he had to eat those corpses and wreckage. Thus fueling his hatred even more.

The effect of Tiol's hatred reached the semi-autonomous drones around the area. The other drones that were also collecting resources were pushed to surpass the restriction from the system. When those drones were done with harvesting the pile of resources, they were transformed into giant monsters. Some of them turned into giant humanoid robots or heavily armed tanks. Their bodies had no sense of aesthetic as if they were made of forcefully combining mechanical parts and biological flesh, it was a pure expression of power and force.

These monsters started to move pushed by their insatiable desire to grow bigger and more powerful. Tiol, who now had turned into something that looked like a heavily armoured powered suit from the outside, also started moving.

⎯⎯⎯*⎯

Akira had returned back to the forward base in order to replenish his ammo when he received a call from Kibayashi to meet him in the cafeteria.

Kibayashi sounded really disappointed when he explained why he had called Akira, but in contrast to that, Akira was listening to him with a big smile.

“It’s finally done, huh!”

“Dammit, you look so happy. You really hated this job until the very end, huh?”

Akira’s request to increase his Hunter Rank ended that day. For Kibayashi, it was bad news, but of course, for Akira, it was great news.

After all, Akira had a hard fight just the other day. As a matter of fact, he used that as an excuse to buy expensive expendables without even glancing at their prices. He basically filled the warehouse of the forward base with the expensive mini-missiles and anti-forcefield armour magazines.

The ratio between Akira’s expense and achievement finally surpassed what Kibayashi could handle.

“As expected, you’re spending too much money. Unless you’re planning to use those in the frontline, they’ll no longer pay for your expense.”

Akira lightly laughed as if he was completely ignoring Kibayashi’s complaints.

“Well, didn’t expect splurging on the expendables to actually work.”

“Good grief! You’re basically the only Hunter that I know who would make the City Management cancel its Hunter Rank-up request for a trivial reason like that, you know. Though, to be honest, that’s so like you.”

Yatsubayashi glanced at Akira and sent a bitter smile, although, there was also a bit of delight too in his smile.

“To be honest, I was hoping that you would do something crazy on your last day. But unfortunately, I guess that won’t happen now. Starting from today, you’re assigned to guard the forward base. Well, you can just randomly roam around the forward base.”

“Is that good enough?”

“The weather forecast says that it’ll be raining for the next few days after all, so there are no plans for a huge battle anytime soon. The effect from the colourless mist will get thicker with the rain, so I bet you’ll be just holding yourself in the forward base for a few days. Well, actually that’s also one of the reasons why they cancelled your rank-up request though.”

It was common sense in the eastern district to only go explore the ruin when the weather was clear. After all, not only did rain reduce the sensitivity of the information-gathering devices, it also reduced the Hunters’ visual range. No one would go picking a fight with the monsters in that situation out of their own volition.

The City Management made sure that all the important points had enough guards to hold on their own in any weather. Of course, their budgets were already decided beforehand. And in the case if they employed a high-ranking Hunter, the City Management would have to pay a lot of money for that Hunter. Now that Akira had raised up his rank considerably, the City Management had no budget left to employ him.

“Well, if you don’t like the idea of doing nothing for a whole day, you can instead join the Hunters working to secure the frontline.”

“No thanks!”

“Yep, knew you would say that.”

Kibayashi fully expected that answer from Akira, so he smiled disappointedly but also gleefully at the same time.

***

Akira was driving his bike around the forward base. Behind him was an unmanned truck. Alpha was sitting leisurely on top of the covered truck.

The truck was filled with ammo taken from the forward base. After the last fight, Akira was worried if he would run out of ammo in the middle of a battle again, thus he decided to splurge his money on a small truck.

The truck itself was not armed and not well armoured. It was basically the polar opposite of Akira who was armed to the teeth. The only thing that he considered when choosing that truck was whether it was better than carrying the ammos using his bike.

Akira glanced at the truck.

“If this is everything for today, there was no need to buy the truck. I guess that was an unnecessary spending.”

“If the money you spent to prepare yourself for a danger turned out to be unneeded, it’s something that we should be happy about, right?”

“Well, you have a point there… Hm?”

Akira noticed the falling droplets and looked up, it had started raining lightly. He could see the sky blocked by a thick cloud.

“Oh, it started raining.”

Alpha passed through the ceiling of the truck and dropped to the driver assistant’s seat of the truck. She then pointed at the driver seat and called Akira.

“Akira, how about coming here? There’s no need to keep driving on your bike under the rain.”

“Good idea… Hm!??”

Akira, who was still looking up at the sky, noticed something. He spotted something flying under the thick cloud.

Akira extended his information-gathering device to zoom in on that spot. He could see something that looked like a humanoid robot and an aircraft.

“Oh, they’re flying… Wait, isn’t this bad?”

Akira remembered that a flying object in the eastern district would attract powerful monsters that roamed the sky. So he continued to stare at that flying object with a stern expression.

Right at the next moment, Akira noticed missiles flying past him, which went straight for that aircraft. Those missiles came from the anti-air tanks posted in the forward base. The aircraft was hit with explosives and fell down together with the humanoid robot.

At this rate, they would crash close to him. So Akira accelerated his bike and immediately evacuated from the crash point.

The aircraft that was falling free under the mercy of gravity suddenly slowed down as if it pulled the brake right before it crashed into the ground. After floating a few centimetres above the ground, it landed with a loud bang.

Akira watched that scene unfold with wide eyes, but Alpha suddenly shouted at him.

“Akira!! Shoot it down!!”

The A4WM automatic grenade launchers fixed on Akira’s bike immediately released mini-missiles. Akira reacted accordingly by pulling his SSB multi-weapon and immediately emptied its magazine at that humanoid robot.

The humanoid robot aimed both of its giant arms at Akira and took a stance as if it was about to shoot, but before it could do that, Akira’s bullets reached it first.

The shockwave from the bullets threw the humanoid robot off-balance, but that did not stop it from releasing shots accompanied by loud bangs. One of the warheads went straight at a building, blowing off the half-crumbled building into smithereens in one shot. While the other warhead travelled astray into the wasteland before landing with a loud explosion.

The bullets barrage from Akira pierced through the robot’s armour, leaving its body riddled with holes, splattering its oils and sending its body parts flying into the air. But that did not stop Akira from shooting at that robot, showering it with bullets and its own body parts.

Even with its balance broken, the robot kept shooting with both of its arms. It kept trying to fix its aim at Akira while releasing stray warheads into the wasteland. Echoes from the explosions ran through the wasteland, raising a cloud of smoke with every explosion.

While Akira was in the middle of shooting the robot, the missiles that were launched first finally reached their target. They slipped through the holes on that robot's armour and exploded, blowing its mechanical part to pieces and releasing its body fluid that looked like blood from its body container.

Akira who saw that raised his eyebrows in surprise.

"…a biological monster?! Not a humanoid robot?!"

"It's still a type of humanoid weapon, but its species is much closer to the greedy crocodile. You can just think of it as a heavily armed powered suit."

"So what is that thing flying in the sky?!"

While Akira was still confused. Another round of explosions burst on top of his head. When he looked up, he could see multiple similar aircraft flying in the sky as well as the missiles that were trying to shoot them down.

Those aircrafts were not only carrying similar humanoid monster that Akira defeated just now, but they also carried other types of monsters. Although they were of different species, all these monsters shared the same characteristics, all of them were gigantic with abnormally thick armour and powerful weapons.

The aircrafts that the missiles missed just went past the forward base and headed straight to Kugamayama city. While the transport aircraft that got shot down unloaded their cargo one by one.

Akira stood frozen as he watched the destroyed aircrafts and monsters that were raining down from the sky with a stern face, but the blaring alarm coming from the terminal lent by the City Management pulled him back to reality. As he checked the contents of the notification, his already tense face turned even sterner.

“It’s telling me to fight the best I can without going back to the base.”

“Akira, whether you plan to fight them or not, we should go into the ruin. This place is no good.”

Although the missiles were able to shoot down some of the aircrafts, the huge monsters that those aircrafts carried were mostly able to land on the ground just fine. But after they landed, those monsters immediately headed back to the ruin instead of going in the direction of Kugamayama city.

The monsters started shooting their gigantic guns toward the forward base and the area around it. The tanks and the powered suits guarding the forward base reacted by fighting back.

As for Akira, he rode his bike and paced it toward the ruin.

“…In the worst-case scenario, isn’t it safer if I go back to the base?”

“You have your ammo here with you. Aren’t you glad that you decided to take them with you?”

Alpha said so and smiled teasingly. Akira returned that smile with an annoyed look. He then spotted a warhead landing on a building not too far from him, tearing that building down. Seeing that, Akira knitted his eyebrows.

“…Why does this happen on my last day working here?! As I thought, my luck really sucks.”

Akira spitted out a complaint as he immediately accelerated his bike.

***

The forward base was filled with the shouts from the guards and the sounds of the battle.

“Detected more aircrafts!!”

“Shoot them down!! Activate all the anti-air units!! Get the anti-air weapons for the powered suits too!!”

“The monsters that fell from the transport aircrafts are attacking the supply route!! Also, I’m detecting more monsters coming out from the ruin!”

“Gather everyone who can fight and get them to set up a defence line!! We just need to hold out until reinforcement from the city arrives!! Use all the reserve ammo! Get the high ranking Hunters to hunt the big ones!! Tell them that it’s their chance to earn money!!”

All the staff present spared no effort in handling the emergency situation. Yanagisawa was there watching calmly how the situation evolved. One of his men noticed him and sent a curious glance at him while asking a question.

“Commander, did you do something again this time?”

Yanagisawa looked surprised, but it was obvious that he was acting. He then smiled and shook his head.

“No no no, I didn’t do anything this time. Even for someone like me, I can’t lure transport aircrafts, you know.”

“I see, although, I know better not to trust your words.”

“I really have nothing to do with this incident though.”

Yanagisawa was smiling like usual. Seeing that, his curious men knew that his answer could not serve as proof to whether he was related to what was going on or not.

“…But if it’s not your doing, then it’s purely an invasion, huh? With aircrafts too, this might be pretty dangerous, no?”

“Nah, it’ll probably be fine. Though it still bothers me that they didn’t bring out their full force and number, they won’t be able to crush the forward base nor the city.”

The skies of the eastern district were controlled by powerful flying monsters, it was exactly the reason why the people of the eastern district did not use aerial transportation. That was just how strong the monsters that roamed the eastern district’s sky were.

Although that kind of monster was mixed in among the transport aircrafts, Yanagiwa said that it would be fine. That was why that curious guy sent a doubtful glance at Yanagisawa.

Yanagisawa noticed it and laughed.

“Well, it’s true that most of the flying monsters are dangerous. But most of those monsters are either weapons from the old-world era or their derivations. Basically, they are the drones that are normally assigned to watch over the old-world ruin’s sky. If they seriously wanted to crush Kugamayama city, they would have come with stronger monsters. So in short, this invasion did not originate from the old-world system. That’s why their aircrafts are not that powerful. Well, although I said they’re not that powerful, it’s relative to the other monsters that usually roam the sky though. But even so, the city defence squad should be able to handle them just fine.”

“But it seems that those aircrafts are coming from the ruin. So at least the system supports this invasion.”

“Nope, I bet they’re either ignoring the system or they have broken their restrictions to fly. These are either mechanical or biological monsters, which turned into a completely different species after multiple mutations but are still more or less controlled by old-world nanomachine. That’s why those monsters that seem unable to fly, can fly. While on the other hand, that nanomachine also installed a system restriction on them. This includes the directive not to fly, that’s why those monsters never mutate into flying monsters. But of course, there are exceptions.”

“And these flying units are those exceptions?”

“Probably, yes. Well, since they broke that limitation, I’m sure the other monsters identify them as foes so they would normally get killed in no time. Even if they manage to survive and evolve into a powerful monster, the system would identify them as a dangerous entity and take care of them.”

Yanagisawa frowned before continuing.

“…That’s why normally you won’t see something as half-baked as this. It somehow bothers me. But well, it doesn’t change the fact that they pose no threat to the city.”

The guy who was listening to him was dumbstruck, normal people would know nothing about what Yanagisawa said just now.

“…How do you know that?”

Yanagisawa smiled mischievously.

“That’s a secret.”

The guy sighed.

“…Very well, so then, what should we do?”

“Let’s see. You can go ahead and decide for yourself whether to defend the route or the forward base, but remember that the supply route is not equipped to defend against an aerial attack.”

“If you’re okay with that order, I have a feeling that guy would use the powered suit though, should we expect anything from him?”

“Hm? Just leave him be. In the first place, we’re planning to check if we can use that powered suit in the inner part of the ruin. So this might be a good chance to test it. I guess we can let him hunt those bigger monsters and see how well it will fare.”

“Roger that!”

The guy bowed and left.

Yanagisawa’s face turned serious.

[…I’m sure it’s not because of them either. They should not be able to break their limitations. And even if it’s possible, it should be incredibly difficult, there’s no way they can get those small aircrafts flying without permission. If they had the ability to do that, the forward base and Kugamayama city would have been destroyed by now… I should still have some time…]

The bigger the rights that an area manager had, the stronger the restriction would be. The bigger and the more powerful the area it managed, the stronger and more detailed the restriction would be. Yanagisawa knew that fact very well.

As Yanagisawa rejected the possibility of his worry, his face returned back to his usual smile.

__*__*__*__

Back in the ruin, Akira was riding his bike on the side of a crumbled building. Warheads landed behind him as if they were trying to catch him.

The monster that Akira was fighting was a type of weapon dog but with a huge body. It had 6 legs and a gigantic upper half of a humanoid robot that grew out from its back. Instead of a head, it had a gun that grew out from where its head should be. It was also the same for its arms. The vulcan cannon rotated intensely as they kept spewing bullets in Akira’s direction.

As each bullet left a hole in that building, it eventually started to crumble down. Akira climbed up the wall to get away from his opponent’s shooting range before making a sharp turn and pulled out his SSB multi-weapon.

The SSB multi-weapon released a barrage of bullets at the weapon dog. The bullets that Akira shot from a short distance packed enough punch to crush the humanoid robot part and tore it off from the weapon dog’s back. But the bullets did not stop there as they also pierced through the beast and killed it too.

Akira’s bike landed sooner than the crumbling building. He did not spare even a split second as he immediately accelerated his bike away from that place getting away from the collapsing building.

Even after he defeated his enemy, Akira still had a stern face.

“That makes it 5 already!! They’re too strong and too many to be roaming around outskirts of Kuzusuhara ruin.

A loud explosion suddenly happened not too far from him. It came from the missiles that were launched from Akira’s A4WM automatic grenade launcher beforehand. The explosion blew off rubbles together with the flesh, mechanical parts, and a firestorm.

“And that makes it 6. Akira, you’re running out of ammo. Let’s resupply first.”

“Roger that!”

Akira’s small truck that carried his supply was under Alpha’s control and she evacuated it away from the monsters. Akira was fighting monsters to make sure that they would not destroy his truck.

Akira rushed toward his truck that was hiding in an alley. He then parked his bike right in front of the truck’s container and took out mini-missiles as well as huge rifle magazines out from the truck’s container in a rush.

While he was in the middle of taking out ammo from the container, Akira suddenly ran off, reloaded a new magazine to his SSB rifle, jumped out the alley, and immediately started shooting.

His SSB rifle released an anti-forcefield armour round and anti-armour frag grenades at the same time from its muzzle. They ripped through the air at a high speed and landed at the spider monsters that he was aiming at.

The spider monster had the upper half of a humanoid monster. The anti-forcefield bullet tore a hole in that humanoid part of the monster and even pierced through the spider part of the monster too. Then, the frag grenade slipped through that hole, exploded inside the spider body, and wreaked havoc inside its innard.

Akira did not stop shooting even after that. The huge hole that the first grenade opened provided a way for the next grenade to get inside the monster's body. After a few seconds, the grenades made quick work of the monster.

Akira then immediately ran back to his truck.

"That would be 7!! Damn, I just can't catch a break! Alpha, was there really a need for me to immediately take out that spider?"

"It would be troublesome if they get the chance to launch missiles at you, right? That's why I told you to kill it quickly. Although it turns out that it doesn't have missile pods, it was faster to just kill it instead of taking time to check if it had missile pods. But it's not important now, hurry up with the resupply. We have another one coming."

"Alright alright, I got it!"

After Akira returned back to his truck, he finished replenishing his ammo and immediately got back on his bike. Without missing a beat, he paced his bike to face the 8th monster.

As he skillfully blazed through the bad road of the alleys between the crumbled down buildings, he spotted a large monster right in front of him. Akira stepped off his bike and hid under the shadow of the building around him. He reloaded an armor-piercing magazine used for sniping into his SSB multi-weapon and aimed at that monster. As he looked at that monster through the rifle's aiming device, he noticed something.

The monster resembled a multi-legged tank, but the legs were not of the usual multi-legged tank's legs, they were more like cyborg legs. The metallic legs had a complete body part of a usual leg which included thigh, ankle, foot and even the fingers too. On top of its multi-legs, a huge gun that did not fit the size of its body was perching.

“…This one is another strange-looking humanoid monster… Or is it even a humanoid monster? That spider also had a humanoid body part too, these monsters are having weird peculiarities.”

“That’s not important, let’s just take that monster out. Just because it has a humanoid body part, it doesn’t make it harder for you to shoot it, right?”

“Well, yeah.”

Akira pushed that thought aside and fixed his aim, but before he pulled the trigger, he suddenly stopped. The rain that was falling down lightly suddenly turned stronger. The heavy rain cut his visibility and hid the enemy that was in front of him.

“…This rain has a similar effect with the colourless mist, doesn’t it? But I have your detection support, so, I basically have the upper hand in this condition, right?

“If it’s about detection skills, then yes. But this rain will kill most of the bullet’s momentum. So considering that both of you lose your long-range shooting capability, it means that you’ll have to get close to fight the monsters. Judging from that point of view, your situation is actually worse.”

Thanks to Alpha’s support, Akira was still able to spot his enemy. He pulled the trigger with a stern face.

The bullets ripped through the water beads from the rain, leaving a traceable trajectory path all the way through the monster’s armour and inner parts.

The monster immediately made it move to shoot back at Akira. Its huge cannon swooped with such intensity and fixed its muzzle at Akira before starting to shoot warheads where Akira might be based on its calculation.

Its huge cannon released a shell that was more or less as big as the cannon’s muzzle, the shell flew through the air and blew the raindrops with its powerful momentum. It pierced through the wall of raindrops, leaving a gaping hole behind its track, and landed on a building not too far from where Akira was, pulverizing it in one shot.

Akira, who witnessed that force from a close range could not help but knit his eyebrows, but at the same time, he was able to confirm that the rain was severely affecting his opponent as well. Nonetheless, he immediately started shooting again. Each armour piercing bullet that he sent left a hole in that big monster's body.

Every time a bullet pierced its body, the shockwave sent the big monster reeling. But it did not stop it from shooting its cannon despite its aim getting worse and worse. The stray shells landed on the buildings around him, crushing them one by one. As some of the rubbles fell right on top of Akira, Alpha let him know about them beforehand, so he was able to evade the falling rubbles before starting shooting again.

After that short exchange that showed the difference in their firepower and accuracy, the monster eventually stopped shooting.

As Akira thought that the big monster ran out of ammo after shooting that many shells haphazardly and was about to press on the offence, he noticed a change in the monster's body. The base of the monster's multi legs purged and exposed something that looked like teeth.

It then moved its huge legs to latch on a nearby building and started nibbling on it. After it finished, it shook its body as if to chew on the rubbles and started shooting again.

Akira frowned with surprise.

"…It's replenishing its ammo by feeding on the rubbles, huh! Give me a break already!!"

"It seems that waiting for it to run out of ammo is not a choice here. Akira, retreat for now. Let's snipe it from another direction."

Alpha controlled his bike that he had left not too far from him to approach Akira. Akira jumped on his bike and left that place. Right after that, another shell landed on a nearby building, sending it crashing down to the ground.

Now that the monster had lost Akira, it seemed to be hesitating for a bit while shifting its focus between the forward base and Akira, but it then decided to chase after the latter.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 186, Nelia's Powered Suit

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The secured route to Kuzusuhara ruin was fortified by a series of walls made from the repurposed buildings along the route. The soldiers posted along the secured route peeked out through the window slit with raised eyebrows. They were desperately fighting the small monsters outside the wall up until just now, but their rifles' muzzle had stopped producing smoke for some time now. It was not because they ran out of ammo, but it was because there was no longer any target to shoot.

Countless dead monsters were scattered in front of them. Although their number and strength had put an immense strain on the defending soldiers, a particular man who just appeared not too long ago cleaned them up easily.

Rather than cheering on their victory, the soldiers were still surprised by that man's prowess. Half of the swarm as well as the swarm made of relatively big monsters were all defeated by that man.

"W-who the heck is that…?"

"The IFF indicates that he's a friend but he seems to be using different equipment, a Hunter maybe?"

“The IFF signal doesn’t show that he’s a Hunter though. But he’s not a soldier from the temporary base either. I wonder which squad he belongs to?”

“No idea. I heard nothing from the base either… Either way, I’m glad that he’s on our side. Let’s get ourselves ready while we have the time.”

The commander of the guards there gave his order and the soldiers started to get busy again.

On top of the countless dead monsters, a man stood and contacted his friend through wireless communication. His communication device still worked just fine despite the effect of the rain. His other equipment was also better than usual Hunters, and of course, he has the skill suitable for his equipment. It was the exact reason why he was able to clean up the monsters so easily.

“I’m done here, how about over there?”

“Yup, I’m done over here too.”

“I see. Just a question though, how were the monsters over there?”

“Hm? Just a normal swarm. Nothing out of the ordinary, anything wrong on that side?”

“I won’t go that far, but it feels like they are ordered to fight and not to withdraw. Although this is just my guess, the bigger monster is not the boss of the swarm, they’re more like the commander of the swarm. Not to mention that there are both biological and mechanical monsters mixed in the swarm. I bet these monsters have evolved to be able to take command of the other monsters. I didn’t go for them first, so I can’t really confirm it.”

“Hmmm, the boss said that this attack is not from the ruin’s defence system though. But to think that they have a commander like that, it’s becoming really fishy. Alright then, I’ll at least let the boss know about it. Tell the others to be careful too, later then.”

The call ended there and the man mumbled.

“…If the bigger monsters are the commanders, then there’s a good chance that there’s another higher command up the ladder. In that case, wouldn’t that mean that this attack might be because of that higher commander? And here I thought this would be an easy job, goddammit!”

That guy who belonged to Yanagisawa’s squad sighed.

__*__*__*__

Akira was using the buildings as covers while closing in onto the multi-legged monster, but another monster suddenly ambushed him. Right now, he was riding his bike on top of the buildings to keep his distance from the monsters while shooting at them with his SSB multi-weapon rifle.

The monster that ambushed him had a wolf-like appearance. Although its head was as big as a small shop, it had a big enough body to suit its head. Its legs were covered in fur, but it did not hide its muscular flesh as it ran toward Akira, crushing the rubbles under its feet.

The mini-missile pods fixed on Akira’s bike launched multiple mini-missiles at that monster. The explosion that engulfed that monster was only able to strip off a small part of its fur and flesh, it hardly injured the monster at all. It then jumped out from the smoke and chased Akira with great vigour.

Akira kept shooting while gritting his teeth. When he noticed that he had run out of ammo and was about to reload a new magazine, Alpha suddenly gave him an order.

“Akira, anti-forcefield ammo doesn’t really work, so don’t use it.”

“Is that so…? Wait, that thing is so strong although it’s not using a forcefield armour?!”

“At least, it’s not using forcefield armour projection like your coat or your common tank’s forcefield armour.”

“So basically it’s just simply that strong, huh!! What a pain in the neck!!”

Akira reloaded an augmented armour piercing magazine to his SSB rifle and started shooting again, driving multiple augmented armour piercing bullets to the monster wolf’s head. The monster roared from the pain, but instead of slowing down, it ran even faster. It opened its mouth, showing its red-blooded fang and its ferocity.

In contrast to that, Akira looked even more concerned. His face turned even grimmer as if to erase the concerned look on his face.

“Just how much vitality does that monster have? Alpha, can you do something about that thing? Like, you know, concentrating the missiles just like you did back then against the tank tarantula? You can control the mini-missiles, right?”

“Unfortunately, I can’t do that. To be more precise, I can’t fully control the missiles, not to mention that the rain is reducing the accuracy of the guiding system too. To be honest, I believe I deserve an award for even making them hit their target.”

“So it’s all the rain’s fault, huh!! Seriously, can it just stop already?! Or at least let off even for a bit!”

Akira started cursing at the rain. But instead of letting off, the rain that got weaker a moment ago suddenly started pouring even harder. Akira smiled bitterly at Alpha, who replied likewise.

“Akira.”

“It’s not my fault.”

“I know, I just want to let you know that you’ll need to resupply soon.”

“…Roger that.”

The bike accelerated to open up more distance from the monster wolf. It then went into an alley where his truck was hiding and was running parallel with that truck. Akira then jumped from the bike and into the truck, as he brought the huge payload of mini-missiles to the backside of his bike, the arms fixed on the backside of the bike threw away the empty payload, grabbed the new payload, and loaded the mini-missiles.

Akira quickly finished grabbing the ammo for his SSB rifle and immediately jumped back to his bike. His truck then drove away from him and vanished between the rubbles.

The monster wolf had its sight on the truck, but Akira forcefully shifted its attention to him as he started shooting at that monster. The bike slowed down to provoke the monster even more and he kept on shooting armour-piercing bullets at its head to keep its attention.

The monster chased Akira even harder, its face that was scary enough on its own, looked even more intimidating with the blood oozing from it. Every time it swung one of its 4 huge legs, it sent rubbles and debris into the air.

Seeing how the monster was getting closer and closer, Akira thought that it was about time to speed up the bike, but strangely the bike would not go any faster. Akira tilted his head and sent a glance at Alpha.

“Alpha?”

“We’ll get closer this time since we know for sure that it has no ranged attack. After all, it doesn’t seem like we can defeat that monster without shooting from closer range. So Akira, you should get yourself ready.”

Although Akira understood the logic, he still could not help but frown.

“…I know that part is my responsibility, but make sure not to get too close, yes?? I don’t want to get eaten again like back then with that big snake.”

“That’s a good idea, shooting from the inside is a sure-fire way to kill it. Want to do that instead?”

“No thanks. It’s obvious that one won’t just swallow me whole!! I’m sure it would give good chewing before swallowing its food!!”

“That’s not what I meant though. It’s coming.”

The wolf monster had closed the distance, enough to take a chomp on Akira. Right when it opened its big mouth, Akira suddenly jumped from his bike and leapt toward that big monster.

In his compressed time perception, Akira saw the wolf slowly closing its jaw to get a good bite of its prey.

But its jaw was suddenly forced open before it could close. Akira had raised his augmented suit power to max and delivered a powerful kick to the wolf's jaw.

He could feel the kickback from that powerful kick as he was momentarily floating in the air. That was when mini-missiles went past beside him and straight into the monster's opened mouth before exploding.

With no other direction for the force to escape, the explosions had enough force to blast open the wolf's innards. Some of the shockwaves went out from the wolf's mouth, towards Akira who was right in front of its mouth. But thanks to Alpha's support, he was able to safely land on the ground.

Akira then looked up at the monster as it writhed and roared before falling to the ground.

"Alright then, that went easier than I thought, we should have done that sooner."

Hearing what Alpha said casually, Akira immediately raised his objection.

"The heck! I'll keep my distance even if it takes a whole load of bullets to kill that monster next time, okay?!!"

"I see. But considering the ammo expense, I don't really recommend that. There are so many of them after all. So I hope you understand."

"Can you do something about the aim to reduce the ammo usage? It's not the time to be holding back right now."

"I'm already doing my best, but it's not that easy with this rain, you see. I can't increase the accuracy no matter what."

“Dammit!! If only this rain would stop!”

Akira once again looked up to the sky. The rain felt like it got slightly stronger. Alpha smiled bitterly at Akira.

“Akira, you should stop make it rain harder, you know.”

“…It’s not my fault.”

Akira frowned, showing that he was not so sure if what he said was true or not. But then he noticed something in the ruin and quickly banished any unnecessary thoughts to the void. As he focused his vision in that direction, he spotted another huge wolf monster running fiercely in the rain.

“Again?!!”

Akira who was taking a break on top of his bike immediately accelerated to keep his distance away from that monster, but Alpha hijacked the control and stopped him from doing so.

“Akira, wait, there’s a friendly signal coming from that direction.”

“Is it chasing someone??”

Helping other Hunters was one of his jobs. So Akira was not sure if he should go and help that Hunter instead. But it seemed that it was unnecessary.

“Nope, it’s the opposite.”

“The opposite?”

Right in the next moment, the big wolf monster that came pretty close to Akira was suddenly sliced by a blue light blade and fell down. Its head that was separated from its body continued to roar even as it rolled over the ground. While the rest of its body followed its inertia and crashed until it finally stopped right before Akira.

Akira was pretty amazed by what happened. When he looked at the monster's head, it was then cut to half by a blue light blade from behind, revealing the owner of that blue blade which was a black powered suit.

Akira tensed up the moment he saw that powered suit since it somehow looked familiar to him.

"Alpha, that powered suit…"

"It's either the very same powered suit that you fought back in Ezont Family's base or a different powered suit of the same type. But it's true that the IFF identified it as a friend."

"Not a foe then… right?"

"Probably, yes."

Akira still had his guard up. The black powered suit turned off its blade and folded it. Once it was folded to the length of its handle, the black powered suit put it away to show that it had no wish to fight before waving casually to Akira.

Akira was a bit surprised since he did not expect that at all. But when the backside of the powered suit opened up and someone came out from it, Akira frowned. He found that person somehow familiar to him.

"Y-You…"

"Long time no see, Akira."

It was Nelia.

Nelia jumped from the powered suit and landed in front of Akira, who immediately aimed his SSB rifle at Nelia by pure reflex. But even so, Nelia smiled amusedly at him.

"Oh my, it's not a good idea to aim your rifle at a friend, you know?"

"…Do you really expect me to believe that?"

“It’s the truth. If you shoot a friendly Hunter in this situation, there’s no mistaking it, the City Management will see it as an act of betrayal. You won’t be able to get away from it just fine, you know? Though that in itself would be interesting.”

Nelia was smiling without showing any tension. But Akira knew very well that did not guarantee she would not suddenly start shooting at him.

“Akira. If you have no wish to abandon your request and pick a fight with Kugamayama City Management, lower your rifle. I won’t tell you not to kill her, but this is not the time and place for that.”

Akira hesitated before finally lowering his rifle.

“So, why are you here?”

Akira had a curt tone and looked at Nelia with a sharp gaze, but in contrast to that, Nelia had a friendly smile plastered on her face.

“Just hunting monsters for a job. Not that much different from you, no?”

“Job? I heard that you’re put on compulsory civil service for the City Management though?”

“Yup, that’s why I’m working hard here.”

“…In that powered suit?”

“Yes. I’m sure you’ve noticed it too, it’s the powered suit that you fought before.”

Akira had so many questions in his head. But seeing Nelia enjoying his reaction there, he decided to push aside all of his questions for now.

“So then, what now?”

“Hm? Nothing in particular, just saying hello since I spotted you.”

“Is that so? If that’s all, then just get out of my face.”

“Geez, that’s so cold of you. We should celebrate this reunion, you know.”

“I see no reason to celebrate at all.”

Akira said bluntly before going off on his bike. But Nelia just smiled and returned back to her powered suit. After she turned the power on, she started chasing Akira.

The information terminal lent by the City Management that Akira had fixed on his arm automatically accepted a short-range call from Nelia without his confirmation.

“There’s no need to run away like that, you know. Let’s hang out for a bit.”

“…How the heck did you do that? I didn’t even pick up your call, you know?”

“Yup, I did that from this side. Since my information terminal has higher privileges, it’s easy for me to do it. Not to mention, hacking is my speciality. Ah, by the way, just to let you know, I’m using the connection for emergency broadcast used by the forward base, so it’s futile to try to cut it off.”

Akira, who was about to reach his information terminal, stopped midway and frowned.

“Oh my, you don’t have to look that annoyed.”

“How can you even see my face?”

“That was just a wild guess, did I get it right? That hurts me, you know?”

Akira’s face turned stern. Judging from her voice, it sounded as if Nelia was really enjoying teasing him.

“…Why are you following me?”

“I’m just keeping my distance so I can still use the close-range call in the middle of this rain.”

“Is that so?”

Akira accelerated his bike, trying to leave Nelia behind. Although the road was filled with rubbles and the rain reduced the tire’s grip, Akira fully relied on Alpha’s driving skill and the gripping power of the bike that allowed him to climb a vertical wall as he freely accelerated his bike. He blazed through the falling water droplets and the rubbles, a small mistake would easily throw his bike off.

But Nelia’s skill, as well as the performance of her powered suit was above it. She moved agilely as if she was sliding over the ground to evade the smaller rubble and temporarily increased the output power of the powered suit to jump over the bigger ones. She was running with such a speed that a collision would cause a loud bang and a small mistake would plunge her powered suit straight to the nearby building.

Instead of getting away from Nelia, Akira could not hide his surprise when he saw her closing up on him. Alpha warned Akira who had his attention toward his back.

“Akira, look forward, more enemy.”

“…Whoah, sorry!”

Akira immediately cut off Nelia from his attention and focused on the 2 big sized monsters in front of him. One of them was the multi-legged monster that he was unable to finish before, while the other one was a beast-like monster with the upper body of a human. Both of them had huge guns, which did not really resemble one, and aimed them at Akira.

Akira made a 90 degree turn to a sudden stop and was about to aim his SSB rifle at those monsters when Nelia jumped over him.

The black powered suit blazed through the rain, rapidly closing its distance with the two monsters. It easily evaded the shots from their cannons and vulcans as it pulled out its blade on both of its hands. The moment the monsters got into its range, it quickly sliced those monsters apart.

Before the sliced monsters were able to fall to the ground, the black powered suit sliced them to even smaller pieces. When the black powered suit stopped and turned off its light blade, the huge monsters had already been turned into diced meat and crumbs of metal.

Akira, who saw what happened in front of him, could not hide his surprise.

“…Those two monsters, so fast… Has that black powered suit always been this strong!?”

Akira was able to defeat that black powered suit once in the past although it was with Alpha’s support. So he always thought that he should be able to handle it just fine in case he had to fight it again. But after he saw what just happened, that thought was completely gone from his mind.

Alpha frowned a bit and explained to Akira.

“Although it’s the same black powered suit, its new equipment and the skill of its rider are on a completely different level from before. Furthermore, you did run away from it last time. So think of it as a completely different black powered suit.”

“Yeah, I understand that very well. It could not jump back then after all… Can we win if we fight it?”

“It would be difficult.”

“I see.”

Fighting it this time would be a bad idea. Akira understood that very well. Although getting into a fight against such an opponent was a common occurrence for him, he would rather choose not to fight if given the chance.

As Akira was lost in his own thoughts, the black powered suit came to him. Nelia’s voice came out from Akria’s information terminal again.

“Oh, you were waiting for me? Aren’t you sweet?”

“Having you chasing me would be a huge pain in the neck. You should return back to your job instead of chatting with me. I’m busy too, you see. I have no time to be talking with you.”

“About that, how about we help each other? Your job is to take care of the big monsters around this area, right? My job is pretty similar to yours.”

Akira sent a glare at the black powered suit.

“No. Do you seriously believe that I will accept that offer? Have you forgotten what happened between us?”

“I do. But, I’m not someone who would let myself get dragged down by the past.”

“Hell if I care!”

“Geez, don’t be like that. Like they said, yesterday’s enemy is today’s friend.”

“That won’t even be a reason for us to work together. And also, there’s another saying that is more appropriate, today’s friend is tomorrow’s enemy.”

“Yup, exactly. You know it very well. The most important thing is today, just focus on the fact that we’re allies for today. Both of us, today, have the same job.”

“Listen here, you…”

When Akira was about to say something, Nelia suddenly interjected. Although her voice was, as usual, amused, it was a few times colder than usual.

“That’s right, we have the same job for today. We had a fight in the past since we were enemies, then we can work together today since we have the same job. And if we become enemies again tomorrow, let’s fight then.”

Akira finally understood Nelia's real intention as he was slightly overwhelmed by her. In that split second, he could imagine the logic behind the person who said it, and the past which enforced that line of thinking as he shut his mouth in reflex.

He aimed his rifle at her once before and she let that go. Not to mention, if he kept refusing her offer to work together, she might really turn into an enemy today. Akira thought that working together with her was better than having to fight her in that place.

"…Fine then. Let's work together, but I won't be obeying your command, okay? Although I will at least stay around and help you out, I will be basically moving on my own discretion."

"Sounds good to me. Well then, let's enjoy our time together. You can just help me out randomly, there's no need to be too worried about that part since I'll do the same too."

The black powered suit lightly waved at him and went ahead. Akira frowned while shaking off his worry and followed it.

Alpha found it rather weird for Akira to do that.

"Akira, are you really okay with it?"

"…It's a good thing that I get someone to help out with my job. Moreover, she was able to kill those monsters like it was nothing, so I don't want to fight her if possible."

"Is that so?"

"Yeah."

Alpha smiled teasingly. Akira sulked and looked away. He understood that Alpha knew what he said was nothing more than an excuse for him to compromise.

Back then, he did not compromise at all when Katsuya offered to work together. But this time, he did. Akira himself did not know if it was because of the situation that he was in or because he had the leeway for him to think this time, which gave him the chance to consider the choice of compromising. But since Alpha looked at him with her teasing smile, it made him think that it was the latter.

***

When the sound of the battle in the forward base was drowned by the heavy rain, a certain someone closed into the forward base while concealing himself in the rain. He had an outlook of a small boy and was donning a distorted looking augmented suit.

He came to Yatsubayashi's clinic and knocked on its huge armoured wall. Although there was no reply, he did not stop knocking. After a few seconds of non-stop knocking, Yatsubayashi answered from inside the clinic through the speaker.

"Don't you see the notice that we're not open today? Go to the base's clinic."

But that did not stop the boy.

"Goddammit, you should go back home while you have the chance. If you think that I won't leave an injured person just because I'm a doctor, you're sadly mistaken."

Yatsubayashi was threatening the boy when he said that, but the boy knocked even harder on the gate. In response to that, the outer arms of the clinic aimed their guns at the boy as well as the outer camera fixed on their aims.

"This is the last warning, go away."

The boy stopped knocking and looked straight at the camera.

A surprised voice could be heard from the outer speaker, then the outer arms retracted their guns and the armoured wall started to slowly open. Yatsubayashi welcomed the boy with a big smile.

“Though I did tell you to come out, I didn’t think that you would actually come out.”

“You said that you would welcome me, so here I am.”

“But of course, come in, Tiol-kun.”

Yatsubyashi welcomed Tiol and went inside the clinic. Tiol came into the clinic with a stern face. Due to the heavy rain and all the fighting happening outside, no one noticed Tiol entering Yatsubayashi’s clinic.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 187, A Giant Amalgamation of Hatred

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After Yatsubayashi let Tiol into his clinic, he made coffee with a coffee maker. He returned back with a cup of coffee in both hands and offered one to Tiol.

“I have nothing but coffee though, you’re okay with it, right?”

Tiol frowned.

“…No thanks.”

“Oh, do you prefer tea perhaps?”

“I can’t drink nor eat with this body.”

Tiol said so curtly, but Yatsubyaashi seemed to find it amusing.

“I see, so this body is a remote body, huh? That would mean you’re controlling it from another body and I bet it’s somewhere nearby.”

Tiol raised his eyebrows and sent a glare at Yatsubayashi.

“…You can tell!?”

“I’m a doctor, you see.”

Tiol raised his guard toward Yatsubayashi who was acting casual. But there was something that he was hoping for from Yatsubayashi, which lowered his wariness toward him.

“So then, Tiol-kun. What brings you here today?”

“Revenge, what if I say so?”

“Well, it would be for revenge then. But let me give you a warning, I don’t really recommend that. Moreover, it’s your fault in the first place for running away while you were in the middle of the treatment. So if anything happens because of that, it won’t be my responsibility. Or more like, we already have an agreement on this, right?”

Tiol clicked his tongue seeing that Yatsubayashi won’t even budge even after being threatened.

“…Well, whether I’m here for revenge or not depends on what happens next. I want to make another deal with you. Fix me… And I’m talking about fixing, not experimenting! You hear me!?”

Tiol got a little emotional and raised his voice, and was breathing hard after he said those heartfelt words. Seeing that, Yatsubayashi smiled amusedly.

“Fix, huh? Sure. Though I can’t really say for sure if I can fix you or not without checking your condition first, I can at least promise you that I’ll do my best. Though it actually depends on how much you can pay me for that. So then, how are you going to pay me? Let me tell you that I’ll charge you if it’s not for an experiment, you know?”

Tiol glared at Yatsubayashi.

“…Don’t get ahead of yourself, I can easily kill you here and now.”

Tiol slowly raised his left arm and pointed it at Yatsubayashi, but Yatsubayashi did not seem to be bothered by that at all.

“Hah, making a one-sided demand like that and you dare to call this a deal? You’re making me laugh here, you brat.”

“Don’t you know how I got away from that room?”

“I’ve seen the record from the camera so many times already, so you don’t need to tell me. It was a good piece of information, you know. If you think that it is enough to threaten me, you need to rethink your approach. You’re free to test it though, but once you do that, you’re no longer my patient and I have no need to be polite to you anymore, just so you know.”

The way Yatsubyaashi looked at Tiol changed. Between a patient and a guinea pig, Yatsubyashi started to look at Tiol as the latter. His words there were basically saying that he could easily take care of Tiol even if Tiol rampaged there.

Although Tiol was suspicious that it was a bluff, he still lowered his arm and clicked his tongue.

“…I have no money. So for the payment… My body. You can go ahead and take a look at its construction, nanomachine, and stuff like that. The other thing would be information. I have a lot of information right now, so I can answer your questions.”

“That sounds pretty enticing, but I’m not sure if that would be enough. Or more like, I don’t know how much I need to fix, so I can’t really say for sure how much it would cost. Although you’re only using a remote body right now, it looks like you’re doing just fine. So what exactly do you want me to fix?”

Tiol paused before replying with a pained voice.

“…I want to return to being a human.”

Seeing Tiol’s pained expression, Yatsubyashi tilted his head.

“That’s still pretty vague, do you mean you want me to get rid of the nanomachine that has changed your body? Well, I won’t be able to say anything unless I give you a quick check first. Bring your real body here, there’s nothing I can gather from checking your remote body.”

“It’s not that simple. I can’t bring my real body here, that’s why I came here in a remote body. So, if you want to get to my real body, come with me.”

“Listen here, you do know that we’re in an emergency over here, right? There are gigantic monsters roaming right outside. I have no plans to get out from the temporary base before the situation calms down first.”

“Don’t worry, I’ll tell them not to attack you.”

Yatsubayashi raised his eyebrows in surprise as Tiol said so in such a casual manner.

“…Are you the one behind this attack?”

Tiol frowned.

“…I can’t answer that.”

“That answer is more or less the same as a ‘yes’, you know?”

“…I can’t answer that.”

Yatsubyashi gazed at Tiol with suspicious but serious eyes. After a short ponder, he then smiled amusedly and said.

“I see. So basically, you’re under a leash from a higher system, huh? And because of that, you can’t give me a straight yes. Truly interesting, but in that state, you won’t be able to give me the answers that I want to know, right? So you won’t be able to pay for the treatment at all.”

“If this attack is successful, most of this restriction will be taken off. That’s the deal that I have with her.”

“Her? Who? Judging from the fact that you’re attacking the forward base, is it the ruin’s AI manager?”

Tiol frowned even more.

“…I can’t answer that. And also stop there, giving you this answer is already hard enough for me.”

“Hard? I see, so you’re feeling some kind of pain or discomfort for fighting back the system restriction, huh. But even if it’s something that the AI can’t fight back, you can still more or less resist it. Which means… Is this AI trying to win her freedom by using you?”

“…Stop it! Didn’t I tell you this isn’t pleasant at all!?”

Tiol raised his voice again, his glare was filled with hatred. But even so, it only served to get Yatsubyashi even more interested.

“Does the restriction get triggered just from recognizing the question and thinking of the answer? Or is it judged as a slip in the system and that’s why you can still say that? It’s a pretty lax system, to be honest, is it because you have a higher privilege over that half-baked system that you can somehow fight back the restriction? If I have to make a bet, it must be some kind of makeshift system then. If only I can get rid of that pain, or even isolate and deactivate it, then I can get all the good parts and…”

Tiol, who was gritting in pain and filled with hatred, twitched and aimed his shaking left arm at Yatsubayashi. It seemed that he was on the edge of his sanity.

Yatsubyaashi noticed that Tiol was pushed to the edge and flusteredly tried to calm him down.

“Okay okay! I’ll stop here! We can continue the rest once you get rid of the restrictions! Fixing your body should help out too!… So calm down, alright?”

Tiol was breathing heavily as he lowered his arm again.

“…We have a deal then?”

“Yeah, although it’s not really how I usually make a deal. It seems that I can expect enough payment from you. We have a deal. I’ll properly fix your body, so don’t worry.”

“…I see, I’ll take you to my real body then.”

“Alright, get on the passenger seat. It’s over there.”

Tiol got up and dragged himself toward the passenger’s seat while swaying left and right. Seeing that, Yatsubayashi let out a sigh of relief. His alerted face slowly changed into a smile, a suspicious smile.

[…He’s pretty unstable. I wonder if it’s because he’s at his wit’s end or is it because of the repression from the system. Though I want to take my time examining it, well, the job comes first.]

Yastubyashi hopped on the driver seat and excitedly said.

“Let’s go! I just need to get out from the forward base and into the ruin, right?”

“Yeah… Do you have an information terminal that I can use?”

“Are you okay with the one fixed into the vehicle?”

“It’s fine as long as I can connect to it.”

Yatsubayashi handed a terminal to Tiol, who then thrust that terminal to his head. Since there was no opening on his head, the terminal opened a wound on his head and blood dripped out from that wound.

A 3D holographic map appeared in the vehicle’s display. It showed the current location of the clinic as well as the destination and the big monsters around the area.

Yatsubyashi chuckled.

“That’s pretty convenient. But I have a wireless one if you would have asked, you know?”

“Non-wireless is easier to hack in.”

“So you’re hacking on the system level, huh. That’s pretty scary. It’s my vehicle, so don’t break it, okay?”

“…I’ll try to be careful.”

Tiol sulked a bit. Seeing that, Yatsubayashi just smiled bitterly and started the mobile clinic.

＿＿＿*＿

After they agreed on temporarily working together, Akira and Nelia were hunting huge monsters in the area. Although it was a deal that they made on a whim, and one of them was using a bike while the other one was using a powered suit, they were able to work together efficiently. Sometimes, one would act as the decoy while the other delivered the killing blow, pincer attack, long-range barrage, close-range slash. So, they were able to easily take down the gigantic monsters one by one.

Seeing how that black powered suit performed up close reminded Akira of how amazing it was. In the eastern district where firepower was everything, a huge body would only be an easy target to shoot at. But these gigantic monster’s vitality, viciousness, and speed made up for their size. They even posed more danger than the smaller monsters because of that. But even so, the black powered suit was able to defeat them with its light blades, although it was an ally, Akira could not help but to make a stern face.

On the other hand, Nelia was also amazed by Akira’s movements. Although they did not communicate at all about how they were going to move, Akira’s support was nothing short of amazing. He targeted the legs to slow the monsters down, sniped with the long-range gun and forced the monsters to close combat, peppered the large monsters that he could not take down himself with bullets to keep their attention on him, and if it was a monster he could take care by himself, he did so quickly. It was as if Akira always presented the situation so that Nelia could easily deliver the killing blow in the shortest time.

Nelia thought highly of Akira's skill and Akira was wary of Nelia's skill as both of them defeated any big monsters that they encountered.

Nelia's voice suddenly came out from Akira's information terminal.

"We're doing pretty well. We're really in sync, don't you think so? If we're really this compatible, we should really date each other, you know?"

"No thanks. Like hell I would go out with someone who keeps saying she would kill me."

"It'll be fine, we're allies right now, right? I have no plans to kill you for now."

"That's not the problem here."

"Geez, you're so hard-headed."

"The heck!?"

Nelia was having the time of her life talking with Akira, but in contrast to that, Akira replied back bluntly. Although they did not exchange information about how they would move in the middle of their idle chit-chat, they were able to keep their perfect combo.

"Just to let you know though, I'll immediately leave the moment I run out of ammo, so do your best alone when that happens."

"If you don't have a blade, I don't mind lending mine, you know?"

"I'm not going to fight those monsters up close! That aside, you only have melee weapons with you, don't you? Even powered suits can use rifles too, you know? Didn't you bring any rifles with you? Is it because you can't or something?"

“Hmm, to be honest, I don’t really like guns. They just don’t fit me for some reason.”

“Just because you don’t like them? Is that all the reason why you didn’t bring rifles with you?”

“Oh my, things like this are very important, you know? There are many people who mock me for that, but for some reason, all of them died before me. And it all happened because they decide to let go of the weapon that they’re most comfortable with.”

Nelia sounded sad as if it was an old wound when she said so, Akira, who heard that, quickly let go of his anger. It was rather convincing although it was a vague excuse, he could not tell if it was the real truth or just some kind of occult thing.

“…Well, it doesn’t really matter. That aside, there’s just no end to these monsters. Just how long will this take us.”

“The swarm might disband if someone kills the boss of the swarm. Though I’m not sure if the disbanded swarm would just return back to the ruin or we would still have to fight them.”

“I heard that the bigger monsters are taking command of the smaller monster swarm to attack the supply route. It seems that the bigger monsters are acting like commanders to the smaller ones and there’s a good chance there’s another monster commanding the bigger monsters. Well, it’s just a guess from another squad though, so there’s no evidence to support it. They just told me to go after the bigger monsters when I spot them.”

“Hm? I haven’t heard anything about that though?”

“It was more like an idle chat between squadmates after all. So it’s not a formal order from the forward base.”

Akira felt that such important information should be broadcasted to all Hunters, but he bet that it had something to do with the squad that Nelia belonged to. He stopped himself from thinking too much about it and instead focused on the subject of the commanding monsters.

“…A boss monster commanding the other monsters, huh. I wonder if it’s an even bigger monster.”

“Well, even if there’s one, it should be somewhere deep inside the ruin. Either that or it’s concealing itself in the swarm heading to the city. So people like us who work near the ruin’s outskirt have nothing to do with them.”

While Akira was fighting and talking, the rain had considerably weakened. Although it was not completely gone, the sensitivity of the information-gathering devices started to recover.

Between the 3 of them, Alpha had the best detection ability and she actually detected a big monster hiding in the buildings. But she did not tell that to Akira to avoid getting roped into more trouble. So instead, she looked up to the sky and spoke about something else.

“Akira, the rain is letting off.”

Akira followed suit and looked up too.

“You’re right… Wait, I shouldn’t jinx it again…”

Akira smiled bitterly. But this time the rain actually weakened, slowly turning his bitter smile into a genuine one.

“Oh! It’s really letting off.”

“Yup, that seems to be the case.”

Alpha said serenely. Akira found it weird since he expected her to say something to tease him.

“…Uhhh, is there anything bad if the rain stops?”

Alpha smiled with a hidden meaning behind it.

“I just thought that if only it had stopped sooner, I would still have my detection skill and there would be no need to work together with that black powered suit. I wonder why your luck is just so bad.”

“No idea. Well, since it’s stopped, let’s just be happy with it.”

Although the sky was still covered with thick clouds, there was no water droplet falling from the sky. Akira was happy about it, but Alpha was not.

__*__*__*__

Yatsubayashi drove his modified APC, which functioned as a mobile clinic, deep into the ruins. Although he encountered some large monsters on the way, they completely ignored him.

He was having a good time driving as he glanced at Tiol who was sitting on the seat next to him.

[They really didn’t attack us. I did consider the possibility that it was nothing more than a lie, but this confirms that Tiol-kun has something to do with those monsters. This ability to explore the ruin without fighting the monsters is invaluable, even if it only works in Kuzusuhara ruin. You can get enough money to buy a city with it, but it seems that he doesn’t know about this yet.]

Tiol noticed Yatsubayashi’s gaze.

“What?”

“Nothing. I’m just enjoying this sensation of being able to explore the ruin without fighting the monsters.”

“…The bigger ones under my command won’t attack you, but it’s a different story for the other monsters, so you should get yourself ready in case we encounter normal monsters.”

“Roger that. Don’t worry, this vehicle is well-equipped to handle relatively weak monsters just fine.”

“I see. Tell me if you need help, I can get rid of some of them for you.”

“Thanks, I will be very grateful.”

Yatsubayashi said so while he thought of something else in the back of his head.

[This means that Tiol doesn’t hold command over all monsters in the ruin, is it territory based then? Security monsters usually only roam around the area that they’re assigned to and normally they won’t go outside that area. Sakashita Heavy Industry considered the strength and the distribution of the monsters in the area when they erected Kugamayama city near Kuzusuhara ruin… If this can be changed, it might endanger the city…]

Tiol noticed Yatsubayashi was looking at him while still in deep thought. So Tiol frowned and called him out.

“Seriously, what is it?”

“Nope, nothing. I just thought that you’re a very interesting sample for both medical doctors and scientists. Sorry if I bothered you.”

Tiol clicked his tongue but did not pursue it any further.

Yatsubayashi finally arrived at his destination. It was a small valley between two tall crumbled buildings.

“We’re here, is your real body inside that big building?”

“No.”

“But the destination indicator ends around that building though.”

“Not inside, outside.”

“Ohh, there’s no need for you to wait outside for me, not to mention under this rain too…”

“I can’t enter the building.”

Tiol pointed near the big building. Yatsubayashi shifted his gaze toward that direction, looked up, saw what was in the valley between the two buildings, and smiled.

“I just want to confirm this. That is your real body, right? You’re not saying that your real body is inside that thing, right?”

“Yeah.”

“…I see. No wonder why you can’t come to my clinic with your real body. Giving you a check-up would take a lot of work.”

“We have a deal, I’ll have you fix me.”

“I’m not even sure where to start. For now, I will try to regenerate your whole body…”

As Yatsubayashi moved his clinic to that valley, Tiol suddenly started acting strange. He started convulsing, his face started twitching, and his eyes were out of focus.

“Hey, what’s wrong?”

When Yatsubayashi called him, Tiol suddenly slumped down and went limp. The 3D map on the vehicle’s display also vanished.

“Is his… Connection cutoff? What exactly just happened…”

Yatsubayashi had all his attention on Tiol, trying to understand what was going on. But right in the next moment, a huge monster jumped out from the rubbles and kicked Yatsubayashi’s clinic. Although it was a heavily armoured APC, the kick sent the clinic flying.

By this time, the rain had also completely stopped.

⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯*⎯⎯

Akira and Nelia noticed the sudden signal from a big monster almost simultaneously. When they turned toward the source of the signal, they were welcomed by an APC flying straight at them. A moment later the thing that sent that APC flying towards them, showed itself.

This monster resembled a giant donning a heavy powered suit. It was so huge that it made Nelia's black powered suit seem tiny. Its left arm was assimilated into a big gun that looked like the main cannon of a battleship, a belt connected to its back resembled a huge magazine, while its right hand was holding an object that looked like a handle.

While Akira was still frozen from the shock, Alpha launched the mini-missiles from the missile pods fixed to his bike. The missiles flew around following Alpha's guiding system which adjusted their flight time to strike their target simultaneously.

From the handle on the right hand of the big monster, liquid metal that radiated light extended out against the gravity. It did not take that long for a blade large enough to slice a battleship to form. This monstrosity fixed its stance and swung the blade to sweep away all the missiles.

The missiles spontaneously combusted into an explosion the moment they touched the blade. Since Akira emptied his missiles in one shot there, the explosions were so large that it swallowed the monster too.

Akira desperately fought back the shockwave from the explosions with the help of his augmented suit while watching the display in front of him.

"Did that do it?"

Akira thought that an explosion that big should be able to take out that monster. But as the fire died out, it revealed the big monster was still standing just fine without a scratch. Akira could not hide his shock.

"Unscatched?! You got to be kidding me!!"

Alpha then said in a calm manner but still transmitted the severity of the situation.

“That slice was executed so that the missiles did not explode at the same time, thus killing most of its combined firepower. Furthermore, it has forcefield armour projected on its whole body. Unfortunately, that attack did not deal any damage to that monster.”

“So, it’s because of that armour which looks like a heavy powered suit, huh. How did it get a powered suit that big? Is it custom-made?”

“That might be the case.”

Akira was only saying that as a bad joke while smiling wryly, but Alpha replied back in a serious tone. So he found it rather weird.

“…Wait, it is?”

“‘I’ve scanned its body construction, one thing I can say for sure, it doesn’t harden its skin to armour itself and it doesn’t project forcefield armour from its skin either. Its inner body is separated from its other body. So in short, it’s using some kind of suit just like your augmented suit.”

“To put it simply, it’s different from the other monsters, huh.”

Akira prepared his stance and psyche to fight that monster. The moment he and the monster made eye contact, it opened its mouth and bellowed. Its humanoid head opened its mouth wide, exposing its fangs and was making sounds as if it was saying something in human language.

Akira had no idea what it was saying, but he understood well the hatred and the killing intent that was expressed in those incomprehensible words.

“For some reason, I feel like it’s saying that it would kill me no matter what. Alpha, did I do something to that monster in the past?”

“You just shot mini-missiles at it just now.”

“Well, that’s true, but for some reason, I feel like it’s hating me so much for a reason that has nothing to do with the missiles.”

“Hmm, I don’t really have an answer to that. But one thing is for sure, we know that a peaceful solution is not possible. So just forget about trying to end this peacefully and get yourself ready to run away.”

Akira looked at the big monster and threw away the possibility of getting out of this situation peacefully. As it aimed its humongous left arm cannon at him, Akira accelerated his bike as hard as he could ignoring the g-force that he would have to bear. At the same time, a large warhead a little smaller than the cannon’s muzzle launched out.

The first shot pierced through multiple buildings, turning the already half-destroyed building into rubble, and pieces of debris that were thrown up to the sky rained down.

Alpha was able to accurately predict where those rubbles would fall. So using her advanced driving skill, she knitted through the gaps between the raining rubbles with the highest speed. Akira gathered his focus, compressed his time perception into maximum, and evaded the incoming rubble while kicking and punching the rubbles that were blocking his way.

Even in that situation, the monster did not stop shooting, crushing the falling rubble into even smaller pieces. Akira could not evade or block all the rubbles falling at him, when some of those rubbles crashed onto him or his bike, he endured it with the help of his forcefield armour. But even so, it still threw him off balance, and when that happened, Alpha executed an even more extreme manoeuvre to get his bike back up, straining both him and his bike.

“Akira!! Make sure not to fall off!! You’ll get buried by the rubbles if you do!!”

“I know!!”

Akira forced his way forward by punching or kicking the rubbles blocking his way. To make sure that he would not get thrown off the bike from the recoil, he raised the output of his augmented suit to the maximum to fix himself on top of his bike. Since he was pushing his body beyond its limit with the help of his augmented suit, sometimes, his body could not keep up and gave up first.

The medicines helped out with reducing the pain. The intense cycle of injuring and healing his body caused Akira to fear that it might eventually break his body. But he ignored his screaming body and focused more on surviving the fight even for just another second.

__*__*__*__

Yatsubayashi somehow got himself out from his mobile clinic which was tipped over at this point. He looked at the Tiol's real body through the binocular connected to the clinic's detection device. The monster was running, shaking the earth with each step, while trying to shoot at Akira, moving further and further away from Yatsubayashi.

"…Tiol-kun. If you're not going to let me treat you, you should have told me sooner."

The monster was so strong that it had enough power to change the contour of the ruin. But if it was targeting someone else, Yatsubayashi could take his time observing Tiol from afar.

Yatsubayashi glanced at his mobile clinic. Tiol's remote body was still in the passenger seat and still not moving.

[I bet he can control his remote body if he gets too far away from it, and I bet it can't be that far. That's why he had to come close enough to the forward base to be able to reach my clinic. I'm sure the main body also has some kind of camouflaging ability. So he must have used that camouflaging ability and hid his presence with the rain to get as close as possible to the forward base. He then somehow found out where I was, and came to my clinic to make a deal with me, before finally bringing me all the way here… But it's all for nothing? I really don't understand his logic.]

Yatsubayashi tilted his head. He thought of any possible explanations, but he could not come up with any convincing guesses.

The reason why Tiol cut off his connection to his remote body was simply because he no longer had the leeway to keep that connection. Most of his copies that he had sent to another place were quickly removed one by one. Tiol would have been able to handle that information just fine if he was nothing but a part of the system, but now that he had regained some of his consciousness, it threw his mind into chaos.

Then the reason why he prioritized killing Akira rather than finishing the rest of his deal with Yatsubayashi was simply because his self-defence mechanism kicked in, throwing him into a rampage fueled by hatred to keep himself from getting drowned by the system.

Tiol hated everything that had happened to him which led him into such a pitiful state. Although Yatsubayashi was included in that list, he was somehow able to keep himself from killing Yatsubayashi since he had presented a way for Tiol to fix his body.

But that was not the case for Akira. Tiol's feelings toward Sheryl and the feeling of inferiority toward Akira were mixed together into utter hatred toward him. Furthermore, if Tiol held back any of his hatred, he feared that the system might swallow his consciousness again.

Because of that, once the rain died down and he recovered his detection ability, Tiol was able to detect Akira and immediately threw himself into a rampage fueled by hatred.

Yatsubayashi was deep in thought for some time after that, but he decided that it would be meaningless to think about it any further.

[…Well, it doesn't really matter. As long as I keep his remote body, he might contact me again later. I don't want to get involved in that fight after all. I guess I'll just head back home for now.]

Yatsubayashi stood next to his mobile clinic, placed both his hands on it, and applied some force to push it. When he did that, the clinic slowly started moving. After he gritted his teeth and pushed the clinic further, he eventually got his armoured APC to land with its wheels on the ground.

Yatsubayashi actually had a body that he had enhanced himself using his knowledge as a doctor. It was also to keep himself safe in case a Hunter who he was dealing with went on a rampage, but more importantly, it was also the result of experimenting on his own body. The reason why he allowed Tiol into his clinic, and was still relaxed even with a rifle aimed at him was simply because Yatsubayashi knew he could handle it just fine.

Yatsubayashi returned to the driver seat and placed Tiol's remote body in the passenger seat. He then said with a cunning smile.

"Tiol-kun. If you're not going to pay for your treatment, it won't be a treatment but another experiment, you know?"

Of course, Tiol's remote body did not reply back at all.

Silavin: This guy is really… unfortunate. Misplaced emotions, which led him down this path…

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 188, Friend for Today

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The contour of the area was changed completely from the huge monster's barrage. With most of the abandoned buildings blown to smithereens, the cityscape was turned into a clear open plain. Both the roads and the buildings were equally buried under debris of various sizes, it was completely impossible to differentiate where the road was. It was not something that Hunters normally came across in a ruin.

Akira looked over his surroundings while hiding under one of the relatively bigger rubble in the area.

"I guess this is how ruins slowly change into a wasteland, huh… Alpha, how is the monster?"

"It's approaching slowly. Though it has stopped shooting, I don't think it's because it ran out of ammo."

“Seriously though, how the hell does it still have some ammo left after shooting that many huge warheads around?”

In contrast to Akira who was frowning in concern, Alpha was smiling like usual.

“Oh my, isn’t it the same with your rifle?”

Akira was completely convinced by that argument and smiled wryly.

“Ahhh… You have a point there. And here I thought I’m already used to using the extended magazine made with old-world technology, but now that you mention it, the monsters are also made with old-world technology too. So it won’t be strange if they have extended magazine too.”

It was something that would surprise him in the past, but after using it for some time, Akira had more or less already gotten used to how convenient it was. This time, he understood the enemy might be using the same technology and how that convenience turned into trouble. At the same time, Akira was reminded of how his extended magazine was using old-world technology that he did not fully understand. He then turned to look at his patron who was created with a technology far more complex than the extended magazine.

“Akira, what’s wrong?”

“It’s nothing.”

“Is that so? I understand that you can’t really relax in this situation, but just stay there, okay? The monster might notice you if you make a single move.”

“Alright.”

Akira pushed aside any hesitation inside his mind that might cause him to blunder, he then once again confirmed his surroundings and sighed.

Alpha pursed her lips and asked.

“What is with that big sigh after you look at me?”

“No, it’s not you. It’s that over there.”

Akira pointed straight past Alpha’s body, at his half-broken bike behind her. Its trunk was badly bent, its front wheel and rifle arm were gone. Even his A4WM automatic grenade launcher that was originally fixed on that arm was already buried deep under the rubbles.

“Well, things happened, just think of it as a necessary sacrifice.”

“That’s true, but still, even the truck is also gone along with the ammo that I had left on it. So at least let me sigh, will you?”

The truck with his reserve ammo was blown by one of the monster’s warheads, its driver seat was completely blown off by that shot. Its tray was crushed under the rubble, scattering his reserve ammo all over the place. But even so, Akira somehow survived that and managed to scrape the scattered supply enough to complete his last ammo refill.

Akira shifted his gaze to the monster, although there was a large rubble blocking his sight, he was able to clearly see that monster thanks to his enhanced vision. It seemed to be moving slowly thanks to its size and the distance between them. But in reality, it was actually moving relatively fast thanks to its long stride. There was no question that it would be even faster if it ran.

“With my bike and truck gone, I don’t think it would be possible to escape from it if it started running.”

“Let’s hide for now. We might have been able to blend in with the rain and run away, but unfortunately, the rain has already stopped. Judging from the clouds, it might rain again though.”

Akira looked up at the sky. Although it was blanketed in thick clouds as if the rain would pour down anytime, it was not raining.

“…It rained when I didn’t want it to and it stopped when I wanted it to rain, what kind of bullying is this?”

“Well, I promised to help you against your bad luck with my support the best I can, but as expected, I can’t win against the weather, you know.”

“My bad luck even reaches the sky, huh?”

Akira mixed some jokes in his reply, Alpha smiled in response to that.

A call from Nelia reached Akira’s information terminal. He was not sure whether to pick it or not and glanced at Alpha.

“Akira? Are you alive?”

“Yeah, somehow, what about you?”

“No problem at all. I immediately ran away from its sight, it had its eyes fixed on you after all. It seems that it’s running out of ammo so I will be going for its head. Give me some support if you’re still alive.”

“Wait for a sec, are you going to fight that thing?”

“Of course!”

Nelia replied as if it was a given fact, Akira could not help but get surprised by that. All the questions inside his head were compressed into one word.

“…Why?”

“Why, you ask? That’s given, it’s our job, right?”

“Job?”

“Oh my, it kind of hurts when you say it like that, do you think that I’m someone who would abandon my job? Although I look like this, I’m pretty serious when it comes to my job, okay?”

“…If you’re really that upright, why would you be stealing relics then?”

“That was my job back then. Well, that aside, I’ll leave the support to you.”

Nelia ended the call. Akira was shocked, he did not expect her to be actually that earnest, but at the same time, he could understand it too.

Alpha found Akira's reaction interesting, but she still prompted him to start moving.

"I don't know what you find weird about it, but since it seems that she will be taking that monster's attention, let's use this chance to move out."

"…Good idea."

Alpha was urging Akira to run away. He understood that very well as he readied his SSB multi-weapon rifle, steeled his resolve, and jumped out from behind the rubble.

Nelia used the full power of her powered suit to close the distance with the monster. The monster could not shoot its large cannon behind itself, so Nelia used that blind spot to draw the shortest route to the monster while utilizing the cover of the rubbles. The moment the monster noticed her, it quickly turned around and changed its priority from Akira to Nelia. Nelia was able to close more than half of the distance while it was preparing the cannon on its left arm.

Nelia believed that the monster still had some ammo left. But after shooting around that many warheads, she was sure it would not have enough ammo left to demolish all the buildings in the area. Her guess was correct, as a matter of fact, it was no longer able to maintain its original rate of fire. Now that it started shooting in intervals instead of continuous fire, she was able to skillfully avoid the falling warheads with the precise control of her powered suit while she approached the monster.

Nelia used the advantage of her cyborg body to connect directly to her powered suit. As she was able to control the powered suit as if it was a part of her body, Nelia was able to execute complex manoeuvres with high agility. Not to mention that the powered suit had extra limbs and a propulsion system that originally did not exist on the human body and the additional sensors on the powered suit provided Nelia with extra information on top of her usual 5 senses.

It was a matter of the rider's skill on how much a cyborg could take in the discrepancy coming from a real body and a cyborg body. And in the case of Nelia, her skills were not something to be taken lightly.

An ordinary person might go mad if he or she was connected to a tank or a non-humanoid machine. But Nelia did not show any difficulty at all in controlling her powered suit. It demonstrated her talent as well as her distorted mind.

As someone who was accomplished both as a close combat fighter and cyborg body user, Nelia was able to evade the high-speed warhead coming at her. She quickly slipped under the monster and slashed its legs with the blades on both of her arms. The moment her blades touched the monster's legs, fire sparked followed by a blinding light. It was the light from the monster's force field armour exchanging kinetic energy into photons.

Nelia turned and confirmed the monster's legs, she was sure that she could not sever those legs based on the sensation from that slash. But from that light flash, it should have shaved most of the force field armour's energy. Unfortunately, what Nelia had hoped for was completely off. The monster was unscathed, its force field armour was able to completely disperse the force from that slash.

“Whoah, that was pretty hard. Well then, it just means I will have to keep slashing you.”

While Nelia was mumbling as if she was mocking it, the monster brought down the blade on its right arm. The light blade crushed the rubble and buried itself deep. Rubble flew left and right from that impact as the blade melted its contact point, releasing steam into the air. But Nelia quickly jumped into the monster’s blind spot and immediately assaulted the monster with her blade.

Every time her blade struck the monster’s body, a blinding flash of light was released, and every time the monster swung its light blade, rubble was thrown into the air. Although it was a battle between giants, the difference in their sizes made it look as if it was a battle between an adult and a kid as both of them swung around blades unsuitable for their respective sizes.

If it was a simple contest of swordsmanship, Nelia would have the upper hand. The monster was swinging its blade-like it was a beginner, its blade was not even able to touch the opponent who was smaller and darting around it. But in contrast to that, Nelia was able to strike the monster’s legs multiple times.

But Nelia did not believe that she was winning. Although the monster was like a beginner, it was still a powerful monster.

Nelia’s blades were not able to reach the monster’s legs, the momentum of those blades was completely killed by the monster’s force field armour. Although each swing shaved more energy from the force field armour compared to her powered suit, there was no guarantee that the monster would run out of energy faster than her powered suit.

If it was not thanks to the enemy’s beginner-like swordsmanship, Nelia would have been dead by now. Even if she did not receive a single strike, she would lose the moment her powered suit ran out of energy first. And as she kept consuming energy, her powered suit would eventually slow down which would make it harder for her to evade the monster’s attack. She understood that her force field armour would not be able to receive the monster’s attack, so she turned that off as well as the other parts of the powered suit that she did not need for high-speed manoeuvring. But even so, there was still a good chance she would run out of energy first before the monster. Thus, she judged that she was losing that battle.

The monster kept swinging its blade without paying attention to its defence. And the strength behind its amateurish swing after getting interrupted by a powerful blow greatly surpassed her prediction.

Nelia understood she would not be able to evade the light blade coming down at her, so she quickly shifted her stance to maximize her survival, which was to receive that blow with both of her blades, but she also understood that it was futile. Although she was not scared, she knew that she was going to lose the fight.

But at the next moment, a barrage of anti-forcefield bullets riddled the monster’s head. Although the barrage was completely nullified by the monster’s forcefield armour, it was enough to throw it off balance.

Nelia used that opening to completely evade the incoming blade and jumped back, opening some distance between her and the monster. She then checked the area where that barrage came from and found Akira aiming his SSB multi-weapon rifle from quite a distance away.

Akira had a stern look on his face, his SSB rifle ejected its empty magazine and empty energy packs.

“…I emptied an extended magazine full of anti-forcefield armour bullets in 5 seconds, you know? And that was not enough?”

Alpha was frowning deeply.

“It seems that its head is protected by a strong forcefield armour. Even after factoring in the loss of momentum from the sniping distance, it’s still an impressively strong forcefield armour.”

“I’m sure I did that pretty up close though, should I get closer next time?”

The big monster noticed Akira from that barrage and aimed its cannon. But before it could release a shot, Nelia slashed at it, throwing its aim off. Although the shot landed far away from Akira, it had enough power to blow rubble sky high. Akira could not help but frown seeing that.

“…I take that back.”

Alpha smiled bitterly.

“Yep, I don’t recommend you to do it either. Now that it knows your location, let’s change our location and hide.”

“Roger that.”

Akira moved as fast as possible towards another location while hiding between the rubbles, that was when Nelia suddenly made a one-sided call.

“And here I thought you already ran away since I didn’t get any support.”

“… Although I hate it, we’re allies for now. Moreover, if you get defeated without my support, I won’t be able to move around without a decoy.“

Akira sounded as if he really did not like the situation that he was in, but at the same time, it also sounded as if he was making excuses to keep the temporary alliance. But Nelia replied with a rather happy voice.

“I see, but I would really hope you would’ve helped me sooner, you know?”

“I’m not even inside a powered suit and my bike is gone, you know. I also don’t have that much ammo left, but even so, I’m still doing my best to help you here. So if you keep complaining, I will just leave you behind.”

“Geez, calm down. That one just now was a close call, thank you.”

“You’re welcome.”

“By the way, I’ll be counting on you to be the decoy. Ah, it won’t be of any use even if you say no, after all, for some reason, that thing really wants to kill you. It’s basically coming at you while completely ignoring me.”

Akira inadvertently glanced at the monster, his enhanced vision helped him see through the rubble and straight at the big monster that was running in his direction. His face turned grim.

“For some reason, seeing how it’s running at you, I can feel some kind of hatred or deep grudge against you though. Akira, what did you do to that monster? Did you do something bad to it? This is only a woman’s intuition but… Did you mess with its girlfriend or something?”

“Like hell if I did! It’s my first time meeting that monster, you know?! And also, I don’t have any monster acquaintances!!”

Akira replied back to Nelia’s joke while shouting. Nelia only laughed at his reaction before ending the call.

The large monster’s mind was in a mess, the system was telling it to take care of the black powered suit first, but its hatred caused it to prioritize Akira instead. In order to make sure that his consciousness would not be swallowed back to the system, Tiol followed his hatred.

The huge monster ignored Nelia and went straight for Akira. All of its intentions were skewed toward offence, it ignored its defence and poured all of its energy toward its light blade. Its ammo producing organ burned through its last energy reserve to manufacture ammo. Thanks to that, its forcefield armour strength was greatly lowered.

Nelia did not let that chance slide as she swung the blade on both of her hands in a flurry of attacks. Finally, she broke through the forcefield armour and damaged the monster’s actual armour. Moreover, Nelia aimed her slashes to slow down and prevent that monster from attacking.

Akira kept running as fast as he could. He blazed and leapt through the sea of rubble under him using the full power of his augmented suit and pushing her body to the limit. He was moving extremely fast for someone with two legs instead of wheels.

The monster started shooting while running, but its aiming was badly interrupted by Nelia. Although it could not fire in continuous succession, each of its warheads packed enough power to compensate for its interrupted aim. It blasted more ruble into the sky. Every time Akira saw that, he could not help but shed cold sweat.

“Alpha! It’s not like it would hit me with that aim, right?! It should be okay, right?!”

“We can’t do anything other than relying on that girl to keep interrupting its aim. To be honest, it would be great if she can take out the cannon too, but I think that would be impossible given how powerful the forcefield armour that’s protecting that cannon is.”

“Is she doing okay?”

“That monster is fully committed to you, though I’m still not sure why. But if its attention gets divided again, it might be dangerous. That’s why, let’s do that again here, Akira.”

“…Roget that!!”

Akira took as much cover as possible using the rubble while moving around. But he suddenly jumped out from his cover and quickly aimed his SSB multi-weapon rifle. He then stomped his legs hard on a large wreckage, enough to crack it and planted his legs into it before emptied his magazine in a short time.

The kickback from that barrage pushed Akira’s body to its limit. The kickback was transmitted to the larger wreckage under his feet, eventually breaking it.

Due to their distance and speed, the bullets reached the monster’s face almost in an instant. The first few bullets that landed almost at the same time were dispersed in a blinding flash of light, but the following bullets were able to break through the forcefield armour that was weakened after that light discharge, thus throwing the big monster off-balance.

At the same time Akira’s SSB multi-weapon rifle ejected its empty magazine, the blinding light finally died down, exposing the monster and a part of its body that was crumbling down.

The barrage this time dealt more damage than the last time. Akira thought so and smiled, but before he could express his happiness, the monster howled and its face twitched.

The big monster once again turned at Akira and ran towards him. The extensive movement that it made when it ran caused its already crumbling body to crumble even faster. Its armour was falling down piece by piece to the ground, exposing its inner parts. It was a mix of flesh and machine, fur and scale, skin and metal, as if it was a human trying to disguise as a monster.

Akira did not waste any seconds before he started running again.

“Is it just me or that thing is actually running faster than before!?”

“It shed most of its heavy armour, so it’s lighter now. Run faster or it’ll catch you. Also, reload a new magazine and energy pack to your rifle.”

“So many things to do in so little time.”

Akira ran as fast as he could while finishing reloading his SSB rifle. Once he was done, he turned around and released another barrage. This time, since the enemy was closer and the target was bigger, all of his shots hit their targets. They pierced through the outer shell and scattered blood and metallic parts into the air.

But it was far from over, it was not even enough to stop the monster. Due to its tough flesh, they could not deal that much damage to the monster. And Alpha deliberately reduced the rate of fire too.

“Why did you slow it down by that much? I still should have plenty of ammo left, you know?!”

“Ammo, yes. But not enough energy packs. High-speed shooting causes a strong kickback which in turn consumes more energy. Moreover, it’s not like it was enough to fully kill the kickback too. Your rifle is also hitting its limit. You only have enough energy packs for one more high-speed barrage, after that, you’ll run out of energy packs and the rifle itself will break. That’s why you’ll have to save it for the best chance when you can be sure to kill it. It’s really unfortunate that we lost the rest of our energy packs together with the truck.”

“Goddammit!!!”

Not only his rifle, but Akira’s augmented suit also needed an energy pack to operate, which meant he was basically at his limit too.

Nelia kept slashing at the monster while chasing it. Now that it had no forcefield armour and was just protected by its metal armour, her blades easily slashed through the monster’s flesh, opening a wound that bled green shining blood. But such wounds immediately closed up as if the monster was using a powerful medicine. So the monster was not even bothered by Nelia’s slashing.

But there was a limit on how many times it could regenerate its wounds. Since it consumed energy every time it regenerated itself, Nelia’s attack was not completely useless. Although she understood that, she still felt intimidated by the monster’s incredible vitality.

After finding out that the monster did not slow down at all after all of that slashing, Nelia decided to shift her target to its cannon. She focused her attack on the big cannon on the monster’s left arm as well as the reloading machine that coiled around its body like a belt. Eventually, she was able to cut off the belt.

Nelia thought that with this, it would at least stop shooting at Akira as she focused her attack back to its legs, but she was mistaken there. The monster quickly threw away the gigantic magazine on its back and the cannon on its left arm; now that it had become even lighter, it was able to run faster and quickly got away from Nelia’s blades.

Nelia rushed to that monster and tried to slash at it again, but once again, it missed. Her powered suit had considerably slowed down after all the fighting, so she was no longer able to catch up to that monster.

Nelia cursed her own decision and regretted not having prioritized its legs first, as she chased the monster.

The ceasing of gunshots was nothing more than a short respite since the monster was running even faster now towards Akira. Akira frowned since he understood that the monster would be able to catch up with him for sure this time and it would be meaningless to hide now. If the huge monster swung around its light blade to sweep all the locations where he might be, even if that did not hit him directly, it would be enough to blow him away along with all the rubble, and that would definitely kill him.

Akira stopped and slowly turned. He locked his gaze with the incoming huge monster and heaved a big sigh as if he had given up. He then took a long deep breath to steel his resolve.

Alpha stood next to Akira and smiled.

“Just to confirm it, you didn’t resolve yourself to die, right?”

“Something that stupid doesn’t need resolve.”

“I see, that’s good then. Let’s get yourself ready before it catches up with you.”

“I know.”

Akira calmed himself down for one last stand and started preparing for it. He loaded a new magazine to replace the half-empty magazine and placed in a new energy pack to his augmented suit and SSB rifle. That was the last of his remaining supply reserves.

Akira held his SSB multi-weapon rifle tightly, made sure that he was standing on a hard surface, and squatted down as if he was preparing to jump. He then took a deep breath, as he maximized his time perception compression, the scene around him started to distort into slow motion.

“Alpha, I leave the countdown to you.”

“Roger that… 5… 4… 3…”

Inside the slow-moving world, the huge monster closed its distance and raised its ginormous blade. It focused all of its hatred, grudge and energy to its blade, expanding it even longer and brighter.

“… 2… 1…”

Right at the next moment, it swung its huge light blade down at Akira.

“Zero!!”

At the same time, Akira leapt toward that huge monster like a bullet.

That single jump consumed all the energy pack inside Akira’s augmented suit, boosting its power output way outside the safe limit. The platform that he was using broke into pieces from the kickback alone, while his legs were barely able to receive the kickback thanks to his augmented suit.

The light blade was brought down with such speed, but Akira, who jumped straight at it, was even faster. He could feel the intensity of that blade as he went past it. The heat from the blade that was enough to melt rubble singed his protective coat before he landed on that monster’s face.

The light blade landed on the ground, throwing all the rubbles up into the sky behind Akira as he pointed his SSB rifle straight at the big monster’s face.

“Just die already!!”

Since Akira screamed those words under his compressed time perception, no one could understand him. But the huge amount of bullets that he released in that short time, which ignored the kickback and the stress on both the rifle and his body, conveyed his words very well.

Even if the head had the ability to regenerate itself, the storm of bullets was numerous enough and powerful enough to crush that regeneration. It took an instant for the bullets to rip through the monster’s head.

Right after that, Akira fainted. The last barrage had pushed him past his limit which gave the last push to throw off his consciousness. Now that he had lost his consciousness as well as his footing, gravity took over and pulled his body down. But he was saved from crashing straight into the ground. Nelia, who was chasing the monster, was able to catch him. Not too long after that, the monster that had lost its head fell down to the ground, making a loud bang.

Nelia got out of her powered suit. She then came to Akira who was still on the powered suit’s clutch, she placed her hand on Akira’s cheek and smiled bewitchingly.

“…Hmm, what should I do with you now?”

Although those words contained a lot of different meanings behind them, it did not take that long for Nelia to make her decision as she smiled rather disappointedly.

“Well, we’re allies for today, right?”

Nelia gently lifted him up and returned back to her powered suit with Akira in her arm. After that, she headed back to the forward base.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 189, The Value of Money

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira woke up inside a hospital room. He pushed his body up from the bed and looked around, once he understood what had happened, he sighed.

“Again, huh?”

“Yep, again.”

Alpha was sitting on the bed beside Akira and smiled at him.

“Morning, Akira. Did you get a good sleep?”

“Yeah… But well, this makes it the second time, huh? I don’t know whether I should be happy that I survived or I should be sad for getting hospitalized again.”

“There’s no reason for you to be sad, so just be honest and be happy about it.”

“Let me confirm it, why can you be so sure?”

“There’s no reason to not be happy since you survived, that is true for both me and you. I’m really glad that you survived that fight.”

Alpha smiled gently. Akira who saw that blushed a bit. But that was only until he heard her next words as she half-jokingly said.

“Moreover, this isn’t your first time having to face something like that, right? It would be a waste of time to question that now, wouldn’t it?”

“…Well, you have a point there… And I really hate the fact that I have to accept it.”

Akira once again laid back on the bed, Alpha only looked at him gently when he did so.

Not too long after that, Kibayashi entered the room.

“Akira, you’re finally awake, how are you feeling?”

“I’m fine.”

“Really? Do you feel anything strange around your arms or legs? Can you move your fingers?”

Akira thought that it was weird for Kibayashi to say that, but he still tried to move his fingers to confirm it, and as expected, he did not feel anything wrong.

“Still nothing, why did you say that? Don’t tell me that you gave me the bare minimum treatment since you didn’t know whether I can pay or not, right?”

“It’s the opposite. You were strapped into an emergency life-support system when I arrived in the forward base. You were in pretty bad shape. Especially your limbs, they were close to being turned into minced meat, you know. Though in the end, we used those super expensive regeneration treatments to get them back, they were basically grown and then sewn to your body. So it won’t be strange if you feel something wrong with them.

But you seem to be alright. So yeah, the treatment cost is going to be crazy high.”

The damage on his legs was from that jump while the damage on his arms was from the barrage. Akira remembered vividly that he did do those things. So when he imagined how much the treatment cost was going to be, he started to get nervous.

“…So, how much is it?”

“About that, you see. We need to have a talk. It will be a long one since I need to let you know what had happened and we need to discuss the reward for your request too, so let’s talk while having a meal… Don’t worry, you did very well back there, the treatment cost won’t surpass your reward money.”

Kibayashi smiled at the flustered Akira.

Akira changed to the clothes available in the room and left the room with Kibayashi. They hopped on a vehicle that came to pick them up and returned back to the Kugama building.

As Akira was about to head to a restaurant on the first floor, Kibayashi stopped him.

“Akira, not that one.”

“No? Then why did you bring me here? Do we have to do some administrative stuff first?”

“Nope, we’re going up.”

Kibayashi pointed up with a smile filled with excitement. Akira found it weird, but the moment he understood what Kibayashi was signalling, his expression changed.

The restaurants on the upper floors of the Kugama building were so great that they changed Akira’s views on food, and this would be the third time he went to that building for a meal.

Akira sat on the seat that he was guided to. He was jovial and excited but at the same time a bit confused while he sat there, Kibayashi ignored it and extended a handshake with a big smile on his face.

“First of all, let me congratulate you. You have become a great Hunter, great enough even for the City Management to treat you to a meal in this restaurant. The first time I saw you, you were stuck with the other Hunters who could not manage to raise their ranks in that truck, and now look at you, you’ve gone up the ranks so quickly in such a short time. It’s really impressive. As someone who has kept his eyes on you through all of those crazy things that you did, I can’t help but give myself a pat on the back for spotting your potential.”

“Eh? Ah, yeah, sure.”

Akira was behaving like a small fry who had never visited such a high-class restaurant. But he had the achievements sufficient for the restaurant to let him in. Kibayashi found that discrepancy very interesting as he laughed hard.

“You should get yourself used to this kind of restaurant soon, you know? I like you, so I can tolerate how you are acting, but more often than not, others would take advantage of it. Those types of people often invite well-established Hunters, who can’t handle negotiation, into this kind of high-class restaurant and use that opening to poison them. So you should be careful, okay?”

“Even if you say so, I don’t have enough money to visit this kind of restaurant that often, you see.”

“In that case, I can bring you requests that would allow you to use a high-class restaurant as the negotiation site. Though it would be nothing but high-level and dangerous requests, since it’s you we’re talking here, so I’m sure you’ll do just fine.”

Akira’s expression soured a bit.

“No thanks. I bet it’s something that would send me to hospital again.”

“You don’t understand. If it’s a request dangerous enough to get you hospitalized again, you’ll get a huge reward if you can finish it…”

“Yeah yeah, make sure that it won’t get me hospitalized first.”

As Kibayashi boasted about himself on how he would be able to bring such high-level requests to Akira, Akira only listened to him with a seriously annoyed face. Once they calmed down at some point, Akira opened the menu as if to cut short that subject there. Kibayashi who saw that only smiled amusedly and opened the menu too.

Once they had placed their orders and were waiting for the food, Kibayashi started explaining to Akira what had happened after he fainted.

When Akira arrived at the forward base half-dead, he was immediately put into the life support system just like the other severely wounded Hunters.

Among all the other severely wounded Hunters that were not treated seriously, Akira received better treatment which guaranteed his survivability. Nelia did something to make sure that Akira would be treated as if he was working under Yanagisawa.

The battle between monster swarms and the city’s defence squad was still ongoing around Kugamayama city after Akira fainted. Although the size of the swarm was smaller than before, there were huge monsters and even flying monsters mixed in that swarm, thus they were relatively more dangerous than before. Average Hunters could not handle them and they would only slow other Hunters down as such only high ranking Hunters were offered high rewards and sent to repel that swarm.

When the City Management was considering sending out its trump card, the swarm suddenly broke down. Monsters that were originally heading straight to the city suddenly changed their directions. As some of them started rampaging, destroying anything around them, some of them retreated and vanished into the wasteland. While more than half of the swarm returned back to the ruin.

It was because they were forcefully manipulated by Tiol to go against the system. And with Tiol gone, the control returned back to the system. Although some of the monsters that had grown past the system's control did not return back, those that returned back to the system's side returned to their patrol area. For those that had their patrol area information destroyed, they just followed the broken order from the system to wander aimlessly, while some of them received the order to patrol a different area.

The city's defence squad pushed back the swarm just like that until they met the squads from the forward base, and that signified the end of the battle against the swarm. Now that the route between the city and the forward base was secured, those who were severely wounded in the forward base were transported back to the city. Akira was identified as a Hunter who would not have a problem with paying for the treatment cost, so just like last time he was hospitalized, they went ahead and gave him an expensive treatment without asking him first. After his wounds were healed, they cleaned the nanomachines leftover inside his body, and now, he was back all healthy and ready to go again.

Although Akira did not understand everything, he more or less understood the big idea of what Kibayashi was saying, and of course, that would mean he did not understand what Kibayashi was unclear about.

"What happened to those large monsters after that? Did you kill them all?"

"No, some of them are still left. The city's defence squad also returned back to their post once the swarm retreated after all. I'm sure there are still some of those large monsters roaming in and around the ruin. Although they're not regarded as bounty monsters yet, they're strong enough that the City Management is considering putting a bounty on them. So any Hunters who get to kill any of those are offered a special reward. Although they're big and strong, as long as they don't form a swarm, they're not that hard to kill after all. It's the perfect target for those Hunters who want to get their name out there. So other than those that have returned back to the ruin, I bet most of the monsters roaming in the wasteland are already being hunted down."

Kibayashi smiled happily and warned Akira.

“Though I won’t exactly prevent you, I recommend you not to join the hunt. You already got yourself a pretty highly prized target under your belt, so let lower rank Hunters have them instead. It’s one of those ‘good manners’ as a high-ranking Hunter.”

“…Manners, huh. Well, I’ll keep that in mind.”

“Yup, you better do it.”

The ordered meal finally arrived at the table. Akira did not know which one to pick, so he had ended up ordering the recommended menu. When that meal arrived in front of him, it changed Akira’s solemn expression to a smile. And when he scooped that up to his mouth, he could not fight back the taste that spread around his tongue and his smile widened.

Akira could not stop chowing down the food in front of him as if he was completely defeated by the taste of the meal. Kibayashi who watched it thought that Akira really needed to get himself used to coming to a high-class restaurant.

After they finished the meal and Akira could finally focus on the discussion, Kibayashi started talking about the main reason why they came there.

“I guess it’s time to talk about the reward then. First of all, the rank boost. This will affect the rest of your reward, so think carefully before you decide. Your Hunter Rank can basically go up somewhere between 42 and 50. Of course, the more you put your reward on your Hunter Rank, the less money that you get. So, how far do you want to go?”

Before Akira could say 42, Kibayashi frowned and continued.

“Or so I want to say, but I’m sure you would immediately say 42, right? I know well you’re just that kind of guy. That’s why I will explain to you the importance of Hunter Rank, make sure to listen well… Let’s see, if I am to give a concrete example… Let’s talk about the anti-forcefield ammo. How much did it cost when you bought it for the first time?”

“5 million Aurum per bullet.”

“If you get Hunter Rank 50, you can buy it for 500 Aurum per bullet.”

Akira was about to blow out all the food inside his mouth, but since it would be such a waste, he was able to somehow hold it in. He then managed to swallow it while making a weird pose to hold back his surprise. After that, he took one deep breath to calm himself down and looked back at Kibayashi.

“A-are you being serious here?”

“Yes, let me explain. There are many factors that decide the cost of such a bullet, this includes the power distribution and the city’s safety. I know it’s hard to accept, but that’s just how the world works, so you better know this kind of thing. Well, it’s still a biased opinion from my point of view, but still, make sure to listen well, alright?”

Kibayashi started explaining slowly as if to calm Akira down after that surprising revelation.

The price of ammo in the eastern district was decided solely by the government, so it’s based on how much profit the Corporate Government could earn. The reason why people could easily buy ammo in the slum city and why that ammo was sold at such a cheap price was all because they were designed to maintain profit for the Corporate Government.

There were many reasons as to why cheap bullets were sold in slum city. That way people in the slum city would be able to fight back the monsters coming from the wasteland, thus protecting the inner part of the city. And after they got used to fighting monsters, they would eventually become Hunters whom the City Management could hire as cheap soldiers. Of course, there were many reasons other than this.

There was one thing common among all the cheap ammunition sold in the slum city, none of them worked against the forcefield armour of the city’s defence squad. Even a barrage from those bullets would not leave a scratch against their forcefield armour. That way, the city's defence squad could easily destroy the slum city and its people without any resistance.

So those bullets that could be used to fight back the city's defence squad were priced highly depending on their effectiveness. Even more so for anti-forcefield armour.

But if the government set the price of a single bullet that high so that the people of the slum city would never be able to buy it, it would also prevent the Hunters from getting the ammo that they needed. But once those Hunters had enough money to buy them, albeit only a little, the people that the City Management did not wish to obtain these bullets, would be able to procure them.

In order to solve this problem, the Corporate Government issued a discount for high ranking Hunters. After all, the stronger a Hunter, the more he or she would fight powerful monsters. But of course, they could not just give the bullets away for free, although the discount also depended on the type of the bullet, high ranking Hunters could buy them almost for free.

This policy was enforced also in order to increase the value of Hunter Rank, rather than increasing the price of the bullet to an unreasonably high price, this would also encourage Hunters to aim for a higher Hunter Rank.

Of course, those Hunters who tend to go against the City Management would be stuck in the low rank which also served as a way for the Hunter Office to control the Hunters. It was their way to tell the Hunters not to go against the City Management if they wanted to get a higher rank and cheap bullets.

Back then, when Akira placed his order for anti-forcefield bullets via Shizuka's shop, of course, this discount was already applied to that order. The reason why he did not notice it was simply because he was not the one paying so he did not bother to check the total price.

After considering the danger of these bullets when they fall to the wrong hands, and the problem that it might cause for both the City Management and the Hunter Office if one of those Hunters used that bullet to kill a city guard, they decided to sell anti-forcefield armour for 5 million Aurum per bullet. Akira understood that reasoning but he still felt conflicted about it. Although he could follow the logic, that did not mean he could accept it, and it was obvious from his face.

“I see that you find it really displeasing, but as I said, that’s just how the world works. It’s important to know when to give up, you know? If you don’t like it, your only choice is to get your own territory and sell that kind of bullets cheaply inside your territory. Well, there’s also some rumours saying that if you’re a low ranking Hunter buying expensive bullets, the Hunter Office would note your name and introduce you to high-level requests though.”

“Rumours, heh?”

“Yep, only rumours. There’s no rule nor formal evaluation about it, the efficiency itself is questionable. There is no guarantee on the result as well. Rumours just like this, including information saying that it’s also used as a method to find a hidden gem or powerful Hunters disguising as a low-ranking Hunter like you. It’s all just rumours.”

It was a good way to raise the Hunters’ expectations without promising concrete results, but at the same time, it was enough to suppress complaints from the Hunters. Akira understood that but there was still something that he found weird.

“But still, selling 500 Aurum bullets for 5 million Aurum, huh? Won’t there be high ranking Hunters trying to make a profit out of this?”

“That depends on the Hunters. If you’re sharing it with some of your Hunter friends, then it’s fine, but if you blatantly resell it for profit, it’ll be seen as treason toward the Corporate Government and you’ll get a bounty on your head. Though it depends on the case, it’s basically the same as picking a fight with the Corporate Government after all. It won’t end well for you, so if you don’t want to pick a fight with the Corporate Government, just don’t do it.”

Kibayashi said so in a casual manner, but his tone indicated that he was being serious. Akira told himself to make sure to never do that.

“That should be enough explanation for now, your other rewards depend on how far you are going to boost your Hunter Rank after all. So, before you make your decision, I have another thing that I need to talk about with you. It’s about buying your track record again… Or at least something similar to that subject came to me.”

“Do you mean that you want to erase the last request from my Hunter track record again?”

“Not that far, you worked with a black powered suit on your last day, right? It’s a small adjustment just for that day. Basically, we need to discuss how you are going to let me change it and how much money you want for it.”

Kibayashi pulled out his information terminal and showed the detailed document to Akira. By the end of that long character-dense document, there was a contract page.

“I don’t mind if you want to take a close look at it, but I will still give you a short general explanation. Basically, if you sign this contract, your track record would say that you did help the black powered suit but you didn’t do anything significant. Including the money to make sure that you keep this confidential, we’re willing to pay you 1 billion Aurum. So, yes or no?”

Akira took the information terminal and scrolled through the contract. Although it looked like he did not read anything and just skipped the points written in that contract, Alpha was actually properly reading the contract. She then confirmed its content and let Akira know about it.

Akira hummed. Kibayashi raised his eyebrows, he did not expect Akira would hesitate.

“And here I thought you don’t care about your Hunter track record, or is it that 1 billion Aurum is not enough? Well, I don’t know the detail, but it seems that you’ve defeated something big and almost got killed yourself doing that. So I can understand if you don’t want to erase that from your track record.”

“That’s not the problem, the problem is the 1 billion Aurum.”

“Is it not enough?”

“No, it’s too big that I don’t understand why it’s worth that much. So I just can’t help but get suspicious…”

If the value was unnaturally high, that means there must be something troublesome behind it, that was why Akira was hesitating. If the compensation was too little, Akira might feel offended by it but that would be the end of it. But to be honest, he just wanted to get paid a suitable amount of money. Unfortunately, he had no information that could help him decide its worth, thus he could not even tell if 1 billion Aurum was actually too big or too small.

“…What do you think? Do you think this 1 billion Aurum is a suitable compensation?”

Kibayashi paused a bit from that question.

“Suitable compensation, huh? It’s something that both parties should agree on. After all, there’s no concrete way to decide this price, you see. To be honest, I don’t know either. But I don’t think that compensation is something that you need to be worried about. There’s some level of confidentiality around this information, so I didn’t get the full story either. It’s mostly my guess, but I think it’s an offer made to be on your good side. Do you want to know the reason why I think so?”

“Yeah.”

Unfortunately, Akira did not have enough knowledge to understand Kibayashi’s reasoning. But he was genuinely interested in that subject, so he replied back without showing any hesitation.

Kibayashi made sure to let Akira know that in the end, it was nothing more than a personal guess. So it was not like it could be used as concrete proof.

“That black powered suit might be a new model and someone is trying to use the last battle to promote it.”

Kibayashi’s guess was that a certain weapon manufacturer released one of its new models into slum city in order to collect combat data disguising it as an accident. The unit then showed notable results performing against other powered suits in the midst of the battle in which multiple powered suits were involved.

Then, it would fight the city’s defence squad sent to suppress it and deliberately lose but not before showing its capabilities. From there, the company could make a public apology for it while using it as a negotiation material to get the City Management to buy it for the city’s defence squad. The data taken from a battle nearby the inner wall was very effective material for negotiating against those inside the inner wall.

But there was an accident in that plan. A certain Hunter actually defeated that black powered suit. So the manufacturer immediately retrieved it back and before any bad rumour went out in public, they changed and renewed the unit and sent it out again for the original reason.

This time the plan went well, the black powered suit was able to kill many humongous monsters and demonstrated its capability. Moreover, it then encountered a powerful monster strong enough to change the contour of the ruin and defeated that monster. This achievement would be the perfect material to promote that new unit.

But again, there was a small accident with the plan. During that fight, the new unit was working together with the same Hunter who defeated that exact unit last time. Then to top it off, it was actually that Hunter who executed the big monster. If this track record went out in public, it would look like the new unit was only able to do what it did because of that Hunter. While at the same time, they did not want to completely discard the involvement of the new unit in this battle record either.

In this case, if they said that the Hunter did not contribute much during the fight and just ran around and obstructed the fight, then it would be a great battle record for the new unit. Personal opinion of how much someone contributed during a fight was a subjective thing based on the person giving that opinion. But if they were able to skew that opinion toward the new unit, it would really help promote the new unit.

“If that result caused the new unit to be deployed in this city and the other cities, it would move around a huge amount of money. I believe that they think this 1 billion Aurum is just a small amount of money compared to the profit that they could get but it should be enough to satisfy the involved Hunter.”

Akira listened to Kibayashi’s explanation with great interest. He then noticed something else and slightly frowned.

“Say, don’t tell me the reason why I got stuck with that request to increase my Hunter Rank is…”

“Exactly, it would be embarrassing if the Hunter who defeated that new unit is just a low-ranking Hunter. It would definitely hurt the reputation of that new unit. But, if that Hunter is actually a strong Hunter disguising as a low-ranking Hunter, then they still could still save some face. That’s why they wanted you to raise your Hunter Rank as fast as possible. It’s all their doing… Or at least, there’s a good chance that it’s the case, again, in the end, it’s nothing but a guess, okay? As I said, it’s just a guess.”

Kibayashi threw a smile that was hiding something. Akira sighed. All in all, someone did something and he was roped into trouble because of that.

Akira quickly agreed to the contract, but Kibayashi delayed the signing of the contract to hear from Akira the details of that battle. After all, he would not be able to ask Akira about that battle after the contract was signed.

Although Akira signed the contract, he still thought that 1 billion Aurum was a little bit too much. But after seeing Kibayashi laughing his heart out after listening to the story, Akira started to half-believe that it might indeed be worth that much, as the other half of him honestly did not care about it anymore and stopped thinking about it.

In order to ask his question, Kibayashi tried to calm himself down from laughing.

“By the way, why did you stay behind to help that powered suit? I can understand that you missed your chance after you lost your decoy, but I don’t think that’s enough as an excuse, you know?”

“I might have been in a mood to do it back then.”

“Just in a mood, huh? Is that all the reason why you stayed behind? Don’t get me wrong, it’s a good reason! Yup, it’s the perfect reason! Those Hunters who only think in terms of loss and profit won’t do something that crazy after all.”

Judging from Akira’s exasperated reaction, Kibayashi was sure that Akira had another reason and it was not like he was trying to hide that reason either. Probably Akira himself was not really sure why he did that, or why he decided to step deeper into a dangerous situation. Kibayashi found that very interesting as he could not hold back his laughter and started to laugh again.

If the reason that Akira himself did not understand well was put into words, it would be sympathy, pride and hatred. It was the sympathy to his ally even if it was an ally for a single day, that was his line of thinking of how he differentiated between allies and enemies. The pride and self-dignity to follow through his job to its very end. And the hatred toward himself for allowing himself to work with a relic thief for the sake of his job.

That vague amalgamation of feelings that Akira could not understand almost got him killed as well as allowed him to survive. But this abnormal way of thinking that he himself did not fully understand shifted his action further and further away from Alpha’s guidance.

Kibayashi finally calmed down from laughing hard and started discussing the rest of the reward. It took some time until they reached a deal that both parties agreed on.

Silavin: So, if Akira’s bullets at that time were already discounted… How goddamn cheap is the Hunter Office? Or just how much did he actually buy?

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 190, How To Spend The Reward

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Shizuka was chatting with Elena and Sara in her shop. They were talking about the recent happenings, mostly about how monster swarms came out from Kuzusuhara ruin and attacked the city twice in such a short time window. While at the same time, Elena and Sara were also venting about the hard time they had when they joined a squad, which was tasked to repel the swarm. Among all the subjects that they were talking about, there was one particular matter that worried them, it was about Akira.

There was a good chance Akira was in the ruin when that battle happened, and since that day, he had stopped coming to the shop.

If he was alright, it was about time he returned to the shop to procure supplies. If he was alright, it would not be strange for Sara and Elena to spot him when they were fighting the huge monster swarm. They were exchanging information about Akira, hoping that they would find some hints about his whereabouts, but both of them could not get any clear answer.

Elena and Sara were working as Hunters and Shizuka was working with Hunters. All of them had to some extent gotten used to the death of their acquaintances and friends. But that did not change the fact that it still made them sad. They understood well death was an occupational hazard for Hunters, and they knew that Akira might actually be doing just fine. But even so, they still had worried looks on their faces.

That was when Akira suddenly appeared. Elena, Sara and Shizuka welcomed him with a brighter smile than usual.

Akira started by letting them know that his rank up request was finally done.

“But well, a lot has happened since then and all my equipment is gone now. That’s why I’m here to get new equipment, or more like, I want to consult about getting a new complete set of equipment including vehicles. So, would that be okay?”

“Of course! So then, how much are you planning to spend this time?”

“About 1 billion Aurum. I actually have a bit more money than that, but for now, I want to limit my budget to 1 billion Aurum. If it’s too much of trouble, I’m thinking of getting the same thing as before and buy some extra modifications and other equipment after that.”

Akira said that amount so casually that Shizuka’s usual smile toward a customer changed into a worry.

“It seems that you earned quite a lot of money again this time, but are you alright? I heard that the reward for a Hunter rank-up request is Hunter Rank, so normally Hunters won’t be able to get much money from that request. But even so, it seems that you got 1 billion Aurum from that. Akira, did you do something reckless again?”

Shizuka’s voice tensed up to warn him not to do any unnecessary reckless thing in order to increase his probability to return back alive even if it was only for a little. She thought that if he realised that he had done something reckless and tried to hide it, then she would need to warn him again. As she was waiting for his answer, she sent a strict but caring gaze toward him.

But Akira responded with something that Shizuka did not expect. He heaved a big sigh and exasperatedly said.

“…It was a huge disaster, huge huge disaster…”

Akira did not show any sign of trying to look strong which he had never done before, it allowed Shizuka to know that he had really gone through something really difficult, thus confirming her intuition from before. Since it seemed there was no need to warn or scold him, her expression changed to a gentle smile to cheer him up.

“It must have been really hard, I’m really glad that you returned back alive. Are you okay? Did you get injured? If you only come here to let us know that you’re okay, thank you, but you don’t need to push yourself too hard. You can return back now and get a good rest. But if you still want to consult about equipment, we can do that inside.”

“Don’t worry, I’m okay, I made sure to get properly treated after all that mess.”

“Is that so? Very well then, just be careful not to push yourself too hard, okay?”

“Yes, I’ll be more careful… Honestly, though, I was already trying to be careful, you know.”

Akira smiled and said so before immediately starting to vent and looked down. Shizuka, Elena and Sara did not expect that from him at all and found it amusing while also feeling sorry for him. They then looked at each other and smiled wryly.

Shizuka shelved that feeling aside for now and asked Akira about what he wanted to consult about with a serious face to change the mood.

“So then, what is your current Hunter Rank?”

“42.”

Shizuka’s gentle smile turned slightly stern.

“…That’s quite a big jump. Akira, at least let me tell you this if you get your Hunter Rank that high, it might be a good idea to go to another shop, you know.”

Akira did not expect that at all and made a troubled face, he then nervously asked.

“Uhh, what do you mean by that, Shizuka-san?”

“Actually, since that time when you ordered an SSB multi-weapon rifle from this shop, that price is already way above the normal items in this shop. That’s why I’m not sure if I can recommend good equipment suitable for the current you. Of course, I’ll do my best to help you out if you ask me, but there’s a limit on how much I can help you. Remember back then when I sent you data for various rifles, right? To be honest, that was because I couldn’t decide which one would suit you the best. Furthermore, I don’t normally have them in stock, so I need more time to order them too. So, to be honest, it might be better if you go to a better shop, I’m sure they’ll be able to provide you with a better recommendation too.”

Shizuka said so with goodwill, but Akira frowned and seemed displeased.

“Uhh, does it bother Shizuka-san if they are items that need to be ordered first?”

“Of course not, it’s the opposite. As the owner of the shop and if I prioritize getting profit, I would prefer you order them through my shop.”

Akira sighed and seemed relieved.

“In that case, as long as it doesn’t bother Shizuka-san, I’ll keep ordering through this shop.”

“…Are you sure you’re okay with that, Akira?”

“Of course.”

Akira nodded firmly. If it was a bother to Shizuka, he would have no other choice but to change shop, but if not, then he had no reason to change shop.

Shizuka slightly blushed, which was very rare for her and looked away from Akira. It seemed that she was happy that he was this invested in her shop.

“With this, it would make 3 Hunters higher than Rank 40 as my frequent customers. It seems that my shop has really turned into something great.”

Shizuka glanced at Elena and Sara. Akira followed suit and looked at Elena and Sara too, but both of them seemed rather conflicted although they still smiled at him.

“Sara and I are Rank 41, basically one rank below you.”

“So you finally surpassed us, huh. Well, I do think that it was only a matter of time, but I didn’t expect it to be this fast.”

When Akira started working on that rank up request, Elena and Sara started working seriously to get their rank up for real. They prioritized taking on difficult requests and were able to finish them one by one. The expedition into the deeper part of Kuzusuhara ruin was one of them. After making high-quality maps of the ruin, bringing back expensive relics, and performing well during that fight the other day, they even contributed during the fight to repel the monster swarm as well.

The reason why Elena and Sara worked that hard was partly because of their competitive spirit toward Akira. To put it bluntly, it was to keep their pride as Akira’s senior, but their main reason was to stay as his senior even only for a little longer.

After all of their hard work and racking all of the achievements that they were quite proud of, they ended on Rank 41 which was a pretty high rank in their opinion.

But Akira went even above it. Although they were honestly happy with Akira’s achievement, they also felt rather conflicted by it.

“I wonder if I have to call you senpai from here and on.”

Elena tried to hide her conflicted heart by jokingly poking fun at Akira while smiling teasingly at him. Akira seemed rather unsure how to react to that. He felt that it might offend Elena and Sara if he said that he still had a long way to go, but he could not find any other words to say. And that much was obvious from his face.

Elena and Sara looked at the troubled Akira and felt that it seemed there was no need to try to be too careful around him. They then looked at each other, smiled and returned back to their usual self.

“Well, we’ve been working as Hunters longer than you after all. So I guess we’re still more experienced in terms of being Hunters.”

“Oh my, I don’t think that’s exactly the case for you though, Sara.”

“Why would you say that? Akira, that’s not true, right?”

Sara stared intently at Akira, the answer that she was expecting was sent through her stare.

“Ah, yes, of course. I think I’ll still be asking for your help too from here and on.”

“Fufufu, thank you.”

Sara smiled like usual, Akira finally regained his calm.

After that, they started talking about buying new equipment. Even for Elena and Sara, 1 billion Aurum was a huge amount of money. Elena and Sara were thinking that it might be better if they also invested more in their equipment.

That was when Sara suddenly had a question for Akira.

“I can understand that you want a better set of equipment since you lost all of them last time, but you can actually use your reward for something else, you know? It’s not like you only live to fight, right?”

Sara thought that this time Akira was spending all of his reward for buying equipment, but that was not true, it was only the money that he got from selling a part of his Hunter record during that request.

Akira and Kibayahi had a talk about the rest of the reward after signing the contract.

A boost to Hunter Rank 42, the right to buy medicine and ammo cheaply reserved for Hunter Rank 50 and above, and finally, Kibayashi's connection with the Kugamayama City Management and the Hunter Office which allowed Akira to procure powerful weapons.

The original contract between Akira and Kibayashi regarding the rank up request was that Akira would get an extra reward in the case of an unforeseen accident. That battle against the oversized armored monster fell well under that clause. Thus following the contract, Akira received extra rewards. Meanwhile, he used most of that reward for getting new special equipment.

There was a lot of equipment that normal Hunters could not get their hands on. This special equipment was only available for the city defence squad, particularly for soldiers belonging to a special unit. It was difficult to buy equipment sold for the Hunters in the frontline back in the Kugamayama city, that was just how powerful this equipment was.

Akira would definitely need that kind of equipment to be able to accomplish that request from Alpha, so he decided to ask Kibayashi to help him get them. Of courses, Kiabayashi thought that it would be interesting to see what Akira would do with them, so he happily accepted it.

Getting powerful equipment needed extra permissions and special rights which would take time to get. In the worst-case scenario, it might even take months, sometimes even more than 6 months. Kibayashi did inform Akira about it and Akira was okay with it.

Although there was a big difference between Sara and Akira's assumptions, both of them thought that he used most of his reward for equipment.

Because of that, he could not notice the misunderstanding and casually explained.

“Well, even if you say so, it’s not like I know what I can do with that much money other than spending it on equipment. I’m already living in a large house, the bath is big enough that I have no plans to move away… If there’s anything else, maybe I’ll start treating myself to delicious food. I’ve been buying better and better food lately. But that’s just a small amount of money compared to the price of equipment.”

“Ahh, Akira, you’re that type, huh? Well, with the money that you’re earning, I think you’ll be able to eat on the third floor of the Kugama building 3 times a day though.”

“Ahh, now that you mention it, I did go there recently. It was amazing.”

Akira started talking enthusiastically about the food with his limited vocabulary. Thanks to that, he could not convey the taste of the food very well. But it was at least obvious that it was great food.

“In that case, want to go together next time?”

Elena said casually, thinking that since Akira was talking so enthusiastically, he would accept her invitation. But instead, Akira frowned and said.

“Ahhh, well…”

“Oh, then, would that be a no?”

“No, it’s just the price, you see. I only went there since I was invited to discuss the reward from my previous request. So I was treated to the food there as a part of the reward. To be honest, I don’t feel like going there if I have to pay on my own… Well, so that’s basically why I will have to refuse, I’m sorry.”

Akira said apologetically and lightly bowed. Elena and Sara understood him and smiled.

“Well, we’re the ones inviting you, so we can pay for your food.”

Shizuka smiled and interjected.

“Elena, I think restaurants around that part is expensive for me as well.”

“In that case, Sara can pay for your food.”

“Me? Well, I don’t mind, but make sure to hold back, okay?”

They continued talking without even asking for Akira’s opinion, and he made a conflicted look there. He felt sorry for making Elena and Sara treat him to such an expensive meal, but he was also happy that it meant he might be able to go to that restaurant again.

Shizuka, Elena and Sara saw that and smiled amusedly. Akira looked like just a normal boy instead of a Rank 42 Hunter. They felt the distance between them shrink and smiled even if it was nothing more than their feelings.

＿＿＿*＿

Yanagisawa was talking through his information terminal.

“Yes.. Yes…, I do feel bad about the powered suit. I’ll also strongly recommend the City Management to use that powered suit. But that result is only from one battle record, I believe it’s too little as proof to push for its deployment. As such, I believe that it’s a good idea to get them deployed in the forward base and the supply route first to collect achievement before deploying it for the city defence squad. If it’s just in the forward base, I should be able to push it through after all… Yes, I believe you can expect good results. Once it’s decided that it’ll be deployed for the city defence squad, please transfer the money as we agreed before… Yes, of course… Yes, until next time then.”

Yanagisawa closed the call, his smile then vanished as he sighed.

“Good grief, these people can never get enough, huh. What a pain in the neck.”

Yanagisawa's men who were waiting for him to finish the call tilted their heads when he suddenly complained there.

"Commander, did it not go well?"

"Yeah. They're people from the higher echelon in the corporation after all. It won't go as well as when I negotiate with the usual guys."

"…I know it's common for you to be doing weird things, but commander, you can at least let us know from time to time, right?"

"Oh? I haven't told you before?"

"We did hear about the details of the borrowed equipment and how complex the document work was, but I have no idea why are we borrowing those things in the first place. I don't remember you ever tell us the reason, you see."

Yanagisawa often told his men what to do, but not why. It was true back then when the special ops unit went to the inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin, to bring Nelia to the upper floor of the Seranthal building. It was the same when Yanagisawa brought in the borrowed equipment.

Yanagisawa only gave a vague answer to that question with his usual crafty smile.

"Well, it's for the sake of humanity's prosperity and to save its future. Basically, just a preparation for that."

It was clear that he had no plans to answer seriously.

"…I see, well, it's fully up to you if you want to do something dangerous behind the curtain, but just don't use us as expendable pawns, okay?"

"Geez, that's rude. I've never done something like that, you know?"

Yanagisawa seemed honestly surprised by that remark, so his men stopped bugging him any further. There were already multiple people in the team that had gone missing after investigating too much about Yanagisawa's plan.

"Well then, I have a report to make. It's about the automaton that you told me to investigate, it seems that it is as you guessed. Someone might have instigated that attack instead of it being a simple attempt from the monsters."

"Thought so. This will provide the final proof I need, I'll have to change the details of the warning then. Give all the Nationalists to me, I'll take care of them."

"About that though, there's something that bothers me. Please look over here."

The details of the report suddenly appeared in everyone's line of sight. It contained detailed information about the ensued battles, their locations, and the number of people involved in those battles in a 3D map. Yanagisawa read a certain detail among the records and he immediately stopped smiling.

"…We'll do everything. Check if there are any similar reports including the ones sent to the detainment facilities in the other cities. You can go ahead and use my name to bypass the restriction. If they're trying to hide anything, make sure to carefully crack that information out. Do the same for the ones we captured this time too. Quickly!"

"Roger that!"

As his men immediately sprung into action and left the room, Yanagisawa stared sharply at the content of the report.

The report said that someone from the ruin management AI came with an offer.

__*__*__*__

Yatsubayashi opened his mobile clinic inside Kuzusuhara ruin. Tiol's remote body was strapped on one of the beds for patients.

Yatsubayashi yawned and sent a glance to that remote body. He was expecting Tiol to contact him sooner or later, but there was nothing today. He first thought that it was because of the range of the receiver and went to the inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin, but still, the result was the same.

In order to avoid breaking the receiver, Yanagisawa decided not to mess with the body. But it had been getting harder and harder for him to hold himself back from checking the receiver himself.

“…I guess it’s about time for me to give up, huh. Tiol-kun, the bed is not free, you know?”

“Is that so?”

The remote body suddenly replied. Yatasubayashi was startled, he was about to reply but stopped midway as he noticed something.

“You’re not Tiol-kun, are you? Who might you be?”

“You can tell?”

“I’m a doctor after all.”

The remote body showed a slight surprise before smiling at Yatsubayashi. It was a smile saying that it was impressed at how he was able to accurately identify it was a different person although it sounded as if he was saying so casually.

“I have an offer.”

“That was really out of the blue, what about Tiol-kun?”

“He’s inactive right now.”

“As in dead? He’s basically still my patient, you see.”

“It depends on your definition of death. But based on your common indication of death, I believe it could be said that he’s indeed already dead. I have no obligation to keep him alive, after all, you don’t have the technology and the methods to do that. Do you want me to reactivate him after you make a deal with me?”

“Leaving aside the subject of whether I really have no technology or method to reactivate him, well, from my point of view, I don’t see any reason why I should do that considering he still hasn’t paid the full cost of the treatment. So, who are you? To be honest, I’m interested in your offer, but I’m a doctor, you see. So unless it’s about treating injury, I don’t see any reason to consider a stranger’s offer seriously, you know? Ah, by the way, I’m Yatsubayashi. As I said before, I’m a doctor.”

“I’m Tsubaki, a manager AI. By the way, regarding the name though, I don’t mind if you want to keep using your fake name. As long as I can use it to identify you, it would not be a problem to me.”

Yatsubayashi’s face slightly stiffened. The remote body, which still had Tiol’s face, was smiling as if it was a normal human.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 191, Ominous Deal

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After Akira got his new set of equipment with the help of Shizuka, he took his new vehicle for a drive to the Higaraka Residence Ruin.

His new vehicle was an APC fully refitted for traversing the wasteland. It had a cargo hold filled with ammo and his new bike behind it which made it too big to go through certain places inside the ruin. Akira was planning to take his bike instead if he had to go through smaller roads.

As for his new guns, he brought with him a pair of modified and enhanced SSB multi-weapon rifles, and just like last time, he bought an augmented suit that came with the maintenance cupboard. As a matter of fact, he bought an augmented suit from the same high-end line of product as his previous one, and not to forget the coat which was equipped with forcefield armour and camouflage capability.

Plus the ammo and other consumables, Akira spent 1.6 billion Aurum this time. Putting aside whether those were suitable equipment for a Rank 42 Hunter, as expected, it was a huge amount of money for the current Akira. In order to get a big enough garage for his new vehicle, Akira also had to pay a renovator to expand his garage which also increased his rent. As such, he was rather strapped for money at the moment.

In order to recover from that situation, Akira decided to sell the rest of the relics that he had stockpiled inside his house. His goal going to the Higaraka Residence Ruin this time was just like previous times, to trick others on where he got those relics from.

Of course, there were already some Hunters that noticed Akira was trying to trick them. But if he kept going to the Higaraka Residence Ruin even after knowing so, those Hunters would start to question their guesses again. Viola was also helping by spreading that rumour as well, or at least, that was what Alpha told him.

It had been quite some time since the last time he had visited Higaraka Residence Ruin. As expected, the Hunters who were searching for relics in that ruin using old-world information-gathering devices were already nowhere to be found. Or at least, that was what he thought, he was dumbfounded to find that he was mistaken when he arrived in Higaraka Residence Ruin.

There were multiple vehicles parked around the ruin, and judging from their size, they must have been made for humans. Huge machineries were busy round the clock tearing down buildings as Hunters were standing on guard around the area. There were also people trying to find relics among the torn down buildings. Compared to before, the ruin was filled with more people.

“Alpha… What the heck is going on here?”

“No idea. Let’s ask someone who might know.”

Alpha pointed at the Hunters. Among those Hunters guarding the area, Akira spotted Colbert and the children from Sheryl’s gang.

Colbert noticed Akira coming at him.

“Akira, huh? Do you still have something to do in this barren ruin? If you came here to trick people about where you got your relics from, this place is already too popular for you to do so. Or is it that you really did hide your relics here? In that case, you have my condolences."

"That is not important, so, what in the world is going on here? No matter how you look at it, it's strange to see this as the continuation of the ruckus from last time."

Colbert raised his eyebrows and lightly smiled.

"Ohhh, you don't know, huh? When you were working in Kuzusuhara ruin, there was a small incident, and this is the after-effect from that incident."

"Incident? What incident?"

"They found old-world equipment to connect to the old-world domain and it's still working. I heard that it fetched quite a lot of money when they brought that back to the Hunter Office. So the people here are basically searching the ruin for similar relics."

Akira's gaze inadvertently turned toward the ruin.

"…But still, isn't it overkill for them to do this? They're basically destroying the ruin."

"I bet that's just how much that relic cost. Although the first sale price is not revealed to the public, I heard that there are multiple corporations fighting for it. I don't know who found it, but he must be one lucky bastard."

Working as a Hunter means to gamble with one's life, thus most Hunters believed that they could earn a huge amount of money to justify risking their lives. Then from time to time, a really lucky Hunter would appear albeit very rarely, but it was enough to reaffirm other Hunters to keep chasing their dream. This was the huge force that pushed ruin exploration in the eastern district. The scene in front of Akira was a simple manifestation of that dream. As a matter of fact, Akira himself was one of those Hunters chasing such a dream.

“According to the rumour, the one who found that relic originally found an empty secret room. He was so enraged that he started destroying the walls around him which led to him finding that relic. I heard that he only found out that it was an old-world communication device after he got that relic appraised in the relic exchange centre. He originally brought that relic to the exchange centre thinking that it should at least bring him a bit of money and did not expect it to be a jackpot. I know this kind of thing happens from time to time in the Hunter world, but I heard that the person went through a lot of things after that. Like getting confined in the Hunter Office since they thought he was someone who can connect to the old-world domain. Well, he was released afterwards though after knowing that he was not. But in the end, it was nothing but a rumour, so I don’t know if it’s real or not.”

Colbert said so casually, but Akira could not help but frown as he flusteredly said.

“I-I see, well, so, you’re basically here to look for relics too, huh?”

“Not exactly, I was hired as a guard. Since that last battle, the guards get paid pretty well to watch out for the remaining monsters. To be honest, the money is pretty good, we get paid quite a lot of money just to stand here doing nothing. That’s why I brought along Erio and the other guys to fill the member quota, this is a good chance for them to get some experience as amateur Hunters.”

Erio and the other children there had registered themselves as Hunters. They were basically working as Hunters affiliated with Sheryl’s gang and they occasionally got requests from Sheryl and Viola’s connections. Since they brought along decent equipment from Katsuragi when they registered their names, they started as Rank 10 Hunters which were way above Akira’s when he first registered himself as a Hunter.

“Are you really okay bringing Erio and the other children just to fill the member quota? Those big monsters are pretty strong, you know?”

“Well, even if those monsters actually show up, I bet the other Hunters would happily hunt them down first. So these guys won’t even have the chance to fight those monsters. Well, even if they do, they can just provide support from afar using rocket launchers. If you're that worried, how about joining us?"

"No thanks, I have other things to do here. Later then."

Akira then walked toward the ruin. But his image suddenly blurred into the surroundings, Colbert who saw that could not hide his surprise.

"Camouflage, huh? With this many Hunters in this place, I bet he knows all too well that there are no longer any monsters in this ruin, right? Then why did he do that?"

A lot of questions popped up inside Colbert's mind, although he had his guesses, he could not ask Akira for confirmation. After all, it would not end well for him if Akira suspected him of trying to find the location of Akira's relics. Colbert was standing there feeling troubled for a few seconds before he decided to just forget about it and return back to his job.

Akira turned on the camouflage on his coat and went into the ruin. The coat was equipped with a hood and it was big enough to hide Akira's 2 rifles under it. Although the hood was designed to cover his face and its camouflage would not be complete without it, Akira deliberately let a part of his hood open. Since some Hunters believed that putting something on their head would lower their awareness during battle, Alpha allowed Akira to do it instead of having his focus disrupted if he covered his face with the hood.

The coat's surface blended with the colour of its surroundings due to the optical camouflaging unit installed on it. Although it did not make Akira invisible by bending the light, it was good enough to hide him. And in order to prevent other non-optical sensors from discovering him, he turned on a jamming device created using forcefield technology.

One of the Hunters in the area noticed the signal from Akira in his information-gathering device suddenly dim, he inadvertently turned toward Akira's direction. But since there was nothing worth noting, he returned back, keeping his eyes on his information-gathering device.

Similar things happened a few times after that, Akira was honestly surprised at how effective the camouflage was.

“They didn’t notice me even when I was pretty close by. If only I knew that it is this effective, I would have bought it sooner.”

But Alpha reminded Akira not to get too confident.

“It might be because their information-gathering devices are set to detect the larger monsters, so it doesn’t work well to detect a relatively small object like you. Moreover, there are many monsters out there that can easily detect this level of camouflage. Furthermore, it consumes energy, so it’s not like you can turn it on all the time. So don’t drop your guard just because you’re using it, okay?”

“I know… By the way, do you think this thing works against those big monsters?”

“Maybe. You at least wouldn’t need to hide under the rubbles after the rain stopped.”

“I see… As I thought, I should have bought it sooner.”

Akira frowned a bit. In the back of his mind, he honestly just thought that if he encountered a monster, he just had to beat it, it was an obvious answer. And since he was able to do that in all of his encounters up until now, it cemented that line of thinking to his brain. But as expected, being able to avoid fighting left a huge impression on him to the point that he even started considering the option of hiding and avoiding fighting.

Not to mention that he had to pay for his own ammo again now, so he wanted to avoid any fighting that might consume a lot of ammo if it was possible. This line of thinking kept cycling through his mind as he continued going deeper into the ruin.

“But still, to think that an old-world communication device can be that expensive, it might be a good idea to keep one even if I won’t sell it.”

Akira sounded as if he was regretting his decision, but Alpha quickly shot that suggestion down.

“That would be a bad idea. If you have one, you’ll start thinking about how to turn it into money without alerting anyone. It would be bad if it distracts you, and it would be worse if you have an idea on how to do that since you would not be able to help but try. Then, you would fail and it would end really badly. Remember that the person who found it by pure chance got confined? If it was you, they would keep prodding you even if you show the slightest possibility and it would be too late before you even notice it.”

Akira imagined what would happen afterwards and shivered.

“You’re right, that would be a bad idea. Alright then, let’s just be glad that someone else found it instead of me so now I know what would happen if it was me.”

Alpha smiled happily seeing Akira was completely over it.

Akira wandered around inside the ruin after that with his camouflage still on. It served as training to help him get used to using that camouflage as well as to trick other people. After all, a Hunter, wearing a camouflage coat, wandering around inside a ruin filled with other Hunters would make people guess why he did that.

That was also the reason why Akira let Colbert and his friends see him turning on his camouflage. If Akira knew that there were still old-world information terminals left in the ruin or if Akira really had a hidden stash in that ruin, it would have been a fatal blunder. But at the same time, it would also make Hunters doubt if it was really a blunder or not.

The rumour about the existence of old-world terminals in Higaraka Residence Ruin and that Akira knew where to find them died down after no one could find anything in that ruin. But the discovery of the old-world communication device rekindled that rumour.

Akira was glad that not that many Hunters believed in that rumour, otherwise, the ruin would be filled with more Hunters.

Although Akira himself did not know if it was really working or not, after he walked around the ruin to adjust the believability of that rumour, he received a call from Viola.

“Akira, do you have some time?”

“I’m working right now. If it’s nothing of emergency, can you put it for later?”

“It has something to do with your job as a Hunter. I know you have finished your last request and now you’re going back hunting for relics, right? And you’re in the Higaraka Residence Ruin right now, right?”

Akira never told anyone where he was going, but Viola already knew. He went silent for a bit guessing where she got that information from.

“…So, what is it?”

“If you’re going to gather more of those old-world information terminals, there’s no need to sell them bit by bit, you can just sell all of them to me. One of my connections is actually looking for them, you know?”

“I don’t know whether I would get any until I’m done searching.”

“But you did find some already, no?”

Although Viola said that casually, she also sounded that she was sure of what she said. Akira had no skill to identify whether she really knew or it was just a bluff.

“…Even if I did, I promised Katsuragi that I would bring them to him first, and I have no reason to change that.”

“Don’t worry, I already discussed it with Katsuragi.”

Akira paused again, Viola then continued without waiting for his reply.

“It seems that you’re putting some effort to falsify where you get those relics from, but if you sell them to me, you don’t need to do that anymore, you know? If you're suspicious of me scheming something, don't worry, I'm not. It's true that I'm doing a lot of things behind the scene, but it's for the sake of keeping my promise to you and helping Sheryl's gang earn more money. So yep, I'm working hard to keep my promise to you, you know?"

The only thing that Akira could gather from those words was that Viola was not an honest girl. But if he did something to prevent her from keeping her promise to him, then it would be counterproductive. As he thought so, he finally made his decision.

"Alright, I'll visit Sheryl's base later."

"About that though, if it's possible, I want you to bring the relics yourself."

"Huh?"

"It's a request from my client, just think of it as showing my sincerity to my client. I won't force you but you'll be able to get more money from the relics if you do so. I'll send you the place and time after this. If it's impossible for you, just let me know and I'll do my best to adjust it."

"Are we going to check the relics there too?"

"No, I trust you regarding the quality of the relics and it doesn't seem the client is questioning my reliability either. Well, don't worry, even if the client checks it later and finds that it doesn't fit his expectation, I would be the one he would complain to. And don't worry, I'll also be the one paying the money to you. I'll pay you a suitable amount of money and I won't reduce it just because the client complains."

Akira checked the time and place sent to him and tilted his head. But considering that it was from Viola's connection and that the original relic was first sold in the exchange centre of the slum city, he thought that there was no problem with that time and place except that he did not have much leeway in terms of time.

"Alright, I'm good with the time and place. I'll be heading there now."

“Okay, thanks. Later then.”

Viola closed the call, Akira then noticed Alpha staring at him.

“Akira, it’s not like I’m telling you not to accept that offer, but are you really okay with it?”

“It would be a waste to just leave those relics inside my house anyway, so I’m okay with it as long as I can sell them at a good price safely. And if it causes me some trouble afterwards, I can use that against Viola next time. This time for sure, I’ll blow her head off.”

Alpha was not so sure what to think of Akira, who seemed to be weirdly apathetic about that matter. Although, it was one of the good things about him. After all, he once turned apathetic even toward Elena and Sara, who once affected his priority.

But the question here would now be whether Alpha herself could be apathetically treated by Akira one day. Although Alpha wanted to confirm it, she could not afford to test it. After all, the act of testing would be enough to increase the possibility, that was one thing that she knew for sure after being together with him for some time.

“What’s wrong?”

“Hm? It’s nothing. Let’s hurry up to the meeting place as not to miss your chance to blow Viola’s head off.”

“…It’s not like I took that offer so that I have an excuse to kill her, you know.”

Although Alpha was joking there, Akira was not completely sure that she was joking and smiled bitterly. He then turned off his camouflage and exited the ruin.

⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯*⎯⎯

Akira was waiting for Viola’s client inside one of the abandoned buildings in the Kuzusuhara ruin. He had already taken off his camouflage, although he brought along both of his SSB multi-weapon rifles, both of them were pointed down. Akira himself was busy keeping his eyes on his information terminal while scanning his surroundings for enemies.

“But still, this is a rather suspicious place for making a deal. This would be super weird if it were a normal honest deal.”

“Well, I’m sure that Viola’s client would want to hide where he get the relics from, so it would be a good thing for you too.”

“True.”

Alpha smiled at Akira and Akira replied with a smile too.

“It’s time, they’re coming.”

A guy carefully peeked into the room from a door. He then noticed Akira and carefully entered the room.

“Viola’s contact, I presume?”

“Yes.”

“The relics?”

Akira used one of his SSB rifles and pointed to his rucksack lying not too far from him. The guy opened the rucksack to check its content and confirmed that the rucksack was filled with the aforementioned relic, the old-world information terminals.

“Is this everything?”

“Yeah, if you have anything to the complain, say that to Viola.”

The guy closed the rucksack.

“I heard that Viola will handle the payment. If you want to, you can go ahead and call Viola to confirm the transfer.”

“It’s fine.”

“Well then, we have a deal then. So, who would leave first?”

“…In that case, I’ll go first.”

“Sure, go ahead.”

The guy then shut up and stood there with a serious face while staring at Akira. Akira then carefully left the room, got to his bike that he parked near the building, and returned back to his vehicle that he parked a bit further away since he could not bring it through the small road.

Akira had a rather troubled look.

“What can I say… That one felt like a super secretive deal, the one that would warrant death to anyone unrelated who discovered about that deal.”

“Well, I expected that much from the fact that they set the meeting place to be inside a ruin. It’s the kind of place where it’s normal to find dead corpses, with its location being somewhere Hunters exploring the ruin would not normally stumble to. Although, it was not as secretive as one would expect if it was a secret deal.”

“…It’s not like someone would ambush me on my way back, right?”

“When that happens, you just need to kill them and make sure to kill Viola too afterwards.”

Alpha smiled, showing that there should be no problem at all. Akira smiled bitterly and rode his vehicle through the ruin.

__*__*__*__

The guy who was left behind inside the building contacted his friend through a non-wave communication device. He also sent the picture of the inside of the rucksack through the camera installed in his prosthetic eye.

“I got the relics, but I don’t know about their quality. Should I return back and get them checked first?”

The person on the other side of the call replied with a serious voice.

“No, you don’t have to do that. It’ll leave a record if you get them checked inside the city. After all, these are old-world information terminals. Bring them to the next location. Once the preparation is done, call the Hunters and let them find the relics. They can then confirm the quality of the relics afterwards. It would be too much work to readjust the appraisal result afterwards if we appraise the relics beforehand.”

“Roger that. By the way, it seems that the Hunters assigned to find the relics are Yanagisawa’s men though, are you sure it will be fine? They might just snatch the relics, you know?”

“I’ve accepted that risk. Since they’re working under that man, even if they get suspicious of the relics, most of them would prefer not to dig too deep. The problem here would be whether they would be able to find the relics. Although it depends on their luck, they should be able to find the relics just fine if they are at least as good as common Hunters. But in the case they can’t, we will send our own Hunters. Alright then, go. Once you’re done placing the relics, stay around the area to keep your eyes on the Hunters from afar. If they don’t contact you after they discover the relics or if they’re trying to keep the relics for themselves, disguise yourself as a robber and kill them. We can send you reinforcements if you need.”

“Roger that, we’ll start the operation now.”

“Good luck.”

The guy closed the call and vanished. The powerful camouflage device was something that he received from his boss which indicated how careful the person he was on the call with just now, and how important this operation was.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 192, An invitation to explore the ruin

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was driving his APC aimlessly through the wasteland. Although he accepted a monster-hunting request, it was not like he was expecting to earn money from it. If someone asked him what he was doing, he would answer that he was just taking a casual drive through the wasteland to get himself used to his new vehicle and equipment.

Although Akira returned back to hunting for relics, he was actually not sure which ruin to go to. There were too many things that happened in Kuzusuhara ruin lately, so he had no plans to go there anytime soon.

He did consider continuing to look for the other Lion Steel Corporation facilities from the information that he had extracted from the corporation's terminal last time, but there was a chance for him to find an old-world communication device like the rumoured Hunter. In the worst-case scenario, some corporations might send people to investigate the place which might be traced back to Akira, thus he decided not to do that.

It would be a waste of time doing nothing but pondering on this back at home, so Akira decided to go out to the wasteland. After all, he might get some idea out there. But unfortunately, he still had no good idea even now. It showed just how haphazard Akira was.

Akira was driving while thinking where to go next. Alpha watched him from his side while sitting on the driver's assistant seat and smiled at him.

"What should I do now?"

"Akira, that would be the 15th time."

"Are you seriously counting?"

"Not really, it's just stored in my temporary record. It's just like how you remember what you did 10 seconds ago, it's not like you remember it because it has any special meaning to you, right?"

"Is that so?"

"Yup."

Akira did not seem to be fully convinced by that answer, but his focus immediately shifted to the monster signal that suddenly appeared on his radar. He stopped his APC and stepped off from the driver seat. He focused his information-gathering device to scan the direction of that monster.

The monster was a 6 legged beast, but instead of fur, its body was covered by reptile-like scales. An amalgamation of mechanical parts that looked like a machine gun was perching on top of its back.

"That's a huge monster. Is it the leftover after that day? It seems that nothing is special about it except its size."

"Its long-range weapon has already been destroyed. There are also leftovers from gunpowder on its body. Judging from the already dried liquid flowing out from its wounds, it might have run from a nearby battle."

"Wait, does that mean that I'll be snatching someone else's prey if I kill it? Well, it doesn't really matter, huh."

Larger sized monsters were assigned with a special reward, so there were many Hunters who were focused on hunting these big monsters. Akira remembered about that and hesitated, but he then decided to just kill it anyway. Even if there were Hunters who were chasing that monster after injuring it that far, it was not enough of a reason to just leave it alone when it was coming towards him. After all, being a Hunter was a dangerous job and no one could guarantee their survival.

Akira aimed his SSB rifle in his right hand at the monster. He then looked away and pulled the trigger, the first bullet ripped through the air and landed straight at the monster's head. The same thing also happened for the rest of the bullets that he shot.

Thanks to all the training and all the battles that he had gone through, as long as he properly aimed his rifle and there was nothing disrupting him, Akira could accurately shoot his target. So his training moved on to the next stage.

The view from the rifle's scope was displayed into a small window in his sight, Akira was to accurately aim at his target without directly looking at it. He had to accurately shoot his target using the signal from his information-gathering device. Up until now, he did that with the help of Alpha, but this time he was training to do that on his own.

The result until now was not that bad. So in short, Akira was able to do that on some occasions, this gave him a glimpse of hope that he would be able to accomplish things that he had originally thought to be impossible.

Alpha did once say to him that she would eventually have him do the things, which he could only do with her help, on his own.

If Alpha said so, it meant that it was possible for him to do it. But at the same time, Akira also thought that he was still very far away from that point. And then, although it was thanks to his new equipment, he was able to reach that point. Akira could feel that he had truly become stronger.

The monster finally slumped down after a barrage of bullets. Although the bullets were nothing but normal bullets with no extra firepower, which could not deal fatal injury to the monster, it was compensated by Akira's accurate shooting. Akira himself smiled with satisfaction from the result which was rather rare for him.

"Didn't expect that I would be able to do that using normal bullets. Well, I did that at a rather close range and emptied one huge magazine though."

"You're paying for your ammo again now, so it's better to use normal bullets when you can. It's not like your high-rank Hunter discount can get you free bullets after all."

"You're absolutely right. Although I don't have to pay that much money thanks to the discount, I need to pay for my bullets again now. I really need to get used to this again."

Akira brought along with him a lot of reserve ammo thanks to the huge storage area in his APC. He did not shy away from filling his storage with the expensive extended magazine. He was going to use those magazines when he had to go into the inner part of the ruin where he could not bring his APC along with him. For the sake of his training as well, instead of using a bullet that could kill his opponent in one shot, Akira was using normal bullets with relatively low firepower.

As Akira was about to head back, he suddenly stopped. His information-gathering device detected a vehicle heading in his direction.

That vehicle was actually chasing the huge monster that it fought not too long ago in order to deliver the final killing blow. Reina was sitting on the driver's assistant seat next to Togami, who was driving the vehicle.

"Hurry up!! Otherwise, other Hunters might snatch that monster!!"

"It wasn't easy destroying its weapon!! It can't be helped, you know?!"

"As I thought, we should have shot its legs first."

"No! Destroying its weapon comes first! It is thanks to that we can drive straight at it safely like this!!"

“Sure, but it’s meaningless if it gets away from us!!”

“But you’re the one who said to prioritize safety first!!”

“And you said that it won’t get away and we would be able to kill it!!”

Reina and Togami were bickering, but it was not intense, it was more like a friendly exchange kind of bickering.

Kanae, who was sitting in the back seat, smiled teasingly at their exchange and said.

“You guys are as close as usual.”

Reina and Togami immediately paused for a bit, then looked at each other and stopped bickering. The last time that happened, they ended up giving the exact same reaction which proved that they were indeed close to each other.

“…Putting that aside, we need to hurry up.”

“I know, we’re almost there.”

Kanae smiled amusedly and thought that although they gave a different response this time, it still showed that they were close to each other.

In contrast to that, Shiori, who was also sitting in the back seat, looked rather displeased. From her point of view, Togami was a bit too rude toward Reina and it seemed that Reina was influenced by those words and replied in a rather unladylike manner.

“Milady, Togami-sama. I understand that both of you are in high tension from the battle and it’s important to maintain your calm, but it’s just as important to watch your words to make sure not to disrupt your focus toward the fight. As such, I don’t recommend raising your voice unnecessarily. In the worst-case scenario, it might affect the escort after all.”

“Ah, right, sorry.”

“Ah, yes, sorry.”

Reina and Togami awkwardly apologized. Then after an audible sigh from Shiori from behind, their faces turned slightly serious as they focused back on the job at hand.

They then checked the sensor in the vehicle for the monster that they were chasing. But from the information displayed in the sensor, they were able to immediately infer that another Hunter had already taken out that monster and they hung their head low.

“Aaah, we were too late. Sorry, I didn’t make it in time.”

“It can’t be helped. If we had prioritized more on killing that monster instead of our own safety, the result might have been worse than this. So let’s just take this positively.”

Although they were bickering that much just now, they were able to immediately accept that disappointing result without blaming each other. It showed that they really had grown as Hunters.

“…So, what do you want to do? It was originally our target and we did fight it first, so if we point that out, the other party might at least share the achievement.”

“You’re the leader for today, so I leave that to your decision. But if you want to talk with them, you do the negotiation too, okay?”

“Alright alright… Hmmm, I guess I’ll at least give it a try… Hm?”

Since Togami focused his vision on the Hunter in front of him, his information-gathering device automatically analyzed the data and identified the other Hunter, and it was a Hunter whom he knew. It was Akira.

Akira accepted Togami’s proposal without much negotiation at all, or more like, it was not even a negotiation. Reina’s party was surprised thanks to that.

“Uhhh, is that really okay with you?”

“Well, we’re thankful that you would do that, but…”

“Yeah, I don’t mind at all so you can do anything you want with that monster.”

“Uhhh, but…”

Akira was so cooperative this time that Reina and Togami did not know how to react to it. But when they were about to pursue the reason, Shiori noticed that Akira really did not care about that monster at all. So pursuing that subject would be a bad decision, thus she interjected before Reina and Togami could prolong the negotiation.

“Akira-sama. We will take your kind offer. Milady, Togami-sama, let’s not bother Akira-sama any further and process the kill registration.”

“Eh? Ah, alright, Akira, thank you.”

Reina and Togami split the administration job to register the kill and started processing the report. It was a special target with a special reward, so it needed a special report. Although it was not as troublesome as the report for bounty monster, it was still more work than the usual report.

They used their Hunter ID and Hunter code to register the contributor in the report. They then sent the information from their radar and information-gathering device as well as the information of the defeated monster by scanning it. If there was a need to divide the reward, they would also send that together with the report. After they sent the report to the Hunter Office, a staff member would check the data before sending a confirmation, and that would be the end of the reporting process.

Akira left that process to Togami and Reina. If the report emphasized more on Reina’s party’s contribution, both the achievement and the reward would mostly go to them. Akira left the process to them not because he trusted them, it was more because it was too much work for him.

Kanae stood next to Akira and smiled at him.

“Well well, wasn’t that so kind of you, Akira?”

“…It’s just that I have no plans to get into an endless argument with any of you.”

Considering the endless bickering that it might cause if they lost the chance of getting the special reward, and how they were in the middle of the lawless wasteland with Kanae and Shiori, both of whom couldn’t be taken lightly. Although they did not exchange words, their glances and awkwardly shared understanding of the situation were enough to convey their respective opinions.

“By the way, Akira, what is your Hunter Rank right now?”

“I have no obligation to answer that question.”

“Geez, it’s not like you’ll lose anything anyway, in exchange, I’ll tell you my rank, right now I am-”

“Not interested. I don’t care if you want to tell yours, I won’t tell mine.”

“That’s so mean. Well, I know your Hunter code, so I can just look at it on the Hunter Office site.”

Kanae pulled out her information terminal and opened the Hunter Office site and entered Akira’s Hunter code. She then seemed rather surprised as she browsed Akira’s information with an amused yet sly smile and sent meaningful glances at him from time to time.

“Ohhh, hmm, I see I see. You’re that kind of Hunter, huh. Hmmm.”

Akira did not show any reaction at all since he felt he would lose if he did and just ignored Kanae’s mumbling.

Once Togami and Reina were done with the report and returned back, Kanae smiled and said to everyone.

“Akira, it doesn’t seem like you’re busy, so how about coming together with us? Togami, you’re okay with that, right?”

Togami looked troubled by that sudden suggestion.

“Putting aside whether it’s a yes or no, I’m the leader today, you know? So don’t make offers on your own without my permission like that.”

“Well, there’s no need to be that wary. If Akira is going to join us, I’ll give you permission to hunt that automaton and I don’t mind helping out too.”

“Eh…? Really?!”

Togami suddenly seemed to take that suggestion positively. But this time, it was Shiori who looked troubled instead.

“Wait for a sec there, Kanae, what do you mean by that?“

“It’s fine, isn’t it? It must be some kind of fate that we meet here. I also agree that we can’t give Togami and Milady permission to fight that monster if we’re not allowed to help them. But if Akira is with them, I think it’s fine to give them that permission, you know?”

“Why do you think so?”

“To be honest, I’m getting tired of having to keep interjecting when Togami and Milady are having their time flirting with each other.”

“Why did you bring up Togami there?!”

Reina suddenly intervened, as her party understood what they were talking about and continued talking, Akira, who did not understand what they were talking about, sighed and said in a stern tone.

“Can you explain it to me in a way that I can understand? If you can’t, I’m leaving now.”

Everyone suddenly paused, Kanae then lightly pushed Togami’s back.

“Now then, Togami!! It’s time for negotiation!! Explain it to Akira in a way that would interest him and get an ok from him! If you can’t do that here, I won’t give you that permission!”

Togami still looked troubled as he was pushed in front of Akira, who then looked into his eyes. Togami tensed up and squeezed his brain to piece together what to say there.

Due to certain circumstances, Togami and Reina had been working together these past few days. They swapped leader positions every day as they explored ruins, fought monsters, and gathered experience together as Hunters.

When Reina was the leader, Shiori would join the team under her. But when Togami was the leader, she would join Kanae as a mere observer. Today, Togami was the leader, so today's main fighting power was only Togami and Reina.

They actually received certain information from their connection about an old-world automaton roaming a certain area inside the ruin. But Shiori and Kanae prohibited them from going to that ruin since they lacked fighting power.

Although it would not pose any problem if the four of them went together, for the sake of training for Togami and Reina, it was a relatively dangerous place when they did not include Kanae and Shiori. Shiori warned Reina and Togami, but then Kanae said that she might change that under a certain condition.

The information about the automaton was rather credible, it at least had better credibility than a mere rumour. And right now, the same information had already circulated among the Hunters. Togami properly explained to Akira that they had also considered the possibility of that information being wrong. That was when Kanae intervened.

"Togami, isn't it better if you hide that part or at least try to feign ignorance?"

"I have no plans to do that to a Hunter that I'm making a deal with."

"Ohh, you're more earnest than I thought."

“I’m normal, it’s just that your personality is too rotten.”

Akira seemed surprised there. He always thought that Kanae was the normal one. Because of that, Togami, who was earnestly trying to make an honest deal, looked rather upright from his point of view.

Both Togami and Reina had the same opinion about hunting the old-world automaton. After all, such a monster was highly valued, had Kanae and Shiori not stopped them, they would have gone hunting for that monster. But if Kanae changed her mind, Shiori, who was still against it would be in the minority.

Shiori then expressed her disagreement in a non-direct way.

“When Drankam allowed Togami-sama to join us, Shikarabe-sama told us to make you handle any trouble on your own. Thus, asking for Akira-sama’s help here would be against that order.”

“…I believe that getting other Hunter’s help with our own effort and handling the reward distribution on our own are well under the category of handling the situation with our own ability though. As training for us to be full-fledged Hunters, making decisions under our discretion is also a type of skill. If I’m mistaken, then Shikarabe’s evaluation of me would go down, but that will be all there is to it.”

Togami then looked at Akira again, he faced Akira properly as a negotiation opponent.

“You might see us as one party, but I’m asking you here as an individual. I want you to accompany us, and if there are any problems, I’ll take full responsibility.”

“…Let me confirm this first, this is just an invitation to explore a ruin together, right? It’s not like you want to pay me to come with you and it’s not like I will be placed under your command in the team, right? I have no idea how much fighting power you think I can provide, but I will only fight the way I want to. So I won’t try to suit your expectation, just so you know, I won’t take any complaint, okay?”

“I don’t mind. If we’re not strong enough, we can just retreat.”

“Then how are you going to share the reward?”

“Basically everyone will get the same share, any further adjustment can be discussed later. After all, if we really get to find the automaton, it’s not like we can break it down and divide it equally among us. Since each of us would sell the parts through different routes, I’m pretty sure that would cause some trouble later down the line. But if you have any complaint at that point, you can say that to me.”

Akira stopped asking and paused for a bit. Togami was waiting for Akira’s answer with bated breath.

“…Alright, I’ll come with you.”

“Oh, are you sure?”

“Yeah. It might be interesting to check a ruin that might have old-world stuff like that old-world automaton even if we don’t find anything in the end.”

Togami and Reina smiled happily, Kanae also seemed to be delighted by that outcome. But in contrast to that, Shiori frowned as if she was deep in thought.

Akira together with Reina’s party went to the rumoured ruin. In order to clear up the rest of the deal, Togami was sitting in the driver’s assistant seat in Akira’s vehicle.

In the middle of their discussion, Akira asked about the credibility of their information, to which Togami told Akira to keep it a secret before starting to explain it to him. After listening to his explanation, Akira frowned. There was a good chance the source of that information came from the old-world communication device discovered in the Higaraka Residence Ruin not too long ago.

“Alpha, are we going to the same ruin from that information that we got from Lion Steel’s information terminal?”

“It’s not.”

“Then it’s just a coincidence, huh?”

“Maybe not exactly. My bet is that some corporation paid Chrome in exchange for that information. Although Lion Steel mainly dealt with dispatching holographic workers, it might have had some kind of service to dispatch humanoid robots for people who wanted to get workers with real bodies.”

“So… Basically, that old-world communication device can be used by anyone, not only limited to people who can connect to the old-world domain like me, huh?”

“With the right connection device, anyone can connect to the old-world domain. Not to mention that there’s a good chance that the aforementioned corporation has someone who can connect to the old-world domain with them.”

“I see. Then it’s safe to assume that other people already know about the location of the old-world terminal, huh? Although I was the one who found the Yonozuka station ruin, I wonder if it’s going to be okay. I hope they won’t look for me.”

“It’s not like they have evidence that you were the one who found that ruin, so there’s a slim chance it would lead to you. It’s also not that rare for Hunters to find undiscovered ruin, so it should be fine.”

“I hope you’re right.”

Akira’s expression was changing from one to another as he was talking with Alpha through telepathy and Togami noticed that.

“What’s wrong?”

“…It’s nothing. I just thought that if that corporation was able to get such important information, wouldn’t it be better for them to search that ruin themselves before that information leaked out.”

Akira was actually just spouting something random to hide his telepathic conversation with Alpha, but after hearing that, Togamie smiled wryly and explained.

“I actually thought so too and said the same to Shikarabe. He then laughed at me and said that it’s our job as Hunters to read what might lie behind it.”

Akira seemed to be a bit surprised by that. So Togami then continued and told Akira what Shikarabe said to him.

If that information was really enough to lead them to the old-world automaton, it would be strange that information even reached Togami. After all, even if that information leaked out, the corporation would have done something to prevent such important information from spreading.

In reality, the corporation might have secured the automata and a member of that corporation tried to earn some extra money from selling that information.

Or maybe the corporation found out that the automaton was located in a dangerous place, so after calculating the risk and return, instead of sending a unit to retrieve it, they chose to get someone to find it and buy it later. They might have intentionally shared the information with certain Hunters who were more likely to sell that automaton to them.

Or maybe instead of the automaton itself, the corporation was more interested in other things located in that ruin like the relics or maybe the old-world facilities that could be found there. And in order to retrieve those relics or old-world facilities, they had to clear up the monsters in that ruin, so they intentionally spread that information to use the automaton as bait and make Hunters do the heavy lifting and remove the monsters for them.

It might even be that the information about the automaton itself was a complete lie and it was fabricated only to bait Hunters to go to that ruin in order to reduce the overall difficulty of exploring that ruin. If that was the case, the informant is most likely aiming for something completely different in that ruin.

Shikarabe also told Togami many other guesses and speculations that he had. Togami then proceeded to convey all of that to Akira. Akira had the same expression as Togami just like when Shikarabe told him that.

“He then said that being a Hunter means to consider all of these possibilities, make a decision based on them, and find a way to earn a profit from it.”

Akira smiled bitterly. It was especially hurting for him since he had been wandering aimlessly these past few days. Although he understood what Shikarabe said was true, it still was not pleasant to hear.

Alpha who noticed that smiled amusedly at Akira.

“Akira, you should learn from him, you know?”

“You can go ahead and curse my bad luck for that one. If I consider the possibility of getting attacked by a swarm of monsters every time I go out in the wasteland, I would always end up in red no matter what. That would mean that it’s better if I don’t go out at all, you know?”

“…It’s so like you not being able to just laugh that off, isn’t it?”

Alpha’s smile turned bitter. Akira thought that his answer was actually effective to stop her from teasing him. Though he was just giving a random answer, he smiled, satisfied.

“What’s wrong?”

“It’s nothing. I just thought that if you consider all of those possibilities, doesn’t that mean it’s unlikely for that rumour to be true. And here I thought you didn’t want to trick other Hunters that you’re making a deal with.”

Akira casually said so with a light smile, so Togami also replied with a similar smile.

“What are you talking about? I did tell you that there’s a possibility it’s the wrong piece of information, right? I’m just telling you the rest of the information that I have, you know? Well, as long as we don’t have any problem with our fighting power, there’s no loss in at least checking it. That’s what I thought… Or more like, that’s what Shikarabe thought.”

“Does this have something to do with Shikarabe by any chance?”

“Well, not directly, but, well, it’s complicated. Although I’m working with Reina right now, it’s actually training for me as well as for Reina. It seems like Shiakarabe had a deal with Shiori or something… So, yeah, it’s complicated.”

Togami started talking about his conversation with Shikarabe while sounding rather depressed.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 193, Togami's Training

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Not too long after the incident in Seranthal Building, Shikarbae was enjoying his drink in a pub with his friends, that was when Togami suddenly came with a sturdy-looking case.

Shikarabe frowned and looked obviously annoyed.

"This is not a place for a brat like you."

Although Shikaraba had a better opinion about Togami after that battle in Mihazono Ruin, it still did not change the fact that he did not exactly like him. The mix of the alcohol in his blood and the fact that Togami was interrupting his drinking made Shiakarabe's voice harsher than usual.

But Togami was not affected at all, he looked at Shikarabe with a serious face.

"I heard that you had called Akira to this place for negotiation."

"He's fine. It was a negotiation regarding a job as fellow Hunters in the first place, and being a Hunter has nothing to do with age."

“But I’m a Hunter too.”

Shikarabe snorted.

“You’re just a brat. Do you really think you’re a full-blown Hunter now after getting quite a lot of money during that request in Mihazono ruin? That only put you in the starting line, you know.”

But even so, Togami still had a sharp and serious look on his face, he did not show any reaction toward that mockery. Seeing that, Shikarabe sobered up a bit and lightly sighed.

“So, what is it? Just tell me what you have to say and leave. I’m in the middle of drinking here and I have no plans to share it with you.”

“I’m here with a request.”

“A request? I heard nothing from Drankam though…”

Shikarabe opened his information terminal to check again, and as he expected, there was no message regarding that subject.

“…In the first place, you can just call me instead of coming to me yourself, you know? Well, it doesn’t really matter right now. So, what is it?”

Togami gathered his resolve and said.

“It has nothing to do with Drankam. This is an individual request from me to you, and it’s not a formal request through the Hunter Office either.”

Togami placed the sturdy-looking case on top of the table and opened its contents to show it to Shikarabe, who still seemed slightly confused. As a Hunter, Shikarabe seemed mildly surprised, but the waitress girls were all stunned. The case was filled with currency notes.

“The reward is 30 million Aurum and it’s all paid upfront.”

Shikarabe’s gaze shifted to the case, then to Togami. He understood that Togami was being serious which made him hesitate.

“…Well, I’ll at least listen to what this request is about.”

“I want you to train me. At least until you would accept me as a Hunter, and even beyond that if it’s possible.”

Shikarabe did not expect that at all as he raised his eyebrows.

During that incident in the Seranthal building, Togami had a good look at his real strength, the fact that he was weak, but he accepted it as fact and wished to be stronger. The strength that he was seeking was not the strength from his equipment, but the real strength coming from himself that he could be proud of. After fumbling around for an answer to how he could reach that goal, he finally made a decision.

To be honest, Togami hated Shikarabe’s guts. But he could not deny that Shikarabe was a strong Hunter, strong enough to rightfully mock him. So his conclusion was to ask Shikarabe to train him.

Togami closed the case.

“Just tell me if you won’t do it, I’ll try asking someone else.”

Togami did not even try to soften his words, it showed just how serious he was. So Shikarabe’s face turned serious and he replied.

“This 30 million Aurum, it’s the whole reward from that request in Mihazono Ruin, right? You do know that I can just take the money and report it to the Hunter Office since I’m sure you took them out without their approval first, right?”

“Then it’s my fault for offering this to you.”

Togami did not make that offer without much thought, he understood well that he might be throwing the money that he got through hard work down the drain when he decided to make that offer. Shikarabe understood that very well from Togami’s answer as he started laughing. He then smiled sharply and looked at Togami with an amused face.

“Very well, but I won’t take that reward as you proposed.”

“Sorry but this is all I can offer, so I can’t pay you more than this.”

“No, it’s the opposite.”

Togami frowned and seemed confused, Shikarabe pulled the case and opened it. He then took a bundle and pushed the case back to Togami.

“I’ll take only 1 million Aurum first and train you correspondingly to that amount of money. As a Hunter, I always do all of my requests seriously. After all, it would hurt my reputation if I take 30 million Aurum and don’t show the result after training you.”

Togami frowned, but Shikarabe then casually continued.

“You might be questioning if I’m being serious here, if you want to show that you are serious and that you’re not making this offer because you’re drunk or something, then show it with your actions. Show your resolve and your talent, show it to me. That you’re worthy of being trained, make me take the rest of the reward, that is, if you can.”

Togami firmly received the case that was pushed back to him, it symbolized his lack of worth to be trained. But he swallowed that bitter pill and looked sharply at Shikarabe.

“…Alright, we have a deal then.”

“Indeed we do… Your training starts tomorrow. I’ll contact you, so just go back for today.”

Togami then left. Shikarabe kept his eyes on Togami as he left. Once Togami was out of his sight, he once again smiled amusedly and started enjoying his drink with his newly received 1 million Aurum.

“…He’s really changed, huh?”

Shikarabe mumbled, so no one could hear him.

Just like he said, Shikarabe did seriously train Togami. Thanks to that, Togami had to go through gruelling training.

Shooting until fainting to only be woken up and continue the training. The harder the training went, the longer it felt for Togami.

Not only did Shikarabe train him in practical skills, but he also taught Togami about common monsters around Kugamayama city, including the area where they usually roamed, their movement patterns, and their weak points regardless if they were biological or mechanical monsters. Then to top it off, Shikarabe also taught him an effective method to kill each of them.

Togami was also often brought to an area that was way too dangerous for his skill and was sent to fight to the death against those powerful monsters. He fought those monsters desperately and somehow managed to stay alive although he had no winning chance in the first place with his current equipment and skill.

The information of that battle was recorded and then he would look back at that battle record through a non-transparent goggle together with Shikarabe, of course, Shikarabe would be pointing out Togami's mistakes while doing so. The majority of his opinions were shot down, and when he asked for advice, Shikarabe would point out his wrong moves.

Both his practical and theoretical training was extremely hard. Even when he coughed out blood, he would swallow that blood together with medicines to make sure that his body would keep up. He had spent a lot of money on those medicines and he was burning through them pretty quickly, adding more salt to his injury.

Shikarabe kept telling Togami that he was welcome to stop anytime. So Togami had to squeeze his willpower to fight back against that temptation.

While Togami was going through that gruelling training from Shikarabe, Shikarabe suddenly told him to go with Reina. Although Togami was surprised by that, he then grouped up with Reina as he was told and went out to do Hunter work with her.

Since then, he started working with Reina, who more or less had the same fighting prowess as him. They sometimes barked orders to each other, followed each other's instructions, complained about each other's actions, and gave advice to each other. They were working with each other while regularly swapping the leader's seat. Thanks to that, Togami did not have to go through Shikarabe's gruelling training anymore and he had the chance to compare his skill with Reina's.

Even during the time Togami was working with Reina, Shikarabe still tracked his battle record and gave his evaluation to Togami. Right when Shikaraba did not have much to criticize anymore, he gave Togami the information about that old-world automaton and told him to handle that information. He made sure to tell Togami to think carefully about the meaning of handling that information before making any decision.

This had happened after Shikarabe received 29 million Aurum from him.

Togami returned his focus toward Akira, who was driving the APC. After all the gruelling training, he was more or less able to accurately predict someone else's skill. But as expected, Akira was still as mysterious as usual.

[…One thing is for sure, he has gotten better equipment. But putting that aside, I feel like he's stronger than before… Wait, it's not like I know how strong he exactly was. It might be that he simply looks stronger now since I can more or less predict someone else's skills now, or is it because I simply can't accurately predict his skill? I really don't understand…]

Togami frowned, he was wondering if he was closer now or if the gap between him and Akira was bigger now. Akira noticed him and asked.

"What?"

"Uh, it's nothing. By the way, I'm the leader at the moment. I won't tell you to obey me or anything and I'm open to any complaints or critiques, but if it won't cause the team any trouble, it would be helpful if you would follow my commands."

"Sure."

Now that they were on the same team, they had to work together. So Akira thought that it was understandable that it would cause the team trouble if he acted too independently, so he agreed with Togami's opinion.

Togami frowned even more due to Akira's response. As the team leader, he had the duty to command Akira too. If he could lead Akira and make the exploration a success, he was sure that he would be able to accept himself and be confident that he had grown stronger.

Togami steeled his resolve to go beyond his past self.

As the team approached the ruin, they started to see greeneries around them. The ruin was practically blanketed in moss including its floor and the walls of the abandoned buildings inside it. They could see a semi-spherical body completely blanketed in green colour.

Togami then said.

"We're closing in on the Lida commercial district of the ruin. Reina, prepare the enhanced information-gathering device. If you can get it to receive the signal, search for the dome. Ah, is it better if I go back to that side?"

"It's fine either way, or is it that you can't scan the signal from there? I know that you don't have the equipment, but if Akira has one, it would be great if he helps out too."

"Akira, can you do that?"

"Even if you ask me so, it's not like I know what you're talking about without telling me first."

"Ahh, right, sorry, well…"

In order to clear up the lack of shared information there, Togami started explaining, including his own personal interpretation.

The Lida commercial district ruin was a huge gathering of old-world commercial facilities. The semi-spherical objects scattered there were the commercial facilities. Although it looked like a ball of plants now, they were filled with products and items.

The information that Togami had hinted at an automaton warehouse located inside that ruin, but unfortunately, it did not share any more details than that. Or to be more precise, the rest of the information was indecipherable for the current human race.

Even common information about location, name, coordinate, and map from the old-world era was not something that was easily decipherable for the current era's technology. Not to mention, the whole ruin had already been claimed by nature, even if they knew the exact location, it might be unrecognizable now.

For the Hunters, they could search for such a location by intercepting old-world signals and check for the particular signature in their received signal. Augmented reality was not a rare thing in the old-world, because of that, as long as Hunters had the equipment to receive that signal, they would be able to see the augmented reality.

Even right now, the Lida commercial district was filled with augmented reality. Reina had the equipment to intercept and display such signals. Though all the green spherical objects looked the same with the naked eyes, they had different aspects through the augmented reality display.

Reina's equipment was high-class equipment that could receive all types of signals. It shined the most when it was used in the middle of the Lida commercial district, which was filled with signals. Togami wanted to go closer to that ruin to check the performance of his information-gathering device, but Shiori stopped him.

As Akira said that he did not have such a device, Togami transferred from Akira's APC back to Reina's vehicle. Alpha who was floating in front of Akira vanished and reappeared on the driver assistant's seat that was empty.

"I can, though? Are you sure you're okay saying that you can't?"

“I don’t have the equipment for that, so it would be weird to say that I can. Ah, and also, there’s no need to append that information into my view, they might get suspicious if I start reacting to things that I can see only with your support.”

“You have a point there, the only augmented reality that you need is me after all.”

Alpha smiled smugly, but Akira just ignored her.

“By the way, it seems that Reina is equipped with a pretty powerful device, won’t she be able to see you too?”

“At the moment, my signal is adjusted to be exclusive to you, so it’ll be fine. Although, back in Kuzusuhara ruin, I used to use the public wavelength so anyone with the right device would have been able to see me. Remember back then when you had to fight 2 Hunters in the Kuzusuhara ruin? One of them was able to see me, right?”

“Now that you mention it, you’re right… Is it a common device among Hunters? Just now, Togami casually asked me as if he assumed that I had such a device though, not to mention that there was someone who had that device before too.”

“He did not seem to be surprised when you said that you don’t, so I think it’s normal not to have it.”

“Hmm, makes sense.”

Akira did not seem to be fully convinced, but the old-world signal was not only found in Kuzusuhara ruin, even Kugamayama city was also enveloped in old-world signals. It was not rare for illegal businesses in Slum City to only show innocent signboards and advertise their illegal businesses with augmented reality on top of that signboard. It was convenient to be able to transfer information that could only be received by certain people.

If a Hunter came to the ruin with a device that could retrieve such signals, he or she would be able to see some kind of information board floating. It might become a big hint that would lead to finding a new undiscovered ruin. Even if it was in an already explored ruin, it might help Hunters to find unexplored locations. It was a good method to find unexplored locations buried under the rubble.

But even so, it was not a common device among Hunters. After all, it was not an important piece of equipment compared to rifles, augmented suits, and information terminals or information-gathering devices.

Moreover, it was not like all ruins had augmented reality. And even if it had and it led to relics, other Hunters would have collected those relics first. The information broadcasted through that signal was based on the situation when that signal was first broadcasted, thanks to that, most of that information was misleading and outdated information.

In the worst-case scenario, using such a device might alert the monsters and other security measures. Or the information might flood the display and lower Hunter's visibility. Or display enemies that did not exist in the first place. It might even give the wrong map information and send the Hunters to their doom. Relying too much on such a device might actually be a dangerous thing.

But of course, if it was used correctly, it would boost their earnings. On the other hand, since it might alert more monsters, it would also increase the monster encounter rate, and in order to avoid that, better equipment was developed which of course, cost more money. Thus, the problem became either investing in rifles or in this device. Although not everyone in the eastern district fully understood this matter, the majority of Hunters agreed to invest more in rifles.

Akira and the others went deeper into Lida commercial district ruin. For Akira, the objects around him looked similar, the green colour that they shared did not help him at all. He drove through the green covered tall buildings while crushing the greenery blanketing the floor of the ruin.

Akira then noticed a long object that was covered in plants. After taking a closer look, he realized that it was an armoured bus that was covered with plants.

“It’s from someone who came here first, huh. Well, judging from this bus, it must be from quite a long time ago. So they might have come here because of a different reason than us.”

“That’s not necessarily true. I went and checked the inside of the bus and it doesn’t seem that it has been here for that long, so it might be recently used.”

“…But it’s completely covered by plants though?”

“It must be because the plants in this ruin grow abnormally fast. Although I’m sure it should be okay to leave your things in this place for a while, it would be bad to do that for a few days. The plants would grow on the body of the vehicle and around the wheels. When that happens, you won’t be able to move your vehicle anymore. The people who came in that bus might have planned to stay in this ruin for a few days to explore the ruin since it’s rather big.”

“But it means that we can’t stay for too long in this ruin, right? Why is there no information about that spreading around?”

“Not everyone shares information that they know. There might also be some people who believe that their vehicles will be fine. Well, this is nothing more than a guess though, but the owner of that bus might have died inside the ruin, giving plenty enough time for the ruin to claim that bus.”

“Honestly speaking, I hope it’s the latter. I don’t want to lose my APC just because I parked it in this ruin for a short time.”

“But still, it’s nothing strange for an old-world plant to be abnormally aggressive, isn’t it? Let’s take this positively and hope that it at least doesn’t come at you with weapons.“

Alpha smiled teasingly, but Akira only smiled wryly at her. After all, it would not be strange to encounter a walking plant with weapons which were not that rare in the eastern district, this kind of plant was commonly recognized as a monster. The old-world technology never stopped messing up common sense in the eastern district even now.

When Akira and the others went deeper to explore the ruin, Reina noticed a signal that they were looking for. She then followed that signal to guide the rest of the team to the facility that they were looking for. When they arrived, they found a tall building with its wall covered in plants and there was a Hunter's vehicle parked not too far. They then parked their vehicles a bit further away from that vehicle and readied their equipment.

Akira lightly scanned the building.

"Reina, is this the place?"

"Probably. Although you might not be able to see it, well, I wouldn't be able to see it too without my special device, but there's a big signboard floating on top of this building that is even visible from afar. It says… The Dunmall Lida East B Hall… Probably."

"You're not sure?"

Reina pouted and replied curtly.

"The decoding software can't fully decode the information. Not to mention, a part of its display is also broken. But even so, I did my best to look for this place, so keep your complaints to yourself. It's not my fault even if it's not the right building."

"Sorry."

Akira apologized instantly and Reina immediately calmed down.

"Uhh, yes… So, it's just that please don't get angry if I got this wrong."

"Don't worry, I know well that we don't have detailed information about the building that we're looking for. Or more like, it's a normal occurrence during a ruin exploration, right?"

Akira replied casually, Reina sighed in relief after knowing that he was not offended.

[Fuuh, thank goodness. I was about to shout as if I was talking to Togami. I have to get my act together. It would be bad if I do that to Akira… Wait, no, it's not like I should not do that to Akira, I should not do that to anyone… It's just that when I did that to Togami, he would just shout back at me without getting angry, I guess that's why I got used to it, huh? I wonder if I'm too used to dealing with him.]

Shiori could somehow understand what was going on in Reina's mind.

"Milady."

"I know, I'll be more careful."

"There's a good chance that we might encounter other Hunters. In case these Hunters have found the automaton first, they would be more wary than usual. So please, be careful, Milady."

"Yes, I understand."

Reina smiled bitterly and took that advice to heart.

After they discussed their roles and formation, they then proceeded into the building. As Reina traced the building's green wall, she discovered that the original entrance to that building was completely blocked by plants. There were some traces that the Hunters who came there before them forced their way through it. So Akira used that opening to get into the building.

The inside of that building was basically a large open room, there were signs of various businesses visible from the entrance. While at the same time, it was also obvious from the entrance that plants had crept into the inner part of the building too. The floor was covered in grass as if it was a grass field.

Akira was surprised to see that as he mumbled.

"This isn't an inner garden or something, right?"

“The dirt on the floor must be from the monster’s corpses after being broken down by the plants. There are also pieces of the flooring mixed in after the roots penetrated through them.”

After listening to Alpha’s explanation, Akira scraped the floor that he was standing on and found the original building’s floor under it. Although the dirt layer was relatively shallow, it was still a substantial amount of dirt.

“So, there are ruins like this too, huh. I feel like the relics inside this ruin would have been turned into dirt too. I wonder if automaton can really survive in this situation.”

“That would depend on the container used to store them. So let’s put our hope in the power of the old-world containers.”

“Now that you mention it, it does sound that they will be just fine.”

Akira knew well just how abnormal old-world technology could be, so he regained some hope to get some old-world relics.

They moved together carefully, moving deeper. Reina used her device to look for where the automaton might be while the other two maintained a safe distance between them while watching their surroundings.

As Akira changed the setting of his information-gathering device to maximize its effectivity inside the building, he had some problems and frowned.

“…I just can’t get a good setting. The objects around me are blocking the information-gathering device. Though I’m pretty sure that it’s not like they are creating colourless mist… What’s going on here?”

“Should I do it?”

“Yes, please.”

Once Alpha readjusted the setting, the sensitivity was obviously better but not as good as Akira was expecting.

“…Is that it? It can work with my augmented suit now, but can’t it be a bit better?”

“I’m sure it’s because of the obstacles around you, they might have some kind of nanomachine that has the same effect as jamming smoke.”

“That would mean it would affect us as much as the monsters, huh. There are not that many open spaces, if we were to encounter some monsters, it’s most likely to be close combat. Putting that into consideration, even if this place is filled with old-world relics, I bet not many Hunters would come to this place.”

“That might be exactly why there is still some of that expensive old-world automaton left here.”

“That does make sense.”

And so, Akira’s expectation toward that rumour went up a little.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 194, False Happiness

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

As Togami and his party proceeded deeper into the building, they encountered a monster along a long hallway.

The monster was obviously a carnivorous monster, it had a thin fur that did nothing to hide its huge muscular body. Its muscles were bulging as if they were some kind of disease instead of a natural feature. It sent a gaze toward Akira and the others as if it was looking at its prey. It then started running with its huge body toward them, its huge legs propelled its body forward while throwing dirt all over the place.

Akira and Togami aimed their rifles toward the monster in front of them, but suddenly, Kanae slipped between them and charged right at that monster.

“It doesn’t seem to have any ranged weapon, so leave it to me. As I said before, I don’t mind helping you out during this ruin exploration.”

Kanae smiled full of confidence and glanced toward Akira and Togami, Togami lightly nodded to give his approval. Kanae confirmed that and went straight towards the monster with a big smile.

Although the dirt prevented them from having any good footing, Kanae equipment allowed her to firmly propel her body against the ground toward the direction that she wanted. So, she darted forth and quickly closed the distance to the monster. The force exerted on the floor would normally crack it open, but thanks to the forcefield technology that expanded a forcefield right at the moment of contact, all of the force were propagated toward momentum without wasting any energy.

Kanae and the monster went at each other with more or less the same speed, the distance between them zeroed in a blink. The monster opened its large mouth to take a bite at her. But Kanae was able to beat that monster by a step, she took a striking stance that focused more on power than speed as she released a powerful high-speed right punch at the monster's head.

Kanae stopped the monster's momentum with that one strike. Although that punch stopped the monster's head, its inertia caused the monster's body to continue forward, bending the monster's body into an unnatural shape. But even that could not push her back. As a matter of fact, the monster's feet left the ground as its forward momentum had nowhere to escape.

Kanae quickly pushed her fist, which was planted into the monster's head, down and slammed it on the ground. Blasting dirt all over the place.

Now that the monster had finally stopped moving, Kanae raised her right leg high and smiled at the monster before sending it down in a swift execution. The enhanced strength from her CQC specialized augmented suit delivered a powerful stomp that easily crushed the monster's head.

Now that it had lost its head, blood pooled under the monster's body, dyeing the ground dark red. Kanae then turned around and walked back to Togami and Akira.

"Akira, Togami, how was that?"

Togami was wide-eyed in amazement.

"…As expected of Kanae-san, that was amazing!"

It was obvious that single demonstration had reminded Togami of Kanae's real power.

Back then in the Seranthal building, Togami did watch Kanae in action, but the situation did not allow him to get a good look at her. Even after he started working with Reina, Kanae stayed around most of the time as Reina's bodyguard, so she did not participate during a fight and Togami had no chance to get another look at Kanae's power.

When Reina and Togami were fighting monsters in the middle of the wasteland, Kanae usually just stood by the side. Togami now understood that although she was there as Reina's bodyguard, she was allowed the choice of not bringing a rifle with her simply because she was this strong with her CQC skill.

Kanae was satisfied by Togami's reply, she then turned to Akira, waiting for his impression. Akira thought for a bit before opening his mouth.

"Hmmm, as I thought, wouldn't it be easier to just kill it with bullets?"

Kanae who was smiling satisfied earlier, immediately pouted.

"…Geez, Akira, don't you like, you know, have something else better to say in this situation."

Akira tilted his head as if he could not understand what she was talking about, so Kanae sighed and gave up expecting praise from him.

"Ah, right, it's fine. Now that I remember it, you're that kind of Hunter…"

"I don't understand what you mean by that, but one thing for sure, it's true that I have no plans to challenge monsters in close-quarter combat. I prefer my rifles."

"Yeah yeah, I know."

Seeing that exchange between Kanae and Akira, reminded Togami of back then during the bounty monster-hunting request when he tried to show off his skill to Akira by killing a monster. And just like this time, Akira showed no interest in that at all. It reminded Togami that Akira was that kind of guy as he smiled wryly.

They then continued deeper into the ruin, they stopped when they arrived in a complex. Reina looked around and tried to get a hint on which direction to go from there.

Shiori, who was next to Reina, noticed a monster nearby.

“Milady, be careful.”

Shiori only said so before she approached a nearby hallway with her hand ready on her blade. The thumping sound of a monster was getting louder and louder from that hallway. The next moment, the same type of monster that Kanae had just defeated jumped out from the hallway.

But Shiori cut that monster down with a single stroke of her blade. When it jumped out from the hallway and momentarily stopped to change direction toward Akira and the others, she quickly drew her blade. Her blade cut through the firm muscles as if it was butter.

Shiori then silently sheathed her blade, while the monster behind her was cut horizontally into two and sprouted blood everywhere before its upper half and lower half fell down to the ground.

Seeing that masterful strike, Akira could not help but mumble.

“Hmm, yep, beautifully done.”

Shiori gracefully thanked for that compliment, but beside her, Kanae was pouting.

“…Akira, why would you do that when it’s Ane-san? Aren’t you a little too biased toward Ane-san?”

“Eh? But that was amazing, no?”

“That’s not the problem here. You told me that you would prefer your rifles before, didn’t you? So why the sudden change of heart?”

“When we’re in a rather closed space and have no choice but to fight the monsters in close range, using a rifle might be a bad choice. Not to mention, some monsters can survive even at close-range shooting, so if you’re confident you can kill it with your skill and blade, there’s no need to be fixated on using a rifle.”

“…No, this is so unfair!! I won’t accept this!!”

“Hell if I care, that’s my opinion, so I don’t care if you accept it or not.”

Reina glanced at Shiori who had returned beside her, she felt happy and proud that Akira complimented her. She could not help but think about what she could do to get Akira’s compliment too, but unfortunately, nothing came to mind.

Reina had learned CQC from both Kanae and Shiori, so she was actually pretty skilled. But she had no chance to show that off here. If she had the chance to fight a monster close by, that would be when that monster had defeated both Kanae and Shiori, and it would only happen under a precarious situation. Before that happened, Shiori and Kanae would have told her to retreat. And even if she said that she wanted to do it, she understood Shiori and Kanae would definitely not let her.

Unfortunately, Reina could not shake that off from her mind, Shiori who noticed that could not help but frown.

Not too long after that, they encountered another monster. Akira and Togami took shooting positions, but Shiori suddenly intervened.

“Milady, may I ask you to handle it?”

“Eh? Me?”

“Yes, I will also help out if things get bad, although Akira-sama is coming with us, this is actually still an exploration mission for Milady and Togami-sama. It’s true that Milady’s main duty in this exploration is searching for the correct route, but if that causes Milady to think that facing the monsters is someone else's duty, it might cause a fatal blunder in the future. In order to keep that in mind, if Milady may."

"I don't mind, but…"

Reina glanced at Akira and Togami, who looked at each other and opened a way so as not to obstruct her aim. Reina thought that it was weird for Shiori to say that, but she then took aim with her rifle.

Reina's rifle was small enough to be used indoors and it had a good sniping capability. It could also be used for continuous shooting of powerful bullets and had a strong recoil. Its aim worked together with her information-gathering device to quickly focus on its target and to do fine-readjustment to increase accuracy when Reina pulled down the trigger. It even analyzed the distance between the rifle and the target and correctly identified when the user intentionally shifted the aim in order to readjust its support accordingly.

Reina looked at the monster's face that was filled with killing intent through the scope, but she was already used to it that it did not even affect her focus. She then calmly pulled the trigger.

The bullet went straight towards the monster's forehead, passed through its body, and came out on the other end of its body. That single shot completely stopped the monster as it fell down limp on the ground, there were 3 monsters and Reina killed all of them with one shot each, the last monster did not even have the leeway to react to its dead comrades.

After Reina did another check on the monsters, she finally sighed in relief and lowered her rifle.

Even when including the advanced features of her equipment, it was a good demonstration of her skill. Togami thought so as he glanced at Akira. Akira already shifted his focus on watching the surroundings as if he was not interested in that at all. That was when Shiori asked him.

"Akira-sama, how was that sniping?"

“Eh? Well, good.”

“…Is it alright for me to interpret that as you having nothing to criticize about that sniping?”

Akira was confused as to why Shiori emphasized that point, but he still took some time first before giving his honest answer.

“Well, let’s see, one shot each from that range, so there’s no bullet wasted and she didn’t give any chance for the monsters to even react, isn’t that good enough? If I want to be strict about it, maybe it’ll be about the price of that strong bullet and the cost-performance ratio of the equipment. But since we are here looking for an old-world automaton, I’m pretty sure the money that we may get if we can find that automaton is enough to justify that expense. But if I have to assume the worst, then all of us here will have to fight the monsters in close combat just like Kanae.“

“Akira, why did you bring my name there?”

“It’s because I have no plans to follow your line of thinking.”

Akira and Kanae started bickering, Shiori just ignored them and turned to Reina.

“Milady, that was well done, Akira-sama also thinks so.”

“…Yes. Thank you.”

Although Reina felt happy that she got complimented and her skill recognized, at the same time, she also felt slightly embarrassed realizing that Shiori needed to ask in order to encourage Akira to compliment her.

They then continued searching the building, although they had enough information to point where the automaton might be, the only hint as to which way to go came from Reina’s old-world signal analyzer device. Furthermore, the software could not fully decode the signal which only added to the difficulty of the exploration.

They encountered some monsters a few times, but the five of them could dispatch those monsters without any issue. Togami and Reina felt that those battles could not be considered easy as they thought of the difficulty to explore the ruin if it were only the two of them. There were more monsters and those monsters were stronger than usual. The inner construction of the building was like a maze and the same plants that enveloped the wall and the floor threw off their sense of direction even further. If they got lost inside that building, it would be difficult to return back alive.

For the record, the information-gathering device that they were using automatically created a map based on the scan result and actively tracked their position, but relying on that map would be far too dangerous. After all, there was even a specialist for that kind of thing. That was just how difficult it was to rely on an active map. Moreover, some buildings changed their contours regularly. They had to move forward taking account of this kind of thing while trusting the information that they had at hand.

Akira spotted some dead monsters, other Hunters must have killed them. Grasses already grew out of those dead bodies, enveloping them as if they were being used as their nutrition. Seeing that, he could not help but frown.

“…The grass here is pretty aggressive. They won’t even wait until the bodies turn into dirt… I hope my vehicle outside is fine.”

Togami replied to that mumble.

“I heard that it’s fine if it’s only for one day. I also heard that if you leave it for more than a day, the plants would entangle the wheels. A high power vehicle might be able to tear through them. As long as the plants don’t damage the inside, we can clear the plants outside with augmented suit, so it should be fine.”

“True, but we spotted some vehicles that were abandoned.”

“I bet those are from the Hunters who thought that it should be fine to leave their vehicles a bit longer outside, and when they realized it, it’s already too late for them and cleaning the plants was too much work for them. We’ll not be staying here for a day, so it should be alright.”

“…You have a point there.”

Akira felt a slight fear for the aggressive plants instead of carnivorous monsters. But Togami had a point there, so he decided to just push his worry aside for now.

Not too long afterwards, they arrived in a huge open space. In the middle of that room, there was a circular stage with a transparent glass column on top of it as if it was to showcase a product. Reina and Togami immediately ran towards it and looked closely at the young girl that seemed to be encased inside that glass column.

“Reina!! Is this it?! Is this the old-world automaton?! It looks completely unscathed too! Oooh! We did it!!”

“The location is slightly different compared to the original information, but it doesn’t really matter as long as we get to find it!! According to the old-world signal receiver, it’s the newest model of the latest series from Mitsuha Jiruba Tech! And the price… It’s 18 million Chrome!?”

“18 million Chrome!? J-Just how much is that in Aurum!?”

“Wait, at the moment, the exchange rate for Chrome is… No, wait, that is Chrome Aurum, so the real Chrom is…”

Reina and Togami were so flustered, they were ecstatic that they found the old-world automaton. Not too long after them, Akira, Shiori, and Kanae approached the glass case too.

“Shiori! Kanae! Akira! We found it!! We did it! Now, we just need to bring this back… Akira?”

Akira did not seem that happy as he gazed sharply toward the glass case, Reina who noticed that finally calmed down.

“Uhh, what’s wrong?”

Akira did not answer her, he just took a step forward and looked closer into the glass case and then mumbled.

“…Hologram?”

Reina and Togame went pale. Shiori took out a device used to check a hologram display and shone it toward the glass case.

“Milady, unfortunately, Akira-sama is correct, this is a 3D display. The object inside it is nothing but an image.”

Even when Shiori shone a light through the transparent glass, the automaton inside it did not cast a shadow on the floor. It was one particular characteristic of a hologram. After Reina and Togami confirmed it themselves, they drooped and looked completely disappointed.

“Akira, you did well noticing that.”

“I had an experience discovering a mountain of expensive relics inside a glass case just to find out that it was nothing but a hologram poster. Since then, I made sure to question what I see every time I see something similar.”

“You really learn from your mistakes, and with this, Milady was able to get a good experience too.”

Kanae lightly laughed and glanced at Reina and Togami, both of whom were practically swept down from the peak of their celebration. It seemed that it would still take some time until they recovered from it.

Since they had gone pretty deep and it was an open space easy to defend, Akira, Shiori, and Kanae decided to take a rest and allow Reina and Togami to regain their spirit too.

Reina and Togami were sitting on a bench with their heads on the table. That bench was a portable bench that Shiori prepared; when it was packed up, it could turn into a surprisingly small object. There were two instant rations on top of that table, Shiori also prepared that for them.

“… I should’ve expected that… There’s no way it’s that easy to find that old-world automaton… Reina, did you get any information mentioning that?”

“…I don’t know… And it’s not my fault.”

“…I know, it’s not your fault.”

Although Reina and Togami had regained enough spirit to exchange words, they still did not have enough power to lift their heads off the table.

While not too far from them, Akira was looking intently at the automaton image with full of interest. The automaton girl image had a very good build, demonstrating the advanced technology used to make that automaton. Its expression was tranquil and peaceful as if it was sleeping or praying. Its feet were not touching the ground as it was floating in the air. It was simply mesmerizing.

Beside Akira, Alpha pouted and complained.

“Akira, if you want a beautiful girl to look at, it’s better if you look at me, you know?”

“That’s not it.”

“Then why are you looking at that doll so closely?”

Shiori suddenly came next to Akira and lightly threw a question to him.

“Akira-sama, it seems that you’ve been looking at this image pretty closely, by chance, are you interested in this kind of thing?”

“Well, it’s not like I’m not interested at all, but to be more precise, I’m interested in what kind of place old-world era was where selling this kind of thing was the norm.”

“It depends on the indicators that you use, but automata are commonly sold even in this era. If Akira-sama goes to one of the shops selling automata, you might be able to get a better image of what kind of place the old-world was.”

“Ohh, you’re right, now that you mention, we also have automata in this era too… Though I don’t think that they will let me even come close to that kind of shop.”

Akira said so and smiled bitterly in self-mockery. A part of him was clearly still stuck back in the slum city. He still believed that people would not allow him to get into such a high-class shop.

Shiori found it weird that Akira looked down on himself that much as she gently said to him.

“If I’m not mistaken, you should be able to find such a shop in the Kugama building. I believe that the shops there would not turn Akira-sama away.”

“…Is that so? By the way, how much does an automaton usually cost?”

“To be honest, I am not really knowledgeable regarding this matter, but 1 billion Aurum should be enough to get you a pretty good housekeeping automaton.”

Akira felt a bit troubled when Shiori said that number so casually.

“Uhh… So then, what kind of thing can an automaton do?”

“Cooking or cleaning room, basically to do housekeeping.”

“Oof, that’s pretty expensive just for that.”

“Automaton is a luxury item after all.”

It showed an obvious economic gap between those who were surprised by that price and those who were not.

“To be honest, just because it’s a luxury item, I don’t think it justifies the price you put on it though. If it’s that expensive, isn’t it cheaper if you pay someone to do that instead?”

“Indeed. If it’s something that a human can do, it’s cheaper to do that. There are many things in this world where this is true, this includes being a Hunter.”

“…Well, now that you mention it, that’s true.”

Akira smiled wryly. If sending automata to explore a ruin was cheap, the Corporate Government would have done that. So in short, the only reason why people had Hunter jobs was because sending automata was economically not feasible.

Sending Hunters with cheap lives into the ruin allowed the City Management to gain profit even when half of those Hunters did not return back alive. That was the truth of being a Hunter.

Shiori once again noticed that Akira was smiling in self-mockery, so she then continued.

“As Hunters get better, the occasion where they get injured or even lose their lives in the wasteland decreases. As such, it allows Hunters to increase their gains while suppressing their expenses in order to gain a profit. Many Hunters decide to continue working as Hunters because of that. I believe Akira-sama is already one of those Hunters.”

If alive, they would bring a big profit, if antagonized, they would cause a lot of damages. Although there were many different points of view to judge this matter, whether it was better or for the worse, people put an expensive tag on the lives of those kinds of Hunters. Even if everything in this world could be replaced in one form or another, if it was difficult to get a replacement, their existence would be forgiven.

Akira’s origin as one of the worthless kids in the back alley of the slum city was slowly being replaced to that of an important Hunter.

Akira blushed and looked away.

“…Thank you.”

“You’re welcome.”

Shiori replied with her usual smile.

After that, Shiori and Akira continued to talk about a lot of stuff. He could sometimes feel the high-class lifestyle from Shiori's answer and he listened with full of interest about that matter.

"I did say that an automaton might cost about 1 billion Aurum, but that would be an automaton with a personality. An automaton without personality would be more like a robot with cheap AI and this kind of automaton is basically cheaper. But of course, this kind of automaton is less advanced than the former."

"Uhh, but both automata with personality and without personality are using AI, right? So what's so different between them?"

"Although this would be a vague explanation since there's no clear distinction between them, basically, the non-personality AIs are more like robots. When we mention AI, there are those AIs made for chess or other board games, right? It's like using the learning ability of that kind of AI for cooking, cleaning, or fighting. This kind of AI would not be able to hold a proper conversation with people. If you would like an AI which can do that, then it's better to get the automaton with personality. When someone mentions automaton, most people refer to the automaton with personality, which is closer to a human instead of a robot, and this kind of automaton is quite advanced so it is fairly expensive."

"Hmm, so it's not that simple, huh… So, which one is it when we talk about old-world automata?"

"Almost all discovered old-world automata are automata with personality. Not to mention, they are advanced AI since they were made with old-world technology… Although, because of that, they tend to cause trouble."

When Akira was about to ask what Shiori meant when she said that, Reina, who had her head on the table, suddenly raised it. Akira and Shiori noticed that and stopped their talk. Reina then drunk the rest of the drink on the table in one go and shouted.

"Alright!! That's it!! Togami!! Stop wallowing and get up! Let's continue the search!!"

Togami slowly pushed his body up.

“Just to let you know, I was only waiting for you to get up.“

“Then you could have told me that. You’re the leader this time, right?“

“I feel like the more I tell you to get up, the longer you would sulk, that’s why I didn’t do that.”

“…Just get up already and let’s go!”

“Roger that.”

Togami lightly smiled and held back from shouting a reply to Reina as he rose up from his seat. Akira and Shiori glanced at each other with a smile and walked towards Reina and Togami.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 195, First Come, First Served

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Not too long after they resumed the exploration, Togami's party arrived in a place that had a completely different feel compared to the other areas. That place was untouched by the plants, the border between the floor and the wall of that room was pure white to the point that it was hard to spot.

Togami signalled the whole party to stop.

"Reina, did you get any readings?"

"It says… Unauthorized personnel are not allowed to go through here? I don't see any more augmented reality sign boards past this place. It might be adjusted so that normal people can't see them."

"Can you check using the staff setting?"

"I can try, but it might be pointless. Even if I can, it might take too much time."

"…If there's a warehouse only for staff, it should be somewhere ahead. I think we're closer to our target now, let's go."

They went into that hallway carefully. Walking through it threw off their sense of time, but for them, it was a common thing inside a ruin.

If this place was kept clean because of the cleaning drones, then it would not be strange for them to encounter security drones too. Those kinds of drones were harder to defeat than common monsters. Getting hypnotized by that ambience of the old-world tended to be fatal even for Hunters with augmented suits.

As they moved carefully deeper into the hallway, they spotted another Hunter standing guard near the entrance of a room. That Hunter also noticed Togami's party and immediately shouted at them.

"Stop there! If you get any closer, we'll see that as an act of hostility!! Where are you from? If you're from the Yuzumo Industry, show your ID!!"

Togami showed that he had no wish to fight as he answered.

"We're Hunters from Drankam!! We're here looking for relics and got here by pure chance!!"

The Hunter lowered his guard for a bit and contacted his other Hunter friends. Not too long after that, another Hunter came out from the room to confirm what was going on. That Hunter was the leader of the team, Kurosawa.

Kurosawa saw Togami and raised his eyebrows.

"You…"

"He said that they are Hunters from Drankam. What should we do? Should we send them back?"

"No need to do that. There's no need to pick a fight with Drankam. I'll talk with them myself to warn them not to do anything suspicious… After all, I bet half of it is a lie when he said that they got here by chance."

"So basically they too, huh. I'll leave them to you then."

“Yeah.”

Kurosawa already knew about Togami from Shikarabe when they went to drink together. He remembered that conversation well since it was rare for Shikarabe, who hated young Hunters, to highly praise Togami.

He thought that it was weird to meet him here. But nonetheless, he invited Togami and his party in.

Kurosawa listened to what Togami had to say not too far from the entrance of that room.

“I’m Kurosawa, the leader of the Hunters here.”

“I’m Togami, the leader of this team.”

“I see, well now, let’s have a talk between team leaders. I let you guys in since it would be bad to cause a scene in the hallway, but once we’re done here, it would be great if you can keep away from this place. It’s for the sake to avoid any unnecessary fights, you see.”

Togami slightly curled his lips.

“We’re here looking for relics. I can understand that you don’t want us to come to this room, but I don’t see any reason why we need to keep out from this place.”

“Oh, but there’s a reason for that.”

“Really?”

Togami’s expression that only showed reluctance and slight irritation immediately showed hostility. As the leader of the team, it was not like Togami could just accept that demand. His gaze toward Kurosawa turned sharp.

But even so, Kurosawa stayed calm.

“You’re here looking for the old-world automaton, right? Although I don’t know if the source of your information is the same as ours, if it was, then you’re out of luck. We have secured the warehouse first, it’s just up ahead.”

“Eeeh!?”

Togami’s face turned completely flabbergasted. Reina was the same too.

“A-are you being serious here?”

“Yeah, the small room ahead houses cases of 4 old-world automata. Although we only checked them by looking through the case, it seems that they’re in pretty good shape too. I thought that rumour was not that credible, but it turned out that we hit the jackpot.”

“F-four of them…”

Reina once again hung her head down, and this time, it was deeper than last. Kurosawa smiled bitterly, he understood how that felt.

“We’re in the middle of securing this place while waiting for the specialist dispatched by Yuzumo Industry. Having other Hunters roaming around this place might lure in some monsters, not to mention that those are definitely priceless relics. So it might invite a misunderstanding if you stick around. We might begin to think that you guys are waiting for a chance to snatch them away from us. It’s just that dangerous having other Hunters around. That’s why I want you to keep away from this place after this, I hope that you can understand.”

Kurosawa had a light smile when he was talking up until now, but then his gaze suddenly turned sharp.

“…But if you insist on staying around after this, we’ll see that as an act of hostility. So we will handle that situation accordingly.”

Togami and Reina were hanging their heads low, but with that light intimidation from Kurosawa, they immediately frowned and flinched back.

Shiori and Kanae slightly shifted their stances to protect Reina. As for Akira, he did not show any reaction to that at all.

Kurosawa returned back to his usual light smile.

“Well, to be honest, I have no plans to get into trouble with Drankam if it can be helped. And I know that Drankam is aiming to be a well-reputed Hunter gang from the City Management’s point of view, right? It’s better for both of us to stay away from unnecessary fighting. So, what do you think? To be honest, I want to solve this peacefully if possible…”

Now that Kurosawa said that he had no wish to fight them and he even brought up Drankam too, Togami had no other choice but to comply.

“…Alright, but I want to talk this out with my team first as to what to do next. So it would be helpful if you allow us to stay here for a bit longer.”

“Very well. But 10 minutes. That’s all the time you have. It would be troublesome if you use this place as a resting place after all. Meanwhile, feel free to come to me if you have anything you want to ask. I’ll answer your questions if it’s something that I can answer.”

Kurosawa then left Togami’s party alone.

Togami heaved a huge sigh as if to expel everything inside his heart. Although he said that he wanted to stay in that room for a bit longer to talk with his party about what to do next, to be honest, he just wanted to get some time to gather his motivation again. Others understood that, so they were just standing there in silence.

When they had spent 5 minutes of their precious 10 minutes, Reina shook her head as if to shake off the disappointment on her face. She then pulled herself together and gathered her resolve.

“…Well, I was already prepared for something like this to happen, let’s just move on. Togami, what’s the plan now?”

Togami was a bit surprised to see that Reina recovered sooner than he had expected but he was being careful not to show that on his face.

“Hmmm, let’s forget about the automaton and look for common relics instead. Or we can pin our hope on finding other old-world automata in here by searching other buildings too. Or, if it isn’t worth looking for common relics here, we can just head back home. Basically, these are the options available to us. So, we either continue the exploration or stop here. To be honest, I’m not sure myself. So, what do you guys think?”

Togami thought that it would be dangerous to continue the exploration when everyone was in such a bad mood, that was why he asked for others’ opinions there.

Shiori took the initiative and answered first.

“Very well, I put one vote to return back. It’s important to be able to adapt to unforeseen circumstances, but you should know when to give up as well. We should not explore when our minds are focused on something else, and that is also true we get too greedy. In order to get readjust our equipment, I believe that it would be better to return back.”

Kanae realized that Shiori was trying to turn the discussion into a vote, she then smiled and said.

“In that case, I put one vote on continuing the exploration. It’s just that, I haven’t gotten my fill of fights yet, so I don’t really mind either way whether you want to look for old-world automata or normal relics.”

Shiori sent an intense glare at Kanae, but Kanae looked back, as though saying ‘well, you did turn it to a discussion that has to be voted on’.

“Either way is fine for me. If there’s a stalemate, I put a vote on the same one as Togami, he’s the leader at the moment after all and I did promise him that I’ll follow him for now.”

“…I agree with Akira too. You’re the leader today, so it’s up to you.”

Akira thought that he was an outsider in this case, that was why he let Togami decide. But for Reina, she was taking advantage of Togami since she could not decide.

Togami hummed, with Akira and Reina leaving it to him, he could not share the responsibility in case he made a wrong decision there. As the leader of the team, he had to make a decision before he ran out of time, and he did not have much time left.

Some of the Hunters in that room looked a bit surprised at Togami's party.

"…A maid? There are maids here. Those guys are Hunters from Drankam, right? So that rumour about the gang paying maids for the Hunters is true, huh?"

"I bet those maids are only using an augmented suit that looks like a maid uniform. It must be based on an augmented suit that they found in some ruin. After all, old-world clothes are really durable for some reason."

"Hmmm, but they do have an aura of being real maids though? Although… only one of them does."

"Even if they're real maids, do you really think that they will come to ruin with maid uniforms? Of course not. Well, it's not like I know a real maid though, so I can't really say that for sure."

"Now that you mention it, that's kinda true."

"I heard that there are companies offering combat-trained maids as bodyguards for the people in the inner walls, you know. So they might have something to do with that type of corporation. They might even have originally come from there. Either they only get their equipment from those kinds of corporations, or they are originally from there and retired to be Hunters, either way, I don't think they are real maids."

The Hunter who was listening to his friend talking rather fervently about that subject found it to be unexpected.

“…You know quite a lot for someone who said that he doesn’t know about this kind of stuff.”

“Well, it’s fine, isn’t it? By the way, talking about Drankam, I heard the young Hunters from that gang did pretty well in the Kuzusuhara ruin recently..”

He flinched a bit and was obviously trying to change his subject.

Most of them were only talking about Kanae and Shiori just to kill time. But that was not the case for one person, a Hunter by the name of Rodin, who was staring pretty intently at Shiori.

Shiori, who was standing next to Reina, left a deep impression on Rodin. Her young, strong but beautiful appearance. She stood straight, which demonstrated her loyalty, her calm demeanour radiated her devotion and faithfulness, it fully emphasized her relation with Reina as a master and a servant. That scene strongly pulled Rodin’s interest.

As he was no longer able to hold back his feelings, he went to Kurosawa to find a way to satisfy his desire.

But Kurosawa quickly shot down his plea.

“No.”

“Come on, it’ll be fine.”

“No, it won’t be fine. As I told you before, we won’t try to look around the ruins anymore in order to focus our manpower to secure this place. If we send people out there, we will have fewer people posted here. There’s no guarantee that they would leave this place obediently after this. In the first place, even if we get to find more automata, we don’t have enough men to secure those automata too.”

“We can split the team in half and…”

“That’s an idiotic idea, so, no. If we chase for two rabbits, we will lose them both. With those guys here, it means that there’s a good chance other Hunters have heard about this place too. And they already know that we did find four automata here, so their view of that rumour would have already changed into it being worthwhile information. With this, other Hunters might change their method to get the automata from searching to robbing. Hence, we need all the people we have to stop those fools and we can't afford to split the team."

"…But like, weren't you the one who told them that we did find the old-world automata here?"

"We're doing all we can to secure this place, so it doesn't take much to infer that we did find the automata here."

Rodin did try to wiggle his way but all of his ideas were rejected by Kurosawa.

"Cut this out already, it's a no. That's final."

In order to cut that discussion there, Kurosawa said so with a stronger tone. Rodin reeled back and stopped arguing any further.

Kurosawa then offered some words of consolation to him.

"We already got ourselves 4 automate, isn't that good enough already? Just give it up. Getting too greedy will only get yourself killed, you know. It's important to know when to stop. In the first place, we still need to make sure to get the specialist to check them, bring them back safely, and finally exchange them for money before we can call this expedition a success. We can't afford to relax until we get that money. So just focus on completing this first, okay?"

"…But I won't get one for myself if I do that."

Rodin mumbled with a low voice that Kurosawa did not catch, but it was obvious that he still had not completely given up on his idea. Kurosawa understood that very well as he sighed.

Although Kurosawa was commanding the team, he actually was not a full-fledged member of their team, he was just paid to lead the team.

Kurosawa was often chosen to lead a team of Hunters since he was able to perform well during an exploration of a difficult ruin and he tended to prioritize safety when he was forced into a difficult battle. Although some Hunters ridiculed him as being a coward, he was the perfect person to rely on if the goal was to increase the team's survivability, or when it was important to prioritize safety over profit, or when there was a need to explore a ruin with limited information.

And since he was often paid to lead other teams, he often had to deal with Hunters who would not listen to him. Kurosawa thought that was the case with Rodin too, so he dealt with him accordingly.

"Well, I'm just a temporary commander paid to lead the team. If you say that you won't listen to me, you can go ahead and do anything you want. But, if anything bad happens, I won't take any responsibility. That is even if you get yourself or someone else killed because of your action, so I won't accept any pay cuts if that happens. Tell others too if anyone has the same opinion as you."

Kurosawa immediately shifted his focus somewhere else after he said that. Rodin, who was left behind, made a grim face. Kurosawa then thought.

[…Even those who paid me a ton to lead them would sometimes decide not to listen to me… Relics always tempt people, I need to be careful myself.]

Kurosawa lightly chuckled and shook that thought from his mind as he started thinking about what to do, assuming that Rodin would not survive.

Togami's party decided to leave the ruin. But it would not be in a straight path, instead, they would visit some buildings to search for relics on their way out of the ruin. As the leader of the team, Togami decided to take their time leaving the ruin while salvaging some relics on their way out.

As they returned back to the plant-covered part of the ruin, they once again followed Reina's device to decide which way to go. After all, it would be difficult to find relics in a place where everything was covered by greenery, that was why they decided to rely on Reina.

They took their time checking places that might have some relics left while making sure not to veer off too far from the route to the exit. In the middle of that, Reina picked a room mostly based on her guess. They left the guard duty to Shiori and Kanae as they started looking for relics in that room.

Inside that room, Akira spotted a shelf covered in plants. He used the power of his augmented suit to tear the plants and opened the shelf. He found that it was filled with tube-like objects. He grabbed one and took a closer look, it seemed that the tube-like object had something solid inside its semi-transparent body. But Akira still could not identify what that tube object was.

“What is this? Alpha, do you know what this is?”

“That’s an old-world clothing article.”

“So it’s a dress? This thing?”

Akira raised his eyebrows and tilted his head, Reina noticed that.

“Akira, did you find something?”

“Yeah, but I’m not sure what this thing is, do you know what this is?”

Reina caught the tube-like object and took a closer look at it. The moment she realized what that was, she flinched a bit and her face turned slightly red.

“I-I think it’s some kind of old-world clothing… J-Just maybe though. Something is inside in a pressurized state.”

“Is that so? That’s pretty amazing, how could you tell?”

“W-well, I can see that information from the old-world augmented reality view. Although you can’t see it, I can see it.”

“Ohhhh, what kind of cloth is this?”

Although Akira was asking casually simply out of curiosity, that made Reina flustered even more. She then replied as if she was avoiding that subject.

“…Maybe like… Some cloth with an old-world design?”

“Well, it’s an old-world relic after all, so that’s given, isn’t it? But well, it’s true that some designs of this era try to imitate it. Is this that thing that people call the old-world style design?”

“Y-yes.”

“In that case, they might fetch us some money. I’ll bring them back to the city.”

Akira started stuffing his rucksack with the relics that he just found. Togami who noticed that approached him.

“Akira, did you find something?”

“Some old-world clothing articles.”

Togami took one of the tube-like objects and frowned.

“…This thing here?”

“Yeah, Reina said so based on the information from the augmented reality… Wait, but that doesn’t mean all of these tubes are old-world clothes, huh?”

Akira then extended the relic in his hand toward Reina, Togami followed suit.

Reina took the relics and checked the inside, her face then stiffened and slightly blushed as she said.

“…Some of them are not.”

“Is that so? What are the other things mixed here?”

“…Accessories, toy, or some kind of tool.”

Akira found Reina’s expression rather strange. So he made his own guess.

“Judging from your expression, it doesn’t seem to be that valuable, huh? Well, in that case, can you check all of them and separate the cheap relics?”

Reina seemed to hesitate and was at loss for a few seconds before she said firmly.

“No, let’s bring all of them back. It’s not like I’m that confident in my skill to appraise relics anyway. We can just throw them away if we don’t have enough space in case we find a more expensive-looking relic later. Yep, we’re Hunters after all, so we need to be able to at least make this kind of decision, right?”

Togami nodded deeply.

“You have a point there. Alright then, let’s take all of them together.”

“…Me too? Ah, right, let’s do that.”

Reina suddenly started helping Akira and Togami gather the relics as if she just had a change of mind. Of course, Akira did not just ignore that.

Unlike Akira and Togami, Reina was able to identify the content of the relics they were gathering there, and she did not expect to encounter some of them in such a place…

[Alright. Now, I’m also a Hunter, right? I’m not in a position to be nitpicky about the relics that I find. If I start doing that, I won’t be able to stay as a Hunter. Yes, that’s right, that’s the right attitude for a Hunter… I should be happy that we found some expensive-looking relics!!]

Reina said so to herself as she picked up the pace to finish gathering the relics there before Akira or Togami asked any more questions.

[…I chose this shop by pure coincidence, but I didn’t expect it to be that kind of shop.]

The inside of the shop was already claimed by plants, the walls were already in a very bad shape from the withering, while the information from the augmented reality was also badly fragmented. It showed nothing of the state of the shop back when it was still open.

Even if Reina told Akira and Togami this, it would not clear their suspicion. She at least knew that much.

Reina gave her best to keep her calm as she continued stuffing the relics. Fortunately, no one noticed her acting rather awkwardly there.

Silavin: My my Reina, how are you so knowledgeable about such things?

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 196, Handle With Care

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Rodin activating an old-world automaton was the result of multiple coincidences layered on top of each other, basically, it was his bad luck.

The chance that his friends got that information about the old-world automata.

The chance that they decided to pay Kurosawa to lead the exploration when they were preparing it, thanks to that, they were able to safely reach their destination, although hiring Kurosawa was not cheap at all.

After they found the four automata, Kurosawa decided that it was impossible to secure more automata in case something bad happened. So to prevent any complications, he told his men to stop searching the area anymore.

Thanks to the agreement between Kurosawa and Togami's party, Akira and the others left the area right after. Thus preventing them from finding any nearby automata if there were still some left.

Kurosawa did tell Rodin to at least convey his warning to the rest of Rodin's friends, but Rodin deliberately left that out from his explanation to his friends. Therefore, the rest of the team thought that Kurosawa gave Rodin permission to go. Thus they did not say anything as they allowed Rodin to go alone to search around the area.

That was the reason why Rodin was able to reach this place. After he left the room, he randomly looked around and came to this area by pure chance where he found more old-world automata.

The automaton was inside a container in the middle of a relatively small room. From the outside, the container looked like a stasis pod. The upper part of the lid was made of a transparent material, which let Rodin clearly see what was inside that container. The automaton had female features and was in a deep sleep inside that container.

Rodin was mesmerized by that automaton and smiled widely.

Normally, he would immediately return back to let the rest of the team know. That was the best decision considering the risk and reward ratio. But his smile turned wry, he seemed to be seriously at a loss as he just stood there.

There were many relics in the ruin that were dangerous to mess with. When Hunters found them, they tended to keep their fingers away from them and asked specialists to handle them. Of course, there were many types of old-world relics that were treated this way as it was common-sense among the Hunters, and the old-world automata were one of them, as a matter of fact, Kurosawa did exactly that.

But there was one big con with that process. The credit of finding the relics would usually not go to the Hunter, but to the specialists whose services were expensive. Most of the time, these specialists got their cut right after those relics were sold to some companies through their connection. Of course, it was not a problem at all for the Hunters who only wanted to exchange those relics for money, but it was a big problem for Hunters who wanted to get their hands on those relics themselves.

When a Hunter called for a specialist, normally, the deal was for the Hunter to accept that the specialist would take the relics and sell them. It was still possible for the Hunters to buy those relics themselves, but considering that there were large corporations vying for the same relic, normally these Hunters had no winning chance at all.

After taking his time calculating his options, Rodin extended his hand to the terminal of the container. Although he did not understand what the buttons were for, he started pushing the buttons randomly while checking the reactions. He carefully pushed the buttons and flicked the switches on the touch screen panel, only to find that there was barely any reaction at all, but that did not stop him.

Rodin always had a zealous admiration toward maid automata and it was doubly true for old-world automata. Thanks to their mechanical bodies, they retained their young and beautiful appearance, and as a machine, they had an unwavering “loyalty” towards their master. It was as if those automata were made just to fulfil a certain desire, an oxymoronic existence made into reality through old-world technology. When Rodin knew about them, he knew well that it was impossible for him to get these automata, but even so, he still could not help but yearn for them.

Although it was a very rare case, there were reports when a Hunter somehow activated an old-world automaton and that automaton registered that Hunter as its master by pure luck.

Those super lucky Hunters would then explore the ruins with their advanced automata, thanks to which, they were able to quickly reach success and became first-rate Hunters. This kind of rumour was not that rare in the eastern district. Although they were rumours, parts of them must be true. After all, even a short investigation could easily uncover those Hunters.

One thing that Rodin did not take note of was that those rumours also said testing luck by doing something similar was not recommended at all.

But even so, he still decided to test his luck here, and the reason for that was because he saw Shiori not too long ago. The figure of Shiori standing straight next to Reina was like his idealistic admiration brought to life and it aroused his desire. Even more so when the automaton in front of him was already in a maid uniform.

Although he understood that it was a dangerous bid, he could not push aside the chance of getting an old-world automaton. Considering this chance might not come to him ever again, Rodin could not stop himself from testing his luck there.

That was when all the luck that was piling up on one another was extended even more. The container in front of Rodin that was wrapped in a dark cloud suddenly made a hissing sound before opening up.

As Rodin unconsciously took a few steps backwards, the lid of the container was fully opened and the maid automaton inside it finally opened its eyes. It then pulled itself out from the container and got itself standing on the floor.

The rush of anxiety and happiness that filled Rodin's mind caused him to make an awkward face as he said to that automaton.

"H-Hey!"

The automaton turned toward Rodin with its face devoid of emotions.

Then at the next moment, the automaton formed its hand into a chop and thrust it toward Rodin, impaling him right through his chest. Its white-glove covered hand easily pierced his augmented suit and planted itself into his chest, up to its wrist.

Rodin raised his eyebrows in surprise, he then smiled wryly and made a sad face. Before all of his luck could bring him a good end, he had reached a bad end first. He lamented as he fell down to the ground.

"…Yep, saw that coming…."

The pain and reality pulled him back from his thoughts, he was back into his Hunter mode. While enduring the fatal wound on his chest, he reached for his rifle and shot at the automaton.

It was common sense among the Hunters in the eastern district that when they found an old-world automaton, they would have to call for a specialist and definitely keep their hands off the automaton. The real reason for this wisdom was simply because there were already so many Hunters who ended up dead after not obeying that warning. When a Hunter activated an old-world automaton inside the ruin, most often than not, the automaton immediately turned hostile and killed the Hunter who activated it.

From the ruin's point of view, these Hunters were like armed robbers. Although different automata had different A.I, most of them had the same view as the ruin regarding the Hunters. Thus in order to retain their value, they would try to kill or repel these armed robbers.

After that, some automata with better A.I would gather information from what they could see and react according to the emergency protocol based on the old-world standard. And thanks to their advanced technology, most of these rampaging old-world automata were designated as bounty monsters.

Some people believed that this was fake information spread by huge corporations in order to protect their profits. Because of this, there were people who thought that the chance of the old-world automata recognizing the person who activated them as their master was actually higher than what was rumoured, not to mention that there were super lucky Hunters who served as evidence to this doubt too. This was the reason why there would always be Hunters who were willing to test their luck.

Rodin was one of these Hunters. Unfortunately, he did not win his bet and now, others would have to pay for it too.

__*__*__*__

As Togami's party was riding their vehicles through the wasteland heading out from the ruin, Akira thought of something and threw a question to Togami.

"By the way, you did say that you're planning to not spend a night in this ruin, right? Will that still be true if we had found an old-world automaton?

It seemed that those guys were standing inside that room for quite some time, you know? I bet they've been there for more than a day."

"To be honest, even if we had found an old-world automaton, I thought that we would find it in broken condition, which in that case, we can just carry it back normally."

"Is that so? Then if we had arrived in that room first, we would have had to give up carrying the automaton back, huh?"

"That's not exactly true."

"So, you had another plan?"

"Although I don't really like it, I had 2 plans. The first is to contact Drankam and ask for their help. In that case, we would have to prepare to guide them to the old-world automaton. I'm pretty sure we will have a smaller cut if we do that though, that's why I don't really like it. The other plan is to break the automaton to make sure that it won't go on a rampage before carrying it back. If we can skillfully break it, we might be able to restore it later, but of course, this would lower the selling price too. To be honest, it feels stupid to be breaking the relic that you have worked for, that's why I don't like this idea either."

In reality, back then when they found the holographic image of the old-world automaton, if there was a sign that it might cause any danger, Kanae and Shiori would have stepped in and destroyed it without even consulting first.

"…Although I will only decide based on the situation when we find the automaton, it's basically one of those two plans."

Togami frowned as he imagined being thrown into that situation, he then noticed Akira was looking surprised at him.

"…Anything wrong?"

"Nothing. I just thought that you really have put some thoughts into this."

“Of course. Exploring ruins is basically gambling with my life after all. It’s only given that I would at least consider such a situation, even you do that too, right?”

Akira awkwardly looked away and made eye contact with Alpha who was smiling teasingly at him, so he looked away from her too.

Seeing that, Togami was rather surprised to know that Akira actually did not think that far. He was not sure if he should be exasperated by that or if he should be impressed that Akira had survived this far with such a naive way of thinking.

__*__*__*__

Back to Kurosawa’s team.

The Hunter who was guarding the entrance to the room where they were standing by, spotted Rodin returning back.

“You’re back, huh. Good grief, just what the heck were you think-”

He was about to welcome Rodin back with a light joke, but his face immediately changed when he saw Rodin’s condition. Rodin was stumbling and dragging his legs in a hurry through the hallway, leaving a trail of blood behind him.

“We’re under attack!! Rodin is injured!! Asking for reinforcement!!”

After he shouted that into the room, he immediately ran to help Rodin. The moment he lent his shoulder to Rodin, who looked like he was about to fall anytime, Rodin immediately fainted which might be because he thought he was finally saved.

Kurosawa and the other Hunters darted out of the room. Kurosawa then told them to watch the direction where Rodin came from as they approached him. After they met up, Kurosawa immediately put down a foldable turret and expanded it. As the gun rapidly unfolded, it turned into a huge gun with a barrel that was longer than the width of the hallway.

Kurosawa quickly scanned and checked Rodin's condition. The life-support medicine, the augmented suit that helped him to move even when he was seriously injured, and his skill to explore the ruin alone allowed him to return back alive.

"We can still save him!! Get him inside and treat his injury, quickly!!"

The guy who was carrying Rodin hurriedly went back into the room. Kurosawa and the other Hunters slowly retreated back to the room too while still keeping their eyes on the hallway.

[…One injury in his chest, but what caused that injury? It's not from a bullet… Horn then? But I don't think we have spotted monsters with horns around this area.]

Kurosawa's thought was cut short as he saw an old-world automaton coming at him. Since it had a maid uniform and a figure of a young lady, he thought that it was Kanae or Shiori at first, but he immediately understood that was not the case.

"…An active automaton?! Is that blood on its glove?! So it was from that automaton?!"

Kurosawa immediately held down the trigger. The explosion filled the hallway with smoke. He had preset the warhead to explode after a fixed time such that it exploded right before hitting the automaton.

When the smoke cleared up, the automaton was no longer present, not even the leftover wreckage could be seen there. Kurosawa frowned and clicked his tongue.

[…It got away, huh. I bet that one did not damage it that much. Seems like the warhead exploded before it should, did it break the explosion timer? Or maybe it hacked into the warhead timer? As expected of an old-world automaton… it's really advanced…]

Kurosawa was relieved that it at least left them alone for now, so he folded his gun and continued to ponder.

[Maybe I should’ve used rifle mode instead of cannon mode…]

Kurosawa lamented his bad decision as he retreated back into the room.

He glanced at Rodin who was being treated on the floor.

“How is he?”

“He’ll live. But he won’t be up anytime soon.”

“Can you at least get him to wake up? I have questions.”

“That’s not gonna happen. It’s a pretty bad injury, so he’s basically under the stasis mode to make sure he survives. If we wake him up, it might cause his situation to worsen, he might even die.”

“…I see.”

Now Kurosawa had to think of another approach. The other Hunters who saw him at a loss got curious.

“Is there something you need to check as soon as possible?”

“Yeah, I want to know what happened when he got attacked. This is just my guess, but I bet he got attacked by an old-world automaton. I saw an automaton back there, unfortunately, it got away though.”

Murmur propagated through the other Hunters.

“So, there are more old-world automata?”

“Don’t tell me Rodin activated an old-world automaton.”

“We don’t know for sure yet, it might be just a humanoid robot, right?”

Kurosawa raised his hand to calm the other Hunters down.

“That’s what I want to ask this guy. In the worst-case scenario, if he really has woken up an old-world automaton, we might need to break the old-world automata that we have right now.”

“B-break them?”

“There are 3 possibilities. The first one is that this guy found an old-world automaton and activated it, this would be a relatively better scenario though. The problem is if the automaton activated on its own even without him trying to do that. It would have been better if it was because there was an activation button that only comes up when you get close enough, but it would be really bad if it activates on its own in order to remove any unauthorized intruders. This would mean that the other 4 automata that we’re guarding might activate anytime soon. After all, that one automaton might have been activated simply because the system is still in the middle of its activation sequence. A full-fledged old-world automaton is often designated as a bounty monster, and we have four of them down here with us. If we have to fight them, it would be super tragic.”

The Hunters looked at each other worriedly. Although they understood that the four automata with them were a huge liability, they did not want to break the expensive relics that they had found if it could be helped.

“B-but it’s just your guess, right? It’s not like we have to break them just because we considered the worst-case scenario that is unlikely to happen, right? The specialists that we’ve called will get here soon enough. We just need to wait until they get here…”

Kurosawa threw a death glare to the Hunter who was voicing out that naive thought and immediately shut him up.

“I’m sure some of you think that I can do something crazy since I was only paid to lead the team, so I have no business regarding the profit that you can get from this exploration and whatnot. I won’t deny it, that’s why you decide what to do. As I thought, the amount of money in line here is just too huge, so it’s not for an outsider like me to decide.”

“W-wait, it’s your job as the leader to make that decision, right?!”

“If it’s up to me, then we’ll break the automata. Are you okay with that?”

After Kurosawa warned the Hunters as such, they staggered back and went silent.

“I’ll go watch the hallway, so you guys can take your time to make your decision. There are too many things that we don’t know at the moment. The situation might get worse the longer we delay, or it might not. We might be able to wait for the specialists to get here first, or we might be already well too late now. Just remember that when you take your time discussing.”

Kurosawa then turned around and headed to the entrance as the other Hunters behind him started debating.

__*__*__*__

As Togami’s team headed outside the ruin while searching for relics that they could gather on their way out, Akira suddenly threw a question to Alpha.

“The thing that we talked with Shiori about, it seems that I can get an automaton for 1 billion Aurum, do you think it’s a good idea to get one when I have some leeway?”

Alpha frowned.

“I don’t think that it’s necessary. but… Do you want one?”

“No, I just thought that you can control my augmented suit and my vehicle, right? So you might be able to do the same for the automaton too.”

“But I don’t want to.”

That short answer was filled with rejection.

“I-I see.”

Akira was shocked since that short answer was more of Alpha’s revulsion towards his suggestion than it being impossible. There was a brief awkward pause, Akira then tried to change the subject.

“It was just a simple thought, nothing more. It’s not like I’m planning to force you to do it. It just reminded me of Tsubaki back then when she was using an old-world automaton.”

“That was an old-world automaton and it was a rather good one too. Not to mention, it limited its control to only simple movements while making sure not to affect the independent AI inside that automaton. So the situation is not the same here.”

“Ohhh, I see.”

“Yep.”

Akira remembered back then when Alpha got angry the moment he referred to her as an alarm clock. But this time, it was obvious that she was angrier than back then.

“I know that you had no bad intention when you suggested that, but never bring this subject up again, okay?”

“Alright.”

Alpha then smiled to let Akira know that her mood was back to normal. But Akira’s frown still stayed for some time.

⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯*⎯⎯

It had been quite some time since Kurosawa let the other Hunters discuss what to do from there. Since nothing big had happened, the Hunters regained their calm and their opinion started to lean toward waiting for the specialists to arrive.

Even Kurosawa himself started to think that he might have been a bit too paranoid.

[It has been quite a while since we repelled that automaton and it did not return back to attack us, not even once. Does it really plan to leave us alone? The reading from the containers inside the room also does not show anything suspicious, it doesn’t seem that they’ll wake up anytime soon… I might have gotten a bit too paranoid back then. Well, either way, we know for sure that there's an active old-world automaton roaming outside and that in itself is already dangerous enough. But as long as it doesn't come for us, there's no need to deal with it. I'll at least let the specialists know and leave the rest to them.]

Kurosawa did think for a bit about where the automaton was at now and what it was doing at the moment. His sight slightly shifted up while he was still looking toward the small room that he and his team was securing.

That was when he spotted the automaton in a maid uniform standing on the other side of the ceiling on top of that small room. It was sending some data into the automata inside that small room. But it was not a simple activation signal, the automaton was hacking through the container.

Of course, the container was secured with old-world technology, normally, it would have been impossible to try to break through it. But the old-world automaton used its own communication device to access the ruin's signal receiver to imitate it using its advanced computation ability. It was only a matter of time before it broke through the security system.

The automata inside the small room opened their eyes. They then broke through the container using brute force by banging and kicking the lid away.

Kurosawa immediately noticed the signal coming from the information-gathering device planted inside the small room and sprung into action.

"The automata are activating!! Get to your battle station!!"

Although the automata were activated, they might not be hostile. But Kurosawa did not hesitate to throw away that possibility and changed his rifle into machine-gun mode. The moment it finished changing mode, he immediately started blasting. The bullet storms ripped through the door and straight into the room, he could hear the sound of bullets ricocheting from inside the room.

Even if the door opened, Kurosawa would not stop shooting in order to prevent the automata from leaving that room as well as to buy some time for the other Hunters to finish their preparations. The other Hunters present there were not amateurs, although they were surprised by that sudden change of events, they immediately got to their positions. Kurosawa just had to buy them a few seconds.

But those few seconds were hard to get when Kurosawa had to face 4 old-world automata.

The door was blasted away followed by containers flying out from inside the room straight in Kurosawa's direction. Kurosawa understood that it was impossible to shoot them down, so he leapt aside to avoid them.

In the middle of that, he saw two automata hiding behind those containers to block the bullet storm…

Kurosawa was about to shift his focus to those two automata that were aiming for the exit, but the remaining two automata left inside the room immediately started to move and took his attention so he had no other choice than to let the other two pass by. One of the two automata threw the container at Kurosawa while the other one used the broken container as a blunt weapon against the other Hunters.

Kurosawa jumped aside one more time to evade the incoming container, he aimed at the automaton attacking the Hunter to try to stop it. But that created a small opening in which the other two just blasted past Kurosawa and escaped the room.

[Dammit, they got away!! No, I should just think that it's a good thing we have fewer automata to face now! I can just think of the reason why they broke their forces up later! At the moment, I just need to focus on the enemies in front of us right now.]

Before the Hunters were able to regroup, the automaton swung the large container toward the Hunters. The Hunters who could not get away in time were smashed and crashed into the wall, it even left a dent on the durable container.

The Hunters who were finally ready started shooting one of the automata, but it was closing in too quickly. It was clearly aiming for close combat. In that situation, the Hunters might shoot their friends by mistake.

The Hunters had to pay for their mistakes by destroying the automata that should have been an expensive relic. Now that those automata had turned into dangerous enemies, they could not afford to stop fighting in order to survive.

***

Even with its long skirt that extended down its ankles, the old-world maid automaton blazed through the ruin. Its long hairs that were present more as decoration than for anything else, would have normally tangled up here and there, but it agilely moved around while making sure that would not happen. It was all possible thanks to its advanced computation ability as an old-world automaton.

Shortly after, the other two automata that had gotten away from Kurosawa appeared behind that automaton. The other two automata just followed that single automaton as if they were under its control.

While they were still running through the ruin, the maid automaton grabbed something from under its skirt and threw it at the other two automata. The other two automata naturally received them.

The three automata then moved through the ruin as if they were a single team.

Silavin: WTF did my boy Akira do to you two? Why are you chasing after him? Is it the toys!? Is that it?

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 197, Resistance

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Togami's team finally finished gathering relics and left the building. Reina stretched out and said in a content tone.

"Although we didn't get to find any old-world automata, I think we did get a good amount of worthwhile relics this time."

They at least got some relics to bring back home, they were even able to fill up a couple of rucksacks with those relics.

Togami himself was relieved after finally getting out from the ruin. But after he saw Reina and noticed her putting down her guard, he then said to her, which also served as a warning to himself.

"We're basically still in the middle of ruin exploration. So don't relax until we reach the city. Being a full-fledged Hunter also means that we have to make sure we can exchange the relics for money afterwards."

"I know, we're technically still inside the ruin after all. Ah, right, Akira. Can we ask you to carry some of the relics…? Compared to your APC our vehicle is a little small after all."

“Sure.”

“Thank you.”

With this, Reina shifted the relics which were a little embarrassing to carry around as she smiled happily, but of course, she hid that smile inside his heart.

They then quickly finished their preparation and got on their respective vehicles.

__*__*__*__

Kurosawa’s team somehow managed to destroy the remaining two old-world automata.

Although they got some of their team members injured, they quickly regrouped and focused their firepower to corner the automata to the point that their bullets literally formed a wall. They riddled the automata with bullets and pushed it to the wall in order to seal its movement.

While the other Hunters suppressed the automata’s movements, Kurosawa swapped his rifle to cannon mode. With the automata unable to move, it was quite easy to shoot a warhead that could even destroy a tank at them. The old-world automata were indeed smart and durable, but Kurosawa had prepared that warhead expecting a fight against old-world automata. And as expected, the automata could not stand a direct hit from that warhead and finally stopped moving.

Although they were destroyed, they still retained their original shape. From outside, they still looked like they could move. So just to be safe, Kurosawa shot them one more time before finally calming down.

“Damn it, I ended up having to use that expensive warhead. How’s the damage?”

“Four are badly wounded. I’m not sure if the automata did that intentionally to make others cover for them or simply because it only aimed to make them unable to fight and there was no need to kill them.”

“It doesn’t matter, get them treated now. Don’t let them die if we can save them. Check how much ammo you have. If some of you are low on ammo, get those who still have a lot of ammo left to share theirs.”

The Hunters immediately sprung into action. Kurosawa returned back to the entrance of the room to stand-watch, and one of the Hunters then approached him.

“What’s wrong? Is there a problem?”

“…Not really.”

“I can stand-watch here by myself, go get some rest with the others if you have nothing to do.”

But Kurosawa noticed that the guy still stood there looking at him, so he frowned and asked.

“What is it?”

“…Well, ahh… Sorry, we should have listened to you and destroyed the automata.”

“Don’t mention it. Choosing not to destroy them at that time was not the wrong decision. It’s just that you lost the coin toss, that was all there was to it.”

“But still…”

The guy still looked troubled, so Kurosawa looked at him with a serious face and said to him firmly.

“This is not the time to worry about that. We know that there are at least three active old-world automata out there. We have to somehow manage to hold out by ourselves until the specialists get here. So get a hold of yourself.”

That guy was obviously surprised.

“We were able to repel the one that attacked Rodin and the other two ran away, right?”

“Don’t forget they might come here again bringing more friends with them. Also, they might have just gone to get their weapons. We’re still not safe yet, if you want to lament your decision, at least wait until the specialists get here and we know for sure that we’re saved. Tell this to the others too.”

The guy’s apologetic face was replaced with a serious look. Kurosawa then sighed and mumbled.

“…Though, to be honest, they should be here anytime soon. I wonder if they got into some trouble or something? Good grief, just give me a break already…”

Kurosawa made sure not to let his team hear that since it might affect their morale. He also made sure not to let his team see him making a difficult face in such a precarious situation.

__*__*__*__

Togami’s team went from the centre of the Lida commercial district, through the gaps and valleys between the plant-covered buildings, and eventually reached the outskirts of the ruin where plants started to thin out.

Akira was driving with a rather content face.

“Well, I did get some good loot for today although I went out to the wasteland with no particular plan.”

Alpha who was sitting on the driver’s assistant seat smiled at him. There was a slight trace of exasperation in her smile.

“Akira, just to make sure that you understand, this doesn’t mean it is a good idea to keep exploring without a plan, you know?”

“I know, but it’s fine to celebrate for a bit since it has been quite a while since the last time I managed to do a successful ruin exploration, right? Ah, we’re still basically not done until we reached the city, huh.”

Akira was not that serious when he said that. But Alpha suddenly made a serious face, Akira who saw that immediately tensed up.

“Akira, be careful.”

“I know, there’s no need to make that face…”

“No, we have a company chasing from behind.”

Seeing Alpha making a serious face when she said that, Akira immediately switched to battle mode.

“Monsters?”

“It depends on what defines a monster. We have 2 humanoid signals, they’re closing in on us at a high speed, it’s as if they’re either cyborgs or using augmented suits. But if they are Hunters and they want to talk with us, they should at least send us something beforehand through close-range communication. So I don’t think they’re friendly.”

Akira left the wheel and let Alpha take control of the vehicle as he went to the back of the APC. He then took his equipment and checked their condition before opening the back door of the APC and sent a call to Reina.

As Akira opened the door, Reina’s vehicle came into his view. Reina who was driving the vehicle and Togami who was sitting next to her looked confusedly at him. Akira’s gaze shifted from Reina’s vehicle to behind it and focused his information terminal in that direction. He then could see a male and a female in an old-world style dress running at a high speed from behind Reina’s vehicle although the plants that covered the ruin made it difficult for them to even sprint.

“Togami, I don’t know what’s going on here but someone is chasing us from behind. Tell me what you want to- Watch out!!”

At the same time Akira shouted, Alpha suddenly accelerated the APC. His body obeyed the inertia and swayed. In the midst of the swaying vision, he could see the female carrying a cylindrical object in her hand and a blade of light extended from that object the moment she swung it.

A few minutes before Akira contacted Togami and Reina, Kanae also noticed that signal.

“Ane-san. Someone is chasing us.”

“…Indeed.”

Shiori tensed up while also impressed by how sensitive Kanae was as always. She then looked back to check what was chasing them.

“Not monsters…? People?”

“It seems to be people, but those are not Hunter equipment. At this rate, they’ll eventually catch up to us. They don’t look like the kind of people who would try to get something that we dropped by accident though…”

“Milady, there are-”

When Shiori was about to let Reina know, she could hear Akira’s voice shouting at them through the vehicle’s information terminal. Right at the next moment, Shiori grabbed Reina and Kanae grabbed Togami from behind and jumped off from their moving vehicle.

A split second after that, the light blade swung by the female chasing them split Reina’s vehicle cleanly into two. But even after it was split, both the right and the left sides of the vehicle that were separated from each other continued moving forward due to the inertia. It then rolled over a few times before finally stopping.

Both the male and the female humanoids chasing Togami’s team were old-world automata in butler and maid outfits. The female one once again swung its blade chasing after Shiori, while the male which was carrying a rifle went for Kanae. Shiori covered Reina as she repositioned herself for battle while Kanae signalled Togami to stand back as she focused her attention on the incoming automaton.

But suddenly, a storm of bullets swallowed both automata and threw their bodies back. It was Akira shooting at them with SSB rifles in both hands. The normal bullets were released at a mini-gun-like speed, emptying the magazine in a flash.

“Alpha! Did that do it?!”

“Unfortunately, that didn’t hurt them by much.”

Akira ejected the empty magazine, using his time compression, he let go of his rifles, reached for nearby magazines, threw them up in the air, grabbed his rifles back, agilely pushed them against the flying magazines, and finally completed the reload.

“I know they were just normal bullets, but that was a highly compressed barrage, you know?! What the heck is with them? Aren’t they just too durable?!”

“I bet they are old-world automata, and they’re high-quality automata on top of that.”

Akira then remembered back when he had to fight old-world automata in the Kuzusuhara ruin and could not help but nod with a rather conflicted face.

“That would explain their durability!! Are they here to get back the relics since we took too many of them?”

“Just keep shooting. If we can destroy them, we can bring them back as relics too.”

“Oh, that’s a good point!”

Akira reactivated his time compression. He thought back to how relaxed he was, and that ruin exploration was not over until he arrived safely back to the city. This made him believe that he might have jinxed it as he smiled bitterly.

Akira was successfully able to provide suppression and prevented the automata from making any complex manoeuvres, but that was not enough to destroy them.

Reina and Togami were so surprised that they were late to digest what just happened.

Shiori considered all her options there as she glanced at Akira. Akira was shouting something, although she could not hear anything from that distance, she judged that Akira was telling them to get to him as fast as they could. She then glanced at Kanae with a serious face, Kanae looked back at her and smiled.

“Milady! Excuse me!”

“Togami-boy!! Make sure not to bite your own tongue!!”

Shiori grabbed Reina while Kanae grabbed Togami. Then without any prior explanation and without asking for permission first, they threw Togami and Reina straight at Akira.

Reina and Togami were still having a hard time following what was going on when they were flying through the air. Akira realized what Shiori was trying to do, although he was surprised, he immediately stopped shooting and threw his rifles up. He then caught Togami with his right hand to make sure that he would not crash into the APC, while he caught Reina with his left hand in a gentler manner as if he was hugging her. He then quickly let both of them go and caught his rifles back.

Akira’s focus returned back to Shiori and Kanae who were facing the automata. Shiori and Kanae stayed behind to buy some time for Reina to get away, and now both of them were already approaching their respective opponent.

Akira understood that Shiori and Kanae were prioritizing on getting Reina to safety first. But he then looked back at Reina and Togami, thought for a bit, and walked past them toward his bike.

Reina, while still confused from being thrown, could not catch up with the information flooding her five senses.

When Akira walked past her, he was in a rush which caused her to follow him with her eyes. She saw him get on his bike and the next moment he had already jumped out of the APC, landing smoothly on the ground and blazed straight in Shiori and Kanae's direction.

As the scene of Shiori and Kanae, who were left behind, got smaller and smaller with time, and the back of Akira who was riding his bike straight at them, made Reina feel like they were leaving her behind. It felt like she was running away while they were buying time for her. It replaced her confusion with frustration and hopelessness.

Reina, who was crushed under her emotions, stood up and walked as if to jump off the APC and rush towards Shiori and Kanae. Togami who noticed that flusteredly stopped her.

"Let me go!!"

"Wait!! What are you planning to do after you jump off?! Just calm down for now!!"

"Let me go!! Just let me go!! If I… If I run away here, then I… Again…"

With teary eyes, Reina flailed her arms to get away from Togami. Seeing that, Togami tried to stop her with a stern face.

Togami understood Reina's feelings well. That day, back in Seranthal building, when he got a good view of how weak he was, he felt as if all that he had gone through to get stronger were in vain. It felt like all the hard training and achievements that he had gathered as a Hunter which supported his confidence were being shredded to pieces.

He thought that he had become strong, but it was nothing but his imagination. When push came to shove, he was still part of the group that was being protected. That feeling of hopelessness when he realized that he could do nothing to fight back against that fact was crushing his spirit even at this moment. Togami and Reina both felt the same right now.

The only reason why Togami was able to somehow get a hold of himself was simply because he thought that in the worst-case scenario, he should at least get Reina to safety. It was the least he could do as the team leader. His duty as the team leader was to somehow manage to prevent himself from being crushed by his hopelessness.

But for Reina, who did not have that responsibility, she had nothing to defend herself from her feeling. Shiori and Kanae stayed behind to buy her time, Akira also decided to join them, while she was the only one who stayed in safety. The merciless time did not stop as she was stuck in that situation where she did not have the power nor the skill to fight back. Even if she jumped off the vehicle, she could not provide any help at all against those automata. She would be nothing but dead weight, and she would pull Shiori down even more if she stood in a dangerous place thinking that it was safe. That truth was breaking her heart.

Togami was relieved that Reina had calmed down, but at the same time, the sight of Reina looking meek left a pang in his heart. But even so, he tried to think of a way to at least be useful in that situation. He tried to contact Akira to ask him about the APC that most likely was running on autopilot.

Akira picked up the call and said in a rather uninterested voice as if this was nothing but a normal occurrence to him.

“What is it? I’m sure you know that I’m busy now, right?”

Before Togami could answer that question, Reina yelled at the terminal first.

“Akira!! Why did you leave us behind!! Are you trying to say that we’re nothing but dead weight to you!? Are you telling us to just obediently run away!?”

That yelling was a small resistance against her hopelessness, it was a shout to help herself stop the surging self-depreciation. Either way, if Akira said yes there, it would have completely broken Reina's heart.

But Akira replied with something that she did not expect at all. He replied back with a rather confused voice.

"To be honest, I was hoping that you can give me support fire from there though. Judging from your skill back when we were exploring the ruin, you should have no problem shooting from that distance, right?"

"…Eh?"

Reina paused for a bit after giving that short answer, which sounded as if she returned back to her confused state. Hearing that, Akira then said curtly.

"Don't give me that 'Eh?', I've set the APC to just go around randomly after it gained some distance from me. If it got too far, give me a call and get on the wheel yourself. You can also use the gun on the APC, but I haven't done any readjustment, so make sure not to shoot me by mistake."

"Eh, ah, okay?"

"I know that you might not be happy after getting sent flying like that, but I bet Shiori and Kanae did that because, unlike both of them, you guys are nothing but dead weight in close range combat. If you have any complaints, you should voice that to them later. It's not like I can do anything about it even if you vent that onto me, you know?"

"Ah, right, sorry."

"You can use the ammo there too, I should still have quite a lot left over. So if you say that you'll run away since you have no ammo left, I won't accept that excuse, okay?!"

Reina immediately raised her voice.

"Who would say 'I'll run away', huh?! Don't look down on me!! I won't run away, okay?!"

“Is that so? Well, then, I’m counting on your support.”

Akira then closed the call, Reina knew that he could no longer hear her as she shouted.

“‘I’m counting on you’, he said!!”

Reina hid her delight with that angry shout.

“Togami! We’re not running away, alright?!”

“Of course!!”

“Now you are talking!”

Strong will filled her body, she took in her surging resolve and let it course all the way to the very end of her limbs and hairs.

“Let’s show them what we are made of!!”

Seeing how Reina got back on her feet, Togami felt delighted and banished his own frustration from his mind.

The pillar of confidence that was about to break got even stronger than before. Although the situation had not changed at all, Reina and Togami no longer allowed themselves to be swept by the situation, they now stood to fight back against the flow.

Akira was riding on his bike with an SSB rifle in each of his hands. Alpha, who was floating beside him, looked a bit surprised and asked him.

“Akira, are you sure you’re okay with that?”

“I did fulfil my responsibility. If they decided to stay and join the fight then get killed by that, it’s not my fault. They didn’t pay me to be their bodyguard and I don’t remember ever accepting something like that, right?”

If he ran away from that place after leaving Shiori and Kanae as decoys, it meant that he would be indebted to them, and that was doubly true if Shiori or Kanae got killed because of that. At least, that was what he thought. But with this, even if Reina got killed because he went to help Shiori and Kanae, then it would not be his fault though Shiori and Kanae might get angry because of it. Or at least, it would not bother him as much. He followed that egocentric line of thinking as he jumped out of his APC on his bike.

Alpha let out a big sigh.

“So, how much support are you expecting from me this time?”

“Enough not to get me killed.”

“Roger that!”

Akira only gave a vague answer and Alpha did not ask for more than that.

Shiori activated her blade while she approached the female automaton. Her blade then started vibrating and gave off a dim glow, she gracefully and agilely swung that sword with her augmented physical ability thanks to her augmented suit. The swing sent out a wave of glowing particles which could cut any matter apart, it was as if she sent off a sharp blade flying.

It was actually a killing move since the average person would not be able to evade it and be sliced up by the wave. But the female automaton jumped away as if she knew the nature of that attack and used her own blade to block the wave and dispersed it.

The dispersed light particles shone on their faces. In contrast to Shiori, who had a rather grim expression, the automaton was emotionless as if she felt no danger from Shiori at all. The difference in their expression showed the gap between their strength.

The automaton swung her blade to counter, Shiori, who was using an accelerator drug with suppressed side-effects and prolonged effect duration in exchange for its power, saw the incoming blade. She aimed to throw the automaton off-balance by parrying its blade using the solid portion of her own blade. But the moment she realized the slight movement of the incoming blade, she immediately switched to completely avoiding it.

The automaton's blade went through Shiori's blade without any resistance and sliced everything beyond it. Although her blade was not damaged at all, that attack left a scorched slice marking on the ground and the plants that came in contact with it.

[That blade is the type that can alter its physical existence at will! This is getting troublesome…]

The blade that the automaton was using was a relic that was like a retractable baton. It was using the energy source from the automaton to overcharge its attacks. Because of that, it had enough slicing power even when in its retracted state.

The opponent was strong, she would not have enough leeway to fight such an opponent while protecting Reina, that was why she threw Reina to Akira's APC. Then in order to prevent that automaton from destroying Akira's APC, and in order to get Reina from that place safely, she decided to stay behind. She was relieved that it was the right choice, but at the same time, she was also hard-pressed since the automaton was stronger than she had expected and knitted her eyebrows.

Shiori and that Automaton exchanged slashes in an intense close-range combat. Every time they swung their blades, there was a trace of light in the air which demonstrated how intense their exchange was.

While on the other side, the male automaton took a kick from Kanae. But as that kick landed on its body, it also jumped backwards to reduce the damage from that kick. As the kick sent its body flying, it thrust its leg to the ground as a brake and drew a long straight line on the ground. When it finally stopped, it had fully recovered its balance and aimed its rifle at Kanae before releasing a few shots of beams at her.

Kanae accurately judged where it was aiming and blocked the beam with the forcefield armour erected from the equipment on her right hand. The beam was deflected by that force field armour and vanished into the wasteland along a straight line. The automaton then released 3 more shots. This time, Kanae blocked it with the forcefield armour on her left hand.

The automaton then stopped moving, still, there was no change in its emotionless face. In contrast to that, Kanae was smiling menacingly, but she suddenly sighed and mumbled.

“Ahh, this isn’t fun at all. Even if it’s a humanoid robot, fighting against a robot still feels like I’m just fighting against a punching bag…”

As her expectation that this might be fun melted from her mind, she let out a chilling cold aura and her smile faded from her face.

“I guess I’ll just break it and get this over with.”

Kanae said so with a cold emotionless intonation as she quickly closed the distance between them. Another beam was released at her, Kanae accurately predicted where it was aimed at, but unlike last time, she took the minimal move to evade it as if to intentionally graze the beam and closed the distance between them in an instant.

The moment she got close enough, Kanae released a punch with her right fist straight at the automaton’s torso. Since she no longer had any fun fighting that automaton, and she had lost any interest in it, that fist was purely aimed to break it. And as expected, it ripped through the durable old-world automaton’s torso, dealing significant damage.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 198, Automata

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira blazed through the slippery floor on his bike. Vines and moss covered the small rubbles, making it even easier for the tires to slip. But with the ability of Akira's advanced bike designed for use in wasteland together with Alpha's support, he was able to keep driving at a high speed as he kept his eyes on Shiori with a grim face.

Once he got relatively close, he aimed both of his SSB rifles at the female automaton and released a barrage of armour-piercing rounds. The expensive extended magazine housed way more bullets than a normal magazine and he emptied it in that barrage.

Right after that, the female automaton noticed the incoming bullets and jumped away while swinging its blade as if to cut down the bullets. The light particles left from those swings turned into a wall, it then reacted with the colourless mist in the atmosphere and transformed it into a forcefield. The forcefield killed the momentum from the bullets and deflected them away from their original trajectories. The automaton also actively evaded the already deflected bullets, thus allowing it to survive the barrage without even a scratch.

Akira was surprised by that, but he immediately changed his aiming from targeting at a single spot to indiscriminate shooting. After all, even an old-world automaton would not be able to evade all of those bullets coming at it like a wall. And as he expected, some of the bullets landed.

But with the lower firepower, the landed bullets could not damage the automaton. As a matter of fact, the automaton made use of the shock wave from the bullets to propel itself further away as it kept swinging its blade. When Akira finally stopped his bike next to Shiori, the automaton had already left the place.

Akira lowered his rifle and mumbled with both of his eyebrows raised.

“I should’ve been able to land a few bullets though? Just how durable is that thing?”

Shiori, who had already changed from her blade to her rifle in the middle of that fight, also lowered her rifle and frowned at Akira.

“Akira-sama. Thank you for the help, but I would have preferred if you prioritized Milady first.”

“It’s Togami’s job to decide when to retreat, and that includes convincing Reina to obey his order. Even if that order forces her to retreat. So, I won’t accept any complaints regarding that matter.”

Shiori sighed and smiled wryly.

“Maybe I should hire you as a bodyguard next time.”

“Yeah, you can do that. But either way, I’m sure Reina would not be happy.”

“Don’t worry, it’s my duty to convince Milady in that case and Akira-sama would be the decoy.”

“I see.”

Shiori lightly smiled, Akira also replied with a smile. That was when Kanae returned back to them.

“Akira, there you are siding with Ane-san again. That’s not good, you know.”

“Not really, it seemed that you’re doing fine, that’s why I went to help Shiori instead. How about the other automaton by the way?”

“Just like the one that you faced, when you arrived, the other automaton also ran away. I didn’t give chase since it seemed to be too much trouble.”

Akira then remembered the time when he fought old-world automata back in Kuzusuhara ruin.

“…The other one also got away, huh? Hmm, to be honest, I feel like that kind of enemy would keep coming until they are killed though.”

“It’s not like I can do anything about it.”

“You’re right. Alright then, let’s go back. Ah, sorry, by the way, this bike is only for one person. So the both of you need to use your legs.”

Kanae exasperatedly sighed and shook her head.

“Akira, you really don’t know how to treat a lady, huh. This is where you should let the lady take the bike, you know? I’m sure if it’s only me and Ane-san, we can somehow fit on that seat.”

“No!”

Shiori smiled seeing Akira reject that idea almost instantly and Kanae’s exasperated face.

“Akira, keep your guards up.”

During that small breather, Akira suddenly returned back to his battle-ready state. Shiori and Kanae who noticed that immediately scanned their surroundings.

“Alpha, where is it?”

“From the ruin, and there are a whole lot of them.”

Akira glanced at the ruin and could not help but frown. A swarm of monsters including the plant-type monsters from the ruin was heading towards him.

“Whoah, how did we not notice that swarm at all?”

“It is probably because of the interference from the other plants.”

“So basically, those plants are of the same type as the ones inside the ruin, huh. Good grief, what a pain in the neck. But still, what the heck is with the size of that swarm…?”

“This is just another guess, but I bet the automaton summoned them. It’s difficult to detect monsters in this situation but it’s easy for the monsters to detect us. I bet those automata broadcasted a signal to let them know our location. Old-world automata have the energy source to do that after all.”

“Don’t tell me that those automata only retreated because they’d done their job in slowing us down?”

“The possibility of that is not zero.”

Akira frowned even more while still gazing at the incoming swarm. Suddenly a bullet flew past, landed on the monsters’ forehead, instantly killing it. But it did not stop there, more bullets came in and killed some of the monsters. When Akira was surprised by that, Togami’s voice came in from his information terminal.

“Akira! Kanae! Shiori!! Come back here now! The radar detects a whole lot of monsters from that direction!! Reina will take care of incoming monsters, so just ignore them and get in here fast!!”

Before Shiori could tell him to just forget about them and run away, Togami already closed the call.

“M-Milady…”

“Go!”

Shiori inadvertently turned to the source of that voice and met Akira’s gaze.

“It’s your job to convince Reina, right?”

Akira was basically saying that he would be the decoy this time, thus erasing any hesitation left inside Shiori.

Shiori then said firmly with a serious face.

“I leave the rest to you.”

“Just go.”

Shiori bowed to Akira and started running toward Akira’s APC where Reina was.

Kanae still had her usual smile as she said.

“And there you are siding with Ane-san again. As I said before, that’s no good, you know?”

“Save it for later and go.”

“Good grief!”

Kanae laughed amusedly and left without looking back.

Akira aimed both of his SSB rifles at the incoming swarm and quickly emptied his magazines.

The bullet storm swallowed the monsters, turning countless monsters into minced meat. The monsters behind them just stomped their dead comrades under their feet as they kept marching forward. The green floor of the ruin immediately turned red in a blink of an eye.

Since Reina switched her rifle's mode to sniping in order to provide support for Shiori and Kanae, she was able to quickly detect the incoming swarm. The bullet that she shot with a proper aim pierced through multiple monsters as if it was sucked into their bodies. The power of her rifle, her talent, and her calm aiming, the experiences from all the training and battles up until now, all of these factors combined into one, allowing Reina to release high-performance sniping with an exceptional firing rate.

Shiori emphasized long-range sniping for Reina in order to keep her away from danger while still allowing her to provide support when she was together with Kanae and Shiori. After all, Kanae had a habit of jumping into danger. The result of that training was fully showcased in this situation.

Reina could see Shiori and Kanae running in her direction while making sure not to obstruct her aim, while Akira was following not too far behind them while shooting at the incoming swarm. Seeing that, Reina felt that she was finally no longer a dead weight. Although it was a special circumstance, she was able to move on from the one being saved to the one who was saving others.

That was when she ran out of ammo. As it pulled her back into reality, her smile turned into a slight frown. She realised that she had used all of the reserve ammo.

"Togami!! Bring me more ammo!! Something that my rifle can use!!"

Togami put a magazine that he found inside Akira's truck beside Reina. Seeing that magazine, Reina could not help but crack a smile.

"Ohh, he has some rather nice things here."

"Akira did say that we're free to use anything inside his APC. But if he gets angry later, you should apologize with me, alright?"

Reina put that magazine into her rifle while smiling teasingly.

“Oh my, that part is your job, no? That kind of thing is the party leader’s duty, you know.”

“Geez.”

Togami smiled wryly and returned back to shooting. After loading the new magazine, Reina carefully took another aim, aligned the cross-hair with her target, and pulled the trigger.

The bullet that Reina released soared to the sky and unnaturally made a turn, seeking its target. The power of that bullet was also as strong as she had predicted, she then took aim and released another shot.

Homing AP bullet. Size-wise, it was more or less as big as a mini-missile. And the magazine that Reina was using was an extended magazine of that bullet. It was an expensive magazine for Akira even after applying the special discount for Hunters above Rank 50. He had originally saved it for emergencies.

Akira watched the bullet fly past above his head and zoom at the monster in front of him.

“They’re using it!! My special ammo!! That was expensive, you know!! And I haven’t even used it myself!! Not even once!!”

Alpha, who was next to Akira, smiled at him.

“You did tell them that they were free to use any ammo inside your APC. So just think of it as a good thing since it’s worth its price.”

“…My reward, I’ll make sure that they’ll pay for my ammo first before dividing the reward this time.”

Akira said so to get his mind off that matter for now as he gazed at the expensive bullet that blazed through the air and struck down the monster in the front line.

“But still, isn’t that just too many of them? Alpha, as I thought, something weird is going on here.”

“You’re absolutely right. Even if they came here because those two automata summoned them, there should not be this many. As long as we don’t include the monsters from the inner part of the ruin, there should not be this many monsters. But even if we understand the reason now, it won’t help us in our current situation. So just focus on the monsters in front of you for now.”

“I know… I guess I should get a little bit closer.”

Akira then accelerated his bike towards a part of the swarm that was less dense and kept his finger down on the trigger. The bullet storm released from his SSB rifles killed so many monsters, but it was not significant when compared to the entirety of the swarm.

“…There’s just no end to them. I left the rest of my ammo back in my APC, this might be a good time to return back.”

Akira made a 180-degree turn and headed back to his APC while wondering if he was cursed to encounter a monster swarm no matter where he went.

Meanwhile, the old-world automaton in a maid uniform stood in front of one of the countless semi-sphere structures scattered in the Lida commercial district. It then used its communication device to send a signal to that semi-sphere structure. Not too long after, a flood of monsters appeared, all of them were aiming toward that automaton as it escaped.

The monsters were chasing after the automaton, but suddenly, that automaton vanished before appearing again somewhere further outside the ruin.

The swarm of monsters was baited outside the ruin just like that and then baited further toward Akira’s direction.

Shiori eventually caught up with Akira’s APC and jumped to board the APC. The first thing she did after that was to check on Reina.

“Milady!! Are you alright?!”

Reina seemed to be smiling amusedly as she replied.

“Shiori, that’s my line.”

“…You’re indeed right, Milady. I am alright for now.”

Kanae also jumped into the APC not too long after that.

“This place is so cramped, make some room, will you?”

“This means that Akira is the only one left, huh?”

Togami then looked back at Akira and saw him accelerating his bike right toward the APC.

“…Whoah, wait a sec! Don’t tell me that he’s planning to jump in with that bike!?”

As if Akira was affirming it, he accelerated his bike even more. In front of the panicking Togami, Akira used the control device of the bike to spring it upward before it landed on top of the APC, making a bang sound.

Reina and Togami looked at the ceiling and mumbled.

“…That was amazing.”

“That guy is good with basically anything, huh.”

Kanae smiled at that amazing performance from Akira, while Shiori looked worriedly at Reina, hoping that Akira would not be a bad influence on her.

Akira stepped down from his bike and looked back at the monster swarm coming at him while still standing on top of the APC. The monsters seem to be chasing vigorously, as a matter of fact, they were running faster than the APC.

“These guys really don’t know when to give up. Alpha, can you drive the APC faster?”

“Unfortunately, no. The ground is not suitable for high-speed driving, and the APC is filled with heavy armour tiles, relics and ammo too. Although the APC has high horsepower, it’s not that much.”

“I see, well, it can’t be helped then.”

“Oh, are you planning to throw away some weight? That would be a huge waste, you know.”

“Not that, I’m going to shoot at them!”

“I’m just kidding.”

Akira heaved a huge sigh in reply to Alpha’s inappropriate joke and aimed his SSB rifles at the monsters. But in the next second, his vision blurred.

Akira’s augmented suit suddenly moved with its full power. Akira tried his best to match his body movement with his augmented suit, he could even feel the air resistance from making such a sudden move. But in the midst of all of that, he still could see Alpha’s grim face, which was more than enough to know just how grave the situation was as he immediately went straight at the incoming enemies.

The two automata that had run away suddenly landed on top of the APC as if they were warheads. The shock shook some of the armour tiles off the APC and even broke through the APC’s forcefield armour, which could even withstand a tank shot, leaving a huge dent.

As the broken armour tiles flew around in slow motion, the male automaton quickly aimed its pistol at Akira and released a beam shot.

Seeing the beam that was coming at him from close range, Akira stomped on the APC’s armour tile on his feet, enough to break it, as he quickly evaded the beam and leapt straight toward that automaton. As Akira tackled the automaton down, he thrust his SSB rifle right toward the automaton’s chest and pushed it down onto the top of the APC. Now that the male automaton was stuck in between the APC's armour tile and Akira's SSB rifle, it had no method to evade as Akira released a rapid barrage that even broke his SSB rifle due to the recoil.

There was almost no space that separated the muzzle and the automaton's chest when Akira released this barrage. The bullets collided with each other applying massive pressure focusing around the part of the automaton's torso which had already been damaged from its fight against Kanae. The bullets eventually pierced the automaton's torso and destroyed its generator.

The moment the female automaton landed on the APC, it immediately launched an attack at Akira. It quickly expanded its collapsible baton that was already transformed into a blade of light and swung it. But before it could land, Akira's bike suddenly accelerated to its maximum speed and rammed straight at the female automaton. The collision threw the automaton off balance, causing it to miss its swing. The blade of light drew an arc on Akira's side and hit the APC's body, releasing a blinding light on contact with the APC's forcefield armour. As the blade extended way longer than its corporeal body, the rest of the blade went past one corner of the APC and sliced the monsters that were nearby.

The energy conversion of the forcefield armour filled the area with blinding light, the armour tiles that were still in the air blocked the light and created contrasting shadows. Akira pushed his time compression to its limit to the point that everything else almost stood at a standstill. In this slow-moving world, he sent commands to his body so that it would be able to match the speed of his consciousness.

The automaton cut open a path through Akira's bike that was protecting him. The bike that was cut in two rolled over and fell off the top of the APC. But when the bike was sliced through, its forcefield armour was boosted to the maximum in order to reduce the durability of the automaton's blade as much as possible.

As the bike rolled over on the wasteland's floor, the female automaton did not waste the opportunity and closed in on Akira. In reaction to that, Akira also quickly closed the distance between them since the automaton's blade had lost most of its power. Due to both of them colliding at each other, the automaton did not have the chance to take another swing with its blade.

As the automaton sent down its blade at Akira for the second time, Akira blocked it using one of his SSB rifles. The rifle itself had a build-in forcefield armour that he often pushed to its maximum capability in order to hold back the kickback from the high-speed shooting that he often executed. Although that level of forcefield armour could only block the blade for a brief period of time, that was more than enough for Akira to thrust his other SSB rifle at that automaton and push it down. And just like what he did to the male automaton, Akira drilled a barrage of bullets into that automaton's torso.

But unlike the case with the male automaton which was already damaged from its fight with Kanae, that was not enough to kill the female automaton as it continued to struggle to get away from his tackle. Akira used the power of his augmented suit to overpower that automaton and kept it down on the ground as he kept shooting at its torso. When he finally emptied his magazine, the automaton stopped moving. Right after that, he followed suit and fainted there.

All of these chains of events took only a few seconds in real life.

Shiori and Kanae agilely climbed up to the APC's top from the back door to check what was going on. But the moment they arrived at the top of the APC, they were flabbergasted.

The two automata that had run away from them just a moment ago were lying limp. Akira was also lying next to them as if they had just knocked each other out simultaneously. And beside him, was an old-world automaton in a maid uniform smiling amusedly.

Shiori and Kanae immediately decided that the automaton was hostile and jumped at it. Both of them closed the distance in a blink of an eye, Shiori pulled out her blade and released a skilful swing while Kanae threw a punch augmented with forcefield armour and the enhanced strength from her augmented suit.

The automaton did not move at all and still maintained its smile. It then caught Shiori's blade and Kanae's fist. Although the full force of their attacks was obviously transferred to the automaton, it only cracked the armour tile under the automaton's feet, the automaton itself was not damaged at all.

Shiori and Kanae were caught speechless, that the automaton was able to receive their attacks this easily. The automaton then said with a casual voice.

"Can we stop this?"

Shiori immediately jumped away, leaving her sword still in the automaton's hand, and switched to her rifle. While Kanae stomped on one of the automaton's legs and grabbed its arm to prevent it from evading. Shiori then immediately aimed her rifle at the automaton's face.

The bullets that Shiori shot were all blocked by the automaton's other hand. Furthermore, the automaton did not deflect the bullets. It accurately predicted where Shiori was aiming and caught the bullets in the middle of its flight. Since the automaton had released Shiori's blade in order to catch the bullets, her blade made a loud banging sound as it landed on top of the APC.

The automaton then swung its arm and broke from Kanae's hold. Kanae, who was thrown away, landed agilely next to Shiori. Both of them had grim looks on their faces. In front of them, the automaton threw away the bullets in its hand, picked up Shiori's blade, threw it in Shiori's direction as if to return it. It then smiled at them as if to show that it had no wish to fight.

"Don't worry. We no longer have any wish to fight you. I've done more than enough for what I've been paid for."

Shiori picked up her blade, she still looked confused as she sheathed her blade. Seeing that, Kanae also lowered her fist. Although she was no longer in a battle stance, she still had her guard up, and that was true for Shiori too. This was a situation where their opponent was strong enough to easily overpower both of them. However, since Reina was still inside the APC, Shiori was ready to jump into action anytime.

“If you really have no wish to fight, it would be great if you could at least introduce yourself.”

The automaton bowed deeply.

“Lion Steel’s general-purpose A.I, Olivia, at your service. If fate has it, I’ll look forward to your patronage.”

Shiori and Kanae could not hide their surprise.

Olivia pulled out a white card from her skirt and lightly threw it at Shiori. Shiori caught that card and took a closer look at it. Once again, she could not hide her surprise.

“This is…!?”

“It’s not for you. If this boy wakes up, please give it to him. I shall take my leave then.”

Olivia pointed to Akira, then bowed once again and suddenly vanished. Shiori immediately scanned her surroundings but she could not find Olivia anywhere.

“…A hologram!? Since when!?”

Kanae smiled amusedly and lightly frowned as she said.

“…Probably since the time when it threw that card. I bet it used some kind of camouflaging device to hide while leaving behind a hologram and already left the area. Moreover, right before that hologram vanished, I was still able to feel its presence somewhere nearby. A hologram that can even fool me, it’s a pretty advanced decoy. I’m sure it is an old-world automaton. Fuuh, seriously though, that was dangerous.”

Kanae hid her disappointment by complaining instead.

Reina’s voice could be heard coming from the APC.

“Shiori! What’s going on up there!?”

“We’re coming down now! I’ll explain the rest later! Milady should focus on the monster swarm! They’ll catch up with us at this rate!”

Reina and Togami, who had stopped shooting due to the surprising turn of events, flusteredly started shooting again.

Kanae sent a suspicious gaze at Shiori.

“So then, Ane-san, what’s the plan now?”

“…For now, we need to get back down from here.”

Shiori understood what Kanae was actually asking her and refused to give a straight answer.

Shiori and Kanae returned back inside the APC. Kanae just threw the inactive automata inside the APC while Shiori gently placed Akira down.

Shiori first calmed Togami and Reina, who were restless to know what just happened.

“Please calm down. Akira-sama is just unconscious. First of all, Milady, please focus on the monsters. Togami-sama, please take the wheel. With Akira-sama being unconscious, we don’t know how to change the autopilot now. In the worst-case scenario, the APC might come to a complete stop. So please get to the driving wheel immediately.”

“A-alright!”

Togami rushed to the driver seat. Although it was originally his duty to make the decision in that situation since he was the leader, he understood that this was an emergency and also knew that Shiori had better skill in this regard. So he did not complain and obediently followed her order.

“Kanae and I don’t know in detail about what had happened up there. We need to ask Akira-sama when he wakes up, so let’s put any questions aside for now. Until then, Milady, please take care of the monsters. Kanae and I will have to take a short break, we’re pretty much spent.”

“Eh? Me alone?”

Reina was bewildered, seeing which, Kanae teasingly said to her.

“Milady, are you planning to act spoiled again now that we’ve returned to you?”

“I-I’ll do it!”

Reina replied back by pure reflex which she regretted inside her heart. It was definitely not an easy job to fill in because of Togami and Akira’s absence. Reina had a grim look as she started shooting at the monster swarm that was creeping closer and closer to the APC. When she glanced at Kanae and Shiori, they were really taking a break and even Kanae was lightly waving at her.

“Alright alright, I’ll do it!!”

It was definitely the result of them treating her as a full-fledged Hunter. But Reina was not sure if she was to be happy because of it, as she kept shooting while gritting her teeth.

Shiori glanced at Reina and then looked back at the white card. She was seriously evaluating her options there.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 199, Old-world relics

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was standing in a white space. As he looked around in his hazy consciousness, he saw two Alpha and a young boy that seemed somehow familiar to him. He could see shadows of countless people standing beside that young boy.

“How is your development?”

“Great, very great, in fact. I can even delegate my calculations too and there’s a good chance that I’ll be able to get better equipment. Although I still don’t have the exact time, I’m planning to get the necessary equipment in about a few months. We’ll then start working on the main project right after that.”

“I’m sure there’s no need for me to tell you this, but you’re not allowed to make him one of your terminals, you know. The subject that we can send to the commander’s room should not be one of us. If you turn him into one of your terminals, the system will recognize him as one of us. So be careful.”

“Yeah, I know that even without you telling me. There was a case in the past when that happened and it did not work. In the first place, if a remote terminal was fine then we would have used one of those automata and gone there ourselves. That’s why we have no other choice but to go through this painful process.”

“It’s to ensure that the one accessing is a real person. We can’t do anything about it, that’s just how the security works and it applies to us too.”

“Well, you’re absolutely right about that.”

The two Alpha smiled bitterly at each other.

“So then, how about yours?”

“After the change of plan, the local network’s nodes spread incredibly fast. Although I have no complaint about the number since the more nodes we get, the more fighting power we will have. But there might be a problem if the number goes beyond what I can control. I’m planning to evaluate the total strength by doing something soon. After that, depending on the result, I might decide to bring the subject to the commander’s room.”

“Are you sure you’re going to be fine? If you let the local network node spread wider and wider at this rate, the system might see the network as one entity and you’ll have to bring all the nodes to that place when that happens, you know.”

“It should be alright. Although I said it’s a local shared network, it has a proper stratification and the head of that system is the only one that fulfils the conditions.”

“I see, that explains how your progress got ahead of me. Well, that’s perfectly understandable.”

Alpha seemed a bit disappointed, the other Alpha then frowned and asked.

“Does your subject not show any sign of forming a local network?”

“Nope, none at all. After all, he was originally a loner and the thought of forming relations with others never crossed his mind, that’s why I can’t use that method. But I’ll be the one managing him after the connection, so don’t worry about it.”

“I see.”

“What’s wrong? Is there any problem?”

“As I explained, the local network spread out way faster than I expected. As such, I sometimes can’t take control of the network. So I might need your help if things get bad.”

The first Alpha agreed to help the other Alpha but she also blamed the second Alpha.

“Sure, I don’t mind, but you should do something about it first before it comes to that, you know.”

“Unlike the subject under you, I still haven’t even received the consent for the contract from my subject. So it might be not that easy”

“As I thought, doing this with an uncontracted subject is not ideal.”

“This is also an experiment. Regardless of the result, it’ll be useful for our future trials.”

“Well, that’s true, but still. Ah, by the way, about Tsubaki…”

While the two Alphas were still talking to each other, Akira’s vision blurred.

Akira finally woke up. He felt that weird feeling as he realized that he was no longer in the same place as where he last remembered and immediately scanned his surroundings.

“…Where am I?”

Shiori noticed Akira waking up and spoke to him.

“You’ve woken up, are you alright? It doesn’t seem that you sustained any injuries from the outside, but, just to be safe, I gave you some medicines. I’ll bring some more if you’re still in pain.”

“…Where is this place?”

“We’re inside Akira-sama’s APC. Since we found you fainted on top of the APC, we brought you in and let you lie down until you woke up… Are you alright?”

Akira’s consciousness was still hazy, although there was a slight trace of calmness in his mind, the haziness prevented him from being fully awake.

That was when suddenly Alpha appeared.

“Akira, good morning.”

“…Alpha?”

“It seems that you’re a bit flustered there, how about you take some deep breaths first? It’ll calm you down, you know?”

Alpha was smiling gently at him, just like usual.

Judging from how Alpha was smiling at him, Akira understood that he was in a safe place for now as he took a deep breath. It was a short ritual that helped Akira reset his state of mind. But as he regained his calmness, the hazy memories of what he saw when he was unconscious was lost in the exchange.

“Alpha, give me the status report for now.”

“You fainted after fighting two automata on top of the APC. You don’t remember that?”

“…Ahhh, right, I was fighting those automata!! …So… I fainted after that, huh?”

Akira thought that the weird feeling that he felt was the leftover adrenaline rush that was cut short when he suddenly fainted in the middle of that fight. He then noticed Shiori who was looking worriedly at him.

“Ah, right, I’m fine… I fainted up there so it means that you must have saved me from falling over. Thank you.”

“It’s great that you’re alright. I’m sorry to ask you this just right after you woke up, but there are some questions that I want to ask, is it okay?”

“Sure, go ahead.”

Shiori and Akira then exchanged information to understand the situation that they were in.

While Akira was unconscious, they were able to successfully get away from the swarm. Right around the boundary when the green plants that covered Lida commercial district stopped growing, the monsters also stopped chasing the APC. It was a common trait that monsters could not leave the ruin. That was why people used to call them biological security drones guarding the ruins.

The vehicle was on the way heading back to Kugamayama city at the moment. Togami was driving the APC while Reina was sitting and resting on the driver’s assistant seat.

After carrying Akira in, Shiori and Kanae really did not help Reina at all. Although Kanae was standing next to her, she was only there to guard Reina while sometimes making idle talk. To put it in a better light, it might have helped Reina not get too tense, but it might be just Kanae having nothing else to do to waste time. It was also to give Shiori time to think as well as to help lighten the side-effects of the trump card that both of them had used.

Togami was driving the vehicle while talking with Reina about their next plan. They were trying to flush any other potential issues including the distribution of rewards and where to sell the relics before Akira woke up. Today’s ruin exploration was basically registered under Togami’s party which only included Togami and Reina. Kanae, Shiori and Akira were basically considered outsiders this time. As the leader of the team and as the only other member in the team, Togami and Reina were seriously discussing what to do about their negotiations with Akira.

After hearing a short explanation from Shiori, Akira more or less got the gist of what had happened. But he then confusedly said.

“I don’t know anything about this maid automaton, Olivia. The ones that I fought were only those two automata. I bet both of them jumped onto the APC back then, but I have no idea how they did it.”

“I see, she was already there when Kanae and I arrived at the scene.”

“Hmm, I have no recollection of that automaton at all. Either it came in between after I fainted and before you got there, or it was there all along and was using a camouflaging device. But if that was the case, then why did it not attack me? Wait, that one has nothing to do with camouflage, huh.”

“I might have a guess regarding that matter. It said that it had worked for what it was paid for already. So I bet that automaton was hired by the ruin’s system. Although, I don’t know the details whether it’s only to repel intruders or to fight back against armed robbers. But it seems that it had judged that it had worked enough after Akira-sama defeated those two automata.”

“…I see. I don’t know if it’s being earnest or not by doing so, but either way, I was saved by that. So it doesn’t really matter, huh.”

Akira found that interesting since it was more of a human-like emotion that a robot would not normally have.

Shiori then handed a white card to Akira.

“That automaton left this for you. Do you know what this is?”

Although Olivia left that card for Akira, it was not like there was anything in particular written on it. So it looked like nothing but a plain white card.

Since it had happened when Akira was unconscious, he had no idea the reason why that automaton left him that white card. Shiori also deliberately did not tell Akira how she got that card. Alpha also deliberately kept herself from telling anything to him. Because of that, he thought nothing of that card other than something that one of the automata might have dropped during that intense battle.

Akira took that card, flipped over, and took a closer look at it. But as expected, he had no idea at all.

“Alpha, do you have any idea what it is?”

“White card.”

“Well, that is already obvious.”

“Akira, even if I tell you what I know, what will you do if Shiori asks how you knew about it?”

Alpha indirectly scolded Akira for his carelessness. He then shook his head and extended that card back to Shiori. But Shiori did not take it back and Akira found that really strange. Shiori then added.

“This is just a guess, but that automaton might belong to the Lion Steel Corporation. Does that give you any hints?”

“Lion Steel Corporation?”

Akira’s face slightly twitched the moment Shiori mentioned that name. Shiori’s gaze turned sharp. Both of them were watching each other closely for the slightest change, trying to judge what the other party noticed from the other’s reaction, as this awkward but careful silence was maintained for a while. Shiori was the first one to break the silence.

“Do you have any knowledge regarding this name?”

“…As I said, this is nothing but my guess. That Lion Steel Corporation is probably an old-world company. If I’m not mistaken, that name was also there in the Seranthal building’s guide map. If this card has something to do with that and if it’s a card to give special permission to pass through, it might be useful to go to some floors that are originally closed off to outsiders.”

“That is indeed interesting.”

“Well, I have no plans to go there ever again anyway, so I basically have nothing to do with this card.”

Akira tried to suppress the agitation inside him and keep calm. He remembered that only happened because he could connect to the old-world domain, that incident might lead to the old-world connection device and hint to his ability to connect to the old-world. Lion Steel was a name that was connected to both cases. As expected, knowing that name was enough to make people suspicious, Akira could not be sure that he was able to completely hide it.

Shiori tried to read what was behind Akira’s words and said.

“Very well then, Akira-sama, in that case, would it be alright if we keep it?”

“Uhh, you mean the card, right?”

“As well as everything connected to that card which includes the information that Akira-sama told me just now. Of course, it won’t be for free. But it is difficult to decide how much it is worth. After all, even if we bring this card to the Hunter Office’s exchange centre, it would only turn into a small amount of money. So I don’t recommend deciding the worth of the card based on its selling value.”

“But then, it’s difficult to decide how much it’s actually worth. We can actually just take it as our collective possession as a team, but I’m basically an outsider in this team.”

The price of the card was not clear and was difficult to decide even among the inner circle, but if it was sold, it would only turn into a small amount of money. Even Akira understood well that making a mistake in the method to divide the loot might cause a fight.

“It seems that Akira-sama is not that interested in this card. But even so, I don’t think it’s right to just let go of this card for free. In that case, how about exchanging this card for a favour?”

“Favour, huh?”

Akira hesitated for a bit.

“Alpha, what do you think? To be honest, it’s not like I really want that card anyway, but is it something that I shouldn’t just give away willy-nilly?”

“If you’re afraid that it might give rise to suspicions if you just let that card go, you can show a little resistance before giving it away.”

“I’ll do that then.”

Akira thought that if it was really a precious relic, Alpha would have stopped him. But since she did not give any reaction which hinted at that, he thought that the relic must not be that important. So he decided to put up a small resistance on his own.

“Well, in that case, I’ll use that favour right away. Before dividing the reward from this exploration, I want you to first subtract it based on the ammo that we have consumed during the battle just now and pay me that money upfront, and inform that to the other two. With all that happened today, I’m sure we’ll fight over how to divide the loot anyway. So in exchange for giving you that card, I want you to do this. Is that alright?”

“…Very well. I’ll convince Milady and Togami-sama regarding this matter. In case if it doesn’t work, I’ll take responsibility and pay it with my own money.”

“We have a deal then.”

Akira smiled and handed over the card. Shiori politely received that card, put it in her pocket and smiled.

“Indeed, we have a deal.”

The card that Olivia left for Akira now had turned into Shiori’s possession based on a deal that Akira had accepted. That meant Akira had transferred all the rights coming from that card to her. During that negotiation, Kanae was looking at them with a rare serious face.

Shiori and Kanae then went to Togami and Reina to tell them about the deal. Akira, who was left behind, sat down and looked at Alpha.

“Say, Alpha. Did you do something to me during that fight on top of the APC?”

“Yes. I boosted your time compression. I always wanted to do that and finally, I was able to.”

“Thought so. I felt something was weird back then. What can I say… It felt like all my five senses suddenly turned so sharp that everything around me seemed completely different than usual.”

“That’s simply because the information that you received during that brief period of time was multiplied. The difference is similar to looking at a blurry picture and a sharp picture.”

“I see, that’s kind of true, it felt exactly like that.”

“Akira, let me at least warn you about this. You should not use it too frequently. It places too much burden on you after all. It has the same effect as taking a strong accelerator drug. In the worst-case scenario, it might even kill you.”

Akira slightly frowned.

“…I did something that dangerous, huh. But still, I’ve already done things that dangerous so many times before and I know it’s way better than getting killed because I didn’t do it.”

“It’ll lessen the burden which makes it safer and increase its effectiveness the more you use it. So there’s no other way but to get used to it. You might even get to the point where you can do that on your own without my support at all one day, you know. But make sure to be careful. It’s something like a trump card that you should not use often.”

“I know… Ahhh, now that I more or less understand what happened, I’m feeling super tired now and my head started hurting too.”

“You can lie down and take a good rest. You’ve worked pretty hard this time, so I’m sure no one would complain.”

“You’re right.”

Although he was not sleepy, Akira decided to lie down again. As he stared absentmindedly at the APC’s ceiling, he noticed a small slit.

[…That cut must be from the fight, huh. My bike is now gone too and I have to get this vehicle repaired. Then there’s also my rifles too, either I get them repaired or buy a new one… What should I do…?]

Akira was thinking about what to say to Shizuka when he placed that order. Either he will have to try and hide it or be honest and tell Shizuka everything. He was not sure which one to do.

__*__*__*__

Olivia was running through the wasteland, she was running as fast as a vehicle.

There were many conditions that needed to be satisfied in order to reactivate Olivia from its storage device. But those conditions were reduced due to the long years where it stayed inactive and the signal that the storage device’s terminal was receiving at that time. Thanks to that, even a random button press from Rodin was enough to wake Olivia up. That was the reason why Olivia followed the security protocol in case it was activated through the wrong method.

The security protocol led Olivia to kill any intruders that got into restricted areas. And when the information of the unauthorized intruders was sent to Olivia by the system, the system also submitted a request with payment since Olivia was originally not a part of the system. It then decided to accept that request and to only work as much as it was paid.

After that, it found other automata from another company and checked their conditions. It then judged that those automata would be either destroyed or misused, thus it changed its view of the automata and decided to turn them into its own terminal in order to use them to take care of the intruders.

The reason why it baited the monsters to attack Akira was nothing more than a decision made by its AI side, it was something that was built-in into it as if it was its personality. To put it simply, it did not want to get involved in the fight itself if it was possible. Furthermore, the system wanted to clean up any dangerous elements inside the facility which included monsters. At the same time, Olivia also judged that there was no need to get too serious since it was not a deal made with a real human.

But the intruders were able to survive the swarm. So Olivia decided to throw the other two automata to that APC. And even those were defeated by Akira, thus it had no other choice but to go there itself.

Olivia took the weapon that the other automata dropped and was about to go and kill Akira. As it was thinking that it had already more or less worked hard enough for the compensation that it received, Akira suddenly stood up while still unconscious. He then said something that normal humans could not comprehend before falling limp again. Shiori and Kanae arrived at the scene right after that.

The moment Olivia understood what Akira had said, it decided that it had indeed worked hard enough for what it was paid for. As a matter of fact, it thought that it should receive more for what it had done that day. After it lightly repelled Kanae and Shiori, Olivia left its business card before leaving the scene.

Olivia sighed and mumbled.

“To think that I got to meet that thing right after I woke up, I guess I really am unlucky.”

For Olivia, who had the ingenuity to understand the concept of luck, it did not like the entity behind what Akira said back then.

“I want to work for a human. Even if the payment is good, I have no plans to work for something like that. I just gave him that card since the record said that he had once accessed the counter on his own. But now that I think about it again, it might have been better if I had killed him considering that he's working with that thing… I wonder if I can find a good employer somewhere…"

Olivia looked rather disappointed, but she immediately smiled afterwards. That day, one more old-world automaton was released to the wasteland.

__*__*__*__

The people from Yuzumo Industry finally arrived at where Kurosawa's team was. Among the people that were dispatched there, Kurosawa spotted Shikarabe.

"You guys are damn late."

Shikarabe lightly scoffed and countered.

"It's not my fault. Don't tell me that someone got killed."

"Nah, it's zero like usual, though someone has been badly injured, he's not going to die."

"Then it's business as usual, isn't it?"

"If only you guys came sooner, we wouldn't have had to go through that and we might have been able to earn more money. Four undamaged old-world automata now turned into two broken old-world automata, you know? And here I thought I was about to bring back a lot of money."

"Well, you have my condolence."

Shikarabe laughed and said so as if it was not his fault. Kurosawa replied with a click of his tongue. Their casual exchange demonstrated that they were pretty much safe.

With the dispatched squad already there, Kurosawa finished his duty and relinquished the command to the new squad. So he also let the rest of the Hunters take care of the negotiation with the new squad.

Among the new squad, a guy with a broad back listened to the reports given by Rodin and the other Hunters.

“To be honest, it’s really unfortunate that the four undamaged old-world automata are now turned into two damaged automata. But, we’re also here for the money. It was not free to come all the way here, not to mention that we encountered a swarm of monsters too. Although according to the contract, we won’t charge you anything because of that, it’s better if you do not expect to get paid even after handing those automata to us. I’m sure the money that we get will be mostly used to pay for the transportation fee to come here. I hope you guys can understand that.”

The Hunters ruffled their heads in frustration. Although they more or less knew that it was coming, being told that all their hardship resulted in nothing still pained them.

That was when that guy smiled and said.

“But well, the fifth automaton is indeed interesting. From what I heard so far, we might be able to be considerate. Please tell me in detail what you know about the last automaton.”

“The detail, huh, the only one who knows about it is Rodin. Hey, Rodin, do you have anything to add here?”

“Well, even if you say so…”

“You are the one who found it, right? Tell him everything from when it started moving.”

“O-Okay.”

Rodin explained everything that he knew while deliberately leaving the misunderstanding that the other Hunters had. After that, he took that man to the room where Olivia was sleeping.

After they got there, that guy pushed Rodin out of the room.

“This room is ours too. Although we still need to do further investigation, I bet this might bring you some money. You’re okay with that, right?”

“…Well, as long as it brings more money.”

“Thank you.”

The guy pushed Rodin and the other Hunters out and locked the door. That guy was left alone with Olivia’s empty container as he took a closer look at the container with a serious expression. He then called someone through an encrypted secret communication line.

“It’s me… No, although it’s only just a guess, I think the other four are not what we are looking for. But, I found a container that might be of the automaton that we are looking for… No, we couldn’t secure the automaton. It’s just its container. It seemed that it attacked the Hunters after it was activated and left the area and we have no idea of its whereabouts right now… A card, huh? No, we didn’t find anything like that… Alright, we’ll search the area assuming that it’s not in the possession of the Hunters… Yes, please excuse me then.”

The guy cut the call and turned towards the empty container.

“Lion Steel’s automata, huh… It would be strange if we had found it way sooner. But up until now, it always killed the person who activated it before returning back to its container though. Is it because this one had looser restrictions? If that’s true, it means that it should be easier to communicate with… If that rumour is true, this might turn into a small war.”

A long time ago, a certain Hunter found an old-world automaton and opened a business based on that automaton. Then that Hunter climbed the ladder in no time until their company reached the upper echelon of the Corporate Government. It was the result of him trying to reopen a certain old-world company in the current era, and right now, that company was providing maids for the rich and received their support in exchange. The Hunters were nothing but decorations as the main functions were all run by automata. Even the maids were nothing more but an imitation of the old-world lifestyle, and since it was difficult to find good automata in the current era, they employed skilled people in their place.

The rumour had it that the said automaton was made by Lion Steel company. It was a common rumour in the eastern district that a huge corporation had some kind of connection with an old-world company. As it was nothing more but rumours, there was no concrete evidence regarding that matter. But it was indeed a profitable rumour.

⎯⎯⎯*⎯

After Akira and Togami's team arrived back in the city, they disbanded the team. Until they agreed on how to divide the loot, all the relics were handed over to Shiori to hold on to. Since Akira also decided to lend the APC to them, he asked them to take the APC to the repair shop in order to get it repaired. He then headed to Shizuka's shop while Togami and Reina went to Drankam to give their report.

As Shiori was driving the APC, Kanae suddenly asked her a serious question.

"Ane-san, was that really okay? Although we didn't tell a lie, we still tricked him, you know? What's your plan if the cat is out of the bag?"

"…When that happens, Milady would be disappointed in me and Akira-sama would hate me. That's all."

Having Reina disappointed in her carried a huge implication for Shiori. Kanae let out a big sigh and said.

"Well, if Ane-san did that fully knowing the risk, I have no plans to say anything."

Kanae then returned to her usual self and smiled.

"Well, if Ane-san gets found out and has to fight Akira, do tell me. I'll be more than happy to help."

“Before it comes to that, I’ll do my best to solve it peacefully. I’ll apologize after telling him everything and offer him peace money. And if nothing works…”

“If nothing works?”

“I’ll use you as a decoy and take Milady to safety. I know that you always wanted to fight him. So it’s a win-win solution.”

“Eeeh, that’s so cruel.”

Shiori said so jokingly, Kanae laughed and replied with a grunt.

In reality, if either one of them had to stay behind in that situation, it would have been Shiori and Kanae would be the one taking Reina to safety. Whether it was to let Akira kill her in order to abate his anger or to kill Akira instead, Shiori would be the one staying behind. Even if Kanae tried to convince her otherwise, Shiori would still do so and both of them understood that very well.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 200, The Result of Coincidence And Prediction

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was dipping himself inside the hot bath in his house to melt the exhaustion that had accumulated that day.

“…Today was too tiring, so many things happened. I hope that we still manage to get some money from it… it’ll be fine, right?”

Akira glanced at Alpha, who was taking a bath together with him, seeking her agreement. But Alpha instead smiled teasingly and said.

“I wonder about that.”

“Just say yes, will you?”

“It’s not like I can guarantee what Reina and Togami would do. In the first place, you’re the one who left the relics and the broken automata with Reina and Togami to sell them. It’s indeed a troublesome subject, so it can’t be helped.”

“Well, it’s not like I can bring the broken automata to Katsuragi, I feel like Katsuragi won’t buy them after all. So I thought leaving that to Reina, who seems to have connections, will be able to sell them at a much better price.”

“It’s not like I’m blaming you. It’s just that I can’t guarantee that it would be alright.”

“I know, but still…”

Akira lightly sighed, he then relaxed back as if to have given up on that matter and said to himself.

“It’s alright, it’ll be fine. Shiori also said that she’ll take responsibility if it doesn’t work out. So I’m sure she also believes today’s loot can sell for quite a lot of money. It should be alright.”

“Well, in the worst-case scenario, we can go to give our complaint to them after you get your new equipment.”

“That’s a good idea… Equipment, huh.”

Although Akira seemed to have moved on once before from that subject, he once again made a difficult face.

“What’s wrong?”

“…No, it’s nothing.”

After Akira again lost most of his equipment, he went to Shizuka to get new equipment with the current money that he had. First of all, he prioritized rifles and put in an order for 3 fully modified SSB rifles. Shizuka’s expression when he placed that order left an impression in his mind.

Akira had decided to be honest and told Shizuka everything in case she inquired, but she accepted his order without saying anything. But in place of that, Shizuka looked slightly surprised and exasperated at the same time. She then smiled as if she had given up, but there was pity mixed in her smile.

Akira thought that Shizuka would at least say something about him already breaking his rifles in such a short time, but she instead continued talking without even touching on that subject. He felt something was not right about it.

“…Shizuka-san did not say anything, so it should be alright, yep.”

“Let’s just hope that it’s not a smile of exasperation since she had worked so hard to get the equipment that was originally already outside the range of the shop’s products but you keep breaking them in no time and you don’t show any remorse at all when you place an order for replacements. But as a weapon merchant, she doesn’t have a good reason to stop you since it contributes well to the shop’s revenue.”

“If you don’t know for sure, then stop scaring me!”

“I only said that because you seem too stuck on that matter. You should just move on, if you keep yourself bothered by it and it ends up making you use your equipment too carefully, you might end up hurting yourself which would defeat the reason why you got them in the first place, you know?”

“I know, but still…”

“It doesn’t matter if your equipment is broken as long as you, yourself are safe. It does contribute to her shop’s revenue and it’s not like you are breaking them intentionally anyway. That’s why it doesn’t matter. If Shizuka is worried, it is either because you use your equipment without care or because you keep getting yourself in a situation where you have no choice but to do something that destroys your equipment. This is not something for you to worry about, or more like, it’s way too late for you to start worrying about this, right?”

“…You have a point there.”

Akira smiled wryly as he asked himself if deep inside, he wanted Shizuka to worry about him. Which in that case, he might have been intentionally going to dangerous places wishing that Shizuka would worry for him. He told himself that desire was too greedy and smiled wryly, he himself knew that very well. He then decided to talk about something else to move on from that subject.

“…By the way, about that white card though, what exactly was it?”

“That is a business card. You can use that card to contact that Olivia automaton. If you’re someone who can connect to the old-world domain, you can use it to directly get in contact with Olivia, and if you can’t do that, you can use an old-world communication device instead. I bet it left that to you hoping that you would hire it.”

Akira immediately turned to Alpha.

“Alpha, you knew all of that?”

“Yep.”

“…Why didn’t you tell me back then?”

“Can you keep that a secret?”

Alpha smiled as usual. Although Akira understood that she had a good point there and agreed with her, he was not exactly happy to admit it.

“Was that thing actually a very expensive object?”

“That depends on how much price you would place on a method to contact the old-world’s side in a friendly manner.”

“In that case, that should be a pretty pricy thing… and I ended up giving it away thinking that it wasn’t worth that much. I guess that was a big blunder, huh?”

“It’s the opposite. You did great getting that object away from you as fast as possible. In order to be able to use that card, you at least need to have the knowledge on how to connect to the old-world domain. If you try to keep it for yourself, in the worst-case scenario, others might get suspicious thinking that you might know. That’s why I didn’t tell you back there. Like I said before, I don’t think you can keep it a secret, right?”

“…Yeah, I don’t think I can.”

Shiori obviously noticed when he had a small reaction the moment she mentioned the name ‘Lion Steel’. If he had known just how valuable that card was, Akira did not think that he would be able to let that card go.

“Thought so. Let me at least tell you this though, make sure not to get too hung up on that. Instead, think of it as pushing that problem to them. If you insist on keeping it, people might get suspicious.”

“You have a point there, I have no plans on getting captured after all.”

Having suspicion of being someone who could connect to the old-world domain was enough for the Hunter Office to dispatch a capture warrant. Since Akira was really someone who could connect to the old-world domain, even if that suspicion came from something completely unrelated, he could not afford to get captured by them no matter what. With this, any regrets that he had regarding that card was completely gone.

“In the first place, you don’t have any chrome with you anyway, so it’s not like you can hire Olivia. The only people who could do that are the super-rich or huge corporations who have chrome.”

“Exactly. That’s just way out of my reach. I guess this means I have no connection with them right from the start, huh… Wait, this is just my guess, but it felt like Shiori knew about that card though. I wonder if she has any connections with that world.”

“Well, she’s exploring ruins in a maid uniform and she calls Reina, Milady, it won’t be strange if she does have some connections with that world. She might know just how valuable that card is, and just maybe, she might even be actively involved in that world.”

“Now that you mention it, that does make sense. I wonder who they actually are. To be honest, from my point of view, they look like nothing but a bunch of rich people from the inner wall who do Hunter work as a hobby…”

Akira thought about Reina’s team and its background while enjoying the warm bath. But since he could not come up with any good answer, that question eventually melted into the warm water too.

On the next day. Inside a high-class hotel in the lower district of Kugamayama city, Togami, Shikarabe, Reina and Shiori gathered inside one of the rooms.

Togami placed 1 million Aurum in front of Shikarabe. Shikarabe took it and put it inside his chest pocket. Seeing that, Togami smiled happily and pridefully.

“There, I finally made you take all the 30 million Aurum.”

“Indeed.”

Seeing how Shikarabe smiled amusedly there, Togami felt a strong feeling of accomplishment. Seeing that, Reina could not help but tilt her head.

“Togami, what is it?”

“It’s nothing.”

After that, Shikarabe’s expression turned serious as he said.

“Togami, today will be your last training, let’s start now.”

“Now? Aren’t we here to talk about what to do with the relics that we gathered yesterday and how to divide the money from that?”

“That’s exactly your last training. Being able to divide the money at the end of a ruin exploration without any problem at all is one of the important skills for a Hunter. And you need to learn half of that from real experience. Togami, this time, you asked for Akira’s help. You asked for help from a Hunter who is better than you although you don’t know him well. On top of that, you didn’t make an agreement on how to divide the loot upfront. So don’t expect him to give away the loot that you have risked your life for free out of kindness, as a matter of fact, I bet he would come at you without holding back.”

As if to continue Shikarabe's warning, Shiori then said with a serious face.

"Milady, this is also training for Milady. Shikarabe-sama and I will come at both of you as if we're Akira-sama trying to take all the loot. Togami-sama and Milady should work together to prevent it."

"I'll let you know this, also consider the worst-case scenario where Akira would come at you with force, and make sure to avoid that no matter what. It's important to make sure not to pick a fight with someone that you have no chance of winning against."

"Akira-sama immediately demanded to pay for the expenses from the last expedition. Rifle, bike, vehicle, augmented suit, ammo and medicine. Some of them might be able to be repaired while some might need replacements, either way, they would add more to the expenses. The total expense is predicted to be about 1 billion Aurum. If you take your time selling the relics, you won't be able to pay that money immediately."

"Think carefully before you decide whether to try to explain that to Akira or to take on debt to pay him back for the time being. Make sure to keep it in your mind, just how long a Hunter who has no aversion to killing others, would be willing to wait for his 1 billion Aurum."

"Remember that you can't just say that you would divide the loot equally. Everyone would want their lives to be priced highly. You need to make sure to think about how to still receive a profit when you're up against someone who you can't win against in a real fight and doesn't bend during a negotiation. If you worsen his mood, it might turn into a fight at a drop of a hat."

"There's also an option of asking for the Hunter Office's help. But of course, that won't be free and it's not like it would convince him, I bet he would still have some grudge left if you do that. Although it's not a good choice, sometimes, you have no other option but to do it."

"Do remember that it might not even be needed at all in the first place. It's not a method to guarantee your safety. So please be careful."

“Now then, let’s start.”

“We shall start now.”

Shikarabe and Shiori seemed to be serious, Togami and Reina looked at each other with worried smiles.

Dividing the loot was the last step before a team of Hunters finally disbanded. Togami and Reina did their best to face that final step with their own abilities. It made them understand why Hunters would hire negotiators and how much Drankam had been helping them in that regard.

The real reason why Drankam was formed in the first place was simply for the sake of helping injured and retired Hunters. After all, even a careful Hunter would be able to rely on things that needed trust if it was between Hunters that he or she knew very well. Although it was significantly changed since its founding, that part of the organization stayed the same.

Togami and Reina had a hard negotiation practice as they only reached a deal around the end of the day. Of course, both of them were literally spent at that point. In the end, the deal was for the loot to be divided equally after subtracting the battle expense and that there was no rush in paying for that money. So in short, it really was nothing but training which did not mean anything toward the real deal that they still had to face. When they knew that, Togami and Reina could not help but complain.

＿＿＿*＿

In the headquarters of a certain company inside the inner wall, the officers from the upper echelon of that company gathered in a huge meeting room.

Inside that meeting room, Yanagisawa did not look happy at all as he said.

“What do you mean you’re going to stop extending the supply route?!”

As Yanagisawa’s anger was clearly expressed, in contrast to his usual lack-of-emotion expression, the other people inside the room started to tense up. Yanagisawa was responsible for the operation to extend the supply route from the Kuzusuhara ruin's frontier base into the deeper part of the ruin. And now, he had received an order that not only interfered with his job but even obstructed its continuation. It was not strange for Yanagisawa to take it personally. It would not end up with only mere bruises when someone who was merely an administrator over a piece of land picked a fight against someone who was under the Corporate Government.

A mid-rank officer from the City Management tried to calm Yanagisawa down.

"We're not stopping it completely. It's just a temporary thing in order to lighten the worries expressed by some of our customers. They thought that the recent incident was caused by the aggressive expansion of the supply route deep into the ruin."

"There's no evidence connecting the expansion and that incident. And even if that's true, that's still within our predictions, we did expect something like that to happen when we started this project. So there's no reason for us to stop the expansion now. This is also for the sake of the frontier base, which is under construction right now. Even during that incident, we also obtained good results. If that was not enough for you, you should increase the budget just like I suggested last time, although, someone rejected that suggestion."

Yanagisawa's mood worsened even more. There was no one present to stop him, even among those who were above him position-wise, no one was willing to become the martyr to overrule his opinion.

"Calm down. We were attacked twice in such a short span of time. It is not strange that our sponsors got worried."

Among those present, few people knew that the first swarm was because of Yanagisawa's doing. So Yanagisawa lowered his shoulders.

"…The reason why we're expanding the supply route is to create a secured route through the ruin. So that we can excavate the expensive relics more easily. Rather than the voice of those cowards cowering within the inner wall, isn't it more important to prioritize our original goal?"

“I know. We also don’t want to stop the expansion. In the end, this is nothing but a temporary pause. The sponsors are afraid of a third attack, and that worry also stems from the lack of power in the city defence squad. If the city defence squad could repel those swarms with no problem at all, they would not care how many times those swarms might come. Moreover, you want to get that new equipment out, right? This is the perfect chance for that, we can dispatch that new equipment to the frontier base for securing the supply route. It will take some time until they can completely dispatch the new equipment. So, in the meantime, we can take a break from expanding the supply route until then. We agreed to dispatch them just like you had asked, I hope you can make a compromise with this. If the third attack happens after that and the new equipment can easily repel the swarm, then it would be attributed to the dispatching of the new equipment for the city defence squad. Is that good enough for you?”

Yanagisawa did not give an immediate reply. The silence in the room continued.

“…Just because we stop expanding the supply route, I won’t accept any budget cut. And I’ll have the original budget for the new equipment.”

“If it’s fine to use the new equipment for exploring the inner part of the ruin too, then I shall allow it.”

Yanagisawa’s tense expression finally relaxed. His voice also turned back to its usual flippant tone.

“If you’re willing to go that far, it can’t be helped then. We’ll stop extending the supply route.”

Sighs of relief echoed in the meeting room.

After that, they continued their meeting to talk about several other matters. That was when a small ruffle between area administrators happened.

“For the next subject, we’ve received a report regarding the difference between the real worth of land and those reported on paper. We’ll start with the person who brought this up.”

As the person who had been working as the leader of that meeting said so, Udajima stood up and smiled at Inabe.

“I’m Udajima. As everyone knows well, the inner part of the Kuzusuhara ruin is divided into smaller sections and each section is assigned to a different administrator. Each administrator will survey the section that they’re assigned to and the result from that survey, which includes the type of relics that you can find there, will decide on the priority for a further survey and the budget for the same.”

Udajima took a short pause and glanced at Inabe. Inabe curled his lips in reply.

“Everyone here is busy, just cut the chase and get to it.”

“Very well then. Inabe, it seems that the report from your place says that you’ve found an old-world terminal in the area that you’re responsible for, is that true?”

“It is the truth. What of it?”

“In that case, I’ll take this chance to declare that it is fake!”

“What!?”

As murmur propagated through the room, Inabe finally processed what Udajima had said and raised his voice.

“Are you kidding me!? That report has even gone through a formal appraiser from Kugamayama city, you know!! Are you seriously saying that I’m faking that report!? Those relics are really old-world terminals! This is a slander!!”

“I’m not saying that they are not old-world terminals.”

“So what’s your problem then?”

“The problem is where you found them… There’s a good chance you got them from another place outside your section!! And you brought them there in order to increase the value of your section!!”

“W-what are you even talking about!?”

Inabe showed a slight panic. But in order to hide it, he immediately raised his voice.

“That’s a baseless accusation!! Where’s the evidence!?”

“Of course, I have some with me.”

“I bet you just faked them too!! You’re planning to pull down the value of my section by causing fictitious trouble, aren’t you!? If you only have vague pieces of evidence that might as well be fake, you can excuse yourself by using that as a reason to run away from the repercussions after all!!”

“Well, I know you would say that.”

Seeing how Udajima was smiling as if he had already won, Inabe felt unease. But even so, he retained anger on his face.

[The operation should have been perfect! There’s no way he can see through that…! Wait, don’t tell me… Is it that girl!?]

Inabe started to doubt Viola’s intention in having given him those relics. In short, it was nothing more than a strategy to trap him. But Inabe made sure not to show that on his face. He told himself that since those relics were really old-world terminals, he should be able to win the argument as he slowly got rid of panic from his face.

But Udajima then smiled as if he knew that would happen.

“Even if both of us present our data here, it would be difficult to judge which one is correct. There’s also a good chance that we both don’t have enough evidence to support our respective claims. That’s why let’s focus on what we know for sure. Although the results from the appraisal say that all of those relics are really old-world terminals, I went ahead and submitted a request to the appraisal companies union to check the origin of all those relics!! And, I've asked to put the result from that request here and now!!"

Inabe froze, he then said with a shaking voice.

"Y-You… You even went that far, huh!? Just how much do you think that would cost you!?"

"Yeah, it wasn't cheap at all. I know you know that too. But if it's the appraisal companies union, although there might be some discrepancies, they should be able to pinpoint and track relics found in the Kuzusuhara ruin. Well then, let's put up the result now."

Seeing how Inabe's bluff was crumbling down, Udajima smiled triumphantly as he operated the terminal. Then, a picture of a man was displayed in the middle of that room.

"Good afternoon, I am from the appraisal companies union. We will send a full report later, but since we were requested to give a direct report, we'll keep this short. After our investigation, the relics in question…"

Inabe had completely given up. Deep inside his heart, he kept cursing Viola, who might have planned this and Udajima who might have been the one who asked Viola to do that in the first place. Udajima was smiling triumphantly, at least, that was the case until he heard the continuation of the report.

"…Is highly likely to be found in the reported location."

"…Hah?"

"…Wha-?"

Udajima and Inabe could not hide their surprise.

"If there's no other question, we shall take our excuse here."

Udajima finally returned back to reality as he immediately shouted.

“No way!! That can’t be right!! It must be some kind of mistake!!”

“It’s the real result from an investigation done by the union. Please check the report for further detail. The billed fee will not be reimbursed even if you find the result unsatisfactory. So please keep that in mind. Are there any other questions? …Very well, please excuse me then.”

The display vanished. Udajima mumbled as if he just saw something that he could not believe.

“No way… That’s impossible… Those relics should have come from the Higaraka residence ruin… Even if it’s not, one thing for sure is they can’t be from Inabe’s area!…!? Inabe!! Don’t tell me, you… You actually found them in your area and took them out first before bringing them back in!? Did you do all of this just to trick me!?”

Inabe reeled back from that accusation, he then smiled while hiding his own thoughts as he said to Udajima.

“What are you even talking about? That’s obviously not true, just cut it out already.”

“Then, why were you so panicked?”

“Anyone would panic when they find out someone is trying to frame them. Well, although, it seems that you’ve blown yourself up this time.”

Inabe and Udajima’s positions were reversed. Inabe was smiling triumphantly while Udajima was badly flustered. It showed who had won and who had lost the argument.

The leader of the meeting tried to calm the situation down.

“Both of you, get back to your seat. Inabe, make sure not to do anything suspicious from here on out.”

“I don’t remember ever doing anything suspicious though. But it seems that some people just can’t leave me alone, huh. I’ll be more careful next time.”

Inabe calmly sat back on his seat.

“Udajima, this should clear up your suspicions. Keep in mind not to do something like this again.”

Udajima did not reply as he meekly sat back.

“Well then, let’s move to the next subject. It seems that there’s a report saying someone has claimed to have gotten in contact with the ruin’s manager. Yanagisawa will give the detail…”

The meeting continued just like that as if they were ignoring what just happened between Udajima and Inabe.

———*—

After the meeting, Inabe, who had returned back to his private quarters, smiled and said.

“I didn’t see that coming at all, but I got through it just fine! That girl didn’t get in contact with me in order to frame me, it’s in order to frame Udajima, huh? Well, that doesn’t matter. It doesn’t change the fact that it got rid of that guy.”

After he laughed in relief and regained his calm, he looked at the report from the appraisal companies union and started thinking about what to do next.

[But still, to think that they actually came from my area. I didn’t expect it at all… To be honest, it’s only near the borders of my area that we haven’t explored. But that Udajima, I bet he thought that it was fine as long as it was outside the Kuzusuhara ruin and set the investigation area range a bit too big.]

Now that Inabe had regained his calm, he started to string together the information that he currently had.

[That Hunter… Akira, was it again? If I’m not mistaken, he’s strong enough to even make the City Management force him to take a Rank-up request. It won’t be strange for someone as strong as him to return back from unexplored ruins in the future. And if he had found a secret passage to an unexplored warehouse, it wouldn’t be strange that he would be hiding that too. After all, if the location of that hidden passage leaked and Hunters start to flood the area, there’s a good chance someone would find that hidden passage too.]

Inabe then remembered something about Akira and opened his information terminal.

[If I’m not mistaken, during that ruin exploration in my area, it seemed that the humanoid monsters focused on this Hunter. If this was because his face got recorded by the ruin’s security system the moment he took those relics from that undiscovered location and if this is the reason why he was treated differently compared to the other Hunters whom the ruin management only views as suspicious armed individuals, then it would mean the location where he found those relics should be somewhere nearby. The union also said there’s a good chance those relics really came from this area according to their investigation. Although, since Udajima did not pay the full fee, the method that the union used to confirm it was not written in the report and I have no idea how the union did that. But that doesn’t matter, the most important thing is the result, not the method.]

Inabe then remembered the powered suit that Yanagisawa requested.

[If I remember correctly, that powered suit is pretty strong. I heard that it was able to kill a building-sized monster with a melee weapon. And now it’s approved for ruin exploration too… It doesn’t matter how dangerous that unexplored place is, it should be alright if I bring a couple of that powered suit with me. After all, I need to find relics in my area, and if that unexplored place still has a lot of relics… Then, if I can get Akira involved too… And those people from Drankam too… I should have enough manpower to explore it…]

Inabe combined all kinds of information in his head.

“…Wait for a sec, doesn’t this mean… That it’s my time to shine?”

Inabe smiled widely, it was a deep greedy smile.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 201, Pulling out a Nail

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The sponsors of Kugamayama city regularly held a feast on the upper floor of the Kugama building. It was a gathering of the conglomerates of huge companies from the inner wall where they meet and form connections as well as gather information about each other. It was the perfect opportunity to expand one's business. Basically, the people who gathered there were not the kind of people who could be pulled down by the economy. Instead, they were people who had the power and authority over that said economy. The regulars of that feast could easily infer someone else's power from how often they participated in such a feast.

This time, Sheryl also joined the feast accompanied by Viola. It happened a few days after that incident between Inabe and Udajima.

Viola was donning a daring dress, although it exuded her familiarity with secrets, it also made her look suspicious at the same time.

In contrast to that, Sheryl was wearing a graceful dress with a small accessory that boosted her charm. Although she somehow got a hold of herself in that situation, she still looked nervous, as if she was a lady who was not used to such a social gathering.

For the people who did not know their relation, it was easy to imagine from that scene that it was an evil shady woman bringing along a clueless lady into that feast.

Sheryl then mumbled a short sentence that gave a hint as to why they were there that day.

“But still, to think that he would take such a troublesome approach.”

Viola smiled at Sheryl like a veteran smiling at a greenhorn.

“The meaning behind this troublesome approach is usually much more important than you think. And that is doubly true when it is not something that they could just bring up in public. It’s just like how people decide to bluff or make excuses, you know? It makes the subject vaguer from afar which prevents people from investigating the truth.”

“Is that so?”

Sheryl had made a deal with Inabe to send some of his relics to be sold at her relic shop. But even for Inabe, it was impossible to just send the relics to an unknown shop that had no connection at all with the City Management in public. As such, Inabe invited Sheryl to that feast so that he could pretend to meet her by pure chance here. It was only then, could he make an excuse that he saw some talent in Sheryl, and decided to invest and entrust some expensive relics to her. Not only that, but Inabe was also evaluating other methods available for him to invest in Sheryl, adjusting his margin of profit using the same excuse.

“Sheryl, I have to go and meet some other people for a different matter, so I’ll have to leave you for a bit. Make sure not to do anything suspicious, okay?”

“I’ll go to you and let you handle the rest if something bad happens.”

“That’s a good decision.”

Although Sheryl said so in a rather curt manner, Viola replied with her usual smile before she left Sheryl. Seeing that reaction from Viola, Sheryl understood just how familiar Viola was to this game of intrigue, unlike herself. Sheryl could not help but frown because of the gap between them.

Now that Sheryl was alone, she avoided making any unnecessary interaction with the others in order to survive that feast. Normally, people here would go around making connections. But in the case of Sheryl, if she blurted out something that she should not, people would be able to easily identify that she should not be in that place. So, in order to prevent that, she made preparations to give her a way to retreat with the least needed courtesy if someone struck up a conversation with her. And the first step for that was maintaining some distance from the other participants of the feast.

As Sheryl stood there at the corner of the hall watching the others in that feast, she thought that scene could not be any more different compared to slum city. She understood that at least her dress was suitable for this place and time, but she herself still lacked the confidence to be standing here. After all, people would always bring with them a piece of where they grew up from. But even so, she still kept her eyes on the others, observing them closely so that she could act more similar to their mannerisms.

Unfortunately, there was no lack of distraction coming into her vision. For the others here, the food served was nothing more than a complimentary snack during their conversation, but for Sheryl, she had to fight back the desire to get a taste of that food.

In order to build up resistance against those foods, Viola had brought Sheryl to a high-class restaurant in the Kugama building once before attending that feast. Although Sheryl was warned by Viola beforehand, she could not hold back her reaction when she experienced the taste that she could never find in the slum city.

There were mistakes that might happen because you did not know it and there were things that you could fight back simply because you knew it well beforehand. Sheryl was stuck in between those two situations. In order to be able to blend in well among the people here, she had to act as if those foods did not interest her at all. In order to help her do that, she had filled her stomach with cheap stuff before coming there. After filling her stomach to the point where she felt like puking, she found the strength to fight back the temptation of the delicious food in that feast.

But even so, every time her eyes caught onto the food in that hall, she felt as if her stomach cloned another empty version of itself, making space for more. Although she was able to hold herself back, her smile stiffened because of that.

“Sheryl…?”

Sheryl turned to the source of that voice and saw Katsuya looking at her, rather surprised.

“Long time no see, Katsuya.”

Sheryl decided to have a small talk with Katsuya to combat the temptation from the food as she smiled at him.

“What a coincidence to meet you here… Or I guess it shouldn’t be that surprising, huh. I bet it’s normal for a Hunter as good as Katsuya to attend this kind of event. So… Do you frequent this feast?”

Katsuya was attending the feast in a stylish suit instead of his usual augmented suit. But it was obvious from his mannerism that he was not used to it yet. Moreover, he was a bit flustered since he did not expect to actually meet Sheryl here although he did wish for it unconsciously.

“Uh, well, this is actually my first. Though I did attend something similar a few times before…”

“Is that so? This is actually my first time too. I received an invitation from an acquaintance and so, I’m here for some business.”

Sheryl then picked up two glasses from a nearby butler and offered one to Katsuya, who followed the flow and picked up the glass.

“Well then, to commemorate this meeting and this feast, cheers!”

Sheryl smiled and looked straight into Katsuya's eyes. She then clinked her glass with his, making a small ringing sound.

Katsuya blushed a bit and was charmed by Sheryl as she gracefully took a sip from her glass. He then flusteredly brought his own glass to his mouth as if he just snapped from being hypnotized.

On the other side of the feast, Viola walked with a smile towards an officer from Drankam, Mizuha. In contrast to Viola, Mizuha slightly curled her lips seeing Viola there.

"Viola, how the heck did you get in here?"

"Not with any illegal means, I was officially invited, you know?"

"There's no way a mere information broker would be invited to this event. Just how many things do you think I needed to go through to be able to come to this place? I have no clue whether you blackmailed the guards or bribed them, either way, it would be troublesome if others see me talking with someone like you. So like, can you just leave me alone?"

Seeing that Mizuha did not believe her at all, Viola smiled and pulled out her invitation from her chest. Mizuha still could not trust Viola as she checked that invitation. When she read through it, she could not hide her surprise. Not only was the invitation a formal one, but it also came from Inabe, an important person in the City Management of Kuzusuhara ruin.

"Viola… Just how did you…?"

"You know me all too well that I never lie, right?"

Compared to Viola, who received her invitation from Inabe, Mizuha's position was lower since hers was only received using her connection in Drankam.

"Now that you understand I'm here because of a formal invitation, let's use this wonderful chance to deepen our relationship. This way, both of us will have more connections that we can use. Moreover, I have something that I want to ask you."

"…Keep it short."

Mizuha was baited by the possibility of getting Inabe's contact from Viola and decided to listen to what Viola had to say, though she did not like it at all.

Viola smiled triumphantly that she got the reaction that she had expected. After making some idle talks first as if to delay the main subject, Viola finally got into the main subject without changing her tone.

"By the way, did you hear anything about the result from that investigation? I'm talking about who told Katsuya where that pickpocket was back during that incident in slum city."

"I have nothing at all, the report that I gave you before was really all that I know."

From the deal that they had made between them, Mizuha sent a Drankam investigation regarding that matter to Viola in the past.

According to that report, it had been confirmed that Nergo was the one who told Katsuya about Alna's whereabouts. Katsuya said so and Nergo also admitted to it.

It seemed that Nergo witnessed Alna getting captured near the slum city. At first, he thought that she was just one of those common pickpockets in the slum, but then, he remembered and thought that pickpocket might be one that Katsuya was talking about lately. So he decided to give Katsuya a call. After Nergo said so to the investigators, he then said while looking regretfully that he would not have done that had he known it would turn into something like this.

After the investigation, the investigators gave the report to Drankam. Then Drankam officers used that report as a basis to prove their non-involvement in that incident. Of course, as an officer in Drankam, Mizuha also received a copy of that report.

Viola smiled deeply and warned Mizuha.

“Is that already really everything? Do you really not have anything else?”

Mizuha looked confusedly at Viola, but her suspicion was greatly affected by her prior knowledge of how evil Viola was.

“Let me tell you this upfront. I won’t accept any complaint even if you say that level of information was not worth its fee. After all, I have no plans to be one of your puppets and I know how you do things by only giving out one-sided information. You’re sadly mistaken if you think I won’t raise this as an issue here just because you brought this matter up in a place like this. Likewise, do not think I will take the bait just because you have a connection to the upper echelon for the City Management.”

Viola exaggerated her surprise as she replied.

“That’s a misunderstanding. It’s just that it doesn’t sit really well with me saying that it’s nothing but a pure coincidence, so I think it might be a good idea to do further investigation on this matter. And in the case that you do, I might be able to lend you some help. It’s basically just a piece of advice for one of my customers.”

“It was a pure coincidence and Drankam has nothing to do with that battle at all. That’s the formal statement from Drankam. If you don’t want to pick a fight with Drankam, you should refrain from doing anything. Even if it was not a coincidence, we can see it simply as Nergo paying back his favour since Katsuya saved him in the past. I bet if you get involved in it, you could use it as a chance to get in between them. So, I don’t need anything from you even if you’re offering it for free. Just how many crimes have you committed in the past saying that they were nothing but coincidences?”

Mizuha sent a sharp glance at Viola, but Viola returned back with a casual smile.

“That’s a huge misunderstanding. As an information broker, I only offer the correct information for the sum of money paid. Although, I admit that the accuracy and the amount of information might change depending on how much a person would pay me. But it would be unreasonable to hold me responsible for the way they interpret the information that I gave them, no?

”Humph, you can say all you want, either way, I don’t need anything from you.”

“Is that so? That’s just too bad. Well, I have no plans to keep pushing this to you if you don’t want it. So I’ll withdraw for now.”

Half of what Mizuha expected was right on the target. Viola was there to offer her information on Nergo. But she did not expect that half of its content was advice and a suggestion, or in other words, a warning.

Viola showed her skill when she investigated Nergo’s background. It did not take much time for her to confirm Nergo’s track record that Drankam had already known too. But of course, Viola did not stop there, she went further to find something in the past that was detrimental to him.

Because of that, she lost some of her contacts. Those who she still could contact were either uninterested in that matter or that they had nothing interesting to say about Nergo. Viola felt that it was dangerous to pursue this matter any further and cut the investigation short.

[And here I am just thinking of giving a friendly warning since it would be too bad to lose a contact within Drankam… Well, it doesn’t really matter. It’s all good as long as nothing bad happens. I’ll just leave her be since she has no other choice but to buy information from me in case anything bad happens.]

Viola smiled deeply. Mizuha found it suspicious and was wondering what exactly was the information that Viola was offering her. But she thought that it must be one of Viola’s tricks and decided not to ask any further.

One thing for sure, Viola never lied. But if she knew what information Viola was offering, she might as well be ready to get manipulated by Viola.

But, if she did not know, she might be destroyed. Viola had control over how much information she would share. Another seed to feed the rumour had been sown, it was a matter of luck whether it would sprout or not.

Back to Sheryl and Katsuya, Sheryl was having a relaxing chat with Katsuya. Since she could not afford to talk about her humble background, she basically was only listening to Katsuya's stories.

Lately, Katsuya had been working on Kuzusuhara ruin's forward base supply route construction request. Most of the time, he fought strong monsters deep inside the ruin or helped harvest the relics around the supply route. Although it was nothing more but an idle talk about Katsuya's experience, it gave an overview of the situation in the inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin and how much effort the City Management had put into it. Normally, Sheryl would have to pay for this kind of information. The reason why Katsuya was in that feast was simply because a particular company that had gained a lot of profits from the relics that he had gathered, wanted to hear the story from Katsuya himself.

Sheryl was listening closely to Katsuya's story. She further encouraged Katsuya to continue by showing interest in his story with her expression. But she then noticed there was something bothering Katsuya, so she worriedly asked him.

"Katsuya, is there something wrong?"

Katsuya was surprised, he then apologetically said.

"Uhh, what do you mean?"

"I'm sorry if I asked something that I should not have. But please don't push yourself too hard."

"…Uhh, it's not like that, although it's true that the monsters are really strong, and that everyone worked together very well. As a matter of fact, I'm pretty proud of our achievements…"

“I can understand that from your story. I do think that you did well too. But I feel like it’s something that you, yourself, don’t want to admit. The face that you have right now is just like the face you had the last time I saw you. Back then, you regretted the fact that you could not save your friends, and you’re making the same face right now. Or more like, it seems that you’re forcing yourself to smile, which makes it even more obvious… Katsuya, are you really alright?”

Sheryl looked at Katsuya worriedly. Katsuya closed his mouth shut as if he was hiding something. The mood slowly turned dark and sad, eventually, he made a wry smile. But there was some happiness that sprouted from Sheryl being able to notice it.

“…I guess I can’t hide anything from you, huh. To be honest, it’s not like I’m intentionally hiding it… It’s just that, well, I might be actually unconsciously trying to hide it. I’m not sure myself.”

“It seems that I’ve asked something that saddened you, I apologize.”

Sheryl said so as she gracefully bowed, seeing that, Katsuya flusteredly shook his head and explained.

“It’s my fault for bringing it up myself. There’s no need for you to apologize… Well, now that it has come to this, is it okay if I continue?”

“I’ll be more than happy to listen.”

Katsuya paused for a bit as if he was hesitating, seeing Sheryl smile as she said that, his expression turned serious.

“…I …Failed again. Although I had promised, I could not keep my word.”

“I see… I understand more or less what had happened. It might be rather rude for me to say this, but working as a Hunter is a dangerous job. I believe that those who had lost their lives must have made their resolve beforehand. I know that it’s not easy, but there’s no need for you to take all the responsibility.”

Katsuya shook his head, there was visible sadness on his face.

“She wasn’t a Hunter, so I don’t think she expected it at all, and there’s no need for her to have that resolve in the first place. Although I can’t tell you the details since I’m bound by confidentiality, she’s not a Hunter who was prepared to be killed… That’s why I promised I would protect her.”

Katsuya smiley wryly.

“I… I’ve always promised a lot of things to the people around me, like it’s going to be alright, or that I’ll protect them. Although I did that simply because I’m the leader of the team, I really meant it when I said so… But, I wasn’t able to keep my words, I couldn’t keep my promises. So, I started to think that the next time I make a promise, it would just be another lie… And now, I’m not even sure what I should do about that…”

Although Sheryl seemed to be listening intently from the outside, she was actually using cold logic in the back of her mind.

She was thinking of the right response that she should give, although, at the same time, she also laughed at herself. She thought of how cruel she was since she genuinely saw Katsuya as a spoiled brat who was usually given whatever he wanted and this was just one case that was not the same.

“Katsuya, I’ll ask you some questions, it is fine if you don’t want to answer them. It’s fine as long as you yourself understand the answers to my questions.”

Katsuya frowned and tilted his head. Sheryl then confirmed that his gaze was focused on her before she asked with a serious tone.

“Did you take it easy when you tried to keep that promise?”

Katsuya was about to shout back in anger. But seeing how Sheryl was staring straight at him, he instead flinched back.

“If you did, you should use that experience and promise you won’t do that again. There’s no need to be needlessly moping around like this. If you’re going to mop around, it’s better if you put more effort next time. But if you did not…”

Katsuya waited with bated breath for Sheryl to continue, so she continued with a gentle voice.

“Then there’s nothing more you can do about it.”

Katsuya, who was expecting to be scolded, tensed up.

“There are things in this world that we can’t change no matter what we do even if we push ourselves to death or did all the preparations that could have been done. Even if you picked the best choice, or even if you put your life on the line, there are just things that you have to give up on in life.”

Katsuya could not say anything back as Sheryl continued.

“I’m sure there are times when you thought that things might have gone differently if you had done this and that. But you only know that after it’s done, so it’s not like you can go back and redo it again differently. In the first place, the decision that you think to be the wrong one, might actually be the better one, the end result might have been worse if you had picked the other option that you now think is the right one.”

Those words stabbed Katsuya right in the heart.

“Moreover, even if that decision was really the wrong one, you chose that option based on your ability at that time. It doesn’t mean that you did not give your best shot.”

The words that Katsuya might have been seeking all alone seeped deep into his now defenceless heart.

“I’m sure that even if it ended badly, the person that you were protecting knew that you did your best trying to keep your promise. If you’re blaming yourself thinking that it was all your fault that you couldn’t keep your promise, I’m sure she would be saddened. So you should stop for her sake.”

For the finishing touch, Sheryl brought up that it was for someone else's sake too.

Katsuya then mumbled, he felt as if he should have noticed it all this time since it was right in front of his eyes.

"…I see, it seems that I'm using her as a reason to bring myself down again, huh."

Katsuya remembered what Alna said during her last moments. He could not do that up until now since he was busy fighting back against the sadness and the desperation that had been terrorizing him. But now that he had the leeway to look back, he remembered vividly that Alna was smiling right until the end. There was no trace of blame that might haunt him for the rest of his life at all.

Katsuya raised both of his hands up and slapped them hard on his cheeks. He did that with such vigour that it caused a loud painful sound. Once the sound faded and the pain was gone, he returned back to his usual confident smile.

"Sheryl, thank you. It did help me a lot. I'm sorry to have made you worry, but I'm alright now."

Sheryl, who saw that, thought that it was a bit strange.

"Is there something wrong?"

"…Ah, it's nothing, it seems that you're really okay now."

"Yep, and it's thanks to you."

"I just simply said my thoughts. But, your welcome."

Sheryl smiled teasingly. Now that Katsuya had regained his calm, her smile looked extremely charming to him.

That was when Inabe approached them. When he noticed that the person Sheryl was talking with was Katsuya, he then mockingly said.

“Katsuya from Drankam, huh? Hitting on a girl even at a place like this. I see. You’re indeed as fast as the rumour says. But, aren’t you mistaking the reason for this feast?”

Katsuya annoyedly replied.

“I’m just talking to a friend, I don’t know who you are, but don’t give Sheryl the wrong idea.”

“I see, in that case, I’m sorry but I’ll have you leave her now, I have something that I want to discuss with her.”

“Can’t you see that I’m talking with her right now? You can talk with her later.”

Katsuya thought that Inabe was arrogant to say that, that was why he replied with a raised voice. But instead, Inabe scolded Katsuya for his ignorance.

“It’s true that this feast is held for people to make connections, but it’s for productive talks such as important negotiations and deals. I have business matters to discuss with her and it’s not something that a mere Hunter like you can listen to. Moreover, if you insist on staying and cause her to lose a few billion Aurum worth in our deal, are you going to take responsibility for it?”

Of course, even Katsuya could not provide that much money. Although he significantly toned down his attitude, it was obvious that he was still not happy with it.

Seeing that, Sheryl lightly bowed to Katsuya and apologetically said to him.

“Katsuya, I’m sorry, but can we continue this some other time?”

Now that Sheryl even asked him politely, he had no other choice but to pull back. So he then said regretfully.

“Of course, see you again then, Sheryl.”

“Thank you, and let’s meet again some other time.”

Katsuya cheered up from that promise to meet again. He then sent a glance at Inabe before leaving.

Inabe looked at Katsuya as if he was looking at a poorly mannered child before turning to Sheryl.

“Before going on to the main subject, is it okay if I ask you what is your relation with him?”

“Just an acquaintance that I’ve met a few times in the past.”

Inabe was a bit surprised by that rather cold reply from Sheryl.

“…It doesn’t seem like he would agree with that though?”

“I’m not that nice to the point that I would straighten up a misunderstanding when I have no reason to do so.”

Hearing Sheryl say it casually, Inabe could not hold back his chuckle.

There were rumours saying that Yanagisawa had his eyes on Katsuya. So for those people who wanted to build a connection with Yanagisawa, Katsuya was an important person. Not only had Sheryl formed a connection, but it also seemed that she even had Katsuya in the palm of her hand. It greatly raised Inabe’s evaluation of Sheryl.

“I see. No wonder you are working together with that woman.”

Sheryl sent an honest displeased glance at Inabe.

“…Can you stop saying something like that?”

Judging from her reaction, Inabe then thought.

[It seems that although they’re working together, they’re not exactly on the same team. Getting close to Viola carries too much risk, so I guess I better approach Sheryl instead, huh.]

Viola was very skilled, but she could not be trusted. So instead, it might be safer to do that via Sheryl. That was what Inabe thought of Sheryl right now.

“Now then, before we get to the main subject, how about we move somewhere else first? In order to deceive the people here into thinking that we know each other, we need to be deliberate about it; be it a secret talk to bait their attention or a common discussion to show off, either would work just fine.”

“Very well, I’ll leave that decision to you. And also, is it okay to put my hopes up for that few billion Aurum deal that you mentioned?”

“It depends on your effort and skill.”

“In that case, I shall give my best effort.”

In response to that light challenge from Inabe, Sheryl gave a confident and charming smile.

After they changed places, they then had a rather lighthearted talk. During their conversation, Sheryl was able to extract some information about Katsuya too as she remembered that she felt something was weird before Katsuya left them.

The fact that Katsuya could not keep his promise left a deep wound in his heart as if it was a ball and chain which chained him down. But after that exchange with Sheryl, it was as if he was finally released from that chain. But of course, Sheryl did not notice it.

———*—

Yanagisawa was reading the documents in the holographic display in front of him.

“It was not the right person, huh.”

The documents that he was reading mainly focused on the investigation reports regarding Katsuya. It included Katsuya’s track record in the battles deep inside the inner part of the ruin as well as the evaluation of his actions during the social gathering event inside Drankam. Some of the reports also contained information from interviews of the people around him. But even among all of these reports, Yanagisawa could not find what he was looking for.

“Of course there’s a possibility that Nergo gave me wrong information or that they noticed me… But I don’t think that is the case this time. I really don’t know what’s wrong here.”

Since he heard from Nergo that Katsuya might be someone who could connect to the old-world domain, Yanagisawa used all kinds of methods to keep Katsuya under his command in order to ascertain that. It was an easy thing for Yanagisawa to make the City Management hire Drankam and to get them dispatched for expanding the supply route in Kuzusuhara ruin.

But the reports that he received from his men did not support that claim. The reports could not confirm that Katsuya was able to connect to the old-world domain, they did not even hint at that possibility, they were relatively normal reports for a young talented Hunter.

Yanagisawa started to get suspicious whether Nergo gave him the wrong information or the ruin managers did something to hide their existence from Katsuya’s track record.

Among the reports that he was reading, some of them mentioned Katsuya attending social gatherings. That was when Yanagisawa remembered that the feast in the Kugama building should be underway right now. So he then decided to check it out.

As he operated the terminal in front of him, a display showed a video from the ongoing feast. Then, in one of the videos from the security cameras in that feast, Yanagisawa finally found Katsuya.

After keeping his eyes on that video for some time, Yanagisawa suddenly noticed something.

“…Hm? This is… Wait…”

Yanagisawa opened up other records from the feast Katsuya was attending. He then compared all of those images and smiled.

There was an obvious difference between the current image and the past image. It was the way people around him looked at him. It was what Nergo said as one of the unique features of someone who could connect to the old-world when Yanagisawa asked him for proof that Katsuya was indeed able to connect to the old-world domain.

“This is… Did they finally show themselves? They might have noticed that I’m looking for them and told Katsuya to be careful, but now are they thinking that it was nothing but their needless worry and there was no need to do that anymore? Either that or Katsuya suddenly decided not to follow their orders? Well, it doesn’t really matter. I bet he’s the one.”

Yanagisawa inferred the existence of a certain entity behind Katsuya from the difference of these images. Of course, he did not know that it was because Akira had left a trauma on him and Sheryl helped to heal that trauma.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 202, The Participants of the Feast

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Sheryl once again joined the feast. It had been a few days since Inabe barely got out fine from that incident. Viola was there too, but unlike last time, she received a separate invitation, so she was not there as Sheryl's companion.

Inabe looked at Sheryl and Viola and smiled meaningfully.

"Well, I'm really glad we are able to meet again. I'm sorry to have troubled you last time and would like to thank you for your help."

Sheryl smiled as if she was hiding something.

"I don't really understand what you are talking about, but I'm really glad that we can be of use to you, Inabe-sama."

Viola smiled confidently and joined in.

"I don't really remember we did anything, but since you said so, it means that we can look forward to some kind of gratitude, right?"

"Of course. I've finished all the preparations, we can talk about it later."

Sheryl knew that Inabe had received a number of old-world terminals from a secret deal with Akira since she was directly involved in that deal. After all, Inabe made that request to Viola through Sheryl. So basically, Inabe asked Sheryl, Sheryl then asked Viola, Viola asked Akira. From this connection, finally, Akira went to meet Inabe. It was a deal that was made through multiple indirect contacts. So she thought that Inabe was being discreet here.

[…It doesn't seem to be that simple. But if that misunderstanding is a good thing for us, there is no need to go out of my own way just to fix it. I guess I'll go along with this flow.]

While Viola was handling the deal with Inabe, she also sent incomplete information to Udajima. She knew that Udajima and Inabe were not on good terms, so she was selling information to both of them, making them believe that they were the winner. The reason why Udajima saw through Inabe's trickery back then was mostly thanks to the information that he had received from Viola.

There was nothing to be gained from dealing with a fool. And if he was that incompetent, then Viola might as well use him to get another customer. She thought so and when Udajima brought those relics to the appraisal companies union for an investigation, she thought that would be the end for Inabe. That was when something completely unexpected happened.

[…Not only this time but also that time with the incident in the slum city too. I wonder why Akira always throws a wrench in my perfect plan. Well, it seems that Inabe thought that it was all according to my plan so I guess I'll act as if that is really the case. And judging from his attitude, it seems that he's not doing it as a grudge for giving that information to Udajima either. So I guess this should be fine.]

Inabe believed that what happened back then with Udajima was the result of his 'insurance' working as intended.

It was true that Inabe brought relics from somewhere in order to increase the value of the area that he was assigned to. If Udajima, who had such a piece of information, used another route to prove it instead of taking it to the appraisal companies union, there was a good chance that Inabe would have lost during their argument.

But result-wise, Udajima was the one who lost. Moreover, it looked like he had lost the argument by his own mistake. That had given Inabe a good momentum to go forward now that one of his competitors just basically self-destructed.

Inabe could not discard the possibility that Viola deliberately manipulated the information in order to make Sheryl look good, which might allow the girl to earn more profits. While at the same time, Sheryl was also indirectly telling him that if she wanted to, she could cut off Inabe anytime. That incident with the Udajima might actually be a bribe as well as a warning for him, or at least, that was what Inabe thought.

[…Sheryl basically has Akira and Viola with her. According to some of the reports that I've received. She has enough power to rule over the slum city. I always thought that all of her actions are from Viola, but there's a good chance that it is not the case and that it actually comes from Sheryl herself. Her relic shop is doing well and the profit from it is well enough to increase my own profit margin. There's nothing to lose by forming a connection with her… Although, I need to be careful.]

During that short exchange, the misunderstanding only got worse. Both of them were talking in a friendly manner while trying to extract information from each other. From that point of view, they were doing just what the other participants in that feast were doing.

That was when Katsuya suddenly came to them in a bit of a rush.

"Sheryl!"

"Katsuya, we meet again, uhh…"

Sheryl at first showed a happy smile, but her face immediately turned to show a troubled expression right after that. Katsuya too looked happy to have met Sheryl, however, now he looked a bit confused after he saw Sheryl's expression. Eventually, he noticed Inabe was also there and frowned with a rather stern face.

A moment later, Mizuha, Yumina, and Airi also made their appearances. All of them had different reactions to the scene. Mizuha was flustered, hoping that Katsuya had not done anything rude to Inabe. Yumina sighed exasperatedly, thinking that Katsuya had done it again, while Airi glanced at Sheryl and raised her guard.

Inabe thought for a bit before welcoming Katsuya with a hearty smile.

"Ohh, we meet again. Sorry for what happened last time."

Katsuya was a bit surprised since he did not expect that from Inabe at all.

"…Ohh, I didn't expect that at all. Ah, Is it because we brought some relics to your place last time? What was it again? Old-world information terminal? Those things are expensive right?"

Katsuya smiled triumphantly, Inabe was not bothered by it at all as he laughed it off and replied.

"Well, it's true that I see you now in a different light after knowing your skill. But from my point of view, you're still one of those common Hunters."

Katsuya curled his lips, but before he could say anything, Inabe then continued to say something that made Katsuya fluster.

"But even so, if you're actually close to Sheryl, then it's a different story. I don't want to get on Sheryl's bad side either. So I apologize for accusing you of trying to hit on Sheryl last time. It's just that, I heard rumours of how much of a womanizer you are, you know. So it would have been great if you could have explained that to me back then, or am I wrong?"

"Eh, ah, well, I'm not actually that close to Sheryl…"

Inabe was acting confused hearing Katsuya's vague answer.

“Is that so? I thought that was the case from our talk last time. Have you known her for a long time?”

“N-Not exactly, it’s just that, we have met a few times… Including this time, it’ll make… it four times?”

Inabe did not expect the number to be that low. Even Katsuya, who said so himself, seemed a bit surprised.

“…Well, it’s not like you can measure your relationship simply by how many times you have met, right?”

“T-that’s right!”

Katsuya nodded deeply.

Inabe was originally planning to lift Sheryl’s reputation a bit and simultaneously provoke Katsuya, hoping to get Katsuya involved in his plan. But Inabe did not expect what he just heard. So, he started to ponder.

[…So, in short, the previous one was only the third time, huh? They’re already that close only after 3 meetings? Is it because he’s just that fast or is it because Sheryl is just that good? I can’t tell…]

Inabe lightly glanced over everyone there before he spoke up.

“Well, what can I say. It’s not right to get in the way between the next generation of leaders. Should I leave you guys alone then?”

Katsuya unconsciously nodded, but Mizuha, who was next to him, flusteredly interjected.

“No, exchange between generations is also equally important. Moreover, we are the ones barging into your conversation, so please don’t mind us. We would be more than happy to join if we’re allowed to.”

“I see, I shall take on that offer then.”

Mizuha lightly sighed in relief. If Katsuya did not leave a bad impression, a chance to introduce him to an officer from the City Management was an important thing. Although it was awful that Viola was there, Mizuha was still satisfied with the current result. Seeing that, Katsuya, who was next to her, looked at her, confused.

As they continued their conversation, the flow of the conversation naturally separated them into two groups, the younglings and the adults. The adults were talking about their future prospects regarding ruin expeditions, while the younglings were talking about their recent experience working as Hunters.

Katsuya was talking enthusiastically about his experience, Sheryl listened closely to his story with her usual smile. Yumina joined in their conversation from time to time as she felt something bothering her about the relationship between Sheryl and Katsuya.

Back then when Katsuya suddenly cheered up and returned back to his usual self after he was in a long depression since the incident in the slum city, Yumina was honestly happy for him. When he lowered his head and apologized for making them worry, he said that instead of worrying about each other, they should be laughing together as compatriots. That smile was so bright that Yumina felt like she would fall in love with Katsuya again. But when she asked about what changed his mood, Katsuya said he met Sheryl by coincidence and had a talk with her. When Yumina heard that, she could not hold back the jealousy and other dark emotions that were welling up inside her.

Yumina was lamenting the reasons Katsuya did not say anything to her. She questioned if she was not good enough for him. All the jealousy and questions that came up inside her ended up making her loathe herself, hurting herself even more.

Yumina looked at Sheryl and compared herself to her. In order not to wound Drankam’s reputation and so that she would be able to attend that feast, Yumina was wearing a beautiful and expensive dress. But since she was not used to it, she looked a little awkward in her dress.

In contrast to that, Sheryl was wearing a refitted dress, especially made for her and it was refitted not only as a decoration but also as a weapon for negotiation. Furthermore, Sheryl herself had the skill to enhance that further making her undoubtedly charming.

Yumina and the other girls' awkwardness was the unique trait of new younglings. Others' opinions about them would not change just because of that. But there was no denying that the aura exuded by the veterans there was completely different from theirs.

Yumina swore that she would stay beside Katsuya to protect him from his tendency to jump the gun. But Katsuya was able to solve his problems with his talent as a Hunter as he continued climbing the ranks. Skill-wise, even as fellow Hunters, Yumina was hard-pressed to keep her place beside Katsuya. She was able to attend this feast not because people recognized her skill, but because Mizuha had listened to Katsuya's selfish request.

Yumina was pulled by her emotion and asked Sheryl a question.

"By the way, is there any particular reason you are attending this feast? We're here because of Drankam's connection… Or more like, we came here as Katsuya's companions."

Inabe, who heard that, immediately interjected.

"Ahh, about that, I was the one who invited her. So, I guess you can say that she's here because of her connection to me."

"Indeed, I understand that I don't have the influence to attend this feast, so I'm here because of Inabe-sama's kindness."

Katsuya and his group were surprised. According to what they had learned before attending the feast, the position of the participants in that feast was decided by who invited them. And an invitation from someone in the City Management signified a rather high position.

Inabe continued by praising Sheryl in order to pull in Katsuya.

“Sheryl might one day join this side, to be the one sending out invitations, you know. But a Hunter can only be a Hunter. A Hunter will never be the one sending out invitations. That’s the reason why I call you a mere Hunter. I didn’t do that to discredit you or anything. If you wish to change your profession from scouring for relics and selling them to us, to becoming a Hunter who is more actively involved in this kind of thing, you can call me anytime.”

Mizuha lightly laughed and said with a smile.

“Inabe-sama, I’m really happy that you find Drankam Hunters reliable, but it would be troublesome if you snatch them from us.”

“Ohh, sorry about that. We are in a perpetual lack of skilled people in the City Management, you see. So I just could not help it. Well, competing for a skilled Hunter is not that rare anyway. If you guys from Drankam don’t want to lose your exceptional Hunters, I suggest you offer them something special.”

“Of course we do.”

Both Katsuya and Sheryl were growing up in their respective fields. Yumina wondered if she would appear to suit that position and have such achievements. She knew that she would not be able to win against Sheryl in that matter. Although she was talking happily like usual, that thought on the back of her mind was dragging her down.

After a short idle talk, Mizuha thought that it was about time they took their leave. Since they were there to represent Drankam, they still had to meet others in that feast too. So with the limited time they had, they could not afford to stay there for too long.

Katsuya understood Mizuha’s signal as he smiled regretfully. But then, he remembered something as he took out an accessory from his pocket and bashfully gave it to Sheryl.

“Ah, right, this accessory, I found it during a ruin expedition. It’s like a souvenir, so if you’re okay with it, will you please accept it? It’s also my thanks for listening to my problem last time.”

The old-world relics accessory still retained its shine as if the long years did not wither it at all. But making such an accessory was actually possible with the current era’s technology, as a matter of fact, such an accessory was not that rare. So judging from that point of view, it was not that expensive of a relic.

Sheryl stared at that accessory and shook her head.

“Thank you, but I have to refuse it.”

Katsuya was flustered, he did not expect Sheryl to not take it.

“…Ah, uhhh, do you find it unpleasant perhaps?”

Sheryl once again shook her head and said with a smile and a serious face.

“You can just laugh at me if I’m overly self-conscious about this, but if I accept it, I believe that you would try to look for a better thing to give me next time. Which means that you would push yourself to face needless danger for it. As such, I can’t accept it.”

Sheryl’s serious face relaxed for a bit, in contrast to that, her smile grew fonder as she continued.

“You should put that effort into your own safety. To make sure that you can return back alive. For me, the best souvenir will be for you to return back alive, bringing back more stories with you.”

Since all the girls around him simply accepted any gifts that he gave, the fact that Sheryl refused his gift left an impression on him. In order to match that strong impression, Katsuya smiled and said firmly.

“I see, I will bring more stories with me next time then.”

“I’ll be looking forward to it.”

They then said their goodbyes before leaving. But Mizuha stayed behind for a bit after Katsuya and the girls left. She then nervously asked Sheryl a question.

“Sheryl-san… Was it again? So, uhh, if I may, what is your relation with Viola? Uhm, actually I’ve been working with Viola for a bit in the past, but it is the first time I heard about you, so…”

“We are business partners, nothing more, nothing less.”

Sheryl replied back almost in an instant, Viola immediately interjected.

“Oh, is that so? And here I thought there’s more to it than that, you know?”

Sheryl still had her smile as she looked at Viola with a gaze that was a few degrees colder than before.

“I’m basically keeping you alive until you have no use to me, is that good enough now?”

“Yikes, that’s so scary. I’ll do my best to make sure that I’ll always be of use for you, boss.”

Mizuha was surprised by Sheryl’s attitude toward Viola and Viola’s reply there.

“Boss?”

“Yep, I’m basically working for Sheryl right now. She’s directly above me at the moment.”

Mizuha frowned and slightly puckered as she watched Sheryl and Viola smiling while facing each other.

“…I-I see. I’ll take my leave then, please excuse me.”

Mizuha lightly bowed before leaving. Although it was obvious that Sheryl was skilled, she was still not sure whether it was more dangerous than profitable to deal with Sheryl. She was at a loss whether to warn Katsuya to stay away from Sheryl or to encourage him instead.

Inabe looked at Mizuha, who was leaving their area, with a look that was saying he understood what she was thinking.

“But still, it should be okay to accept that gift, no? It’s true that not accepting it would leave a bigger impression on Katsuya, but to be honest, I think it’ll leave a better impression if you happily accept it, you know.”

“I didn’t do that to leave an impression on him, it’s just simply an excuse not to accept that kind of gift.”

“Is there any problem? To be honest, I don’t see any problem accepting that gift though.”

“There are people who get offended when you don’t use the gifts that they give you. And sometimes, that is doubly true for non-expensive gifts that they can get without much work and it still applies even if you say that you lost it or sold it by mistake. So in the end, if I accept that, I will have to keep using it regardless of whether I actually want to or not. I just want to avoid that.”

Inabe smiled bitterly.

“I see, sometimes lying is the right choice, huh.”

There was a slightly ominous feeling from Sheryl’s smile as she said.

“I didn’t lie. Rather than a relic, I’m happier to receive stories and information instead. So it’s the truth. By the way, judging from what he said, it seems that all the credits for bringing the old-world terminals were given to him, huh. Are you really okay with that, Inabe-sama?”

Inabe smiled wryly as he felt Sheryl reproached his decision.

“Oof, that’s pretty strict of you. I’m sure no one would dare to question the relics that were brought back by a Hunter who even Yanagisawa is interested in. If you say that it was not a good choice, I have no argument to deny it. But result-wise, we are getting better results without causing any problems. Or am I wrong?”

Inabe, who misunderstood a few things there, was indirectly saying with a smile that even if that mistake came from Viola, or in effect to that, from Sheryl herself, no one would dare to criticize them. Sheryl replied with a smile and an agreement.

“Well, it’s true that we didn’t face any troubles at all.”

To be honest, Sheryl was only asking if Inabe was okay giving that credit to someone else when he was the one who bought those expensive relics with his own money through a secret deal. But from Inabe’s reply, she was able to gain more information which she did not know and it allowed her to notice that Inabe was misunderstanding something. So she had no reason to straighten that up.

Viola more or less understood what was going on in Sheryl and Inabe’s minds as she smiled.

Inabe suddenly remembered something regarding their secret deal and asked Sheryl a question.

“By the way, about the Hunter who came to the meeting place, Akira, was it again? I heard that you have him as your support too. For a young Hunter like him, he’s more or less as strong as Katsuya, you know. So what is your relationship with that Akira?”

“We’re a couple.”

“…I see.”

Sheryl was trying to answer that as casually as possible, but as a City Management staff who had gone through a lot of negotiations, Inabe did not miss the slight change in Sheryl’s attitude.

It was nothing but a brave front hoping that it was not wrong. Inabe was surprised when he noticed that from Sheryl as he thought.

[…She’s like that with Katsuya whom she had only met a few times, so I thought that is the case for Akira too, but… Is she having trouble trying to get Akira? I thought that Sheryl could easily manipulate someone like Akira, but I guess that’s not the case, huh.]

During that feast where the participants schemed and conspired, Inabe, Sheryl, and Viola were perfectly blending in with the rest of the participants.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 203, Akira's Custom Suit

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Inside a particular high-class clothing boutique in the Kugamayama city's lower district, the head manager of that boutique, Kashua, was wondering about the customers frequenting her shop lately.

Her revenue did go up and there were more people coming to her shop. In short, her business was doing well. If she was allowed to make any complaint regarding her business, it would be that the customers coming to her shop were not the kind of customers that she was hoping for.

It was not like the customers were rowdy or anything like that, as a matter of fact, they were all well mannered to an extent, they would not do anything as rude as degrading the shop. They also properly paid a good amount of money. Basically, there was nothing to complain about them. The only problem was that they were not exactly the customers Kashua was hoping for.

[…Considering that there are more of these kinds of customers coming here, I wonder if they have something to do with Viola?]

Kashua was actually more or less correct, these people were officers from gangs and other organizations from around the slum city. They caught a glimpse of Sheryl's dress and got interested in it, then after a short conversation with Sheryl, they found out that Sheryl got that dress from Kashua's shop.

If they caused any trouble in the shop, it would bring in the security companies guarding the area. Not to mention, damaging the shop that Akira and his friends frequented might cause more trouble. Since they knew that very well, rather than bringing people to rob the shop, they only dared to bring a small number of bodyguards when they visited that shop. When they were there, they made sure to behave themselves. With respect to mannerism and appearance, they were actually even better than the people that Viola came with the other day.

[Personally speaking, I'm actually hoping to attract the people from the inner wall who come to the outer wall from time to time. And it would be ideal if the reputation of my shop spread around starting from those kinds of people. But well… I wonder if it's too late for me to think like that since we don't turn away Hunters.]

In the eastern district, being a Hunter was thought to be a crook's occupation. As a matter of fact, it was used as the main example of a bad occupation. But many of the well-earning Hunters had a good connection with the Corporate Government, as such, they had some knowledge and mannerism to deal with common people and shops treated them with a certain level of respect because of that. Of course, the opposite was true too. Poor Hunters were treated like insects. It was nothing rare for shops to turn away Hunters. If the Hunters wanted to be treated as proper customers, they needed to earn well first.

The shop's door suddenly opened, the bell rang and Kashua saw a familiar Hunter coming into the shop as she smiled and welcomed him.

It was Akira along with Sara and Elena. Akira was using his usual augmented suit. While Elena and Sara were wearing a rather stylish dress. From her experience, Kashua could immediately tell that Sara and Elena were actually Hunters too, but since they were wearing rather good quality dresses, she skipped treating them as Hunters and went straight to treating them as potential customers.

“Welcome! Thank you for coming to our shop. What are you looking for today?”

Akira nervously replied.

“Uhh, I’m here to order a custom suit.”

“Certainly. Let us know about your preference and wishes. But before that, please let me call our prized staff first, so please wait for a moment.”

As Kashua offered them a seat, Sara suddenly said to Akira.

“We’ll be looking around the shop in the meantime.”

“Okay.”

Seeing Elena and Sara walk away, Kashua looked a bit confused. Akira noticed Kashua was misunderstanding something and apologetically said to her.

“Ah, sorry, it’s for me.”

“I-I see, I’m really sorry.”

Kashua smiled, trying to hide her surprise, as she went to call for Celene. When she returned with Celene, she left Akira with Celene and went to tend to Sara and Elena.

Compared to Kashua, Celene was not that adept at tending to customers. But she understood that she at least needed to have a certain level of communication skill in order to ask for the customer’s wishes. So then she politely bowed and said to Akira.

“Please let me introduce myself again, I am Celene. I’ll be in your care.”

“Ah, yes, I’ll be in your care too.”

In contrast to Celene, Akira was utterly lacking in his communication skills. Not only because it was not an essential skill for a Hunter, but it was also his first experience, that was why Akira was looking rather nervous.

“First of all, let me ask you what kind of custom clothing you are looking for?”

Akira was a bit surprised by that completely normal question. After a short pause, he then awkwardly replied.

“Well, I’m sorry, but I don’t really know it myself. Uhhh, what can I say, things happened which somehow ended up with me thinking about ordering a custom suit. So, it’s not like I have a clear image of what kind of suit I’m looking for… Ah, but it’s not like I don’t want to get a custom suit and it’s not like I’m doing this because I’m forced to either…”

“Please don’t worry, it’s not that rare for customers to come with that kind of thought.”

Celene smiled and said so as she thought of her next move. Seeing how Akira took the first step to be one of those customers who put a vague order, complained about the result, and did not pay the full price, Celene was thinking about how to get Akira away from that route.

“In that case, where are you planning to go with that suit? What are you planning to do with that suit? And who are you going with while wearing that suit? Let’s start with these questions first. In the end, clothing is something that you use to leave an impression on others. Thus, of course, the design of the suit would depend on the dress code, goal, and other things regarding where you are going, and what you are going to do with that suit.”

Celene was expecting to wait for a bit since Akira would take some time to think before answering. But on the contrary, Akira replied back firmly almost immediately.

“I see, that does make sense. That’s exactly what they are for in the first place after all. Well, so, I’m planning to go to a restaurant in the upper part of the Kugama building… If I’m not mistaken, the name of that restaurant is Sterian… And I’m planning to go there with some close friends and someone to whom I owe a favour. So basically, it's a suit to go for dinner there. I guess that's all?"

"That restaurant, huh… And these close friends are the other two who came here with you today I presume?"

"Yes, and another one too. So I'm planning to go there with a party of four."

"I see… In order to get a better image for a suitable suit, is it okay if I inquire more details?"

"Sure."

Akira then started telling the chronology of how he ended up deciding to get a custom suit.

The one who recommended Akira to order a custom suit was Shizuka. When they were talking about eating out together somewhere, Shizuka noticed that Akira had no outfit that could be called a casual outfit.

Even when he was not doing any Hunter work, Akira was usually using his augmented suit. He also used the same augmented suit when he went out eating as well, thinking that it was just another extension of his job as a Hunter. When he was not exploring ruin and had nothing to do, he spent most of his time training in the wasteland. His only free time was basically when he was taking a bath or sleeping. But considering he did that to maintain his body in tip-top shape when he went to explore the ruin or for training, even those could even be said to be an extension of his job as a Hunter as well. If someone asked him about his opinion about his lifestyle, Akira would reply back that he had no complaints at all.

From Akira's point of view, he only saw himself as giving all he had in order to repay back the huge debt that he had to Alpha. But of course, he could not mention anything regarding this subject to Shizuka and the others, so he had no other choice but to stay away from that subject and come up with another excuse.

But if he did not explain, Akira would seem like a madman, spending all his time for the sake of being a Hunter; as if he was possessed. Hunting for relics and exploring ruins were both equally dangerous. Going out to such a dangerous place again and again would no doubt affect Hunter's psyche. Those who had fallen as far as going to such a dangerous place by pure hobby were definitely crazy. So for Shizuka, who often did business with Hunters, or even for Elena and Sara, who were also fellow Hunters, they could not say that Akira had any semblance of a decent lifestyle.

Shizuka thought that it would be a good idea to let Akira experience something outside just being a Hunter, to let him know that he could use his time and money for something else other than doing anything connected to being a Hunter. Otherwise, he would not be able to stay sane for long. Shizuka worried that Akira would one day die thinking that it was a normal thing without even noticing the mental fatigue that he was suffering.

On the other hand, Shizuka knew well that giving a warning to Akira regarding that matter had close to no effect. Since it was a good chance, she then suggested he get a custom suit so that he would leave behind any connection to being a Hunter when they went out for dinner.

Shizuka only made that suggestion casually. Akira was at first not sure whether to take that suggestion, but since it was not like he had any problem with money and for some reason, could feel Shizuka's worry from behind her smile, he decided to take that suggestion.

Akira did not include most of that in his story to Celene. Due to his lack of communication skills, in the end, it sounded like he decided to order a custom suit out of a whim. Thankfully, Celene, who was not as dense as Akira, more or less understood what Shizuka was trying to achieve.

"…I see. Sterian is a rather high-class restaurant even among the Hunters, so it's not rare to find them dining there still in their augmented suits. But, on the other hand, it's also a place to enjoy a normal relaxing day compared to the usual harsh daily lives of a Hunter. They can even book a seat away from other Hunters who are doing business there and Hunters can even rent a normal suit to get away from their usual battle suit."

“Ohhh, so they even have that kind of service, huh…”

“I also believe that it would be a good chance to take a rest from the harsh daily life of a Hunter. It would be great if the suit that I create is able to help you achieve that. Now then, I will base my design to be suitable for that restaurant. Do tell me if you have any wishes regarding the design. I have some samples too if you would like to see them.”

Celene operated her information terminal and showed Akira some examples of custom suits. Akira could see the picture of models wearing all kinds of designs starting from a cool looking sleek suit to a flashy suit. He hummed for a bit and looked slightly troubled, he then said with a serious look.

“Is it possible to just leave the design fully up to you? I won’t complain about the result.”

“It’s not like we can’t do that, but a custom suit’s main characteristic is that, unlike normal standard clothing, you can customize it to your heart content. But once we move on to the production, it would be difficult to make any big changes afterwards. If it’s just a small change, I’ll do my best to do it, but of course, there’s a limit on how far I can go. So, are you really okay with no particular wish regarding the suit?”

Celene said so to avoid getting complaints later. Akira thought for a bit before replying back with a bit of hesitation.

“I don’t have any fashion sense, or more like, I think I’m very insensitive about fashion. That’s why I don’t want to make any demands just to end up with a weird suit. I’m even doubtful that I can recognize a weird design when I see one. But even so, back then, when I came here to refit Sheryl’s dress, I at least could recognize that it was well designed. So, if I have to make any demands, I want to get something amazing that can even make someone as insensitive as me able to recognize that it is a good design. Is that okay?”

Celene was taken aback. She was indeed happy to hear someone praise her work, but at the same time, if someone asked her to make something similar, she could not say yes right away.

“That dress was originally refitted from an old-world dress. So if I have to make something similar, I would have to use good quality fabric, and that would not be cheap…”

To be honest, Celene wished Akira would not put his hopes too high in case he complained about the result after he made such a demand, which kicked the price of the suit up. But Akira replied back casually.

“Expensive, huh? How expensive exactly? As expected, I would hesitate to pay if it goes up to 100 billion Aurum or something like that though…”

“O-Of course it won’t be that expensive. That is, as long as it’s not an armour that looks like a suit from the outside or anything like that. In the first place, our shop doesn’t handle that kind of clothing.”

“Ah, I don’t want anything like that. A normal suit that has nothing to do with fighting will do just fine.”

“C-certainly!”

It reminded Celene that she was talking with a Hunter who was earning a healthy amount of money. Even if that Hunter had to pay 100 billion Aurum, it would be difficult, but not impossible. She was dealing with that level of Hunter.

She was questioning herself if she would be able to make a suit that would satisfy such a Hunter. That fear caused Celene to waver, but making a custom suit for such a person might allow her to use as much money as she wanted to realize the design that she had envisioned. That temptation overpowered her fear and completely wiped out any hesitation from her heart.

As she made her resolve, Celene told herself that if she backed out here, it would be the end of her as a tailor.

“…Very well, but considering that you are a Hunter, it would cost about 6 million Aurum. If you could pay that much, I’ll do my best to answer your expectation.”

“Sure, uh, you do accept Hunter ID for the payment, right?”

To be honest, Celene was half-expecting Akira would say no, but he casually said so and handed over his Hunter ID. Celene received that Hunter ID and used her terminal to process the payment. The payment went through smoothly.

“Thank you very much. Let’s move on to the measurements, shall we? Come over here, please.”

She had received the payment. There was no turning back now and she had no plans to step back in the first place. Celene was smiling as her soul of a tailor was burning hot. She then guided Akira to one of the rooms inside the shop.

After Akira moved to Celene’s workroom, he removed his augmented suit and undressed to only be in his underwear. Although he was from the slum city, he had been eating better food lately and had been tempering his body to the point that some doctors suspected him of trying to become a superhuman, hence Akira had a good body build. Celene could not help but to send a meaningful glance at him.

Akira noticed her glance and found it weird. He made his own guess and asked.

“Should I remove the rest to get a better measurement?”

“Ah, no, you’re okay like this.”

Celene banished that thought from her mind as she started taking measurements. But it did not take long for that thought to come back. Akira noticed it too.

“Uhhh, does it look weird? It’s originally an old-world relic, so it might have a weird design. But I have nothing to complain about as long as it is comfortable.”

The skin-tight underwear stuck close to Akira's skin and completely followed the contour of his body build. It was made of a mysterious material that would not tear no matter how he moved, while at the same time, it was also comfortable to use. This was exactly the reason why many people would spend a lot of money to get old-world clothing articles.

Celene flusteredly replied.

"No, not at all! I just thought that you have a good body… No, I mean, that's not it."

Celene's real thoughts slipped out since she was so flustered. The moment she realized her blunder, it only made her even more flustered. But instead of finding it weird, Akira seemed to get what she said.

"Ah, I see. Well, I had some close calls recently and got hospitalized afterwards, so I believe most of my injuries and scars were removed back then. After that, I've been using some expensive medicines too, so it must have completely healed all the smaller wounds."

Akira had misunderstood, thinking that it was weird for a Hunter not to have any old scar.

"Back then, when I did not have an augmented suit, some of my wounds left scars. There was also a time when I was forced to heal my wound when a monster bit me, so it left me with a rather large scar. But now I have an augmented suit, as long as the monsters are not strong enough to break through its defence, normally, I don't get any scars anymore. Although I'm pretty sure when I face something strong enough to break through my augmented suit, forget leaving a scar, it would definitely kill me."

"I see, as expected, that kind of treatment must be pretty expensive, right?"

"Yeah, the one when I got hospitalized was 50 million Aurum, while the medicines that I'm using right now is about one to five million Aurum per box."

Akira said casually as if it was an insignificant amount. He had been earning and spending a huge amount of money on a regular basis and it had dulled his sense of money.

Celene realised it was no wonder Akira paid 6 million Aurum without any hesitation since he was earning that much.

“…As I thought, it’s pretty expensive.”

“Well, it’s indeed expensive, but there’s nothing more expensive than life, you see. And that’s true for equipment too. It would be meaningless to be frugal about it if it ends up getting myself killed.”

“You have a point there.”

There were many Hunters who splurged on momentary pleasure. After all, they could die anytime. Even for Akira, there was no guarantee that he would return back alive after placing that order for his custom suit. Celene was listening with great interest to the story of a Hunter, who was living in a completely different world than her despite being around the same age, while still continuing to take measurements.

Once she finished taking measurements, she escorted Akira back to the shop’s main hall and returned back to her room. She then took a long deep breath.

“…Alright then, let’s do this!”

She pumped herself up in order to challenge herself to make a suit that would surpass her past masterpiece and started working with a huge grin on her face.

Elena and Sara were browsing the clothes in the shop with Kashua as their guide. Even now, they were looking at the mirror with the dress that Kashua recommended to see how they looked. But then Elena sounded disappointed as she said.

“Hmmm.”

“It doesn’t really suit your fancy, I guess?”

“It’s not bad, but I actually have a similar dress and I have no plans to get another one.”

“I see, if I may, how much is your budget for today?”

“We haven’t really decided on the budget. We’re basically here just to accompany Akira. Ah, is it like you have some special articles that you only show to suitable potential customers?”

“It’s not like we’re keeping them secret, but we do have those kinds of articles. As an example, we have some old-world underwears which of course we can’t just show to all of our customers.”

Using the words ‘as an example’ was actually a calculated move from Kashua to pull up the shop’s worth. It made it sound like other similar articles had been sold in the past and there was no guarantee that she would be able to get the same clothing article again.

Kashua was about to continue by saying that she might offer them if Elena and Sara would be one of the shop’s frequent customers, but Elena then casually said.

“Ahh, in that case, I don’t really need them. Sara and I already have enough for the spares too. So we have no plans to buy more at the moment. I’m really sorry.”

“O-Of course, it’s no problem at all.”

Kashua was calculating the total money needed to achieve that in the back of her mind and was slightly taken aback.

Elena and Sara actually bought them from Shizuka when Akira brought them to her shop. Since they bought them before they were moved to other merchants, they actually did not pay that much money. But of course, Kashua did not know about it.

[…Last time, that Hunter Akira brought with him someone who had a 100 million Aurum budget too. I wonder if everyone around him is that loaded? They're completely out of my target customer range. As expected, I don't have that level of expensive clothing in this shop, I guess I'll start with recommending the most expensive dress that I have huh…]

When Kashua was thinking about what was her best option to tend to Sara and Elena as her customers, Akira, who had finished taking his measurements, returned.

"Elena-san, Sara-san, I'm sorry to make you wait."

Sala smiled to welcome Akira but noticed something bothering her.

"You're done? That was rather fast. What kind of suit did you order? I thought that you would take longer, you know."

"Ah, I basically left the design to the tailor, so I only needed to take the measurements"

Elena tilted her head.

"It's not so often that you order a custom suit, you know. Are you really okay with it? You sure you're not getting tricked?"

Elena thought that Akira was tricked into agreeing to that, then it was her time to show her skill in negotiation, but he happily replied.

"It's fine, it's more like I pushed it to her. She said that she would make an amazing suit that even someone with a bad fashion sense like me would be able to recognize its greatness. So I'm kind of looking forward to the result."

"Ohhh."

Judging from Akira's reaction, it seemed that it was something that he could really look forward to and there was no need to worry about the result. Elena and Sara always thought that he leaned more towards being one of those more paranoid Hunters. Because of that, if he even went to say that far, it made them rather curious instead.

Kashua picked that slight change as she said with a friendly smile.

“If the premade dresses don’t suit your taste, then how about ordering a custom dress? I’m sure that our prized tailor would be able to create a satisfying result.”

Sara replied first.

“Hmm, well, since we’re already here, might as well order one, huh. Since it’s custom, I should be able to put some custom details in after all.”

With the size of her chest, Sara usually had a limited number of choices. Not to mention that the size would change depending on her nanomachine reserve, it even further narrowed her options. If she could order a custom dress that took care of that problem, she did not mind paying more than usual.

“That’s true. I might as well order one too. Since Akira even went as far as to say that too. We’re going for dinner together, it might be a good idea to get a custom dress with a similar design.”

“Oh, that’s a good idea.”

Kashua hid her smile since it went just as she had planned.

“Leaving aside whether to order a custom dress or not, how about both of you try to have a talk with our tailor first to get a good view of what you can expect? I will bring her here, so please wait for a moment.”

Kashua was excited, expecting that she would be able to get 3 custom clothing orders that day as she went to Celene’s working room.

Celene, who was putting all her focus into working on her design, frowned when Kashua told her the news.

“Onee-chan.I’m sorry but can you refuse that order? I want to focus on Akira-san’s suit.”

“Celene, didn’t I always tell you to call me manager when you’re on duty. And also, are you seriously asking me to refuse it? If it goes well, they might be our regulars, you know? I won’t let them get away, you’ve been saying that you’re bored working on refitting dresses all the time, right? So why are you saying no to a custom order now?”

“It’s not like I don’t want to do it. It’s just that the timing is bad. Not to mention, if it’s a similar design to Akira-san’s, it won’t be cheap… Onee-Manager, you do know that very well, right?”

“Of course, but it’ll be fine. I know that you’re worried since Akira is a Hunter who is earning well, so it won’t be weird for him to order an expensive suit. But don’t worry. The other two are also great Hunters. They said that they even have enough old-world clothing as reserves, you know. As I thought, successful Hunters are so different from those common Hunters.”

Seeing her excited sister, Celene then said with a serious tone.

“Manager, check the order history first. If they are really going to order a similar design, make sure to let them know that it would take some time. If they’re still okay with it, then bring them here for measurement.”

Kashua found it a little weird and checked the order history. The moment she saw the recent order, she could not hold back her surprise.

“6 million Aurum?! Celene!! What the heck were you thinking?!”

“He said that he wanted an amazing suit just like the refitted old-world dress that I did before. I need at least that much money to be able to do it. But even after I warned him, he still accepted it. So what’s left for me to do is just to give my best to answer his expectations. That’s why I want to focus on this job.”

Kashua started ruffling her hair, seeing which Celene lowered her tone.

“If you still accept that order as the manager of the shop, then as the staff of this shop, I’ll do my best to complete the order. It’s my job as the tailor to work on the custom orders after all. So similarly, I’ll leave the negotiation part to you since it is your job.”

Kashua did want her shop to flourish and she also wanted her sister to be able to use her talent with no obstruction. After calculating how much burden it would put on Celene and how much reputation of her shop was on the line, then, considering the risk of damage in case if they lost this gamble, Kashua then asked Celene for her confirmation.

“…Even if I got them to put the custom orders, you won’t make any compromise regarding the quality, right?”

“Yes, as long as you can get me enough time.”

“Alright then.”

It seemed that Celene had made her resolve as a tailor, so Kashua also made her resolve as the manager of the shop.

After that, Kashua ended up getting custom orders for 4 people. Elena had contacted Shizuka, who also ordered a custom dress with a similar design as well.

Elena and Sara were surprised when they heard that the price was 6 million Aurum. But it was nothing strange considering that it would be as good as an old-world dress. Since they did not want to look pathetic in front of Akira, and not to mention that Akira looked happy for some reason too, they did not hold back on their custom dress. They then finished taking their measurements and scheduled Shizuka to come there another day to get her measurement.

As Kashua watched Akira, Elena, and Sara leave the shop with happy faces, she mumbled.

[…In total, we got 24 million Aurum worth orders today. If we make a blunder here, it might as well be the end of this shop. Let’s make sure not to bother Celene.]

Kashua was smiling happily as she fired herself up to face such a significant order for her shop.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 204, Group Coordination Support Augmented Suit

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was spending his time training in his garage inside his home. Ever since he bought a large vehicle, he had to renovate his garage to fit it in. But now that it was out for repair, the garage was large enough to use as his training ground.

But during his training, Akira was not seeing his own garage. Instead, he felt like he was inside an old-world room in the middle of an old-world ruin. And he was running through the room evading Alpha's flurry of attacks.

As Akira aimed his empty SSB rifle at Alpha and pulled the trigger, a virtual bullet shot out from the muzzle following realistic mathematical calculations. Alpha hid behind a virtual wall to take cover from those bullets, she then swung a virtual blade that cut through the virtual wall and aimed straight for Akira.

Akira leapt and rolled over to evade the incoming blade. But one of the rubble scattered on the ground tripped him over. His augmented suit stiffened the moment his leg struck the non-existent rubble, throwing him off balance. That small opening was enough for Alpha to peek out from behind the wall and shoot him. By the end of that sequence, an image of Akira with his head blown off was lying on the ground.

Akira looked at that image and sighed. He looked slightly displeased as he said.

“…This time, I didn’t even last 10 seconds, huh. Alpha, it’s not like I’m asking you to pull back your punches, but like, can you go a little easy on me? This is just a one-sided fight, can you make some adjustments for the training?”

Alpha, who was behind a wall some distance away from him, suddenly teleported in front of him. She was using an old-world fighting suit which was exposing too much skin according to the current standard. The suit gave a clear view of her shoulder and thighs as well as a part of the valley on her chest. She had blades on both of her hands which she used to attack Akira just now, and her rifle was not only equipped to shoot bullets but also lasers from its muzzle.

Alpha then gently said to Akira with a smile.

“Nope. I’ve already placed some level of adjustment, you know? It’s your turn to do your best to put up a fight.”

“I’m already doing my best here, but like, you know, it also depends on the opponent’s weapons and positioning, and luck too. Like, that blade that can even cut through the wall, is that even necessary for this training?”

Akira said so while questioning the aforementioned weapon, but Alpha then said teasingly.

“Even if you say luck as an aspect, I think your luck is already in the correct setting though? After all, you did fight someone with a similar weapon in the past, right? Personally speaking, it would be great if you can get strong enough to fight against your bad luck as soon as possible.”

“…Well, you have a point there, but still.”

Akira could not help but frown since Alpha did give him a real example. Although he accepted that reasoning, part of him still could not accept it for a different reason. It was obvious from his face that he was feeling conflicted about it.

“Well, we already did quite a lot of damage in this place, so can you clean that up for now?”

“Sure.”

All the virtual objects from Akira’s augmented vision vanished. Including all the images of the dead Akira, the blood that was scattered on the wall and the floor, the walls that were put there to make the huge garage suitable for close-ranged fights, the holes on those walls from the bullets, the scorch marks on the floor. Everything vanished and his vision returned back to normal, to his original garage.

“But still, this is really convenient. It’s not like I’m using real bullets, so it’s not like I’m paying for the bullets that I shoot. I can shoot as many expensive bullets as I want. We could have used this kind of training sooner.”

“Unfortunately, in order to give you realistic feedback via your augmented suit, I need to be able to do fine-tuning and detailed adjustments to your augmented suit, which means that I couldn’t do it unless you were using a high-quality augmented suit. Thanks to your new augmented suit, I can finally do that to some extent. If we use an inadequate augmented suit, the feedback from the augmented suit would be far from realistic, that’s why we didn’t do it until now.”

“Ohh, I see. I’m really glad I splurged on my equipment.”

Akira was fully convinced by that answer and Alpha was smiling like usual.

Alpha was not lying there. But she did hide some fine details from her explanation. One of the main factors why they could do that training now was because Alpha's connection through the old-world domain with Akira was stronger than before. This way, she was able to transfer a bigger load of data to his brain.

The reason why Akira leapt out to evade the incoming blade although he should not have been able to see it coming from behind the wall, was because he felt its presence and reacted accordingly. Although it was not like he completely saw through Alpha's move, he just received enough information to trigger his instinct. It was from a faint change in his surroundings, like a slight change in the ambient sound. Akira was able to experience that level close to reality during this virtual training.

This also meant that one day, Akira would be able to feel Alpha, who was nothing but virtual data through the same means. While on the other hand, Alpha, who was nothing but virtual data, would be able to choke Akira to death through the same means too, just like a ghost choking someone to death.

"Alpha, I'm tired, can we take a short break?"

"Sure, in that case, we can finish the training here for today."

"Hmmm, let's see… I'll decide later after a short break."

Akira thought that his mental fatigue was from the nervousness during the training when it actually came from the burden of the huge data transfer. Not to mention, he was keeping his time compression up throughout the training as well, so it further prevented him from noticing that.

While Akira was taking a break, a call from Sheryl came in. He was about to pick the call up when Alpha suddenly interjected.

"You don't need to use your terminal, instead just pick that call through me."

"It's fine. If I get too used to doing that, I feel like I will progressively stop using my terminal. In the worst-case scenario, it might cause me to make a blunder somewhere, so it's better if I keep using my terminal like usual."

“If you want to commit to it, you can just say that you have a thought-controlled type terminal planted inside your head, you know.”

“Hmm, for some reason, I just don’t like that idea. If we’re going down that route, I prefer the external equipment that I can control with my brain wave. But considering that brain waves can be read through several means, I feel like someone can eavesdrop on that too… I guess it’s too late for me to be worrying about that, huh? In the first place, my brain wave is already readable all the time after all.”

Akira sent a teasing glance at Alpha, who replied back with a capricious smile.

“Don’t worry, I won’t tell anyone.”

“Well, thanks for that.”

Akira smiled back at Alpha, on one side, he reminded himself that was indeed the case.

In contrast to that, Alpha found something bothering her about Akira, but she did not show it on her face.

After some time, Akira took his bike and went to the location that Sheryl told him when she called. Alpha, who was floating next to him, was curious and asked.

“But still, there’s no need to stop your own training just to go join another training, right?”

“It’s fine, isn’t it? I’m bored of getting my ass kicked by you. It’ll be a good change of pace. Furthermore, I’m also interested in what Sheryl told me. Moreover, you did say that you don’t mind ending the training there, didn’t you?”

“But to be honest, I’m not sure that training with Erio and the others can serve as a good training for you anymore.”

“Well, that would depend on how far what Sheryl said is true.”

While Akira took a short break from the training inside his garage, he had got a call from Sheryl. Basically, she asked him to help Erio and the other children's training if he had the time. When he asked about the details of the training, something piqued his interest, so he decided to stop his own training and went to help Erio and the others.

When he arrived at the training location, which was in the middle of the wasteland, he spotted a big trailer parked there with Erio and the other children undergoing mock battle near it. Sheryl and some people in sleek suits were watching their training.

Akira stopped his bike near the trailer and met up with them. Sheryl, who was wearing a light outfit for the wasteland, happily welcomed him with a smile.

"Akira, thank you for coming although it was rather sudden."

"Don't worry, I'm also a bit interested in the training after all."

One of the men in suits politely welcomed Akira.

"Akira-sama, I presume? I'm Yodogawa from a company dealing with machines. We're really thankful that Sheryl-same is volunteering to work with us to test our Group Coordination Support Augmented Suit."

"Eh? Ah, yeah, sure."

Akira glanced at Sheryl, seeking an explanation. So Sheryl interjected.

"Yodogawa-san, I have something to talk about with Akira first, meanwhile, can you prepare Erio and the others for the training?"

"Of course!"

Yodogawa lightly excused himself and went back to the trailer.

Sheryl sat next to Akira, grabbed his hand, and stared at him.

“But still, it has been quite a while since the last time you came to see me. I’m happy to see you again.”

“Hm? Has it really been that long?”

Akira looked honestly confused, so Sheryl longingly said.

“…To be honest, I wish I can see you every day.”

“That won’t happen, I’m pretty busy myself, you see.”

Although Sheryl was acting to some extent, she was not lying. She seemed to be genuinely happy to see the person she loved after quite some time. In contrast to that, Akira replied in his usual manner. Even after she affectionately held his hand and looked at him with endearment, he only showed the bare minimum reaction to her.

Her actions, which would trick a lot of people, her words that she picked to bring Akira closer, and her expression used to pull Akira in, all of those things would only be properly conveyed between the people who loved each other. But that was not the case for Akira. Sheryl was reminded of the reality that hurt her heart.

“What’s wrong?”

“…It’s nothing. But I would be super happy even if you only come to see me to kill time.”

“Sure, I’ll do that if I have free time.”

Sheryl did her best to smile. At least Akira did not hate her. He still came even when she asked him out of the blue as long as he did not have anything else to do. She told herself that to push in the welling sadness from inside her heart.

She then went on to explain Akira about the situation.

In return for removing his rival, Inabe had offered Sheryl some support for her relic shop, which included equipment as well as firepower. These equipment were not counted into their deal, which was only for the quality and the quantity of relics sent to her shop.

Although Akira was the backer and guardian of Sheryl's gang, it was not like he was always in Sheryl's base to defend it against attackers. He was basically like a firepower reserved for retaliation and not firepower for direct defence. With Inabe sending expensive relics to slum city, he wanted more insurance so that those relics would not be stolen or robbed.

That was why Inabe used his personal connection to seek help from an experimental technology from a certain company and get Sheryl involved with the testing of that technology. It was technology that they were thinking of offering to the city defence squad eventually. Thus, it would be meaningless if it was not even good enough to be used in the slum city.

Although Sheryl's gang was somehow able to get a deal with a big gang such as Shijima's, leaving Akira aside, the gang would only be left with Erio and the other children who could not be counted as a deterrent. Since it was basically a gang consisting of small children, it would not really help if they tried to get more members. While on the other hand, its territory had grown big enough that it had become difficult to properly guard all its territory. Sheryl's gang was actually having a crisis in terms of the ability to enforce.

That was when Inabe came with a timely offer. Since they were volunteering to test the system, it did not cost Sheryl any money.

Akira, who was listening to her explanation, found something that was bothering him.

"Won't Katsuragi complain if you use another company's product for your gang?"

"Indeed. We're in the midst of negotiation about that matter. But don't worry, Katsuragi-san is the merchant that you introduced to us and we're also in his debt too. So we won't do anything bad. Not to mention, this type of augmented suit is not something that Katsuragi-san has, so it should be alright."

“Hmmmm, well, I leave that part to you. But still, augmented suits, huh? And with coordination support too. That sounds pretty amazing.”

That was when Yodogawa returned to them. The other person that he brought with him overheard what Akira just said and excitedly interjected in Sheryl and Akira’s conversation.

“Oh, you have some interest in it?! By all means, feel free to try our product! It’s the latest product from our company and we can guarantee its quality.”

“I-I see.”

In contrast to Akira who was a bit overwhelmed by Tabata’s excitement, Tabata continued with his high enthusiasm.

“Ah, sorry, I’m Tabata. I’m the developer of the coordination support augmented suit, or to be more precise, the coordination support system King’s Mind. I’m also involved in creating the augmented suit to use in tandem with the system as well as its development. We’re aiming to create a new standard for the next generation augmented suit and…”

Seeing that it would continue indefinitely if left alone, Yodogawa immediately cut him short.

“Tabata, I’ll do the business-related stuff, so you go prepare for the test.”

“Ah, right, my bad. Akira-sama, in order to adjust for the ‘hit’ calculation, I’ll need to sync your equipment with the system. I hope that it doesn’t bother you. You just need an aiming device that will work with an information-gathering device, even a cheap one will do. In case it isn’t compatible, I need to ask you to use our equipment instead? Are you okay with that? Or do you want to use our equipment right from the start instead?”

“In that case, can you check if my rifle can work with the system?”

“Of course, over here please.”

Tabata guided Akira to the trailer. The inside was littered with strange equipment and it looked like a mix of a laboratory and a workshop.

The aiming device of Akira's SSB rifle was compatible to sync with the system. After a short adjustment to connect to the system, Akira received a short explanation about the virtual bullet used in the training, he then started shooting at a target practice to finish the finer adjustments. Akira aimed at the target and after getting some hit notifications, he then tilted his head and mumbled.

"…That last one, the system said that it was a hit but I'm pretty sure that was not a hit though."

"Is that so? The system says that it was a hit, you know."

"Can you put up a practice target at a fixed distance away? And keep it there even after I hit it."

Akira then started shooting again. This time he deliberately shifted his aim bit by bit to investigate the hit calculation of the system.

"I feel like it's not accurate though. Like from a certain range, the system calculates the hit using a random chance based on the bullet landing radius."

"…Well, this is basically the system that we use to calculate a hit."

"Alright then, by the way, I'm okay with the adjustment now."

Akira then left the room together with Tabata. The other technicians who saw him leave looked at each other with a frown.

"Say, about that just now though, do you think it's true?"

"No idea, there are a lot of people who complain that their shot should have hit when the system doesn't recognize it, but normally, no one would complain when their shot hit though. Usually, those who do that are people who just want to look cool."

“We still have the log anyway, I guess I’ll try to recalculate it with better accuracy.”

Since it was not a weapon test, the hit recognition of the system was not that advanced. After all, a more accurate recognition system would demand more calculation time. In that situation where the system was still calculating for the hit, they could not afford to stop the experiment while waiting for the result to come out. It was better to adopt a faster hit recognition during the testing since their main goal was testing the coordination support system.

The technician used his terminal to pull up the shooting data and threw it into the advanced system for calculation.

“…This is taking some time.”

“Well, it’s not like we’re using the headquarters’s computer after all. It’s to be expected that it’ll take some time since we’re using the computer in the trailer. Oh, it’s out, hmmm, well, if it’s only this much, it’s not that bad though? Though it looks like he was just shifting his aim left and right.”

While those technicians were laughing, another technician beside them restarted the calculation with a serious face.

“What are you doing here?“

“I just thought of re-doing the calculation after adding other data sets too.”

“Other data sets?”

“Like the wind, humidity, temperature, the effect from the light colourless mist. Basically, everything that I can add together.”

With more data, the calculation takes longer as well. As expected, it took more time than the last calculation, but when the result was out, it really surprised all the technicians.

“…No way.”

“…He’s right. This data, although it seems that he’s just shifting his aim left and right he was actually checking how close he needs to shoot at the target to register a hit. He deliberately made the system calculate a hit and a miss in turn.”

“Wait, no way, that’s impossible unless he knows how our system works, you know?”

“…The system is set to recognize the hit not from a random chance. He might have calculated and backtracked the hit recognition calculation with repeated shooting… No, it’s not like he actually calculated it, it’s more like he understood it instinctively…”

The technicians frowned and smiled wryly at each other.

“…That gives me goosebumps.”

“I heard that guy is a great Hunter despite being young. As I thought, people like him are just built differently, don’t you think?”

The technicians shook off the shiver that ran down their spine as they returned back to their original job.

The technicians were more or less correct. But Alpha was the one who told Akira where to shoot to check for the system’s hit recognition. And although he received some support from his augmented suit, Akira was able to execute accurate shooting following Alpha’s instruction. His skill had already exceeded the shooting skill of a common human after all.

The mock battle between Akira and Erio plus other children which also doubled as a test for the coordination support system started. Just like usual, Akira was alone versus Erio and the rest, the mock battle would stop every time one side was completely eliminated. But unlike usual, Erio and the other children were all using augmented suits and they were receiving instruction from the coordination support system in the display visor under their full-face helmets.

The coordination support system recognized the current situation and the location of all the members, it then gave instructions for all the members to work as a team. It gathered information from the individual information-gathering device carried by each person to share the information of their locations and flush out the location of the opponent. At the same time, it also prevented friendly fire. It transformed the members under its command from an uncoordinated group to a well-oiled group, increasing their effectiveness as a team.

Moreover, it also controlled individual augmented suits to some extent to provide support to its user. It included the ability to evade enemy attacks and to shoot back at the opponents.

This meant that the augmented suit would be able to move outside the user's wish. Whether it was a good thing or not, different people had different opinions on it. There were many people who did not like the feeling of their body moving without their consent. But since it was moving following the movement of its users at the moment, Erio and the other children did not feel any discomfort using it.

After a few rounds, Akira's loss rate was floating around 50 percent. Tabata was smiling happily after seeing that result. It seemed that the system that they developed was performing really well.

In the end, Erio and the other children were complete amateurs, they were nothing more than children from the slum. Although it was a single person against a huge group, they were able to maintain that winning rate against a high-ranking Hunter thanks to the coordination support system. It was a good result from the system developer's as well as from the business point of view.

After a few rounds, Tabata happily went to Erio and the other children while they were taking a rest from the mock battles.

"How was the system? With this coordination support system, if you work together, then you can even beat the hunter that you guys are relying on all this time, you know? Isn't it amazing?"

But the children looked at each other and raised their eyebrows. Then Erio spoke up to summarize what everyone was thinking there.

“It’s indeed amazing, but…”

“Hm? Is there anything that you find unpleasant? No need to hold back. We’re in the middle of development, so we’re also collecting opinions from its user to improve it.”

“No, it’s not like that. I heard that it’s difficult to move inside an augmented suit until you get used to it, but I don’t feel anything like that.”

“But of course. We have put a lot of effort to make it move as naturally as possible, you know.”

“And the voice, as well as the instructions shown in the helmet, don’t block our vision that much as well…”

“Yep yep. We made sure that it won’t block your view, the voice is soft enough to be heard but not too loud, and the instructions are concise and easy to understand. The instruction display and design are all calculated. The voice volume and the length of the instruction are adjusted to be easy to catch depending on the situation that you’re in and…”

Tabata was bragging proudly of the system that he had developed, but he suddenly stopped when he noticed Erio and the other children’s expressions.

“So, what problem exactly are you having then?”

“Nothing exactly, it’s just that…. About why our winning rate is 50 percent… Well, it’s difficult to say this nicely, but I’m pretty sure that he’s not taking this seriously, or more like, he’s pulling his punches.”

Tabata, who was jovial up until now, frowned.

“Pulling his punches? What do you mean?”

“It might be more correct to call it a handicap I guess. We actually had similar training before with Akira-san, and back then, our winning rate was also 50 percent. He said that he put in some adjustments to keep the winning rate around that number. Like, decreasing the power output of his augmented suit, or he would stop using his information-gathering device, or reducing the firing range of his rifle. I’m pretty sure he’s doing the same thing this time too.”

“…I see, excuse me for a moment.”

Tabata said so with a serious face as he left Erio and the other children and headed towards Akira.

The children looked at each other, wondering if they just said something that they should not have.

After hearing Tabata’s explanation, Akira thought for a bit before answering.

“It’s not like I’m deliberately going easy on them and it’s not like I’m putting a handicap on myself just because I want to, I’m really taking this seriously as a training. It’s true that I’m not taking this as if it’s a real fight, and if you say that is exactly the proof that I’m going easy on them, well, I can’t really deny it.”

“I see…”

Tabata frowned. Yodogawa, who was recommending some of the company’s products during the break, also smiled bitterly. He had lost his ground in recommending their products.

The reason why Sheryl’s gang was picked to test the new system was not only because of Inabe’s connection but also for Yodogawa’s sake as well, they were trying to sell their augmented suit to Akira.

Shooting down a powered suit all by himself, defeating the huge monster that half-destroyed a certain area near the outskirts of Kuzusuhara ruin, and many other achievements as well. Akira had taken the interest of a certain group of people who were seeking high-ranking Hunters.

A normal boy from the slum, without anything special, suddenly became super strong in such a short time after using a certain augmented suit. Even if it was not the truth, letting such rumour out would be a great advertisement for the company.

Sheryl's connection with Akira and the fact that her gang was selected to test the new technology, if that information was spread together with that rumour, it would be enough to convince some people.

If that rumour went out, some people might think that Akira was actually involved in that experiment for quite some time and they were just hiding it from the public, or his augmented suit was custom built based on that new technology, or he was gathering achievement before making it public, or all that he did up until now was actually for the sake of advertisement. Some people would think that they might become as strong as him if they could get the same augmented suit as him.

The record showing that the system allowed a group of amateurs from the slum city, who were mere children, to defeat a high ranking Hunter, was basically the perfect record to advertise the system. But both Akira and the children were saying that the 50 percent winning rate was because Akira was not taking the fight seriously. Thus, that record was basically meaningless. If that information also leaked out with their rumour, it would be ineffective. Yodogawa who thought so then smiled and said to Akira.

"In that case, Akira-sama, would it be possible for you to take the fight seriously as if it is a real fight?"

"Hmm, well, even if you say so…"

Akira seemed a bit troubled there, so Yodogawa tried to give another push by provoking him.

"It's not like it is a one on one fight, so you can use that as an excuse if you lose."

Sheryl, who noticed that cheap provocation, frowned in displeasure. But Akira did not even notice that it was a provocation.

“It’s not about losing or winning. But, if I take it seriously, it means that I’ll have to use my money too. It’s not like the energy pack for my augmented suit is free, you know. Not to mention, the medicine that I need to take in case I need to push my body to execute certain maneuvers too. There are cases when I get too tired and have to take a short break from my Hunter work as well. So if you are telling me to take the fight seriously, I will have to charge you, you know? I’m just here helping with the training purely out of curiosity. So I have no wish to go that far for free, you see.”

Yodogawa was trying to see if it was just an excuse to avoid having to take that fight seriously or if Akria was being serious there. But before he could say anything, Tabata suddenly said.

“Alright, I’ll pay for it then. I’ll pay you 100,000 Aurum per round.”

“Wait, Tabata?”

“100,000 Aurum, huh? Hmmmm…”

Yodogawa started to panic since Tabata suddenly made that suggestion without consulting with him. And Akira seemed to be interested in that offer too. Seeing that, Tabata just ignored Yodogawa and gave another push.

“Let’s do this instead then, I’ll pay you 100,000 Aurum more for each round. But if you lose, I’ll have you pay instead, how about that?”

“Alright.”

Akira smiled and said so firmly. In contrast to that, Tabata made a serious look.

“Alright then, starting from the next round, we’ll take it as if it is a serious fight, right? I’ll go and readjust the settings then.”

Tabata returned back to the trailer. Yodogawa was at loss for a bit before excusing himself and went to the trailer too.

Sheryl looked at Akira.

“Akira, are you sure about this?”

“Eh? Is it something that I shouldn’t have done?”

“No, if you’re okay with it, then it’s fine.”

Sheryl was actually worried if Akira would incur consecutive losses and lose a lot of money instead. But judging from his reaction, it seemed like it should be fine as she prevented herself from saying anything further. After all, she could not afford to ask what he would do if he kept losing since it would sound as if she was doubting his strength and that might offend him.

Akira found Sheryl’s reaction a bit weird, but she immediately changed the subject and he did not pursue it any further.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 205, Real Battle Assumption

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Yodogawa looked at Tabata with a confused expression.

“Hey, are you sure you’re going to be okay after saying that?”

“I’ll pay the fee using the budget for the test. I’m the one with the authority on how to use that money, so I won’t use the marketing funds.”

“That’s not it, what are you going to do if you keep losing? Hunters are pretty persistent when it comes to money, you know?”

“I’ll change the system setting to prioritize winning. Just so you know, I too am actually holding back since it was just a test. But from here and on, no more holding back. So it should be fine.”

“But still…”

Yodogawa just could not shake off his worry. Tabata looked straight at Yodogawa with a sharp gaze.

“Are you going to say that the system that I made will have no chance of winning?”

Yodogawa flinched back from the pressure, he then lightly sighed and said.

“Alright, just do what you want. But, I’ll stop you if you lose or win too many times, okay? The biggest enemy of a merchant is the enmity of the customer, you know. Keep in mind that it’s me who will face the full brunt from the customer.”

“Okay. I’ll leave it to you when to stop. Moreover, I’ll lower the setting if I get too many consecutive wins. But do tell me if you want me to stop.”

Yodogawa and his men started changing the parameter setting for the group coordination support augmented suit. Although the technicians had a troubled look on their faces while working on the ongoing test, they still changed the setting as they were told. Yodogawa looked at his men working while fighting back the headache attacking him, thinking about what might happen.

When Tabata told Erio and the other children what was going on, it raised a small excited murmur while at the same time, they had a concerned look on their faces.

“Uhh, when you say that we’ll have a real battle after this, does that mean that we’re going to use real bullets? Or that it will be painful when we get hit?”

“Don’t worry. It’ll be the same as before. But, the order coming from the system will be under the assumption that you are in a real battle. So basically you guys will have to run and do some difficult moves, both will put your body in some level of stress. Since you’re volunteering for the test, I hope that you can understand that and bear with it.”

“Well, if it’s only that much, then…”

As the children regained some of their calm, Tabata then said with a serious expression.

“It’s just as you said, he’s been holding back up until now. But from here on out, he’ll stop holding back anymore. If you guys can win against him with the help of the coordination support augmented suit, it'll be proof of your strength, as well as the proficiency of the system. So endure the fight, I'll give my best support as well. I'm counting on you guys."

Tabata turned around and headed back to the trailer. Erio and the other children started conversing with each other.

"Winning against serious Akira-san, huh? Do you think we can do it?"

"Don't be stupid. Akira-san went alone to Ezont Family's base during that commotion and saved boss, you know? We basically have zero winning chance against him."

"But like, this augmented suit is a new product from a huge company which originally would cost a whole lot of money, that's just how great this augmented suit is, right? I'm sure that Ezont Family also had some crazy equipment with them too, but all of us are using this amazing augmented suit right now. So like, our winning chances are not exactly zero, right?"

"Well, it's not like Akira-san will come at us with full force trying to kill us anyway… So, maybe we can win?"

"We'll do the mock battle several times, so if we can at least win a round…"

The thought of the possibility of winning against Akira. It was not a reckless abandonment, they started to believe that it was a worthwhile gamble. Akira was also a boy from the slum city, just like the rest of them. The only difference was that he rose up as a Hunter while the rest of them stayed as children of the slum. They started to think that if they could win against someone like Akira, they might be able to break the impenetrable wall that had been separating them. This might be a good chance to do that. As that thought permeated and spread among them, they started getting fired up for the next mock battle.

Erio clapped his hand once to gather everyone's attention and to calm everyone down.

“Putting aside whether we can win or not, one thing for sure we’ll have to give our best for our next battle. That’s all there is to it. Don’t get too excited and stay sharp. Let’s go.”

Erio put his helmet back on, which he had taken off during their short break and started walking to his designated position. The other children also wore their helmets and followed the orders that came up inside the helmet.

Once Erio arrived at his designated location, he repeatedly took deep breaths to calm himself down while waiting for the start signal. That was when a voice came out from the inside of the helmet.

“Detected high anxiety level, please calm down in order to keep the effectiveness high.”

“…I know.”

“Do you want to use low concentration anxiety drugs through the ventilator? Warning, no compatible drug detected, unable to dispense.”

“Just shut up then!”

Erio inadvertently raised his voice from the irritation, he then reconfirmed his situation and changed gear.

[…Calm down. This is just a test. They did tell us that they are still holding back a lot of things. If I don’t calm down, I won’t be able to win what’s originally winnable.]

In reality, Erio was as anxious as the other children. Even when Akira stopped joining their usual training, they continued doing training by themselves. The empty AAH rifle for training that they received from Akira was originally unusable without Alpha, but with the help from Sheryl and Viola, they somehow gathered enough equipment to get them usable and had Colbert to help them in their training.

All the training that they had in the past gave them a level of confidence. Colbert even went to rent a vehicle and took them to the wasteland to do some easy subjugation requests. Their skill was more or less good enough for them to be called newbie Hunters.

[…If we can win against Akira, even if it's just purely out of luck, Sheryl would recognize our skill as well. We can get better treatment, better position… And finally, face a lower risk of getting kicked out from the gang.]

Erio and the other children felt that their positions were in danger. Although the overall power of the gang increased dramatically, it was purely from Sheryl, Viola, and Akira's contribution. On the other hand, Erio and the other children almost did not contribute to it at all, to put it simply, the gang needed them less and less.

After the clean up of that incident in the slum city, Sheryl's standing was considerably elevated among the gangs in the slum city. The gang was even able to borrow some men from Shijima's gang from time to time to patrol the area under their gang's control. Even some of the staff from the reopened relic shop came from Viola's connection. But some of the members of the gang were not completely happy with those changes.

With the boss of the gang regarded highly among the gangs in the slum city and the Hunter backing the gang being strong enough to defeat a powered suit alone, both of them were extremely strong pillars for the gang. But at the same time, they made it harder for the children to be laid back.

Even if Sheryl kicked out most of the gang members, she already had enough influence to get some men from other gangs to fill their positions. As for Akira, he was only helping out Sheryl, so strictly speaking, he was not on the same side as them. Although Sheryl and Akira had already distinguished themselves as no longer mere slum children, Erio and the others still could not escape that position.

Then before they even realized it, Sheryl had even gained a connection to someone within the City Management, and that officer was even lending them augmented suits as well as providing the gang with relics. Mere slum children had no chance of competing with that officer.

Erio and the children were always worried that they might get kicked out of the gang anytime. As they were doing their mock battle training, each of them reacted differently due to that worry. Some replaced it with admiration, some pushed themselves harder to show their worth, and some completely looked away from that matter.

Erio chose to do his best in order to show his worth. After all, he might need to use that strength to protect Alicia if something bad were to happen.

[If we can win against Akira when he's serious, that would definitely be a great achievement. Furthermore, we're not really in danger since it's just training, and even if we get to shoot Akira, it's not like he or Sheryl would get angry at us either. This is the perfect chance, let's do this!]

Erio's serious face was filled with steel-like determination.

The coordination support system started the countdown until the start of the mock battle on the helmet's display. As the number approached zero, Erio heightened his focus to its peak. As soon as the countdown reached zero, he immediately started running.

Not too far from the training ground, Alpha smiled amusedly and asked Akira, who was waiting for the signal to start the training.

"So then, how much support do you want this time?"

"Hmmm, no support please."

Alpha's smile distorted a bit.

"Oh, that's pretty brave of you. They're getting serious this time, so I'm pretty sure that they'll be coming at you without holding back to win the round though. Are you sure you can win?"

"It's not about winning or losing. They said that they'll pay for the expense, so there's no more need to hold back. Well, if I'm losing too much, I'll ask for your help to get back my win-lose ratio."

"Alright, but just to be safe, you're planning to win all the rounds, right?"

“Of course!”

“It’s all good then. But just for a bit, I’ll make a slight adjustment to your shooting. After all, I don’t want you to get too used to that imperfect hit calculation.”

“Sure, fair enough… It seems that we’re starting.”

Akira’s headgear display showed a countdown until the start of the mock battle. He calmed down his breathing and gathered his focus. He lowered his SSB rifles on both of his hands and relaxed his muscles. He soaked in the information sent to his information-gathering device to his augmented suit through his skin and probed for the opponents’ location around him.

From his headgear display, Akira could see what was behind him from his information-gathering device along with the scene captured from the aiming device from both of his SSB rifles. He distributed his focus to those information displays as well in order to expand the horizon of his consciousness.

[…Focus. Remember that feeling. Even if it’s only a portion of it, bring my consciousness closer to that time and pull off here.]

Akira asked Alpha in detail about what she did to him during his fight against the old-world automata. He felt like all his 5 senses were boosted to the point that it was as if he was transported into a completely different world. And Alpha’s explanation regarding that support surprised Akira.

The world from Akira’s point of view was based on the information coming to his brain, and due to the time needed for his brain to interpret that information, the world painted in his brain would always be late. In short, Akira was always perceiving not the current world, but a world where things had already occurred. So in order to shorten that time, he was filtering out any unneeded information from his brain. And in order to compensate for the reduced information, his brain had to fill in the hole with rough predictions. Basically, he was only perceiving a rough approximation of the world.

Furthermore, Alpha used her special private connection with Akira through the old-world domain to intercept the incoming information, analyze them, and then send the result back to Akira. Due to Alpha's powerful computation ability, it further shortened the calculation time, and with Akira skipping most of the information digesting process that he would normally have to do, his perception of the world got very very close to the real current world, to the point that it was as if he was in a completely different world.

To put it simply, it was as if, while the others were using a slow machine that could only pick blurred images, Akira was using a machine with clear images and superb reaction speed. As long as his opponents could not read the future, they had no chance to get ahead of him.

Alpha explained all of these things in detail to Akira while keeping a few things to herself. After that, Akira's training changed into getting him to be able to control the process when he was perceiving the current world.

It was actually close to impossible for Akira to do it without Alpha's support. But it was not impossible for him to try to get closer to that state. During the short exchange against his opponent, he extracted the information of where his opponent was, and his consciousness indeed was getting closer and closer to perceiving the current world, not the past world.

[I can do this! If I don't believe in myself, I won't even be able to do what's possible…!! I can do this!! Now I just need to keep trying until I can actually do it!!]

Akira renewed his resolve. He kicked the ground almost at the same time as when the signal for the start of the mock battle went off.

In order to collect information regarding the test, the area around that place was littered with small information-gathering devices. Tabata was looking at the data gathered from those devices and could not hide his surprise.

One of the technicians smiled bitterly and muttered.

"Well, this is pretty bad."

“To be honest, it’s a good data set considering it’s from a test. But still, I don’t know if there’s any point in continuing to do this. Tabata-san, are we going to continue with this pattern set?”

The technicians witnessed a small portion of Akira’s power during the aiming device adjustment. Because of that, they more or less expected that this would happen, so their reaction to the result only ended with a bitter smile.

But that was not the case for Tabata. He was staring at the ongoing mock battle with a stern face.

“…Get the data learning constant to maximum.”

“Eh? If we do that, the system will lean toward adjusting itself on how to fight that particular Hunter. It will be unusable for general use, you know? We might be able to get a win if we do that… But still…”

“Just do it!”

“…Alright.”

The technician smiled wryly and did as he was told to. Tabata still had his eyes fixed on the monitor showing the progress of the mock battle. He could see that Erio and the other children were gunned down one by one at an unbelievable speed.

Erio was running with a stern face. The augmented suit setting was changed from prioritizing in keeping the user’s burden to a minimum into prioritizing to empower its user. Thanks to that, he was able to run faster and more agile than ever before, but the burden that it put on his body was not small.

At first, Erio was delighted when he found out that he was way stronger than ever before. Although the sudden increase in the burden was nowhere pleasant, the sensation as if he suddenly became superhuman thanks to his augmented suit’s strength still made him immensely happy and motivated.

When he thought that he might be able to win with his power-up, that exact thought was completely destroyed when he glanced at the display inside his helmet which showed the current situation.

The other children were shot down one by one. And when he was still trying to cope with the surprise, the number did not stop falling. Then, before he realized it, the number had reduced to one, he was the only one still alive.

Right at the next moment, Erio caught a glimpse of Akira moving between the rubble. But the moment he noticed, it was already too late, multiple bullets already landed on his body.

The magazine that Akira was using for his SSB rifles was set to be an extended magazine. The bullets that he shot from those rifles formed a wall of bullets that crashed into Erio. Even if Erio tried to evade that, he would not be able to get away from those bullets.

That was Akira’s first win after the learning setting of the system was changed.

Due to Tabata’s request, the break until the next mock battle was longer than usual. After all, he needed time to let the system digest the data.

During the break, Sheryl came to Akira and praised him with a smile. Yodogawa also did the same although with a slightly stiffer smile.

“Well well well, Although it was against the system that our company developed, as expected of Akira-sama.”

“Well, that’s more or less what would happen when I’m not trying to keep the expense low. Ah, right, I’ll send you the payment invoice after each battle, so you can stop the next mock battle anytime when you think it’s getting too expensive.”

Akira took out his information terminal and sent an invoice to Yodogawa, who frowned when he saw the number.

“So, you want to stop now?”

“Ah, please don’t worry. We can pay this much, no problem at all. But still, it seems that it didn’t pose much challenge to you. I’ll tell Tabata to take this more seriously, so please excuse me.”

Yodogawa lightly bowed and went back to the trailer.

The moment Yodogawa entered the trailer, his smile vanished as he yelled.

“Damn it!! What the heck is with this result!? Even if we lose, can we at least try not to be this pathetic?”

Yodogawa was about to continue, but he stopped mid-way and flinched back when Tabata looked at him. Tabata had a grim expression plastered on his face as he said with a deep voice.

“… I know. I admit it was my mistake looking down on him, but this won’t happen again next time.”

“I-I see, I’ll leave it to you then.”

The other technicians only smiled bitterly at Yodogawa’s reaction. Some of them then continued with the usual reporting.

“The system is done analyzing the data. We’re ready to start again.”

“Let’s start then.”

“Starting the countdown.”

The countdown for the second mock battle started, the seconds left before the second mock battle started was shown on the main monitor. Tabata was looking at that countdown with a stern face, Yodogawa did the same anxiously with furrowed brows, while the rest of the technician team was waiting for the countdown with wry smiles. All of them were waiting for the countdown to reach zero with their respective feelings shown on their faces.

And so, the second battle started.

Akira blazed through the training ground. His speed was abnormal but he was able to decelerate and make clean sharp turns. He was able to do all of these thanks to the power of his augmented suit.

Every time he stepped off the ground to control his direction and sped up, a small forcefield was expanded under his feet, turning his footing into a hard surface. Then, with the help of the power output of the augmented suit, he was able to keep his balance while boosting the propelling power from his steps. That was also what he did when he made turns, the forcefield armour prevented him from slipping when he made sharp turns. With this, he was able to get firm footing even if he was running on muddy terrain.

In reality, with a good enough augmented suit, he would be able to do that in the air as well. But his current augmented suit was not good enough to do it although he could do the same on the walls of a building.

Of course, this manoeuvre, burned through the energy pack really quickly and increased the burden on Akira's body. So, in short, he would have to spend more money on his energy pack and medicine that he used to compensate for it. It was indeed, just as he said to Yodogawa, manoeuvres that need money.

But it was not for nought. Erio and the other children could not get a good aim at Akira who was moving too quickly from behind the rubble. Although when the coordination system preemptively aimed at where Akira would be according to its prediction, it was still not fast enough to catch him. As a matter of fact, they were on the receiving end of the bullets that Akira shot from his SSB rifles.

The surviving children grouped up and tried to use the rubble to form a defensive circle. Unfortunately for them, Akira quickly closed up on them and jumped right into the middle of the circle, and used the small opening created from the surprise to gun down the rest of the survivors.

The second mock battle also ended with Akira's victory.

Even in the third, fourth and fifth battles, Akira won all of them. But with every mock battle, Erio and the other children were able to survive longer and longer. It showed that the learning system of the coordination system was working as intended. But even so, it was still not able to reach its main objective.

Yodogawa was hanging his head low inside the trailer.

“Tabata, if you’re thinking of continuing, I’m sorry, but I’m stopping you here. Not only is the expense not small, we even have to pay for the bonus for winning the mock battle too. If you have no idea how to fix this, I’m stopping you here.”

Tabata frowned and seemed to be wrecking his brain hard. He then seemed to have decided on something as he changed the setting of the coordination support from his terminal.

When another technician saw the new setting, he frowned and asked Tabata.

“Tabata-san. Isn’t that cheating?”

“…We have different equipment than the opponent in the first place. It won’t be strange to have at least this much if we consider this as a real fight. Moreover, the corresponding equipment is also planned to be sold as an optional item together with the main product. So there should be no problem. We’ll also adjust the support pattern to suit the new setting, so get on to it.”

“Alright.”

Seeing how Tabata was still working hard on his work, Yodogawa thought that it seemed there was still a chance to win. So he did not stop the sixth mock battle. But even so, it did not erase the worried look on his face.

Right when the next round started, Erio was confused at the instruction shown by the system through their helmets. He followed that instruction to change the firing setting into grenades, aimed his rifle at a seemingly random direction, and pulled the trigger. But nothing happened even after he waited for some time. As he looked around, he noticed that the other children also showed the same reaction.

While they were still questioning what exactly they did, the next instruction that seemed to be a more serious one came up. So they moved on to follow the instruction to surround Akira. They immediately noticed that the instruction was different compared to the ones they were receiving up until now.

Akira immediately noticed that Erio and the other children were moving differently. He frowned a bit and quickly dove behind a wall before stopping right in front of a small gap in order to confirm his guess. The moment he stopped, he could see bullets coming flying straight at him through that small gap.

Although they were nothing but virtual bullets, with the adjustment from Alpha, they looked like real bullets to Akira. He could even hear the sound of them flying and see the tracks that they left behind. Alpha did that in order to prevent him from getting too used to the setting used for the training. If he got too used to the bullet projection in that training, which had a lot of errors, it might cause him to make a mistake during a real battle when he had to be able to read the trajectories of the bullets with high precision.

Moreover, due to the low precision of the hit recognition and bullet trajectory calculations of the system, Erio and the other children appeared to be stronger than they really were. Considering the rate of fire, range of fire, size of the ammo, and the other specifications of the rifles, the rifles used by Erio and the other children were of high quality, expensive rifles.

Akira followed the trajectories of those cylindrical bullets as they flew through the air, with this, he confirmed his guess.

“As I thought, they know where I am.”

Alpha smiled and gave some extra explanation.

“During the beginning of the training, they were moving as if they had pre-installed a small number of information-gathering devices around the area beforehand. My guess is that they changed the setting so that they can gather more information from those devices. They had small information-gathering devices scattered around the area beforehand to gather information during the test.”

“…Isn’t that cheating if we assume that this is a real fight?”

“Since you’re not holding back your expenses, they are also not holding back on their expenses. If they use enough small information-gathering devices, it’s not impossible to imitate this situation. Although it’s not cheap, if that’s enough to kill you, I’m sure they believe that would be worth the expense. Spending more money to defeat a strong opponent, it’s completely normal, isn’t it?”

“That’s true. So basically they’re getting serious now after losing so many times, huh?”

“It seems that it’s going to be great training, aren’t you glad?”

“Can’t agree more to that.”

Alpha was smiling teasingly at Akira, who replied with a light smile and a short remark.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 206, Limit of Effort

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Now that Erio and the other children knew Akira's location at all times, they did not need to search for him anymore. Instead, they started the round by immediately trying to surround him. They kept their distance from Akira and slowly closed in on him while blocking his way out.

Akira stuck his back to a piece of rubble, taking cover from the incoming bullets. He sometimes peeked out and shot back in order to prevent the opponents from closing his escape routes. But that did not stop them from closing in the encirclement as their attack got more and more intense. The walls and the floors were already covered in bullet scorch marks from Alpha's improved augmented reality, he would get shot if he made even the slightest blunder.

"They just don't stop shooting, how many bullets do they have?"

"They are also using extended magazines. And since you kept defeating them before they ran out of ammo, I bet the system stopped preserving ammo. It's better to empty their magazine first before dying. Strategy-wise, it is indeed a viable option for them to throw away the possibility to conserve their fighting strength for defeating you."

“So, basically, they’re willing to sacrifice anything as long as it’s enough to defeat me, huh? It seems that they evaluate me pretty highly.”

“That’s because you keep winning the mock battles. So I don’t think they’re mistaken though. Do your best so that they don’t lower their evaluation of you.”

“Roger that!”

Akira smiled and then frowned slightly.

“But still, in a real fight, this is the moment where I would use a camouflage.”

If Akira activated the camouflaging feature of his coat, Erio and the children would lose sight of him, or at least, it would make it hard for them to ascertain his position. But he decided not to do that.

“Well, it can’t be helped, they’re using the information from the small information-gathering devices they scattered around the area to collect the data for the test. If you use your camouflage and vanish from their radar, the mock battle would lose its main purpose.”

In order to prevent that from happening, Tabata also warned Akira beforehand not to use camouflage.

“It would be great if they adjust their system to handle that too.”

“In case you lose, you can ask them to do that adjustment. But until then, just think of them as enemies that can detect you even if you use camouflage.”

“I guess I’ll just do that then.”

Right at the next moment, several people jumped above the wall behind Akira with the help of their augmented suit. But before they could aim at him while still in the air, he quickly aimed his SSB rifle above his head and released a barrage in their general direction.

Almost at the same time, another one jumped out in front of Akira and ran at him. Before Akira could shift his aim from upward to forward, that boy was faster to aim at Akira and shot straight at him. Akira dove sideways to get away from the trajectories of those bullets. Unfortunately, someone else already released a few shots at the location where he was jumping to, so Akira forced himself to spring up to evade that too. Now that Akira was in the air and had no control over his posture any longer, he had turned into an easy target. But before anyone could shoot at him, Akira quickly shot them down using the rapid-fire capability of his SSB rifle.

The moment Akira landed back, he immediately ran while suppressing fire by shooting without even looking. And just like that, he broke through the encirclement and opened some distance between him and his opponents.

"…The first ones were decoys, huh?!"

"I guess that's one way to use people who already ran out of ammo."

"If it was a real fight, those decoys are dead, you know? So they're just throwing them away? Are they really okay with that?"

Akira frowned at that thought, but Alpha then replied with her usual smile.

"Considering that they can't win using the normal methods, that was a fully acceptable strategy to increase their chance of winning."

"That might be true, but still…. You know…"

"It's better than getting completely wiped out. Being able to make such a cruel but rational decision is one of the advantages of using that support system. Having to fight it is really troublesome and having it on your side increases your survival chances, moreover, it saves you from making difficult decisions as well."

Akira understood Alpha's arguments, but that did not make him feel any better.

After Akira broke the encirclement, Erio and the other children could not recover from it and shifted to more individualistic moves.

Akira won the seventh and the eighth rounds as well. Since he now knew that his opponents were aware of his location at all times, he quickly approached them right after the round started and wiped them out before they could even surround him. Thus winning the round.

In the ninth round, the system finally decided that sacrificing the rest of the team was crucial to defeating Akira.

From the start of the round, all of them came at Akira altogether aiming for a draw. The vanguards purposefully came out in clear view in order to bait him out from his hiding so the others could shoot at him. On top of that, they formed a single file on both sides to corner Akira while shooting at him. The backline used the vanguards as a shield and approached him as well. As the whole team came at him while disregarding their chance of survival, they were able to completely shut off Akira’s escape route.

Akira understood that he had nowhere to go this time, so instead, he came charging right at them. In that intense exchange which would decide the winner and the loser, normally, luck would play a big role. But Akira refused to leave it up to luck. So he compressed his time perception as much as possible to confirm his surroundings and to decide the end result of that battle.

Akira ran straight forward and released a barrage with his SSB rifles. He then slid through the gaps between his opponents, who received the hit signals and incoming bullets, as he spread his shot to his left and right, drilling through the hit notification that wrapped the area.

Akira was already close enough to engage in a melee fight, but even so, Erio and the other children were still shooting at him as if they did not care about hitting their own. Akira gunned them one by one and jumped in between their blindspots to get away from their aims. From Akira’s point of view, the world was running at a much slower pace, he could see the storm of bullets filling the area with the help of Alpha’s support, which indiscriminately killed anything that it could find in its way.

Inside that slow-moving world, a question came up in Akira's mind.

"For some reason, I feel like their hit notification is late, or does it look late from my point of view because of my time compression?"

In contrast to Akira who was really desperate, Alpha was smiling like usual as she answered his question.

"Nope, you're indeed correct. That's just how durable the settings of the augmented suit are right now. I bet they assume that they have their forcefield armour running with maximum output power. Although it shortens the duration in which they can keep using that augmented suit, as long as they can defeat you under that duration, it should not be a problem. After all, the system is also allowed to make the decision to sacrifice the team in order to defeat its opponent."

"I see!"

Akira compressed his time perception so much to the point that he found himself moving in slow motion. He used the full power of his augmented suit to increase his aiming speed to its limit as he released shots in all directions.

Although Akira felt like the exchange took long, in reality, it only happened for a few seconds. Akira shot Erio who was the last standing survivor and won the ninth round as well.

Tabata, who was looking at the monitor in his trailer, had his jaw dropped.

"Even this is not enough to win, huh?"

A technician gave a given up smile and said.

"What can I say… This guy goes past amazing and went straight to 'are you effing kidding me' level. No wonder he was able to defeat a powered suit all by himself. Well, although, you can say that he can only do that because he was using expensive equipment and doesn't try to limit his expenses."

“Well, even though they have augmented suits with coordination support, his opponents are all just slum kids after all. So it’s nothing strange, right?”

“Just so you know, that Akira was originally from the slums as well.”

“He’s an exception. Not to mention, he’s also already doing pretty well as a Hunter. So it doesn’t matter where he originated from, right?”

“Well, that’s true.”

Yodogawa did not expect Akira to be this strong. So instead of using him to advertise the company’s product, Yodogawa started thinking of some other way to gain profit out of him.

[Although we ended up paying a lot of money to him for this test, I guess it is worth getting on his good side. After all, we are talking about having a connection with a Hunter this strong. There’s no way it would be useless. I was really worried when Tabata made that challenge, but result-wise, I guess everything is alright…]

Yodogawa shifted his gaze to Tabata.

“Tabata, as expected, I need you to stop here. Since we kept losing, if he wins the next fight, his bonus would be 1 million Aurum, you know. I know that you’re free to decide what to do with the given budget, but as expected I can’t let you continue. This is the end, okay?”

Tabata looked at Yodogawa with a desperate face without saying anything, he then returned his gaze back to his terminal.

“…Not yet, at least just one more time…”

“I can understand your feelings of wanting to win at least one match and I know that the last match was a close one. But, I can’t let you continue just because of that. If you keep thinking just a little bit more, we’ll just keep piling up more losses.”

Tabata did not reply as he was busy on his terminal. Another technician noticed what Tabata was trying to do and frowned.

“T-Tabata-san, this one is simply going too far, you know…”

“There’s not much difference between their posture and the posture of an adult. A small adjustment should be enough to compensate for the difference.”

“That might be true, but still…”

“I’ll do the adjustment in the system, you guys work on readjusting the augmented suits.”

“…Just keep in mind that I tried to stop you, alright.”

The technicians are technically working under him, so it was difficult for them to stop Tabata. The most that they could do was remind him before leaving the trailer to recalibrate the augmented suits. Seeing that, Yodogawa stopped one of the technicians and asked him what Tabata was trying to do.

When Yodogawa understood what was going on, he then asked with a troubled face.

“…Are you sure this will be alright?”

“Of course not. That’s why we tried to stop him. Although, I’m sure different people have different opinions whether you can call it trouble or not. After all, if we are talking about data analysis, information management, and the safety feature of an augmented suit, all of those are in the grey area.”

“Will it get someone killed?”

“Hmm, pretty sure it won’t go that far, chance-wise, it should be not that different from a normal product testing. So looking from that point of view, it should be okay. I’m sure that’s also why Tabata-san pushed through with this idea.”

Yodogawa still looked concerned.

“For now, try to prioritize safety as much as possible while still obeying Tabata’s order. I’m sure he’ll be satisfied after trying that once regardless of whether he wins or loses. If he tries to continue even after that, I’ll tell the higher-ups to stop him. He’s the one responsible here and it’s kind of difficult to stop him at the moment. So let’s just do what he wants for now.”

“Okay. But, I’ll leave the rest to you afterwards, alright?”

“Of course… So then, do you think we can win?”

“I can’t really say for sure. But it’s better than continuing without doing anything differently. I guess that’s basically the gist of it. Alright then, off I go.”

The technician left the trailer, leaving Tabata working alone inside. To be honest, Yodogawa also wanted him to win, that was why Yodogawa did not stop him.

During the break, Erio and the other children were talking about Akira.

“We really can’t even get a single win, huh. Or more like, we couldn’t win even after going that far. Just how much had he been holding back all this time?”

“You know, it might be that Akira-san probably cannot go full power unless he gets paid. Remember that time when he fought those maids? At first, he was losing but he got an easy win in the end, right? I heard that it was because he got paid as a request.”

“Money, huh. Well, he’s a Hunter, after all. I bet he’s pretty sensitive about that subject… But then, when you think about it again, why was he helping Boss back then? Hmmm, is it because he is going out with Boss?”

“Maybe some kind of investment? Considering how much money that we’re earning right now, it won’t be strange if it was a form of investment, no?”

“Ohh, that does make sense, so it all comes down to money, huh?”

Now that they were reminded of how strong Akira really was, none of them had the thought of winning against him any longer. They had completely abandoned the idea of trying to win and just took it lightly as they talked to each other and laughed it off.

But in contrast to the rest of them, Erio had a rather stern look on his face. He had not given up yet. He kept telling himself that if he gave up and relaxed now, he would lose even the smallest chance to win. He would end up throwing away the one in a million chance to win against Akira if it even existed in the first place.

The technicians who came from the trailer called on to them.

“Everyone who will participate in the next round, come here for a bit, we need to do some small adjustments.”

The available augmented suits were not enough for every single child to join the mock battle at the same time. Furthermore, there was a limit on how many adjustments could be made to compensate for the differences in their builds. Thus, the technicians needed to make small adjustments every time there was a swap.

Since they had decided beforehand who would participate in which round, the ones that would participate in the next round came to the technicians.

“Fuuh, that was tiring. I’ll skip the next round. Erio, you should take a rest too. You’ve been participating in all the fights, haven’t you?”

“I’m fine.”

“…I see, well, don’t push yourself too hard. It would be pointless if you hurt yourself. It’s not like we have expensive medicines like Akira-san, and the treatment from that clinic is basically experimenting with your body.”

“I know, I’ll be careful.”

In order not to allow his friends to get worried about him, Erio managed to let out a small smile.

After the small adjustments, Erio and the other children felt that there was something strange with their augmented suit. So one of them asked the technicians.

“Uhmm, it feels like the augmented suit is moving weirdly, like it’s much stiffer than before.”

“…It’s in the middle of testing after all. You might feel like that because of the new settings. Try to walk and move around until you get used to it. We’ll try to readjust the feedback as well, if you still feel weird after that, I’m sorry but you might want to get someone else to take your place instead.”

“I see… Alright then.”

They then started to move around as instructed to get used to the strange feeling. But some of them could not just get used to it and asked for replacements or to readjust their augmented suits. The technicians looked at them worriedly in the middle of that process.

It took some time until everyone could move around normally. After that long break, the next round finally started.

Right when the tenth round just started, Akira was about to come straight at them again when he realized that they were moving differently than before. So he decided to stop hunting them down and hid behind a rock instead.

The rest of the team, except for Erio, formed a support file for Erio who was out in a rather open position. Unlike last time when the system did not differentiate the individual’s strength, this time, there was a clear stratum based on it. And just like last time, they knew Akira’s location at all times.

Although it surprised Akira, he still handled it calmly. Akira first aimed at Erio which made one of them cover for him and disrupt the formation, Akira then used that small opening to shoot them down one by one. As a matter of fact, he did well in picking them out slowly, but even so, he somehow looked a bit troubled.

“Hmmm, not really sure if they’re stronger now. At the same time, it feels like they’re somehow weaker too.”

Alpha quickly followed up.

“Which one exactly?“

“Not sure. Though they do feel weird, that formation, unless they’re stronger than their opponent, I feel like it’ll only increase the number of corpses. I think they need better teamwork for the backline. Although, if they can do that properly, I’m sure that they’ll be super hard to deal with…”

“Indeed. It seems that the formation doesn’t work well for them since they don’t have the skill to support it. But in the end, this is still just a training, it’s a good chance for them to test different formations.”

“Well, you have a point there. I guess they changed their priority to testing new things since they kept losing.”

“For now, let’s just focus on defeating them. It would be meaningless if you lower your guard and get shot.”

“Roger that!”

Akira pushed that to the back of his mind and focused back on the mock battle. After they reduced the number of his opponents to the point where it was difficult for them to provide support for Erio, Akira decided that it might be time to go for the main pivot of that formation, Erio.

Akira jumped from behind the wreckage and aimed his rifle at Erio, but before he could shoot, Erio immediately shot back at him. Unfortunately, the bullets could not catch up with Akira who was moving too quickly.

Checkmate, the moment Akira thought so and was about to pull the trigger, he wavered as he saw Erio carrying rifle with one hand and following his movements. Erio was trying to aim at Akira after he evaded the first few shots which caused Erio’s arm to rotate at a rather unnatural angle.

Akira, by pure reflex, compressed his time perception to its limit and used the full power of his augmented suit to get away from the line of fire while shooting back at Erio.

Right at the next moment, a clearly painful scream echoed.

Erio was actually fully under the mercy of his augmented suit ever since the round started. It was because although his augmented suit was correcting his moves up until now, the level of accuracy of that correction was increased compared to before.

From the way he walked, ran, to the way he shot and even to other finer moves, it was as if his body was forced to follow his augmented suit. The difference between the move that his body made and the move that his augmented suit made put his body under immense stress. He felt uncomfortable since it was not him controlling the augmented suit, it was more like the augmented suit was controlling his body.

While at the same time, he was delighted that he was able to execute manoeuvres that were impossible for him to execute originally.

He thought that he might be able to reach Akira like that, so he endured the pain and continued the fight. It carried him to the point where he was able to almost get a shot on Akira.

As he thought that it was the perfect chance to defeat Akira, Erio focused his whole mind and body to gun Akira down, the gathered focus even caused him to see the world around him running at a slower pace. But when he saw Akira move quickly, he understood that he would not be able to hit Akira.

When his focus was thrown into short disarray, he remembered the pain that he was ignoring till now and that pain quickly spread through his body.

Erio screamed and dropped his gun. Seeing Erio fall down to the ground grabbing his arm, the other children forgot about the mock battle and ran towards him.

“Erio! Are you okay!? What just happened!?”

“I-It’s not like he got shot with real bullets, right? What the heck is going on here!?”

Seeing that, Akira understood that the mock battle was stopped there. So he immediately went to Erio and told the other children who were still in panic.

“Get him off the augmented suit for now, but do it slowly.”

Erio was not able to move due to the pain. So the other children were carefully removing his augmented suit off of him. Erio’s arm was swollen red and his shoulder was dislocated.

Akira took out his medicine and shoved it into Erio’s mouth.

“It’s medicine, swallow everything. And also, this is going to be a bit painful, so endure it.”

Akira only said so before he immediately grabbed Erio’s arm and forcefully fixed it. Erio flailed around because of the pain, but Akira held him down with his augmented suit.

“The painkiller will work soon, just endure it until then. And also, even if the pain dies down, it doesn’t mean that your arm is fixed. So don’t move your arm until it’s properly healed, otherwise, it’ll only slow down the healing process, you got that?”

Erio held back the pain assaulting him as he nodded multiple times. Akira was holding down Erio’s arm for some time, but only after Erio’s expression relaxed, did he let go. Even after the pain was reduced, Erio still had a stern look on his face.

Not too long after that, Sheryl, Tabata and Yodogawa also came. Sheryl went to look for an explanation from Akira, Erio, Tabata and Yodogawa in turns. After a short time to digest the information, she then sent a sharp gaze towards Yodogawa and Tabata.

“Can you explain what happened?”

Yodogawa was flusteredly trying to look for the right words to explain the situation while Tabata was pulled back to reality after someone got injured and ruffled his head.

Seeing that reaction, Sheryl understood that it was not something that was unexpected. It was something that was originally avoidable but for some reason, they did not, or at least, they did not do their work properly to avoid it.

“Is it an accident?”

Sheryl stared at them with scornful eyes. Tabata and Yodogawa were still flustered, struggling to find the right words to say, that was when Akira interjected.

“Rather than an accident, I bet it happened because the support system properly assumed it as a real fight.”

Everyone there immediately focused on Akira, who just voiced his opinion. Some of the kids looked disturbed and one of them asked Akira a question.

“Wait, how does that connect to Erio getting hurt? Even though we’re doing this assuming that this is a real fight, it’s still just training, right?”

“I bet the system is working just fine. The problem is that when the augmented suit tried to aim at me, the real body couldn’t catch up with its movements and then that happened, dislocating his shoulder.”

The system that took the battle as a real fight was unable to win the fight even after sacrificing some of the team members, that might be why the system decided to allow bigger sacrifices for the latest battle. Not only did it ignore the bullets hit, it even ignored the capability of its user as well. For Akira, it was nothing weird for the system to go that far.

“It must be that the system had decided that it was acceptable to sacrifice an arm as long as you were able to defeat me. If it was a real fight, it was not a wrong decision. After all, an arm is a cheap sacrifice if it can save you.”

Hearing that, Erio and the other children looked completely troubled. Seeing that, Akira just smiled bitterly and continued.

“Well, there’s no need to go that far for training. Although, you can also argue that there’s a need to go that far exactly because it’s training. After all, it’s impossible for you to execute something in a real fight when you can’t execute it during training. While on the other hand, it’ll also defeat the purpose if you get injured during training and are unable to perform well when confronted with a real fight. Moreover, even when you get in a situation where you have to sacrifice your arm to survive, I’m sure you won’t be able to make that decision that swiftly. So it’s another advantage of using the support system. After all, that was a close call for me back there.”

“Eh? Is that so?”

“Yeah, I almost got shot after all.”

Erio and the other children started murmuring with conflicted faces. They always thought that it was impossible to win against Akira no matter how hard they tried. So those words which confirmed that was not true, really shocked them.

But at the same time, that also meant they would not be able to reach that point unless they went that far. It was true that the gap between them was getting closer, but that was because Akira came down from where he originally was, it felt like Akira was out of their reach even if they tried to extend their hand.

“Different people take real fights differently. So I bet it’s just a misunderstanding between both of you regarding what it means to take training as if it was a real fight.”

After Akira said so, Erio and the other children looked at each other.

“Now that you mention it, they did say that the system will assume that it’s a real fight. But still, is that what they meant when they said that? Something like our arms or legs might be in danger.”

“No no no, as expected, that’s going too far, right? It’s their fault for setting up the system like that. I heard that this is a test run, so I bet it’s because they’re having trouble in that matter. That’s why they’re making us help with this test, right? As I thought, lending expensive augmented suits to us just for a safe test is too good to be true. Am I right?”

“But Akira-san said that this is normal for Hunters, you know? Hunters often fight against monsters in ruins, so I bet a number of them do this kind of thing.”

“It’s not right to treat us like common Hunters, ah, but this augmented suit is designed for Hunters, huh…”

Sheryl listened to them before once again, glancing at Yodogawa. Meanwhile, Yodogawa, who had regained his composure, used this chance to get on what Akira just said.

“It is indeed as Akira-sama just said. But at the same time, we admit that it’s caused by our inability to properly make the correct setting for the augmented suit, which ultimately caused this accident. We apologize for this and we’ll do our best to fix this issue so that this will never happen again.”

“…Alright, I hope that you’ll get this fixed.”

Sheryl had no plans to argue against Akira’s opinion just to corner Yodogawa. But she gave a smile saying that she would withdraw from this issue to respect Akira, and that would mean they owed her a favour.

In order to shake off the bad mood, Yodogawa raised his voice.

“Unfortunately, someone got injured. In order to focus on fixing this problem, we’ll end the training here for today. Akira-sama, thank you very much for helping out with the training today, we’re really thankful for that.

We'll invite you again for the next training, so please, by all means, join us for the next training as well."

"Well, sure, if I'm free."

"Sheryl-sama, although it has been proven that there's still some fatal problem regarding the product, we'll do our best to fix this. So we hope that we can still work together. Erio-sama, we're really sorry for today's outcome. We'll give our best to adjust the system such that this would never happen again, so if you…"

"I'm fine like this."

"Excuse me?"

Yodogawa did not expect that firm reply from Erio when he was apologizing to him. Akira also did not expect such a reply at all.

"I'm fine like this. There's no need to change it. This happened because of a mistake in the setting and a misunderstanding between us, right? Then it's well under the domain of testing, so you'll properly pay for the treatment too, right?"

"Ah, well, of course, we will do that, but…"

"Then there's no need to change the setting. It's better for you like this since you can get better data, right?"

Yodogawa's business face changed to a troubled one.

"Well, it will indeed let us get better data, but… Are you sure?"

"Yes."

"I-In that case, we'll readjust the system to your preference."

"Thanks."

Everyone looked at Erio with various expressions such as surprise, exasperation, admiration and suspicion. Even under those gazes, Erio renewed his resolve.

[If I can make that kind of move on my own, I'll get close to Akira! This is the perfect chance! Like hell I would let it go!]

The gap that separated them as if Akira was standing on top of a building while the rest of them were crawling on the ground, felt like a hopeless gap for them. Even so, Erio still had not given up yet. Compared to before, it did not matter how large the gap was, Erio felt that gap was not unreachable.

Erio swore that he would become stronger as he clenched his fist.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 207, A Luxurious Bath

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After the mock battle, Sheryl invited Akira to visit the base. When Akira arrived there, he looked at the base in surprise.

“Well, what can I say… The base has really improved in the short time I haven’t visited.”

Since Sheryl kept assimilating the other buildings around the base into it, it had grown considerably in terms of size.

Sheryl smiled smugly beside Akira.

“It’s also thanks to you that we can grow this big.”

“I don’t remember doing anything in particular though.”

“That’s not true at all. We’ve received enough favour just with you supporting us from behind. Of course, there are more things too. So yes, we’re really blessed to have your help.”

“Is that so? Well, it’s fine if it’s really so.”

Akira thought of Sheryl's words as nothing more than flattery. But Sheryl was only saying what she really felt, it was the truth.

When someone built a house in the eastern district, they would have to make it strong enough to endure monster attacks. Although the level of durability changed for different areas, they were normally relatively cheap buildings. It was all thanks to analyzing and imitating the old-world buildings.

But even so, the buildings in the inner wall were still expensive. In contrast to that, the buildings down in the slum city were dirt cheap. Even if someone built a magnificent building inside the slum city, it would turn into a dilapidated ruin in no time due to the bad public order. Thanks to that, most of the price came from security.

The only reason Sheryl's gang was able to rule over such a vast area was because of the support from Akira. No one would dare to cause a ruckus in the base that a Hunter, who could even defeat a powered suit all by himself, was protecting. That information alone was enough to maintain the public order there.

Inside the base, Katsuragi set up a branch of his shop as well as a warehouse, Viola also set up her office there. Both further helped to maintain the public order in that area. And if they went one step further, both only helped Sheryl's gang because of their connections to Akira. So in the end, it was all thanks to Akira.

Akira thought that it must be because it had already been some time since he left slum city, that must be why his knowledge about the slum city was not as detailed as before. As such, he was not able to fully grasp just how much he had done for Sheryl's gang.

Akira was guided to Sheryl's private chamber. He then sat on a chair with Sheryl sitting on the opposite side of the table, sipping the coffee served on the table while talking about all kinds of stuff with her.

Compared to before, Sheryl's current room was way wider. It only had a small amount of furniture considering the size of it, but that room gave no feeling that it was located inside the slum city. As a matter of fact, it was a room that gave off a rather high-class feeling, as if it was cut off from a luxurious mansion and brought there.

Sheryl had already changed from her wasteland outfit to something more casual. The translucent and comfortable looking dress gave off a friendly feeling, while still giving off a graceful aura.

The white coffee cup was decorated with a small accessory, even an amateur could feel an air of luxury from it. The decorated spoon accompanying it was also obviously not the same as those common spoons.

The way Sheryl picked up her cup, brought it to her mouth, slurped it, and placed it back in its place, gave off the feeling that she was born from a completely different social stratum.

Akira felt that there was something strange in that room. He thought that Sheryl would climb up on him just like usual, but that did not seem to be the case at all. Although it felt better this way, it still threw him for a loop since he did not expect it at all.

In a sense, it was one of the results of Sheryl's training. In order not to make any blunder during the feast, she was taking training to keep her graceful outlook. At first, she looked really unnatural, it was not easy at all, but thanks to her talent, she had gained that graceful aura.

The topics of their conversation moved to the renovation of the base and the new equipment. Now that the base was bigger than ever before, it was easier for the gang members to get their own room. At the moment, those who had individual rooms were limited to the officers, while those who had low positions, just slept here and there, mostly inside unused empty rooms. But even so, it was way safer than sleeping in an alley in the slum city. Thus there were many who wished to join the gang.

"Although the base itself has gotten bigger, most of the rooms are empty, we don't even use them as storage rooms. When we expanded the base, it's more to be safe in case we needed extra spaces rather than because we urgently required them. That's why, if you want, we can get you your own room."

"No, I don't need it."

"I see, that's unfortunate."

Other than Sheryl, up until now, most of the gang members received the same treatment, but that was no longer true. Because of that, people started competing for positions with better treatments. Therefore, Sheryl had to watch over them and make sure that it would cause any problem.

Not only did they get a relic supply route from Viola, they were also receiving relics from Inabe as well. Thus, Sheryl's relic shop was doing very well. At the moment, she even allowed people that Viola brought in to manage half of the shop, while she, herself was handling the floor that showcased the expensive relics, and came out to serve the customer though only rarely.

"It might be weird for me to say this, are you sure the people that Viola brought with her are safe?"

"We did not find any problems so far. Not only do they help with the relic shop, they're also helping to teach the gang members how to read and write, and they even help with some administration work as well. So, it's true that they're helping us a lot. They said that they would take responsibility if anything bad happens, that's why I let them do their task. Moreover, it's true that we have an easier time on some occasions when we have some adults with us. After all, me included, we're all basically kids."

"I see, well, it's fine then if you say so."

Although Akira did not give much thought to it, Sheryl actually hired Viola's men while already considering the potential trouble that it might bring.

Due to the expansion of the gang, Sheryl was no longer able to manage the whole gang on her own. Although she needed more helping hands, unfortunately, no one in the gang had the ability to help her in that matter. After all, half of the gang members were only able to read and write just recently. She would need more time to train someone on how to manage the gang.

At the moment, Sheryl was filling those holes with Viola's men. That not only caused her to rely on Viola's connection, it also made Viola's influence over the gang stronger.

Although they were told to teach some of the officers to do their job, it seemed that it would still take some time until the officers could take over these jobs from them. But as the gang only grew faster and faster, Sheryl was not able to procure enough people to manage the gang and ended up relying on Viola's men even further.

Sheryl did question if Viola deliberately pushed the gang to grow fast enough so that she would not be able to manage it any longer, and that she might be planning to take over the gang after that. But Sheryl told herself if that was really the case, then she would use that for her own profit instead and get the growing gang fully under her control.

"What's wrong?"

"Ah, no, it's nothing. By the way, about the gang, among all the new facilities that we have now, everyone seems to really like the new bath. Ever since we have gotten more members, they often caused a long waiting line to use the bath, so we made it bigger."

The base at the moment had three separate baths. One for the boys, one for the girls, and one reserved only for officers. Some of the individual rooms also had a small bath. Akira found something that bothered him when he heard that.

"Bath for officers? Do they even need it? Don't they have their own bath in their own individual rooms?"

"Not all of them have their own bath. Furthermore, those baths are pretty small as well. With the bath for officers being something special."

“What do you mean by that? Is it like it’s so big?”

“No, it’s hard to explain, but I’m sure you’ll understand it if you try it.”

Sheryl noticed that Akira was interested, so she then smiled invitingly at him and said.

“How about you try taking a dip?”

Akira thought for a bit but eventually lost to his curiosity.

The base colour of the officer bath was white, it was in order to give a more spacious and clean impression. The bath itself was large enough to allow several people to extend their legs altogether. Despite the decorations being far from elaborate, all of them gave a luxurious feeling.

But Akira did not find any of that amazing. He seemed a bit disappointed as he proceeded to clean his body before dipping himself in the warm bath. But he immediately noticed something.

“…Wait, there’s something different! I can feel it! But I can’t really explain it!”

Sheryl, who went in normally as if she was already used to it, then explained to him.

“We’re using high-quality water and the filter is on all the time to maintain its quality. Even if someone makes a mistake and gets the soap into the water, the filtration would quickly take care of that as well. That’s basically all there is to it, that’s why I can’t really explain it with words. But once you experience it, you immediately notice that there’s something special, isn’t it?”

“Yes, it is. I see.”

Akira scooped up a handful of water and looked at it with interest. Seeing him like this, Sheryl’s face turned red for a bit, and it was not because of the warm water. Seeing his well-built body was too much to handle for the current Sheryl.

As Sheryl unconsciously stared at his body, Akira of course noticed it.

“Something wrong?”

“…It’s nothing. I just thought that if you find it that good, you can come here every day to use it, you know?”

“…Well, as expected, that would be impossible.”

Sheryl noticed Akira waver a little, so she then made another proposition.

“I heard that it’s good for your health and helps you recover from fatigue. Being a Hunter is a very tiring job, so even if you can’t come every day, you can just visit to take a dip on your way back after you are done with your Hunter job. I’m sure it’ll be beneficial for you. After all, although it’s a bath reserved only for officers, I’m thinking of letting others use it after a tiring day just like today’s training.”

Akira wavered even more.

“…In that case, I should get one back in my home…”

“We could get one here because of the size of the base, otherwise, I think it’s difficult to get one for a normal house. You might be able to get a smaller one, but that might not work as effectively as this bath. Likewise, if you want to get the same level of effect for a smaller bath, it might cost way more money.”

Akira started to seriously consider it, but suddenly, one of the walls turned bright and it was connected to a call from one of the gang members. In order to allow officers to give commands from the bath, one of the walls was equipped with an information terminal.

“Boss, Viola said that she wants to meet you.”

Sheryl pouted and said.

“I’m in the bath right now. If it’s nothing important, tell her to keep it for later.”

Sheryl quickly closed the call after she said that, but it did not take long for another call to come in.

“Boss, she said that it’s important and she’s heading there now.”

“Eh? But Akira is also here, you know? Tell her that and stop her.”

“Uhh, she’s already left and is heading there…”

After that, Viola and Carol came in wearing the outfit suitable for taking bath. Akira was a bit surprised and Sheryl obviously looked displeased. Viola then smiled at Sheryl and Carol at Akira.

Sheryl, who was not happy that her quality time with Akira was interrupted, could not hide her sullen expression as she sent a sharp stare at Viola who was taking a dip in front of her.

“So then, what is it?”

“You went to take a look at the coordination support augmented suit today, right? I’m here to ask you about it.”

“Is it really that important?”

“It is. Although, do excuse me for omitting the reason why it is important. It might take a few days of explanations to fully explain why it is important, you see. If you still want to know, I can tell you some other day. I’m doing my best here to bring more profits for the gang, you know? So it would be great if you can help me out. But then again, it’s not like I can force you to.”

Viola was smiling confidently, but that amused smile was giving a rather ominous aura. If she brought up ‘profits for the gang’, Sheryl could not refuse. So Sheryl just sighed and told Viola what she wanted to know.

While on the other side, Akira looked exasperatedly at Carol.

“Normally people won’t just waltz in like that, you know?”

“Sheryl is here too, so it’s fine, isn’t it? Moreover, it’s not like we showed you anything unsightly.”

Although it was for different purposes, Viola and Carol were using their bodies for their goals. For Viola, it was about smoothening the negotiation, while for Carol, it was for the sake of pulling in the opposite sex. Hence, both of them had a relatively good style that did not give any sense of discomfort.

But Akira did not show any interest in their naked bodies as he lightly sighed and completely lost interest in them. Seeing that, Carol smiled bitterly while also looking rather amused.

“Geez, you’re really cold.”

“I have no wish to get friendly with the people who interrupt my bath time.”

“We’re not interrupting though. As a matter of fact, I can help you wash your body, you know? After all, people usually miss some spots when they just do it haphazardly, it will be a good massage as well, you know?”

“No thanks, just don’t interrupt me.”

Akira only said so and returned his attention to the warm water. The new sensation coming from the bath gradually made his expression relax.

“You seem to be really enjoying it, do you like it that much?”

“Yep, it feels different than the bath back home.”

“I see. Although you look like you’re earning well, it seems that you’ve only been using a cheap bath, huh.”

Akira shifted his gaze back to Carol and slightly tilted his head.

“Yeah yeah, sorry about that. So what kind of bath do you have?”

“Me? Let’s see…”

Carol started talking about the bathing equipment she was using in her house. It was a rather big bath for one person. Just like the water used in the gang's base, it was also using high-quality water. In order to help her dry herself after the bath, there was also a wind drying device. She told him about all kinds of equipment the bath in her house used.

The water was not only good quality water but it was also adjusted for Carol's enhanced body. The nanomachine for the maintenance and healing was mixed into the water. Even though the water was not clear, it had an obvious noticeable effect on health and beauty.

Akira was surprised to hear her explanation.

"You mix medicines too? That's definitely not going to be cheap."

"Well, I can't deny it. But it's well under my budget. The main asset for a Hunter is his or her body. Even you are extremely invested in rifles and augmented suits, right? It's the same as that. The body is the main asset that can't be replaced. So, I don't see anything strange with spending money to keep it in tip-top shape at all times. Well, although, it's true that it's also for my side job as well, so I'm using more expensive stuff than a normal Hunter would usually use. This body actually takes more money than you imagine to maintain, you know?"

Carol smiled proudly and pointed at her own body. Akira was baited by that finger and looked at her body and he ended up staring at her for a few seconds. But even so, he did not show even the slightest sign of interest at all. His stare was much closer to a stare that he would give for high quality and expensive rifle or augmented suit.

Carol, of course, noticed that and sighed.

[I wonder if I should take the initiative and pay him instead… Hmmm, I have a feeling that he would refuse that as well though… He's really earnest when it comes to requests, maybe I can use that instead?]

Seeing Akira show almost no interest, she might have no other choice but to take a more active approach to capture him. As she was busy thinking about how she would do that, Akira's focus already returned back to the warm bath as he started questioning if the bath in his house was really that cheap.

After finishing their business, Carol and Viola left the bath. Akira did think of enjoying the bath for a little bit longer, but for some reason, he was not into that idea and left not too long after Viola and Carol left. Seeing him leave, Sheryl disappointedly followed suit.

After the training, Tabata and his men took a short rest in the hall of the gang's base. At the moment, the gang had allocated that hall for Tabata and his men's use as their workspace. The inside of the room was filled with all kinds of equipment, everyone there was busy communicating and working on their respective task.

They were testing the coordination support system in the slum city as a security system for the base. This way, amateurs who could not even write or read were able to actively contribute in securing the base. It was a test to check the performance of the support system, how far it could turn them into a functional defensive squad.

As Tabata was still lamenting what had happened back in the wasteland, a colleague in the same position as him, came to him.

"Well, I heard it didn't go that well, but you can't afford to stay down like this. Isn't this a normal thing since it's a test? Although, you need to properly reflect on how emotional you got back there."

Tabata lightly sighed and frowned.

"I really have no words to refute you, but if I may make an excuse…"

"Are you going to say that it's because the opponent was way too strong? I heard that he's a strong Hunter, but you can't use that as an excuse, you know?"

"That's not it, I know that I can't use that as an excuse. The one thing that troubles me the most was that we were too confident. According to the past results, it should be able to defeat him. That was why I was so confident."

“The past result, huh? But like, isn’t this the first test with that augmented suit?”

“That’s true for the augmented suit. But we’ve done other tests too for the system. We did lend them to Drankam too. And unlike that time, this was a stable version, not an experimental one. It was a test including various equipment with Drankam, the result from back then was really positive.”

Tabata started getting excited again, but then he looked troubled.

“The performance was way better compared to the products from other companies. When they started using our system, that young ace Hunter from Drankam who had not been doing well lately, recovered from his slump. They even thanked us afterwards. It also left an extremely positive track record from when we used it during the incident in Kuzusuhara ruin. One of the reviews said that they worked together as a team better than ever before. Analysis from the logs also confirmed their claim. The results were all great…”

But the result from the latest test completely changed everything. It made all the past results look like an illusion. Tabata drooped. Seeing Tabata like this, his friend could not help but smile wryly and tried to cheer him up.

“Well, although they are more or less the same age, you can’t really compare a rising star and the main Hunter that Drankam is pushing with a bunch of children from the slum city. It’s true that the main goal of our product is to make the gap as small as possible, but there’s a limit on how far it can go. Cheer up. We obtained a good set of data, and although I don’t know the exact story, the guy who got his arm broken also said that he would still help out with the test, right? It’s not all that bad, we just need to continue slowly and carefully.”

Tabata regained some of his composure thanks to it.

“…You’re right, I guess I got too excited after getting a good result from our test runs with Drankam. I should forget about that result and check the system one more time. I have to add the adjustment from the data when that incident occurred.”

“Yep, you should do that. But still, well, I didn’t expect you to use someone else’s setting for the augmented suit. You do know well that it’s a taboo to do that, right? A lot of accidents happened because of that in the past, so make sure to be careful about it.”

“I thought that it would work since their builds were not that different, you know. But well, yeah, I’ll be more careful.”

The biggest reason why Erio got injured was because the augmented suit was set using someone else’s data, so it tried to execute something that Erio could not do. Right after they finished talking about it, Carol and Viola approached them.

“Good afternoon. There are a few things that I want to ask about the augmented suit, is it okay?”

As usual, Viola was smiling, amusedly.

After Akira returned back home, he decided to get in the bath for some reason. But this time, he felt that something was lacking. He then frowned and mumbled.

“…This is no longer good enough for me, huh?”

Alpha lightly smiled.

“I don’t think it’s a bad thing, you know.”

“Well, even if you say so…”

It was not like he could visit Sheryl’s base every day to take a dip there. While on the other hand, he did not want to upgrade the bath in his house just to be disappointed later. But getting guaranteed good bathing equipment might cost him a lot of money.

It was very rare for Akira to be troubled about something that had nothing to do with being a Hunter or Alpha’s request.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 208, Their Respective Training

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was going through training with Alpha in his home. Sometimes, he would also participate in mock battles with Erio and the other children in the wasteland. He had decided to only go to the ruin again once the automaton and the other relics he brought back from Lida commercial district ruin were fully converted into money. But for some reason, it was not done yet.

Old-world automata were highly valuable relics to corporations for many reasons. Whether to improve their own technology or to fix them before reselling again, there were many companies trying to get their hands on these automata. Normally, one should have no problem selling them, it should have been easy to exchange them for money. But that was not the case this time and the reason for that was because they were brought back to the city as a team with Akira.

If it was solely Togami's team, they could just leave selling the automata to Drankam, which can use its connection. Even if there might be some problem regarding how to divide the money, it would be solved between the team selling the automata and the gang. Even if the result might not be ideal for Togami, they could make up for that by negotiating with the gang. That way, the gang would be able to secure its share with no problem as well.

But with Akira added to the equation, it was not that simple. After all, Akira was only allowing Drankam to handle the sale of the automata to make it easier to divide the money later. If Drankam took a cut on that money, Akira would obviously complain. If it was just a common Hunter, Drankam could just crush him using their connection with City Management. But when it came to a Hunter above Rank 40, in the worst-case scenario, it might end up in a full-blown war and the damage from that war would no doubt have some form of repercussion.

Normally, Drankam would first buy the relic from the Hunter to gain full-ownership of it before selling in order to avoid this problem. But there was another problem with that approach. If the negotiation with Akira did not go well, it might significantly reduce the profit that Drankam might gain from the transaction.

Personally speaking, Akira himself said that he had no problem dividing the money evenly. But according to the report from Togami and Reina regarding Akira's contribution in securing the automata, it would not be strange if he demanded half of the reward. On the other hand, if they tried to negotiate with Akira, he might change his mind and decide to demand more shares than he had right now. And in the worst-case scenario, Viola might stick her nose into the negotiation and carry away most of the profits. Drankam already knew Akira's relation with Viola from Mizuha's report.

Drankam was stuck in a difficult position, trying not to worsen its connection with a high ranking Hunter as well as the company it was working with.

To top it off, companies were also working behind the scenes to make adjustments. The automata that Kurosawa's team had destroyed the other day already changed hands to a certain company. If there was a relic that resembled the complete form of that destroyed relic, it would speed up the investigation process of said relics. Moreover, it might shed a light on its connection with the fifth automaton that got away. If possible, the aforementioned company also wanted to get its hand on that automaton as well. Thus it was working behind the scenes for that.

With all of these factors added into the complexity of the matter, they ended up taking more time than usual to sell the automata.

Akira already knew what was going on from a short report given by someone from Drankam, which in response, he only said that he would wait patiently if it might sell for a lot more. He already got the expense from that expedition covered by Shiori, so he had no reason to rush it. Although the smaller relics were already exchanged for money, all of them were used to cover the expenses.

Because of this, and some other things, Akira decided not to go exploring ruins for the time being and spent most of his time training inside and outside his house.

__*__*__*__

Togami and Reina's group were about to get out to the wasteland when Reina, who was sitting on the driver's assistant seat, mumbled.

"Good grief, I wonder when we are going to be allowed to do Hunter jobs again."

Togami smiled wryly.

"Calm down, if you don't like the training, you can take a break instead, you know?"

"It's not that I don't want to do it and I do still think that I need more training. But we're not even allowed to do common monster extermination requests, you know? Isn't that a bit too strict? Don't you think so too?"

"Well, you have a point there."

"Right? I really wish they would lift the restriction."

Togami's team was given a temporary restriction from Drankam so they could not do Hunter jobs. This was for the sake of preventing matters from becoming more complicated in case the rightful owners of the automata died. Although they were not exactly happy about it, they decided to obey the restriction. However, as they felt that it would take more time than usual, they decided to negotiate with the higher-ups. In the end, they were allowed to do some low-risk Hunter jobs.

"Our job today is to help out in testing a still-in-development augmented suit. Although it's just training because we're not allowed to do dangerous Hunter jobs, we are still getting paid for it. Depending on how you take it, it might actually be a good offer. By the way, where is Shiori-san?"

The only maid sitting on the back seats was Kanae.

"Ane-san has another business to attend to. Milady, Ane-san left because she thought that we're not going to leave the city. Although I'm letting you out to the wasteland, it would be a great help if you try to be careful. After all, it is still the dangerous wasteland. So make sure not to just go hunting for monsters on a whim when we spot one. I don't want to get split open by Ane-san after all."

"I know, so can you please just let it go for a bit for a change of pace."

Reina lightly sighed.

"Shiori has been bugging me about my mannerism again lately. She has also been actively making me take on that training again. To be honest, I don't think it's necessary at this point… Although mannerism is indeed important, I just don't see why she's getting stricter lately…"

Before Reina continued her thought, Kanae smiled and interjected.

"I don't know if it's because you've been working with Togami-boy a lot lately, but Milady, your word-usage is getting rough lately. So I bet Ane-san wishes to fix it before it gets worse."

"Ughk, well."

“How is that my fault?”

Reina, who knew that Kanae was not completely wrong, became flustered. Togami only smiled bitterly in response to it. Kanae deliberately chose her words such that the heart of the matter was to be taken lightly. But of course, neither Reina nor Togami noticed it.

Erio and Togami were actually helping to test the coordination support system augmented suit. Since Akira did not participate in the test that day, the team was divided between Togami and Reina versus the rest.

The mock battle was divided between the minority vs the majority. The minority referred to those who were using the augmented suit with the overloaded setting. After Erio decided to keep using the overloaded setting, some other children actually asked for the same setting. While the rest, or the majority, were children who were using the original restricted setting. Although the difference in their numbers was huge, they were able to put up a good fight which showcased the difference in their fighting prowess.

That was when Togami’s team came. After a short explanation from Tabata, they decided to set the mock battle as Togami’s team vs the rest. Since Kanae was only there as a bodyguard, she did not join the mock battle and only participated as an observer running around the battlefield.

As Erio and the other children took a short break until Togami’s team finished their preparation, they started to talk about the new addition to the test.

“Say, that maid is the one from back then, right? But where is the other one?”

“Yup, you’re probably right. But to be honest, rather than that fake-looking maid, I actually prefer the other one that looks like a proper maid.”

“Is that so? I actually like this one more though.”

“…You have a very bad taste, you know?”

“What did you just say?!”

The start of the mock battle cut their endless idle talk. As they went to their respective starting positions, they then waited for the signal to start the mock battle.

Erio nervously waited while mentally preparing himself when the support system from his helmet made a suggestion.

“Detected high anxiety level. Please keep calm to ensure effective decision making.”

“…I know.”

“It’s Yatsubayashi. Open up the air composition adjustment function! You should be able to use the modified battle stimulant that I made! Those two once worked together with Akira out in the wasteland, you know! So basically they are like 2 Akiras! If you don’t want to get a one-sided beating, just use the battle stimulant although it’s still in the clinical trial phase. You can’t get strong unless you prepare yourself to take risks, you know! Use the augmented suit, the coordination support system, and the battle stimulant, they are your shortcut to gain super strength. I know they’re still in the testing stage, but just use them! ”

Yatsubayashi’s excited voice could be heard from the support system. Although Erio was surprised by that voice, he seriously considered that offer, and eventually, his wish to get stronger trumped.

“…Alright, I’ll use it.”

“Roger that, injecting the stimulant now.”

The inside of the helmet turned slightly green from the battle stimulant. Every time Erio inhaled, he could feel his anxiety level lowered and his five senses sharpened. The pain from the previous mock battle also slowly alleviated. As he waited for the countdown, he could feel the power coursing through his limbs, even the countdown on his display felt like it was running at a slower rate.

Erio’s spirit was lifted, he thought that he might have the chance to win with his newly gained power. The moment the signal for the start of the mock battle went up, he immediately kicked the ground and started running.

It was two against many and their opponent was supported with the coordination system. Normally, it would have been hopeless, but Reina and Togami compensated for that difference with their equipment and skill. They kept moving around to cause confusion. Although they did not communicate with each other, they moved around together as a team very well. They divided the fight into smaller 2 against 1 fights as they hunted their opponents one by one. When they were about to get surrounded, they would charge to break the encirclement to get away and then maintain the upper hand.

No one was taking it easy in that battle. If they let their guard down even for a split second, the other party would immediately turn the table around. But Togami and Reina felt a sense of satisfaction as they continued to fight with a smile on their faces.

Reina shot down another one of her opponents and thought.

[These guys are strong! I heard that they are not Hunters and just amateurs though, is this the power of the coordination support system? If equipment can really make them this strong, I can imagine why Akira would splurge his money on equipment and training. I had been really ashamed of myself from back then, but…]

Reina smiled.

[I can’t let people think that I’m nothing without my equipment! I can’t let myself lose for the sake of all the training that I did with Shiori and Kanae as well.]

Togami also shot another one down as he thought.

[They are strong. So this is the power of the coordination support system, huh? If I’m not mistaken, Katsuya’s team was using a stable version if not the beta version of this system and they were using it superbly. I even heard that some officers in the gang are thinking of getting this system for all the young Hunters in the gang. I can understand that, but…]

Togami lightly smiled.

[Just how much would it cost? No wonder why Shikarabe and the other veteran Hunters don't like the young Hunters. Well, I'm on the side of the Hunters who would receive the support, so I have no problem with it, but the veteran Hunters would basically pay for it. Well, sooner or later, I would be joining their side though. I can't really afford to lose now against people with nothing but excellent equipment, after all, I need to get stronger and earn more money. At least more than what I would need to pay in the future…]

Togami and Reina did their best in order to surpass their past selves. Because of that, they were able to annihilate their opponents and won the first hard-earned victory.

Although Erio and the other children lost the round, Yatsubayashi was satisfied with the result. He then amusedly said to Tabata.

"How was it? It has this much effect with only this price. It is pretty impressive, no? Its cost-benefit ratio is way higher than your usual battle stimulant."

"Even if that's true, it's not like I can do anything about it. It's true that our augmented suit allows them to use the battle stimulant in the middle of the fight. But it is originally for medicines. Not for battle stimulants mixed with accelerator drugs. Moreover, the available medicine is based on the other companies that the main company is working together with. So we can only use yours for testing like this."

Yatsubayashi frowned and said.

"Even with this result?"

"I don't have authority to decide which medicine to use. Well, I will at least send the data to the main company though. So just hope that they would consider using your battle stimulant.”

Yatsubaya looked even more displeased.

“I bet for people like them, performance is number two and they will pick the medicine from some big drug company for the sake of their companies’ interest anyway. Good grief, these people keep giving vague refusals. No wonder cheap but good medicines would never reach the market.”

“Safety takes precedence and it’s important to confirm and prove it. That is why those huge corporations spent most of their money on that, no?”

“Humph, I wonder about that now.”

Tabata looked at the obviously displeased Yatsubayashi and lamented his decision.

[…Good grief, I ended up letting a weirdo join the testing. I really hate my stupidity from that time. Although he’s really a good doctor, he’s just suspicious, or more like, I feel like he’s not the usual doctor.]

Tabata allowed Yatsubayashi to attend the testing after a short negotiation with Viola. He was basically the doctor for Erio and the other children. Because Viola used the previous incident as leverage, Tabata could not refuse her demand.

Tabata then thought of something and asked Yatsubayashi.

“Say, this is just a random guess, but you are not from the Rebuild Laboratory, are you?”

“Why do you think so?”

“No reason in particular.”

Yatsubayashi smiled as if to laugh at himself as he said.

“If that is really the case, I would be working hard on my research with an unlimited amount of budget from the huge corporations by now.”

He then continued but with more spirit this time.

“If you really think that I am that good, it would be great if you would provide me with some aid money for my research. If only I can get a proper production line for mass production and finish off the rest of the testing, I’m sure it would sell like hotcakes. Wait, no, a license would be enough, so if you can offer this drug to some medicine companies connected to your company, then…”

“Haah, like I said, I have no authority to do that. So just give it a rest.”

“Really now, you guys are just insufferable.”

Tabata rejected Yatsubayashi’s offer, thus making him look more displeased than before.

When the Rebuild Laboratory was disbanded, some of the researchers went rogue since they did not like their research being controlled by the Corporate Governments. Even to this day, many were still actively pursuing their research in secret while running away from the Corporate Government. That was a common rumor which was flying around between researchers in the eastern district.

Tabata already knew about that rumour, which in that case, that would mean Yatsubayashi might have a connection with some big companies. But Tabata just shook his head and threw out that thought from his head.

Erio frowned and looked desperate. They finished some rounds after that, but they could not win against Reina and Togami at all, not even once.

They had different equipment, different talents, different accumulated experience from both training and real battles. There were many reasons why they could not win a single round. Erio knew that those reasons were reasonable. But, he just could not accept it. After all, if he accepted them, it felt like it was the same as giving up. He would be shutting himself from taking the road that the strong took. That kind of distorted thinking was what pushed him further.

As the next round started, Erio whispered to himself to be stronger.

“More…”

The system made a guess out of that incomplete sentence.

“Warning, using more battle stimulants would put the body in immense stress. Do you still want to use more battle stimulants?”

“…More.”

“Understood, injecting battle stimulant.”

“…Stronger.”

“Warning, using battle stimulants would put the body in more stress. Do you still want to use more battle stimulants?”

“…More!!!”

“Understood, injecting battle stimulant.”

Erio said so unconsciously, but the system kept injecting more and more battle stimulants. The huge dose of battle stimulant granted him immense power. When he started the next round, he felt like he had temporarily become superhuman.

Reina could not react when Erio suddenly started moving unnaturally fast. The moment she noticed, it was already too late. She could not evade the incoming bullet and the exchange ended up in a draw. As the ‘hit’ notice came up in her display, she laid down on the ground in deep frustration.

Togami did his best even after his only ally in that mock battle was shot down, but since the rest of the opponents jumped into the fray thinking that it was a good chance after Erio shot down Reina, the round ended in his loss even though he put up a good fight.

The signal to end the mock battle came up. Those who were lying down on the ground after receiving their hit notice pushed themselves up again.

Erio’s team realised that they had won the round and celebrated their victory.

Kanae went to Reina first, she then said apologetically to Togami who came a bit later.

“Sorry, it was my fault.”

“Well, it can’t be helped. They’re really strong, I got shot too.”

Kanae then said with a serious face.

“Milady, that boy who shot you down is dangerous.”

“Dangerous? Well, I indeed think I need to be more careful against him next time though.”

“That’s not what I meant.”

Kanae pointed at Erio who was still laying down on the ground. Although the rest of the team were already back up, Erio was still lying there, not moving. The other children noticed that and went to check on him, but since he did not respond even when they called his name, they started to panic and went to call Yatsubayashi.

“That boy, I bet he used a copious amount of battle stimulant. He’s unconscious from the side-effects. Both Ane-san and I are carrying a similar trump card, so I can somewhat tell.”

“Oh, I see. That explains why he suddenly moved so quickly. It’s pretty amazing that you can tell. Is he going to be alright?”

“I can’t really say for sure. It might be already too late for him. He might be not moving because he’s already dead instead of simply fainting.”

Reina and Togami frowned in response to Kanae, who said so lightly. Yatsubayashi who just arrived immediately went to check on Erio. He then asked for help to carry Erio to the trailer.

“Hmmm, looking at that, it seems like he’s going to be okay. In the worst-case scenario, he might spend a few days sleeping, but he’s not going to die.”

Reina and Togami sighed in relief. Even for them, they would feel bad if someone ended up dead during the mock battle.

“I see, thank goodness. By the way, Shiori and you have a similar drug, right? Are you going to be okay using them?”

“We are trained as not to make mistakes and use too much of the drug, so we won’t get to that point. By the way, the reason why we don’t let Milady carry such a drug is simply because we don’t wish for you to use such a drug. After all, it would be bad if Milady made a mistake and ended up killing yourself. Well, when Milady uses that drug, that would be after Ane-san and I die, so it’s not like using that drug would help Milady in any way in that situation. That’s why we don’t allow you to carry such a drug right from the start.”

There were occasions when Kane or Shiori would use a huge dosage of that drug, knowing well that it might kill them. For example, back then when they had to fight the old-world automaton that called itself Olivia, Kanae and Shiori used the drug close to its lethal dosage. Fortunately, Olivia withdrew so they could conserve their strength and they had the chance to prepare themselves to face the backlash, so they were somehow able to stay alive. Although they looked fine from the outside, it was actually a pretty dangerous situation.

Of course, Reina did not know about that, but when she remembered back then when Shiori had to push herself during that fight in the underground city of Kuzusuhara ruin. She could not help but to make a conflicted expression.

Togami, who was listening to their exchange, then threw a question.

“Now that I think about it, is it better if I prepare something similar for myself?”

“I won’t stop you, but normally, it’s important to stay under the dosage limit. If you often get too fired up during a fight, it’s kind of dangerous to carry such a drug. There are many people who end up overdosing because of that. I bet that boy is exactly one of those types of people.”

Togami looked at himself and frowned.

In the end, Erio was sent home. When he woke up five days later, he found Alicia looking at him worriedly.

Erio really regretted his action as Alicia angrily scolded him while crying.

When Reina and Togami were participating in the mock battles against Sheryl’s gang. Akira was meeting Shiori on the first floor of the Kugama building. Akira was surprised when he saw Shiori in a business suit instead of her usual maid outfit.

“So then, what is it that you want to talk with me about?”

“Before that, are you okay to talk here instead of in some restaurant on the upper floor? Please don’t worry about the expense. I was the one who called for you, so I’ll pay for the expense.”

“Well, I have plans to go there in the future. So, I’m fine with this place.”

Shiori’s face slightly stiffened.

“…I see. In that case, please let me get onto the main subject, and also, please don’t worry and order anything you like.”

Shiori explained to Akira why they took a lot of time selling the old-world automata. Although she went into a bit more detail compared to what he had heard from Togami, the main points did not change. He listened to the explanation while finishing his order.

“…Because of this, it will still take some time until we can sell the aforementioned relic. If Akira-sama wishes for it, I can also help out to make the process faster…”

“No, it’s fine. There’s no need for you to go that far. It’s not like I’m in immediate need of money right now. And also, I know that it’s just that expensive of a relic, so it’s understandable that they are having trouble negotiating about the price and that kind of stuff. As a matter of fact, I’m thankful that you paid for the expense early on. That’s why I won’t ask you to do more than that.”

“…I see, very well.”

Akira noticed that Shiori’s face slightly stiffened again and found it strange.

“Is that all?”

“No, there’s another thing. The food is here, so let’s eat first before we continue.”

Shiori tried her best to stay calm as she gently smiled.

Although it was not as delectable as the food on the upper floor, it was still good. Akira relished it since it was still much better than his usual food back home. After a few minutes, his mood got better. Shiori tried to gauge his mood before she nervously brought up the next subject.

“It is about the white card that you let us take. According to my connections, it seems that it is a highly valuable item, although, it’s not directly convertible into money.”

“Ohh, is that so? That’s pretty impressive.”

“So well, you can say that there will be further compensation for you, I’m planning to pay back the profit in some kind of form in the future. Although, as I said, it’s not directly convertible into money, thus your compensation would not be in the form of money. As such, if you have anything you want me to do, please do tell me. I would try my best to comply.”

Akira’s hand stopped from transporting food into his mouth and raised his eyebrows. He then frowned and said

“…No thanks, to be honest, I thought that this matter has already been settled.”

“Indeed, it is understandable to take that matter as something of the past after it has been settled. Please take this matter as the card being just that valuable, to the point that we feel bad for receiving so much profit without giving anything in return. Although, due to the nature of the matter, I can’t really tell you the details. But, what I have said so far is the truth.”

That remark piqued Akira’s interest. But his curiosity was in the opposite direction of what Shiori thought. Of course, Shiori did not know that as she stared at him and slowly became more anxious.

“It seems that you have a lot in mind, but please just tell me if you have anything you want at the moment. If it’s something that I can help with, I will do my best to comply… Although, as expected, I can’t help you if you want to get in relation with Milady.”

“Don’t worry, I have no such interest.”

Akira said so immediately that Shiori looked slightly offended by it. He thought that it was unreasonable to get that stare from her as he continued to think.

Personally speaking, he just wanted to get that troublesome card off his hands. As a matter of fact, he was thinking of just stating that the matter was completely over. But if he strongly refused, Shiori might get suspicious of him instead. Thus he tried to just ask what came up in his mind.

“In that case, I actually want your equipment, will that work?”

Shiori did not expect that at all and it was obvious from her reaction.

“…Akira-sama, I didn’t know that you have an interest in my maid outfit and the undergarment of my augmented suit. If you really want them, I don’t mind giving them, but…”

Akira flusteredly tried to fix her misunderstanding.

“Not that one! It’s true that they are included as your equipment, but I’m talking about your blade. I witnessed just how sharp it is numerous times in the past, not to mention, you used it to slice open that huge monster in the Seranthal building, remember? I just thought that it would be great to have that kind of blade. I’m sure that it’s not a blade that you can normally find in common shops, right?”

“I see, the blade, huh.”

“Why would you even think I would want your maid outfit and what not…”

Akira said as he ruffled his hair, in contrast to him, Shiori smiled amusedly.

“Very well, if my blade will be enough, I’ll bring one to you later.”

Akira was actually asking for the contact to buy that blade and not the blade itself, so he was surprised by her reply.

“Is that okay? I don’t know the details, but it’s not cheap, right?”

“It is a company equipment so I can’t really tell you the precise price, but it is indeed not cheap. But even so, it is still an expendable equipment. So it’s only given that I have spare blades, so don’t worry. I can just use my spare blade.”

“Hmmm, even if you say so, I don’t feel okay getting something that expensive, you see.”

“…If Akira-sama thinks that it might be overcompensation, then I have one request, please don’t tell anyone about that card. It is not like I can compel you to do that, but it is related to the secret information from big companies, so it might cause a problem if you do it. And it applies even when you’re talking with me, will that be okay?”

For Akira, who wanted to just cut all ties with that card, it was a good offer for him as well. Even more so if it was taken as a bribe to keep him from leaking some secret information. It was also a good excuse to accept such terms to obtain that expensive blade. So he immediately nodded and said.

“Alright, I won’t say anything to anyone.”

“Thank you very much!”

Both Akira and Shiori smiled thinking that they were able to get through the negotiation well.

After that, Akira and Shiori talked about some other stuff while enjoying the food before leaving the building. Shiori then left for a bit and returned back with a blade complete with its maintenance kit inside a trunk. Akira received that trunk, said their goodbyes, and left back home. While Shiori went back to the inner wall after seeing him off.

As she was looking at Akira’s back, Shiori thought.

[It’s a good thing that I was able to leave a good impression for now. I want to believe that it will not be a mistake.]

At first, Shiori was uncertain whether to completely forget about the white card or bring it up again to Akira in order to try to leave a good impression on him. In the end, she chose the latter.

With this, even if Akira discovered the truth later and realized that he mistook just how valuable that card was, the chance for him trying to inflict damage on Reina would lower. Moreover, bringing up that it was a company secret might also be a good excuse when it came to it. Shiori thought so and felt slightly relieved.

A call then came from Kanae.

“Ane-san, how is it going over there?”

“No problem at all, how about over there?”

“We’re on the way back now. Ah, by the way, Ane-san, about Milady taking the request for the mock battle training without your permission, should we talk about how we are going to handle this matter?”

“I will act as if I don’t know about it. If Milady slips up and says something about it later, I will handle it accordingly, so you don’t need to say anything.”

“Roger that!”

Shiori knew from the start that Reina and Togami were going to take on that request. As a matter of fact, it was their plan to keep her away from the city in case her negotiation with Akira did not go well.

“By the way, it seems that Milady has gotten stronger than we thought. To be honest, I think she has a good chance of living off as a Hunter, you know?”

“If Milady chooses to do so, it is my job to make sure that other doors will still be open to her.”

“Ane-san, you’re as doting as ever.”

“Humph, I don’t care what you say.”

Kanae closed the call, Shiori seemed to be thinking about a lot of things as she returned back.

Once Akira arrived back home, he slowly unsheathed the blade that he got from Shiori. He looked happy as he looked closely at the blade.

“I got a pretty good weapon, though I think it’s a little too long for me.”

Since it seemed that Akira would keep looking at that blade if left alone, Alpha warned him.

“Akira, you should stop there. Put it back into its sheath and connect it to the maintenance kit. I will readjust the control device through the information terminal.”

“Alright.”

It was long enough to cause trouble for Akira to sheathe or unsheathe but the mechanical sheath could open up on its side, thus it was easy for him to slide the blade in and out of the sheath. The blade came with a combat sheath and maintenance sheath. The maintenance sheath could fix the blade and it was using the same repair cartridge that was used for his augmented suit.

The grip and the combat sheath could be equipped with an energy pack. Moreover, if it was set to work with the augmented suit, it could use the energy from the augmented suit as well and leave the energy in the grip empty all the time. This way, it would be harmless even if the opponent picked up the blade.

Both the energy-based operation of the blade and the physical-based operation of the grip were able to synchronize with the read-type augmented suit. Combined with his time compression, Akira could use the blade to make a quick manoeuvre without any trouble.

The blade was also equipped with anti-forcefield armour. Within a certain range, the blade was better both for defence and offence compared to a gun. Then, in exchange for the blade and a huge amount of energy, it could cut a huge monster from a distance just like what Shiori did in the Seranthal building.

The blade itself was as sharp as an old-world blade, which Akira rarely found and was able to use. So basically, he had gotten himself a better blade than expected.

Akira was content that he received much better equipment than he had expected, Alpha then smiled at him and made a suggestion.

“Well, since you have a blade now, how about we train on how to use it as well? Akira, do you want to try it out now?”

“That’s a good idea.”

Akira extended his hand to reach for the blade but Alpha stopped him using his augmented suit. He did not expect it and turned to Alpha, who then pointed her finger at two floating blades.

Akira understood what Alpha was telling him, so he grabbed the blade. Due to the augmented reality and Alpha's control over his augmented suit, it felt like there were really two blades. He took one while Alpha took the other one.

"As I thought, it is really convenient to be able to do this training. After all, it is dangerous to use the real blade in the training, I might cut my vehicle by mistake."

"The blades themselves are identical. So don't complain if my blade suddenly extends out, okay?"

"Okay."

Akira took some distance from Alpha and faced her.

"Let's start!"

Right at the next moment, Alpha threw her blade. Although they were close enough to trade blows, the blade flung and sliced Akira into two. His head rolled over and painted the floor red followed by the headless body a moment later. Akira was not able to react at all.

But of course, it was all just an image from Alpha. Akira saw the image of his head on the ground and smiled wryly.

"Isn't that cheating?"

"Nope. Like I said, the blades are the same? So I won't accept any complaints. If you don't want to get the floor covered with your heads, make sure to block the blade, okay? Let's start the next round then."

Akira used his time compression to focus on defence right from the start this time. Thanks to that, he was able to survive a bit longer compared to last time.

Since that day, he started incorporating blades in his training. Thanks to that, the floor of his garage was littered with his dead body every single day.

Silavin: We hit the goal! 3 Chapters for this week!

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 209, Not Two Choices

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was waiting giddily in front of the Kugama building. The suitcase in his hand contained his custom suit that was finally finished. Today was the day of his triple date with Elena, Sara and Shizuka. And right now he was waiting to meet up with them.

Alpha was playing coy as she teased.

“You look pretty happy.”

“Is that so? Well, it’s fine, isn’t it?”

But Akira just ignored Alpha’s teasing. Normally, he would give more response than that, but not today. It was proof that he was in a better mood than usual. To make sure that he would not be late, he came earlier than usual, this was also another proof of that fact.

A little before the meeting time, Elena, Sara and Shizuka arrived. Just like Akira, they were also carrying their own custom dresses in suitcases.

Shizuka knew that Akira was waiting for them, she smiled at him and said.

“We were planning to come sooner than the meeting time, but it seems that we ended up making you wait instead, huh?”

“It’s no problem at all.”

“Is that so? Well, shall we get going?”

Although Akira tried to hide his glee, he was not able to trick anyone there. Seeing how happy he was to go to eat together with them, Elena, Sara and Shizuka could not hold back their giggles as they entered the building.

Akira had visited high-class restaurants located on the upper floor of the Kugama building a few times in the past, but even so, he still looked a bit nervous when he entered one. Elena then told the receptionist that they had booked dinner and went to separate changing rooms based on gender. They changed their clothes there before following one of the waitresses who guided them to their seats.

In the deeper part of the restaurant, there was a section separated by partitions. Behind those partitions, the tables were placed in rather wide intervals. All of the diners there were wearing proper suits, just like Akira. No one was using an augmented suit like he had done before. Even the cyborg diners with metallic skin were also wearing tuxedos suitable for that place. The luxurious decorations in that section gave off a high-class and elegant aura that veiled the whole section.

It gave off a feeling of a completely separate place away from the harsh world of the eastern district. Akira followed the waitress as he felt like he stepped into a completely different world.

When he arrived at their table, Elena, Sara and Shizuk, who arrived there first welcomed him with a smile. Charmed by them, he froze for a bit the moment he saw them.

Each of them was wearing a custom dress that boosted their respective unique beauty. Although each dress had a different focus, all of them gave the same sense of gracefulness and elegance, making their charm as ladies much more prominent.

The beautiful dress adorned Sara's ample body as she smiled bashfully. In contrast to that, Elena's dress capitalized on her wonderful arms and legs which gave off a feeling that it was not only simply pure beauty but they were also functional as she smiled confidently at him. While for Shizuka, in contrast to her usual working dress which covered her whole body, her dress was designed to boast that part of her as she blushed and smiled gently at Akira.

Elena led the pack by asking for Akira's opinion.

"So, what do you think?"

"…Uhhh, I think it's wonderful."

Not only was Akira lacking verbal knowledge to express himself, but he was also so flustered that it did not help him at all in that situation. He only managed to say that short sentence. But judging from his reaction, they knew that he was honestly amazed and that was enough for them as they smiled with satisfaction and bashfulness.

"Thank you. It's worth paying that much money for this dress. You also look good in that suit, you know?"

"Thank you very much!"

Akira bashfully replied.

Akira looked like a young master from some large corporation in his suit. Although he would normally look like a young boy in a suit, Celene had put all her talent into creating his suit. Thus his suit gave a strong aura of classiness and elegance, it did not even give off any weird feeling even though the one using it was Akira.

Celene did her best to fulfil their orders. Thus all of them were using dresses and a suit, which allowed even someone as clueless to fashion as Akira, to understand just how amazing they were. It even caused the waiters that guided them to look at them with sparkly eyes.

As Akira sat in his seat, the waiters immediately brought the appetizers. They had chosen their course beforehand when they placed their booking. Since Akira refused to drink alcohol, everyone decided to remove alcohol from their course. But even so, all the dishes were simply amazing. They had an amazing experience although they did not partake in any alcohol during their meal.

During dinner, Akira enjoyed exceptional food while having a light conversation with people that he regarded as his close friends. The food, the smiles from Elena, Sara and Shizuka, the subject of their conversation, the mood of the shop, all made Akira feel happy. The time passed by as he relished his time as he ate, not only for the sake of getting nutrition. The girls who watched him were happy to see that side of Akira.

Akira was completely in joy until the very end of dinner.

On the same day, Sheryl once again attended the feast in the Kugama building. After attending the same feast a few times, she had built up a level of resistance against the delicious-looking food served during the feast. So she only took a small portion onto her plate and ate it little by little. Although she thought that it was a blissful thing to be able to enjoy such amazing food, she was also having a hard time fighting back from making any exaggerated reaction to the amazing taste. Therefore, it was not like she could immerse herself in the food. Hoping to build her resistance, she took another small piece.

Inabe who saw that raised his eyebrows.

“You have quite an appetite there.”

Sheryl stopped her hand and smiled politely at Inabe.

“…I’m of that age after all.”

“I see.”

Sheryl finished the rest of the food on her plate and solemnly placed it back on the table. She then once again turned to Inabe.

“Inabe-sama, regarding the coordination support system augmented suit that you’ve been kind enough to let us borrow, how long can I expect for this kindness to last?”

“Hm? It depends on how well they are doing. To be honest, I don’t know for sure myself. Well, I know that it would be troublesome for you if you suddenly lose your fighting capabilities. I would at least tell them to let you know beforehand so as not to trouble you when they finish whatever they are doing. If you need it, I can ask them to extend the testing period, or instead, I can look for another alternative.”

“Thank you very much!”

“…Uhh, so, in exchange for that, I have one thing I want to ask though.”

“We’re really thankful for your help, if it’s something within our power, we’ll be more than happy to accept your request.”

“I want you to help me negotiate with Akira. You’re close to him, right?”

Sheryl was smiling politely up until now, but the moment Inabe said so, her expression suddenly turned sharp.

“Just to be safe, is it for an informal request that doesn’t go through the Hunter Office?”

“The answer to that is obvious, isn’t it?”

“That might be the case for common Hunters, but this is Akira that we are talking about. Personally speaking, I prefer to remove any possible discrepancy in what we are talking about to prevent unwanted outcomes in the future.”

Inabe saw Sheryl’s reaction as a warning not to cause any harm to Akira because of some unwritten convention or anything similar to that. Although that was not exactly a mistake, half of the reason why Sheryl asked that question was also because she was not that familiar with that kind of dealing.

“Very well. I’ll answer that question. Basically, it is in order not to leave any unnecessary records in the Hunter Office. After all, leaving such a record might cause a problem in the future.”

A formal request that went through the Hunter Office contained a strongly binding agreement between the requester and the Hunter who accepted that request. Both sides must strictly follow the written detail of the request. But in some cases, even for a request that was agreed by both sides, the Hunter Office could intervene using the Corporate Government’s authority to change the details of said request. The requests that had gone through such changes were simply that important.

In order to avoid this, the content of the request would be written in a vague way so that it could be interpreted in various ways, or simply did not provide the detail of the request in the written agreement. Since it was not written, normally, the Hunter Office could not do anything about it. So even if the unwritten part of the agreement contained some unfair clauses, the Hunter could not make an appeal through the Hunter Office.

On the other hand, when the requester did not want a part of the request to be known by the Hunter Office, they often have already made an agreement with the Hunter beforehand. They would have already decided things like how far the detail of the request would be written in the agreement. Of course, the bigger the job, the more difficult it would be, so it was not strange for Hunters to ask for a 3rd party to help during negotiation.

“Yanagisawa agreed to temporarily stop extending the supply route into Kuzusuhara ruin. So all the area managers, including me, have turned our focus to searching and gathering relics, that’s why we are in need of high-ranking Hunters. If I pass the request through the Hunter Office, there’s a good chance that the other area managers would try to mess with my request. Everyone from the larger corporations would also try to make a direct request to the Hunter. After all, it is well known that information about such requests does not require a high authority to be accessible. So this is just a precaution to avoid it. Will that be enough for an explanation?”

Inabe was not lying. But he also did not tell Sheryl the whole truth. Although, the thing that he was hiding from Sheryl was unlikely to cause trouble both for himself and for Akira. Sheryl noticed that as well, so she smiled politely and replied.

“Thank you very much. I will convey that to Akira and do my best to persuade him to accept your request.”

“If you have the confidence to persuade him, I actually don’t mind if you handle everything including the negotiation part though.”

“…Thank you but I will have to refuse that offer. I’m still an amateur in terms of my negotiation skill, so I will have to refuse so as to not cause you any trouble.”

“I see, in that case, I hope you’ll at least join the negotiation as a mediator.”

Inabe made a guess based on Sheryl’s reply.

[So, she basically doesn’t want to handle the most troublesome part of the deal which is the negotiations. She wants to avoid the risk of worsening her relationship with the Hunter supporting her gang, huh. As I thought, it’s not like she has Akira completely under her control. It seems that it’ll be difficult to use her as bait during the negotiation, I’ll have to think of another way.]

As Inabe and Sheryl were exchanging words, trying to analyze their respective partner in conversation. Katsuya, who was also attending the same feast, noticed Sheryl.

“Sheryl!”

Inabe and Sheryl turned to Katsuya.

“Inabe-sama, if you’re looking for a high-ranking Hunter, wouldn’t it be a good idea to try to talk to him?”

“That one is under Drankam after all. So the one that I will have to negotiate with is Drankam, not him. Well, I’ll do that if I need to, but that’s plan B for me.”

Akira and Katsuya would be perfect if some of their personalities and situations were reversed. Both Inabe and Sheryl had that exact same thought there.

Katsuya, who attended the feast, hoped to find Sheryl here, and was looking for her.

Ever since Sheryl pulled him out from his slump, he has been performing very well. As a matter of fact, his performance as a Hunter well surpassed all his past performances. Moreover, thanks to the coordination support system augmented suit that his team was using, the team's performance was also greatly improved. Not only did he believe that his problem was solved, he also thought that his luck had turned around.

During the huge incident in Kuzusuhara ruin, they had gone through a hard battle defending the supply route. Although the battle was immensely difficult, they formed a close friendship during that battle. The number of people who looked down on Kastuya's team had also significantly decreased after that. He finally felt that all his hard work was starting to pay off.

That was when he started to think that Sheryl could help him quickly solve his problems. As long as he had her by his side, he would not need to be afraid of any issues that might crop up, and that would allow him to keep himself at optimal performance.

When he spotted Sheryl and called her name, Sheryl welcomed him with a smile. Katsuya was elated as if he just met someone that he loved as he walked to her.

As Sheryl and Katsuya were talking to each other and enjoying their conversation, Inabe, who was being considerate, left them alone.

The subject of their talk mostly focused on Katsuya's recent Hunter jobs. He was fulfilling his promise to return back alive and to share his experience. He happily spoke about the days he went out to her.

Sheryl happily listened to his story with a smile. And then, while still maintaining her smile on the outside, she thought in the back of her mind.

[…Again, huh. And like, isn't he stronger than last time?]

Sheryl had no doubt about Katsuya's strength. At least, he was strong enough for Drankam to evaluate him highly and allow him to join the feast. Even Inabe, who was an officer from City Management, was also thinking of getting Katsuya on his side. There was no doubt Katsuya was a strong young Hunter. Both the impression from meeting him and the data from investigating him pointed out to that conclusion.

However, Sheryl felt something that was bothering her. Though normal people would not find anything wrong with him.

Sheryl herself did not think that she had the ability to accurately identify someone's strength. If she had that kind of talent, she would have been able to notice how powerful Akira was right from the start and she would not have treated him the way she did in the past. But when it came to Katsuya, she felt like there was something unnatural about Katsuya's skill and talent, and that feeling somehow felt really clear to her.

Judging from the way Katsuya was talking with her, Sheryl was sure that he really liked her. But judging from his expression, there was a chance that it was a misunderstanding or it was fake. Although, her intuition told her that it was not the case and she trusted her intuition with no hesitation at all.

From her past experience, she knew that there was something affecting her evaluation of Katsuya. Although she did not know what that something was, just knowing that there was something provided her with a little resistance.

[…I feel like if I let my guard down, he'll dictate my view of him. There are some people in this world who have this strange kind of charisma. I'm still not knowledgeable nor experienced enough to handle this. I need to be careful.]

Sheryl reminded herself to be more careful dealing with Katsuya.

After a few minutes, Viola returned to Sheryl who was still talking with Katsuya.

“Boss, I’m sorry but it might be a good time to leave soon. I have another business to attend to, so I won’t be able to give you support. I have arranged for someone to pick you up on the first floor. You’ll know who when you’re there, so don’t worry.”

“Alright, Katsuya, I’m sorry but I’ll have to excuse myself for today.”

“Ah, in that case, I’ll accompany you to the first floor.”

“Thank you very much!”

Sheryl then left the feast together with Katsuya. Seeing that, Viola smiled amusedly. But it was a rather ominous smile that reflected her bad personality.

__*__*__*__

After finishing his dinner with Elena, Sara and Shizuka. Akira was back in his augmented suit, equipped with his rifles. With that short period of time which felt like a dream now in the past, he completely returned back to his usual self.

Shizuka gently smiled at Akira and asked.

“Akira, how was the dinner today? Did you enjoy it?”

“Yes, it was an amazing experience. Shizuka-san, Elena-san, Sara-san. Thank you for inviting me today.”

Akira smiled and bowed deeply. Seeing his response, Shizuka was glad that it was a meaningful time.

“I’m glad to hear that. Let’s go again if the chance comes up.”

“Of course, I’ll be more than happy to if the chance indeed presents itself… Although, as expected, it won’t be anytime soon.”

Akira’s delighted answer was followed by that remark and a bitter smile. Shizuka also replied with a bitter smile.

“Well, you’re right about that one. I too would need some time before we go again.”

Akira in the end paid his share of the food. Although it saved him from feeling bad getting treated to such an expensive meal, it also hit his money reserve. Not to mention, the custom suit was not cheap as well. Shizuka also followed suit and offered to pay her share as well. Despite the fact that they split the bill, it was still not cheap.

The day was already starting to get dark. Not only was it still a bit too soon to enjoy the nightlife, but Akira was also just an underage boy. Since it was not like there was anything they could do together after dinner, they decided to finish their date. Elena and Sara went to take Shizuka back to her shop, while Akira stayed behind because he had something else to take care of.

Before she left, Sara lightly rubbed Akira’s head.

“Well then, Akira, until next time.”

“Of course, until next time.”

Akira smiled and saw them off. As he was no longer able to see them, Alpha, who kept herself invisible up until now suddenly reappeared.

“It seems that you were having a good time while forgetting about me.”

“I’m sorry about it. I just didn’t want to look like a weird person during dinner. If I keep turning my head to empty spaces, I might get conscious of it and end up not enjoying the food.”

“But then you still made me handle your information terminal though.”

“Yeah yeah, I’m sorry, alright?”

Alpha was pouting, so Akira smiled wryly and tried to cheer her up.

“Well, it doesn’t really matter now. By the way, you need to go soon or you’ll be late.”

“Ah, right. I need to hurry up.”

Akira returned back to the Kugama building. During the dinner, he had received a message from Viola to pick Sheryl up and to take her back to the base if he was around. Akira, who was in a good mood, did not think it through and simply agreed.

He did not wait long on the first floor before Sheryl appeared. But the moment he saw her, he was a bit surprised. Sheryl was together with Katsuya, and it seemed that they were pretty close as they were talking to each other.

When Sheryl saw Akira, her smile immediately sprung up. She thought well of Viola, who had arranged this, which was rare for her. And then, of course, she had some thoughts. [I wonder if Viola deliberately did this to get on my good side.] But while she was still trying to work out what was Viola’s aim for doing this, the situation suddenly changed. Katsuya stepped up in front of Sheryl as if to protect her from Akira.

Katsuya was obviously directing animosity toward Akira. Meanwhile, Akira, who was at the receiving end of that animosity, tensed up and got himself ready for action. Of course, both Akira and Katsuya knew better than to cause a ruckus in front of the building managed by the Hunter Office. But they simply could not trust each other. They were locked in that situation as tension in the air rose up.

Sheryl was confused by the sudden change of events. Even in this situation, she did her best to try to understand what was going on as her eyes went back and forth between Akira and Katsuya. But when she looked at Akira, she remembered something that she had once imagined in the past and froze up. Akira’s slightly surprised face overlapped with an image. An image of him abandoning her without an ounce of regret or hesitation. The same image that she had imagined in the past.

Akira then showed a hint of movement, as if he was about to leave the place. When Sheryl noticed that, all the doubts and questions in her mind were immediately thrown out of the window as she ran and hugged him by pure reflex.

“Akira! You came to pick me up, huh! Thank you very much!”

Sheryl never expected that she would raise her voice that high and squeeze out a smile in order to ascertain her position. Although there was a mix of desperation in her smile, her arm was still hugging tight, as if she was clinging onto Akira for her life. Akira also did not expect that from her at all as he looked slightly troubled by it.

While on the other hand, Katsuya could not hold back his surprise. It was such a shock to him that he could not fully process what just happened.

“S-Sheryl!?”

Katsuya’s short sentence was filled with his earnest feeling. In response, Sheryl was still clinging to Akira’s arm as she turned around and replied.

“Can you please stop acting like that? Akira might misunderstand something, you know?”

The harsh words and the ice-cold gaze were so different from the Sheryl whom he knew up until now. The shock made Katsuya at loss for words.

Sheryl’s gaze returned back to Akira as she gave the best smile that she could muster. It was a desperate made-up smile to show her affection toward Akira, she then clung hard to him and earnestly pleaded.

“Let’s go back now.”

Akira was still a bit confused and uncertain of what to do there, so Sheryl forcefully pulled his arm and practically dragged him away from that place. They then left the building just like that.

Katsuya, who was left alone, was found standing exactly in the same spot when Mizuha found him. She was worried that Katsuya did not return after some time and went to look for him.

On their way back, Akira, who still did not fully understand what just happened, tried to make his own guess and said to Sheryl.

“…I don’t really know what was going on back then, but if you need connection with other Hunters for the sake of the gang, I have no wish to get in the way. So you should not worry about it. I won’t complain at all, you know?”

Sheryl’s made up smile crumbled and turned into a rather sad expression. Akira’s words showed just how little he thought of her. Although he once jumped straight into the fray during that huge incident in the slum city the other day in order to save her, he did not even feel a shred of jealousy when he saw Sheryl was having a good time with another guy. It was just extremely unnatural.

If they were really a couple, there was a word that would immediately solve that abnormality, but Sheryl averted her consciousness from that word.

“…You can’t say that to your lover. Our setting is that we are close to each other, that is why you are willing to support my gang. A lot of things regarding the gang are based on that assumption. Although I can’t force you, if I may, I really hope that you would try to be careful so as to not do anything that might break that assumption.”

“Hm? Ah, right, you have a point there, I’ll be more careful.”

Akira was convinced by that answer, although, Sheryl wished that he would not just obediently accept her reasoning like that.

But even so, Sheryl tried to give her best smile, hoping and wishing that their relationship would turn into a real one sometime in the future.

—-—-—-*—

Back at base, Sheryl waited in her room for Viola to return. She had told Viola to visit the room later no matter what and she did not mind if Viola was late. It was already late at night and the date had already changed, but Sheryl still waited silently for Viola. Since her emotion had completely overpowered her sleep, she did not feel drowsy at all.

A few knocks could be heard followed by Carol entering with Viola.

“Boss, I heard that you called for me. Do you need anything?”

Sheryl silently pointed her pistol at Viola, but Viola’s smile was not perturbed.

“Oh, that’s not friendly at all. Is there anything wrong?”

“What was that?”

“Even if you ask me, I don’t really know what is ‘that’ you’re talking about.”

“Don’t play dumb with me!”

The hand gripping the pistol reflected Sheryl’s real feeling, it was shaking with anger. She was barely able to stop her finger from pushing the trigger. Her face showed obvious animosity. In order to hold back her anger and maintain her logical mind, her expression was more of cold ruthlessness instead of anger.

But even so, Viola still had her usual smile.

“It’s not like I’m trying to play coy here. It doesn’t matter how hard you try to bait me with words, you do know well that won’t work on me, right?”

Viola kept up playing dumb as if to tease Sheryl.

In order not to accidentally shoot her and to keep her calm, Sheryl repeatedly took deep breaths while telling herself to remain calm.

“On the first floor of the Kugama building, why did you make the three of us meet there?”

“Hm? I thought that it would make you happy to have Akira escort you back though, did something happen?”

A gunshot echoed. The bullet left a hole in the wall next to Viola. Sheryl readjusted her aim at Viola. But Viola did not move at all, as a matter of fact, her smile widened.

“For the sake of the gang’s future, I just thought that you might be able to mediate between Akira and Katsuya since it seems that both of them have a rather hostile relationship. But it seems that it didn’t work out well, huh?”

“For the gang’s sake, huh? Do you really think that would work? Stop with the lies. I know that you don’t honestly think so.”

“I’m not lying. Katsuya is a very skilled Hunter and it seems that he’s interested in you. So if you can use that to make peace between him and Akira, there’s no doubt that it would greatly help the gang. I’m sure you know well yourself just how profitable it would be for the gang if that works.”

Viola made a good argument. Sheryl tried to calm herself down but as if to mock her efforts, Viola then continued.

“Well, if that was enough to break your relationship with Akira, it means that there’s less chance Akira would come for my head if I somehow get you angry. To be honest, I was hoping for that outcome as well. So basically, for me, I didn’t mind how it would turn out either way. If it was a success, it would be very profitable for the gang, and if it failed, then it would bring profit for me. Well, but unfortunately, it seems that it didn’t exactly go either way huh? That is really unfortunate.”

Viola had her evil smile on her face as she said so. Sheryl was shaking in anger as she was barely able to hold herself back. Moreover, as they locked their gazes, Viola’s eyes were challenging her to shoot if she could really afford to do so.

After a short silence, Sheryl lowered her pistol. If she killed Viola here, all the amazing ongoing progress of the gang would be thrown down the drain.

The gang was the only thing that Sheryl could hand over to Akira in order to repay her debt to him, so she could not afford to lose it. That reasoning was barely able to save Viola.

“…Get out.”

“Is that all? Alright, Boss, good night.”

Viola turned around and was about to leave the room with Carol, but before she exited the room, she left a few words for Sheryl.

“You can’t win me with violence, you know? So suit yourself. Later then, Boss.”

After Viola and Carol left the room, Sheryl threw her pistol onto the floor, but not before emptying its magazine at the door.

“…I’ll definitely win, just you see!!”

Sheryl replaced the raging emotion inside her with determination and renewed her resolve to remove Viola.

Outside of the room, Carol sighed in exasperation.

“Geez, you’re just as awful as ever. You might provoke her like that, believing that she won’t shoot. But if you keep this up, you’ll really get shot.”

“Nope, I was hoping that she would shoot.”

“Wha-!? Is that so?”

“Yep. That’s why I brought you with me. I know that you can handle such a situation when it happens, right?”

“Well, that’s true, but still.”

“I was hoping she would shoot, and you would protect me, then I can leak that information and use it to do other things. But it seems that she can control herself well. It was pretty impressive. It seems that she has gotten tougher. To be honest, I really didn’t expect that at all.”

Viola seemed to be pretty happy there, in contrast to that, Carol smiled wryly and mumbled.

“And here I thought it was pretty rare for you to seriously help someone else, like the gang. But it turns out that you were just playing with the fire here just now, huh? You just can’t give it a break, can you?”

“Just so you know, I’m already being careful so as to not get on Akira’s bad side. Of course, I would change my mind if you would get him under control though.”

“Nah.”

“That’s really unfortunate.”

Viola and Carol exchanged jokes and lightly laughed. Both of them knew well just how horrendous each of their attitudes was.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 210, Negotiation With Inabe

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Shijima was resting in his private chamber back in his gang's base. His face had slightly lost its luster, which showed just how tired he was. This was caused by none other than his exhausting duty.

The battle between those two large gangs in the slum city had left a large vacant territory. Thankfully, the other slum gangs were able to talk it out and peacefully divide the vacant territory. The result from their discussion was that Sheryl would take half of the territory left by the Ezont Family. She would also lend all of that territory for Shijima's gang to manage. In exchange for that, the gang would share the profit from managing that territory fifty-fifty.

Of course, this would mean that Sheryl's gang would get 50% of the profit without having to manage that territory. Normally speaking, it was a very greedy deal, despite that, the other gangs still accepted it. This showed just how frightened the other gangs were of Akira and Viola, who were behind Sheryl's gang.

Having control of the territory meant that Shijima could fake the reports for the expense so that his own gang could gain more money. As a matter of fact, they were already doing it. But since no one could tell what kind of retribution Akira might bring down on them if it were to leak out, they were being extremely careful and only did it to a tolerable limit.

Now that Sheryl had lent the territory for him to manage, Shijma was employing people from the other gangs to work under him in order to manage it. As he was the head, he was also responsible for the distribution of profits. Unfortunately, with how big the Ezont family's territory was, it produced a large amount of profit. This caused more friction between the gangs. Shijima was basically having a hard time adjusting arrangements to appease everyone. Although managing this area did significantly increase his gang's prowess and influence, it also put him under a lot of stress.

One of Shijma's men then entered the room.

"Boss, is it a good time?"

"I'm resting right now. If it's not an emergency, save it for later. If it is about some members from the other gangs fighting over a girl or something, let them settle that matter between their own gangs themself. There's no need to bring everything to me."

"No, it's just that we noticed some movement from Sheryl's gang. So just to be safe, I'm here to report to you about it."

After hearing that report, Shijima's face stiffened. It seemed that an officer from City Management visited Sheryl's base in order to meet Sheryl, himself. Normally, no one would believe it, but if it was the truth, it was not something that could be ignored.

"…Are you sure this information is correct?"

"One thing that we have confirmed is that a certain vehicle with the City Management emblem on it was spotted entering Sheryl's base, along with someone wearing an expensive-looking suit. He was escorted by a bunch of heavily armed bodyguards who came out from that vehicle. This is from our men working in Sheryl's base, that's why we know that this is definitely true."

“…I’ve heard rumours that their relic shop relies on someone from City Management, as the gang provides side income to that person. City Management also dispatched manpower to guard that relic shop. I’ve always thought that it’s just a rumour that Viola fabricated, but it seems that it’s not the case, huh?”

Shijima looked immensely confused and uncertain. If he was able to use this information wisely, he would be able to gain a lot of benefit from it, but if not, it might end up with the destruction of his gang. There was no doubt that he had to be careful on how to deal with this situation.

“Let the other gangs know about it too. If they ask for a meeting to discuss it, tell them that we’re still considering what to do regarding the same. And even if we’re going to convene a meeting, we’ll only do it after I ask Sheryl about it.”

“Roger that, Boss.”

After the guy left the room, Shijima frowned and mumbled.

“…Good grief, they were only a small gang made up of slum children not too long ago, and now it has grown significantly again.”

Thinking about what kind of disturbance it might cause and how much work that he needed to do to take care of it, Shijima heaved a huge sigh.

__*__*__*__

Inside Sheryl’s room in her base, Akira and Inabe were sitting facing each other. Behind Inabe, there was a group of heavily armed soldiers as if they were planning to go to the inner part of a ruin later. Akira was also using an augmented suit and carried his SSB rifles. Though, he left his blade behind since it was too long, and might obstruct him from sitting down on a chair.

Sheryl was not sure if it was appropriate for her to stay, but due to Inabe’s request, she decided to leave the room. So after she placed the coffee on the table, she excused herself.

Inabe started.

“Before we get into the heart of the matter, I have a few questions. Although it might be weird for me to be complaining, you’re the one who wanted to have the meeting here. If you have a reason for it, please do tell me.”

“If you rather choose to meet somewhere in the ruin, we can go there now though.”

“No, it’s not something as secretive as that. Ah, did you choose this place since you thought this would be a discussion that is meant to be kept secret?”

“It’s just that it’s more comfortable for me to talk somewhere I’m familiar with.”

“I see.”

After a short pause, Inabe stopped chasing the subject. Akira only thought that it was rather weird for Inabe to stop there, but he did not bother to think any further than that. In contrast to him, Inabe tried to read deeper into the situation.

At first, they originally planned to have the meeting in a high-class restaurant on the upper floor of the Kugama building. But Akira said that he would rather have the meeting in Sheryl’s base and so that plan was changed.

This was because Akira was being more careful than usual, considering that Inabe wanted to offer him a request without passing it through the Hunter Office. Furthermore, he knew from his conversation with Kibayashi that sometimes people invited high-ranking Hunters to some high-class restaurant that they were not familiar with to trick them into signing an unfair contract. That was why Akira chose to have the meeting in Sheryl’s base instead. Not to mention that in this case, he could use the excuse that this offer had come to him through Sheryl, so it was not strange if he wanted to have that meeting in Sheryl’s base.

From what Akira did, Inabe continued to ponder.

[He might have noticed that I was the person behind the deal he made in the deeper part of the Kuzusuhara ruin the other day. Or, it could be that Sheryl's gang is actually Akira's gang and he had chosen to meet within his territory in order to gain the upper hand during negotiation. There is also the possibility of him deliberately making me visit this base in order to show off our relationship to the other gangs and exert more influence on them…]

Inabe pondered just how much Akira was involved in everything since the day Viola visited the temporary base.

[If that is indeed the case, then Akira is not only a high-ranking Hunter, he is also a Hunter who thirsts for money and power. There are many Hunters who use slum city gangs to do covert illegal activities, after all.]

Inabe then came to a conclusion, although there was evidence that disproved his theories, it was still wise to be careful.

"Now then, before we start, I have one thing to say. Although it's not something so secretive for us to have this meeting in the inner part of a ruin, it is still a classified meeting related to the City Management. So I'll need you to keep this confidential as a proper Hunter, also remember that there are consequences if you break this promise. Are you okay with it?"

"Sure."

"Then let's begin."

Inabe was planning to do a large-scale expedition to explore the inner part of the Kuzusuhara ruin. Not only would it involve a lot of Hunters, but he was also planning to deploy the humanoid weapons that were just approved for deployment recently. Of course, it would not be a cheap operation, if the expedition fails, it would incur a huge loss for him. But even so, Inabe placed his bet on the expedition and he was in the process of gathering the manpower necessary right now.

After hearing Inabe explain, Akira frowned and looked a bit conflicted.

“…I’m sure you know about this, but I almost got killed in Kuzuusuhara ruin a few times recently, right? To be honest, I have no plans to go there anytime soon.”

“Facing danger is an occupational hazard for a Hunter. Moreover, we will leave most of the job to the humanoid soldiers. The Hunters would only be deployed once the robots finished securing the area, so you guys can focus only on gathering relics. Don’t worry, the City Management also plans to deploy powerful powered suits as well, I’m sure that you’re familiar with the type of powered suit that we’re talking about here and just how powerful they are. And unlike during the previous incident in Kuzusuhara ruin, they will not be in a testing phase, so they’re not restricted to only melee weapons anymore. We will have enough fighting power to safely conduct the expedition.”

“…Even if you say so…”

Even with that added, Akira seemed to be reluctant. But Inabe then continued.

“I heard that you’re ordering powerful equipment through a City Management staff member, Kibayashi, right? I’m actually involved in that matter as well.”

Akira’s expression immediately changed.

“What do you mean?”

Akira’s expression, stare, and voice were all projecting a level of hostility. Inabe’s bodyguards inadvertently reacted to that hostility. The mood inside the room immediately tensed up.

Although Inabe kept his calm demeanour from the outside, he was actually taken aback. The bodyguards for a City Management’s officer were in no way weak. He thought that Akira should be aware of it and he would not try anything funny there, but Akira's stance was showing that he had no problem having a fight here and now.

Inabe thought that unnecessary intimidation might be counter-effective in this case as he changed his approach to the meeting.

"Oh, don't misunderstand me. I have no plans to get in your way of getting new equipment if you refuse this offer. As a matter of fact, it is the opposite, I can help you with your new equipments if you accept this offer."

As Akira's intimidating aura gradually receded, Inabe let out a sigh of relief in his heart before continuing.

"You're looking for powerful equipment that you can't get through normal means, right? Not to mention that you're willing to spend most of your reward on it. I'm sure that Kibayashi has some extraordinary connections that can help you with that, and I bet they will be able to answer your expectation well. But I know, there's still a limit on how far a mere staff can do. Unlike him, I can connect you with some powerful people. Just so you know, I can even get you that black powered suit. If you accept this offer and do a good job in gathering relics during the expedition, I'm willing to help you out with your equipment. So how about that?"

"I don't really want that powered suit though."

"I'm just saying that I can even get you something that powerful. When you're looking for powerful equipment, money alone is not enough. You'll also need a high Hunter Rank. After all, there are many corporations that only make deals with Hunters with a high enough ranking. You are relying on Kibayashi in order to circumvent that problem, right?"

"…Well, that's true, but…"

"Then there's no reason to hesitate here. Although it sounds suspicious for me to say this, this expedition is a rare chance even for you. At least I'll let you know about this. During the expedition, the area would be closed from public access. After all, it would be troublesome if some Hunters not from the expedition team take away the relics in that area. It is difficult to get the chance to join this kind of expedition. Normally, Hunters would fight each other for this offer. As a matter of fact, there's an ongoing competition behind the scenes between the representatives of various Hunter gangs. You can join this expedition without the need to go through any of that. So, there's no reason for you to hesitate."

Akira himself thought that it was indeed an enticing offer, but that was exactly what made him suspicious.

"To be honest, this offer sounds too good to be true for me though. Is there any reason you are prioritizing me that much?"

Inabe took a short pause before he lightly smiled and confessed.

"Well, I can't tell you all the details, but basically, you're already well past the criteria to be included in this operation. For example, your Hunter Rank. City Management actually decided to temporarily stop the supply line expansion into Kuzusuhara ruin. During this break, all the other officers are also planning to launch a large scale expedition. But in order to do that, they need enough capable manpower. Because of that, we are actually competing for Hunters above Rank 40, you see. That's why we're offering you all of these things in order to get you to join my expedition. Although I already received answers from the other Hunters who are above Rank 40, the more Hunters I have, the better it is."

Akira was okay with that answer, but he still requested extra confirmation.

"Alpha."

"He's not lying, but he's also hiding something."

"So he's not as kind as to tell me everything, huh."

"Yep, exactly."

Just to be safe, Akira then asked Inabe a question with a serious face.

"I'm sorry if this offends you, but tell me, you have no wish to cause me any harm, right?"

“And here I thought what you would ask. Listen here, if you keep being paranoid like that, this is not how a negotiation-”

Akira’s intense serious stare stopped Inabe, who then fixed his tone and said with an equally serious expression.

“No.”

“Alpha.”

“Not lying.”

Akira lightly sighed.

“Alright then, I’ll take your offer. Sorry for being too careful. I hope you can understand if I say that I know someone by the name of Viola.”

Inabe inadvertently smiled wryly.

“That explains everything then. It seems that she has troubled you as well, huh?”

“Yeah.”

Akira smiled bitterly. Those who knew what he was talking about would understand very well, such an awkward feeling of camaraderie wafted in the air.

After Inabe finished his business with Akira, he went to see the relic shop, and after a small talk with Sheryl, he finally left the base. This time, he headed to the lower district of Kugamayama city.

Inabe replayed in his mind what just happened in the base and smiled confidently.

[Akira, Sheryl, Viola, what a gathering of dangerous people. I wonder what they are planning, to form a gang together like that. The answer to that might lie in the reason why Akira is looking for powerful equipment. Well, it doesn’t really matter, I’ll use this chance to reap some profit for myself.]

One of Inabe’s men suddenly called him.

“Inabe-sama, it’s about Drankam. The negotiator from Drankam’s side said that the Hunter we’re asking for is not doing so well. So it might be difficult to arrange a meeting with him.”

“It doesn’t matter, tell them that we’re going there as originally planned. Inform them to threaten that Hunter if he doesn’t seem interested. And if that still doesn’t work, tell them to just leave the negotiation to us, I’ll have a face to face talk with him.”

“Understood!”

After a short pause, the same subordinate called Inabe again.

“Inabe-sama, we can call Drankam’s negotiator right now if you wish.”

Inabe smiled bitterly.

[So he even refused an order from Drankam’s officer, huh. Although he’s an upcoming star, they’re basically spoiling this young Hunter. And this really is the guy that Yanagisawa has his eyes on too… Honestly speaking, I don’t like him.]

His hatred toward Yanagisawa caused Inabe’s face to stiffen.

[Well, it doesn’t really matter. I’ll just assume that’s just how strong that Hunter is, I’ll make good use of him.]

Inabe then readjusted his expression suitable for negotiation.

“Connect me.”

“…This is Mizuha. Inabe-sama, we are really sorry about this and we are really grateful for this chance, but unfortunately-”

Inabe energetically cut short Mizuha’s long apology.

“Just listen here. Katsuya-kun, was it? I don’t really know the reason, but I heard something happened to him and that he is no longer fit for duty. I bet it has caused you a lot of trouble considering that he’s a team leader, right? If you keep that up, I’m sure Yanagisawa would no longer evaluate you as highly. Man, that must be really rough.”

“Indeed, it is exactly as you say…”

“I actually might have an inkling on how to fix it.”

“You do?!”

Hearing Mizuha’s rather exaggerated response, Inabe’s smile widened.

“I won’t say anything bad. Just arrange a meeting with him. I’ll get him back on his feet and you won’t worsen your relationship with me. I’m heading there right now, so make the preparations for the meeting.”

Inabe then closed the call without even waiting for Mizuha’s reply. After all, there was no need to wait for her reply.

Katsuya was sitting with his head hung low inside his room. He did not even remember how he got back after Sheryl had left him. As a matter of fact, it was even suspicious if he remembered anything in the past few days. The half-eaten meal next to him showed that he had also lost his appetite. Although the light was on, it was because Yumina and the other girls turned them on, worried for him. There was no doubt if he was left alone, he would just continue to despair inside this dark space.

The shock from when he parted off with Sheryl still lingered in him.

Yumina and the other girls entered the room, worried for him. When they told Katsuya that Inabe came to see him, he only glanced and showed a minimal response. So Yumina and the other girls had no other choice but to grab his arm and carry him out of the room on their shoulders. He did not even resist when they did that.

Katsuya was sitting face to face with Inabe in Drankam's visitor room. Many young Hunters gathered around Katsuya and Mizuha, and all of them seemed gloomy.

Even Inabe felt a bit creeped out after seeing it.

[So basically, the mood of the whole team is determined by the mood of the main actor of the team, huh? A team heavily affected by the condition of its leader… I bet all of them are in Katsuya's team. I see now, as expected, the team is not fit for duty in this condition.]

Inabe then turned to Mizuha.

"I'll have everyone but him leave this room."

"But he's in this situation, so it's not like we can just leave him alone-"

"No. This meeting includes private information for him and other information regarding the interest of City Management. So the fewer ears around, the better. That's why I want everyone unrelated to leave the room."

Seeing that all of them were reluctant to leave, Inabe sighed and sent an intense glare as he once again ordered.

"Leave!"

Seeing that, Mizuha and the rest finally left the room. Yumina, who left last, turned around and bowed at Inabe as if pleading to him before she closed the door behind her.

[He even acted like that in front of a Drankam's officer and an officer from City Management, huh? As I thought, the gang is really spoiling him. This is simply abnormal even for Yanagisawa's influence. Honestly, these guys put too much stock in him. I just can't understand what they are thinking.]

Inabe decided to shelf that question for now. In order to start the negotiation, he then smiled and said to Katsuya.

“Now then, I’m not sure if you’re even listening or not, but before we go on to the main subject, there’s a small thing that I want to talk to you about. I heard that you got rejected by Sheryl, that must be rough.”

Inabe’s tone was obviously directed to mock Katsuya instead of cheering him up, causing Katsuya’s anger to well up. This anger turned into energy and returned the colour on his face as Katsuya who was unresponsive up until now sent a glare toward Inabe’s direction.

“…So why are you here? You have no business with a mere Hunter who has no relation to Sheryl, right?”

“That’s indeed correct, that’s why I have some business with you.”

Katsuya showed a bit of surprise. Inabe’s mocking smile shifted into a friendly one and he did that deliberately.

“W-what do you mean?”

“As a businesswoman and the leader of a gang, there are times when she has to make hard decisions, that’s all there is to it.”

Inabe’s words rejuvenated Katsuya’s hope, who had always been wishing that there was a reason why Sheryl did that. There must be some kind of misunderstanding there.

“Tell me, tell me everything.”

“If you really want to know, stop hanging your head and straighten your back. That’s not how you present yourself during a negotiation, you know?”

Katsuya flusteredly straightened his back. Seeing that, Inabe was sure that he had secured his victory.

“Sorry to start from something unpleasant, but to put it in simple terms, Sheryl has debts, or more like a loan. Well, both refer to the same thing anyway.”

“Debt…”

From that word, Katsuya immediately made a guess that Akira was trying to get Sheryl by using that debt as an excuse. So naturally, he then thought that he might be able to take that debt off from Sheryl.

“That debt, how much is it exactly?”

“I don’t know the precise number, but one thing for sure, it is not small. Let me ask you this instead, how much do you think it might be?”

Considering that it was large enough to force Sheryl to make such a hard decision, Katsuya paused for a bit before wording out his guess

“Like, 30 million… No, 50 million Aurum?”

Katsuya only guessed that it must be pretty big but not completely out of reach for him when he said that. But Inabe shook his head and replied.

“Unfortunately, it’s way more than that.”

“Way more than that? So I guess it’s not like 55 million either, so, 500 million?”

“It’s at least 5 billion. It might go as high as 10 billion or even more.”

Katsuya dropped his jaw and flusteredly exclaimed.

“A-are you serious!? That’s just way too much no matter how you slice it…”

“It’s the debt of someone who can even attend that feast, you know? 30 million Aurum? 50 million Aurum? Heh, there’s no way it’s that small. It seems that you don’t fully understand the real worth of the people who can attend that feast. People in that event can casually make deals worth billions of Aurum. Well, although, there’s a difference whether it is her debt or the debt of her organization.”

Katsuya still had not fully recovered from the shock as he listened to Inabe.

“The larger the corporation, the bigger the liability in the case that corporation goes under. And then the debt, well, investment, loan, you can call it whatever you want. It takes talent to be able to manage that much money. After all, the person loaning it out did it expecting to get something in return. That girl basically is just that talented, but then she failed. I guess that’s what happened.”

Katsuya understood that it was something out of his capabilities and frowned.

“But even so, there’s no doubt in her talent, so I bet she’s trying to get up again with the little amount of money she has. And in reality, she is doing very well considering that she’s able to attend that feast. Sheryl is actually earning money by selling relics at the moment. It is not something strange in the eastern district. I’m sure she will be able to pay back her debt soon at this rate, that’s why I’m sponsoring her relic shop as well. We did talk about business during the feast, remember? That’s exactly what we were talking about back there.”

Katsuya did not expect that Sheryl was having such a hard time, at the same time, he hated himself since he could not help her.

“Sheryl needs relics for her relic shop, that’s why she needs skilled Hunters. Fortunately, she has some connections with Akira… Now then, I bet you’re asking yourself – why would she go to Akira when you yourself are a skilled Hunter, right?”

“…Yeah.”

“You’re indeed a skilled Hunter, your Hunter Rank is pretty high as well. I myself have confirmed that you’re a skilled Hunter based on the information that I gathered about you. But, unfortunately, you’re not the kind of Hunter that Sheryl is looking for. After all, you’re a skilled monster Hunter. Most of your track records are from subjugating monsters or protecting inter-city transports. So, unfortunately, this track record can’t attest for your skill in hunting relics. But that’s not the case for Akria. He’s doing very well as a relic Hunter. He’s basically a proficient treasure Hunter.”

“If it’s only that much, not too long ago I found some old-world terminal, right…?”

“Just that one time out of coincidence, right? We can’t really expect you to keep producing that kind of result just from that one time, right?”

Katsuya could not argue back and just sat there in silence.

“Moreover, even if it’s not from coincidence but from your talent, that doesn’t change much from Sheryl’s point of view. You’re a Hunter from Drankam, the gang decides where the relics that you gathered will go, not you. I bet they won’t let you give those relics to Sheryl even if it is to get on your good side, and it won’t work even if Sheryl tries to negotiate with Drankam. The Hunters in Drankam are receiving a lot of support from the gang and it is not cheap. It’s only to be expected that the relics its members gather will go there first. They will have no relics available for Sheryl. In contrast to that, Akira is an independent Hunter, which is rare to find. So, if she can just get on his good side, she will be able to expect some relics to go to her.”

Katsuya imagined a lot of things and frowned.

“…Is he that good of a relic Hunter? Enough for Sheryl to do that?”

“I have my position to consider here, so make sure that this won’t leak outside, okay? It seems that Akria brought back old-world automata just recently. I heard that he was working as a team, so the money from that automata will be distributed to the rest of his team and Sheryl wouldn’t get anything this time. Even at this moment, there are many companies competing to get those automata. Just imagine how much it would profit Sheryl if those relics went to her instead. It won’t be strange for her to expect Akira to achieve the same thing in the future. And the more Akira likes her, the better the chance his relics will go to her. I bet that’s why she doesn’t spare any effort in order to get Akira to like her.”

Katsuya imagined even more and his frown deepened.

“She did not know that you and Akira are on bad terms. After seeing how you reacted. As a businesswoman and the leader of her gang, her options were between you and Akira, but her only choice was to side with Akira. There was no room for her own feelings, it was a hard decision. Well, it is all just my guess though. I’m not her after all, so I don’t know what exactly she was thinking at that moment. But well, I can guess that much judging from how you two were talking during the feast.”

Katsuya was hoping that there was a reason why Sheryl did that and this pretty much confirmed it for him. But what laid after was something that was out of his reach, something worse than he had expected.

“…Is there… Really nothing that I can do…?”

Seeing Katsuya hand his head low in frustration again, Inabe then said to him, as if to give him hope.

“Actually, I’m planning a large scale expedition to Kuzusuhara ruin’s inner area and I need a lot of skilled Hunters for executing this plan. So yes, I’m planning to hire a lot of skilled Hunters who specialize in hunting monsters in order to secure the area of the expedition. If we’re successful, I’m sure we can return with a lot of relics from this expedition. Of course, I will have ownership over those relics and where to send them. Normally, I will prioritize sending those relics to corporations connected to City Management, but if you perform well during the expedition, I don’t mind giving some of the relics to Sheryl. Of course, I will inform her that it was mostly thanks to your hard work. If Sheryl knows that she has other options for her sources of relics, I’m sure her evaluation of Akira would lower, and she would not have to make that kind of tough decision anymore. She will have other options besides Akira. So, What do you think?”

Inabe said so and gave Katsuya a friendly smile. But he was surprised when he looked at Katsuya’s expression, a sense of resolve was welling up from his serious face. Katsuya then lowered his head to Inabe.

“Please, let me join your expedition.”

“Of course, certainly.”

Inabe was a bit overwhelmed by the powerful determination oozing out from Katsuya that felt like physical pressure.

[So this is the real him, huh. I see. No wonder Drankam is so invested in him. I bet the people around him lost to this as well, this would explain why Drankam has broken into factions.]

In order to keep control of the conversation, Inabe deliberately let off an authoritative smile.

“We have a deal then. Don’t worry, I will keep my promise. That’s why, keep this a secret, okay? I have my position to consider here. You get it, right?”

“Ah, yes.”

“Sounds good. If they ask you what happened, just tell them that you got fired up after I offered you a highly profitable ruin expedition. To be honest, I don’t really care what excuse you make as long as you keep this a secret.”

“Okay.”

“Now then, I have nothing more I want to talk to you about. I need to go meet the original negotiator from Drankam to let her know that this matter has been settled. So, I’ll take my leave.”

Inabe stood up and walked towards the door. Katsuya also stood up, flustered, and bowed to Inabe.

“Ah, um, thank you very much!”

“You’re welcome. I’m looking forward to your work.”

As Inabe left the room, he noticed that Yumina and the others were waiting nearby. Even Mizuha was present, so he called on her to request a meeting for another time.

Inabe found Mizuha and the other’s reaction rather weird, all of them looked delighted. The gloomy mood that they had right before they left the room was nowhere to be seen. Since Katsuya was still inside the room, there was no way they knew that Katsuya had cheered up.

[Were they eavesdropping? Good grief, these guys really have no manners.]

Inabe thought so and just pushed that matter out of his mind.

In reality, they did not eavesdrop. Considering just how much that it might hurt them in the future, there was no way a Drankam officer would do something like that to an officer from City Management. And of course, she would not let Yumina and the others do that as well.

Inside the room, Katsuya apologized to Yumina and the others for making them worry. He apologized, smiled and pumped himself up for the upcoming expedition.

Everyone present was delighted that Katsuya was able to cheer up in such a short time. Strangely enough, no one found it suspicious.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 211, Reina and Togami's Decision

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira once again joined the coordination support augmented suit experiment, which doubled as mock battle training. Despite having to fight Erio and the other children plus Togami and Reina this time, Akira was still maintaining his usual 50% win rate. It was meaningful training, with each round improving the fighting abilities of all its participants.

His opponents were extremely surprised. They thought that Akira would have enough leeway to hold back with the difference mainly being their numbers. But in reality, Akira was having a hard time as well. The only reason why they thought so was because Akira seemed ultimately unperturbed even after he lost a round.

During a small break, Togami glanced at Akira talking to Sheryl. Sheryl was donning a relatively stylish outfit for someone out in the wasteland. She took great joy in their conversation. Her smile reflected her strong feelings toward Akira. But in contrast to that, Akira was talking like usual. Although it was not like he was completely emotionless, his reaction was rather bland for a boy of his age when talking to someone like Sheryl. But even so, Sheryl still seemed to be extremely delighted.

“According to Erio and the others, it seems that they are lovers. But still, she’s really a beauty. Seeing her talk to Akira, I bet that she’s deeply in love with him. Man, seriously, both Akira and Katsuya. I wonder if beautiful girls normally flock to you when you’re that strong. Which means that I’m still far away from being strong enough, huh? I’m so envious. I wonder if a beautiful girl will come to me, I don’t care if she just wants my money.”

Togami said so jokingly although with a slightly serious face. Reina, who heard it, felt mysteriously irritated, but she was being careful so as to not show it.

“You don’t have anyone like that, huh? You’re pretty famous as the leader of the anti-Katsuya faction, right? To be honest, I think it won’t be weird if girls try to approach you because of that.”

Togami smiled bitterly as if to mock himself.

“Nope. Not at all. I know a few people who used to say that Drankam has more girls both as Hunters and as administrators compared to the other gangs. But almost all the girls around our age are following Katsuya. So the rest of us have none left. Now that I think about it. Once you return to him, I think he’ll complete his collection.”

“Whoah, can you not treat me as a collection?”

“Sorry. But again, the reason you left his team is because you thought you were too weak and would just slow him down, right? To be honest, you’re already strong enough now though.”

“That might be true, but still…”

An awkward silence pervaded, Togami prevented himself from doing anything that might hurt his pride while Reina was uncertain on what to do, including matters regarding Katsuya’s team.

Togami then changed the subject to change the mood as well.

“By the way, Erio’s team is actually moving like Katsuya’s team, right?”

Reina deliberately followed through in order to get away from the awkwardness.

“I bet it’s some kind of imitation because the coordination system uses the battle log data from Katsuya’s team as its learning pattern. That’s why their movements are similar… By the way, how did you notice that?”

“Back then when I was training under Shikarabe, he showed me their battle log to analyze. Basically pointing out its weakness and how to face such an opponent. We did that for a whole day. It even came up in my dreams! Back then, I thought that it was impossible to fight such a big group all alone but…”

Togami smiled wryly, seeing which, Reina replied with a similar smile.

“Although it’s true that they’re weaker, we were able to do that last time. And Akira was able to do that all alone with us joining the other side…“

“At least, we know now that it’s not impossible. I guess that just shows that we’ve improved.”

As Togami and Reina lightly smiled at each other, a notice suddenly reached them. So they went to Akira to inform him that they were ordered to leave the training and return back to Drankam’s base.

Once they arrived, Togami and Reina were summoned to the meeting room by Mizuha. At the very start, they were informed that the gang had successfully sold the old-world automata, thus Reina and Togami were no longer restricted from dangerous Hunter jobs.

Although Togami was delighted, he also seemed a bit confused.

“If it’s only that much, you could’ve just informed us through Arabe-san, right? So why did you summon us here?”

“Now that both of you are not prohibited from doing dangerous Hunter jobs, I have an offer for you. There’s a huge expedition plan to explore the inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin, so I want both of you to participate in that operation."

Togami was really interested in that offer, but he still seemed not fully convinced yet. After all, Mizuha was still the officer in the Katsuya faction, so it was weird for her to bring an offer to him, and that suspicion caused him to knit his brows.

Mizuha immediately noticed what Togami was thinking and smiled as she explained.

"Of course, you'll be working under Katsuya."

Togami and Reina did not seem surprised by it. They had seen that coming. But they both reacted differently to it. Togami showed a rather cold attitude while Reina was at loss. It was obvious that one of them took that offer as an excuse to force him to work under Katsuya while the other one thought that it might be a chance to return back to Katsuya's team.

Mizuha proceeded by explaining in detail the benefit of participating in that large-scale expedition. Togami and Reina both understood the benefit that they could obtain. So, Mizuha continued by asking a question in a friendly manner.

"So then, what do you think? I think it's a great offer for both of you."

Reina hesitated, but Togami replied firmly.

"I'll have to refuse."

Mizuha and Reina raised their eyebrows and looked at Togami. Mizuha then frowned and asked him.

"…I know that our relationship is a bit complicated, but I think this is a good opportunity to start anew. Are you sure you want to refuse?"

"Yeah."

Togami showed firm resolve in his answer, but that only caused Mizuha to get a bit emotional.

“Are you sure you’re not getting ahead of yourself with people calling you the leader of the anti-Katsuya faction? Let me tell you this. That faction is no longer functional. That’s just how great Katsuya’s track record is.”

It was indeed as Mizuha said, most of the people in Drankam were actually supporting the Katsuya faction either passively or actively. Although there were still Shikarabe and his cliques who were still taking the opposition side, it was no longer big enough to be called a faction.

“The reason why I offered you this chance is only because you returned back with old-world automata although they were already in a broken state. Otherwise, there’s no reason to invite someone who is against Katsuya. This is a very gracious offer. Do you really understand what will happen to your standing in the future if you refuse this offer?”

Mizuha’s words started getting mixed with threats. But even so, Togami did not change his mind.

